NOTE

In this international seminar on Language Maintenance and Shift 7 (LAMAS 7 for short), we try to do the new paradigm, that is publishing the proceeding after the seminar was held. The positive aspect of the paradigm is that the presenters of the seminar have opportunity to revise their paper based on the responses of the audience. However, it takes longer time to process the proceeding until it is ready to distribute. Therefore, we apologize for being late.

In this opportunity, we would like to extent our deepest gratitude to Balai Bahasa Jawa Tengah for continuously cooperation in conducting the seminar. Thanks also go to the Dean of the Faculty of Humanities, the Head and the Secretary of the Master Program in Linguistics Diponegoro University, without whom the seminar would not have been possible. We would also express our special thanks to committee for putting together the seminar that gave rise to this compilation of papers.

We would like to thank Mrs. Shu-Chuan Chen, Ph.D. from Asia University Taiwan, Dr. Tupas Topsie Ruanni, from National Institute of Education Singapore, Drs, Pardi M.Hum. from Balai Bahasa Jawa Tengah; Prof. Ketut Artawa, Ph.D. from Udayana University, and Dr. Suharno, M.Ed. from Diponegoro University, as invited speakers in plenary sessions, and to all of the participants of the seminar.

Semarang, September, 25th 2017

GERMAN VERBS IN STUDIO-D A1 BOOK: A MORPHOLOGY ANALYSIS

Sulis Triyono

Universitas Negeri Yogyakarta, Yogyakarta

sulis@uny.ac.id

Abstract

The study aimed at describing: (1) the patterns of German verbs in Studio- D A1 book, and (2) the function of verbs in German sentences. The object of this study was a lingual unit in the form of German verbs taken from Studio- D A1 book. The techniques of padan and agih (Sudaryanto, 2015) were employed to analyse the data. The former technique incorporated a referential selection, while the latter one used a component division and a markah reading. The findings reveal that the patterns of German verbs were manifested in the forms of action and non-action verbs, were static and dynamic, and underwent inflection and derivation.

Keywords: the forms of German verbs

A. INTRODUCTION

German is classified into a flection language whose verbs have varieties of pattern and function in sentences. A morphology analysis of German verbs frequently shows aspects of the internal structure of words to illuminate the relation of words in sentences, while the syntactical analysis elucidates the function of external words in relation to other words in sentences (Matthews, 1974: 154). A study on systematic changes of words in accordance with their meanings was done by Bauer (1988: 4). Whereas, Matthews (1974) examined particular units of words functioning as an agent to change word patterns both in the processes of inflection and derivation. Inflection of affixes results in deriving words from their stems. Therefore, derivational affixes are those form new stems from their primary stems, for example, the word verarbeitet ‘to process’ is derived from the prefix ver-, a stem of Arbeit ‘to work’, and the suffix -et. The prefix ver- forms a new stem Verarbeit ‘a process’ from the stem Arbeit ‘to work’, while the suffix -et changes another stem of Verarbeit into Verarbeitet ‘to process’. So, the prefix ver- is derivational, and the suffix -et is inflectional.

German recognizes the term Aktionsart that is used to show kinds of action verbs. Tätigkeits verb is called action verbs, whereas Vorgangs verb is called non-action verbs. Verbs that have multilevel meanings based on sequence of events marked by the change of its lexical form are called Aktionsart. This change is due to the morphophonemic process which results in a new lexical meaning. The change can be either lexicogrammatical or derivational. It can be seen in the change of verbs due to morphophonemic or derivational processes of German verbs such as gehen ‘to go’ to begehen ‘to celebrate’, umgehen ‘to circulate’, mitgehen ‘to follow’, vergehen ‘to pass’, ausgehen ‘to go out’, vorgehen ‘to act’, zurückgehen ‘go back’, übergehen ‘to bypass, precede’, vorbeigehen ‘to pass’, eingehen ‘to enter, die (for animals)’, umhergehen ‘to go around’. This is what is called a dynamic event which is revealed through the change of the lexical form of a verb characterized by the affixational changes of suffix {be-, um-, mit-, ver-, aus-, vor-, zurückt-, über-, vorbei-, ein-, umher-} in the base form of the verb gehen ‘to go’. In other words, the verbs umgehen, mitgehen, vergehen, ausgehen, zurückgehen, übergehen, vorbeigehen, eingehen, umhergehen are dynamic events in the verb gehen that can be formed through the addition of prefix.

