Another Day Older

by Bosco Turk

sun sets
aborting rays,
baptized lake
younger days,
sands swept clean
of resolution,
minds swept clean
in retribution.
dig a little deeper—
gentlemen don't sweat,
another day older and
a little less wet.

Mud Defiled

by Heather Fox

Rain comes and it begins grains of sand, spongy loam and fermented peat
melt into mud—
the kind of soft syrupy glaze, that, if applied lavishly to a Palm Beach face, could import miracle deeds of blemish control, and impart new boundaries of confidence.
Yet I derive the same
results
from a walk in a mucky garden, each step sucks at my feet the pull of earth laden with compost the cling of moisture
the locking of mud
creation of a bond bored Riviera princesses try to bottle—
a curative best discerned
by vegetables, toes, and ankles,
not noses.
