

RM Ref: 2011012566

Michael Molloy – “Maroochydore House”

Home | AT HOME

Retro fit

Designer Michael Molloy decided to preserve, rather than discard, the spirit of the 1960s bungalow.

It's a classic case of the owner as the architect. Michael Molloy's house in Maroochydore is a perfect example of how to preserve the spirit of a building while updating it for modern living. The house is a 1960s bungalow with a distinctive geometric pattern on its exterior walls. Molloy decided to preserve the original structure and materials, rather than demolish and rebuild. He updated the interior with modern furniture and fixtures, and added a swimming pool and outdoor seating area. The result is a house that feels both timeless and contemporary.

Retro fit

Designer Michael Molloy decided to preserve, rather than discard, the spirit of the 1960s bungalow.

The house is a 1960s bungalow with a distinctive geometric pattern on its exterior walls. Molloy decided to preserve the original structure and materials, rather than demolish and rebuild. He updated the interior with modern furniture and fixtures, and added a swimming pool and outdoor seating area. The result is a house that feels both timeless and contemporary.

