Lost In Your Cloudy Mountains

Lost in your cloudy mountains-chained to your image in a restless sea--Could you be all this: anywhere an endless sky sky blue (your eyes veiled with blue on blue and blue), searing my patchwork on windy words and whys I cannot quite admit -reflecting a pretty part of me floating to an airy grave in your arms--An entity of thundery love out of my grasp (screaming with passion in a night and slipping quietly into some new existence.) Sometime T lie still wet with our lingering love, heavy with your blue turned grey, and I marvel at your facile depth. And yet, it seems as though I could fall through you and never reach an end.