Aronoff & Fudeman (2005: 45) suggest that one of the differences between inflection and derivation lies in its form. Inflection will produce word-forms from a lexeme, while derivation produces lexeme from the lexeme. A German verb can also be transformed into a noun by adding suffixes such as {-ung} in umgeben ‘surround’ to Umgebung ‘surrounding’.

Based on the above description, the problems can be formulated as follows: (1) How are the verb forms in German contained in Studio- D A1 book?; (2) What is the function of verbs in German sentences?

This study aims to describe the form and function of verbs in German sentences.

B. LITERATURE REVIEW

According to Glavina-Ivanus (1997), action verbs consist of Aktionsart mit Phasenbedeutung. Based on the form and function, according to Glavina-Ivanus, action verbs are complete and clear Aktionsart describing its form and function in a sentence. Based on Avilova (1976: 270-318), action verbs are divided into 3 groups, namely (1) verbs that have limited meanings such as finite verbs, (2) verbs that have the meaning of numbers or repetition, and (3) verbs that have meaning of achievement or result. Of the three groups, there are verbs that contain elements of morphophonemic processes in its verb formation.

According to Jung (1990: 236), action verbs are divided into 3 types, namely: (1) durative, perfective, inchoative, mutative, and resultative; (2) causative, factitive, intensive, diminutive, iterative; and (3) derivation and inflection in the form of suffixes.

As stated by Eisenberg (2001: 117), actions verbs are verbs that refer to the base forms of verbs. The base forms of verbs which are based on their function and meaning fall into the semantic category. Duden (1984: 92-93) says that action verbs are verbs that reveal an event from the beginning or during the process of the occurrence of an event. Thus, it can be said that how an event takes place can be expressed through verbs whose meanings are related to circumstances, processes, and events. Drosdowski (2009: 94) said that these verbs are events that include the occurrence, the sustainability, and the process of events expressed through verbs.

According to Helbig/Buscha (2005: 59), the type of verbs can be either static or dynamic. Dynamic verbs are divided into action and non-action types, as in the following example. Was geschah? 'What happened?'

- | | | |
|-----------------------------------|-----------------------------|--------------|
| 1. Er zerbrach den Teller. | 'He broke the plate' | (action) |
| 2. Er fiel in den Graben. | 'He fell into the trenches' | (non-action) |
| 3. Er wohnte in Dresden. | 'He lives in Dresden' | (static) |

Based on the explanation of those three sample sentences, it can be concluded that the meaning of a sentence is determined by its verb function. The meaning of a sentence depends on the verbs taking the slot, whether the meaning is static or dynamic. Meanwhile, the dynamic meaning can be divided into action and non-action meaning. In contrast, in Indonesian language, according to some linguists such as Kridalaksana (1996: 11), the difference between derivation and inflection is not very clear. Likewise, Samsuri (1987: 199) states the need for conducting morphological studies of derivation and inflection in the Indonesian language to find out its derivation and inflection and thus, it can be applied consistently in the Indonesian language. This may be due to the fact that Indonesian language belongs to agglutination, while the German belongs to flection language.

C. DISCUSSION

German verbs have varied forms as they agree with the subject. The subject can either be first-, second-, or their-person, and either singular or plural, affecting the verb form following that subject, for instance the verb stehen 'to stand' in Ich stehe vorne 'I stand in front', er steht hinten 'he stands behind', and wir stehen draußen 'we stand outside'. This verb changings from stehen to stehe, steht, and stehen are determined by the subject. Verb changing in German is not only determined by the subject but also by other lexemes, such as prefix. If added by the prefix {an-}, German alters the meaning of stehen 'to stand' to become {an-} + stehen: anstehen 'to queue'. Similarly, when attached to the suffix [auf-], the base verb stehen will become [auf-] + stehen @ aufstehen meaning 'to rise'. The meaning of a base verb will change following the addition of prefix. This verb changing will significantly alter the meaning. It is different from verb changing resulting from the different subject in use which does not change the verb meaning.

