Drought Summer

by Margarete Cantrall

We wiped daily dust deserts from window sills.
Worms baked into strange alphabets on sidewalks.
The slough dried into hexagons of gray.
Frogs forgot to sing.
Our vines wore raisins that never had been grapes.
We made no wine.

Naive Love (London, England - 1944)

by Todd Swiss

secret lovers in room #237
become as one,
while the ground shakes from nazi bombings.
A loving housewife prepares dinner for her husband...
arriving soon
from room #237