Go back to the verb stehen 'to stand' which can have various forms depending on the speaker's intention. These forms follow the meaning of which the speaker wants to convey. In D A1 Studio book, there are a lot of verb forms which can be used to convey not only subjective and objective meaning but also future and past intention. Essentially, verbs in German have diverse forms and functions. However, in this study, the verbs under study were those having different meaning. These form changings are due to a process called derivation which causes a base lexeme to change to another lexeme with different meaning. It is shown in the data, for instance the verb stehen 'to stand, to rise',

{gerade}	+	stehen	Ⓜ	geradestehen	'to stand up straight',
{gegenüber-}	+	stehen	Ⓜ	gegenüberstehen	'to stand face-to-face',
{still-}	+	stehen	Ⓜ	stillstehen	'to stop',
{ent-}	+	stehen	Ⓜ	entstehen	'to born',
{be-}	+	stehen	Ⓜ	bestehen	'to graduate',
{ver-}	+	stehen	Ⓜ	verstehen	'to understand',
{bei-}	+	stehen	Ⓜ	beistehen	'to accompany',
{ge-}	+	stehen	Ⓜ	gestehen	'to confess',
{vor-}	+	stehen	Ⓜ	vorstehen	'to protrude'.

Following the suffix attached to the base form, in fact the verb meaning changes. It is so because of the presence of prefix of which function is to change a lexeme to another lexeme. The inflection process is based on whether or not a lexical identity change such as word class, semantic feature, exists. Lexical identity change means that there is a difference between meaning and referent. Affixation which does not alter the lexical identity is called inflection process; it is like in prefixes {be-, ver-, ent-, vor-, ge-, still-, bei-, gerade-}. The addition of this prefix to the verb stehen does not affect the word class; the lexeme attached to that prefix will remain in the same word class, i.e. verb. Therefore, the process in which a base verb changes to a verb with prefix results from an inflection process.

The verb sehen 'to see' can alter its meaning to another verb ansehen 'to look', due to the prefix {an-}. In Indonesian language, the meanings of the verb sehen are still in the same meaning. However, in German, this verb has slightly different meanings. Sehen can be used to express the idea of looking for a glance, while ansehen conveys meaning of watching, thus there is an obvious difference.

The verb sehen can become {ab-} + sehen Ⓜ absehen 'to free from...',

{um-}	+	sehen	Ⓜ	umsehen	'to look around',
{nach-}	+	sehen	Ⓜ	nachsehen	'to forgive',
{ein-}	+	sehen	Ⓜ	einsehen	'to understand',
{weg-}	+	sehen	Ⓜ	wegsehen	'to turn away',
{ver-}	+	sehen	Ⓜ	versehen	'to equip',
{durch-}	+	sehen	Ⓜ	durchsehen	'to check',
{ab-}	+	sehen	Ⓜ	absehen	'to aim',
{fern-}	+	sehen	Ⓜ	fernsehen	'to watch television'.

The same prefix like {ein-} when attached to different verbs will thus alter different meanings, for examples {ein-} + stehen Ⓜ einstehe 'to hurry' and {ein-} + sehen Ⓜ einsehen 'to understand'. By referring to the function of prefix, i.e. changing the meaning of the verb it is attached to, the same prefix will convey a different meaning when attached to a different verb.

This is in line with what Drosdowski (2009) has found; he states that a verb is an action which includes the happening, the sustainability, and the process of the action expressed by that verb. Correspondingly, Duden (1984) asserts that action verb is a verb which expresses a phenomena or event starting from its occurrence or the process of phenomena occurrence. Therefore, it can be said that how a phenomena occurs can be expressed by using a verb which shows circumstance, process, and occurrence.

D. CONCLUSION

Based on the discussion above, it can be concluded that verbs in German can be in the form of action and non-action verb, static and dynamic verb, and inflected and derived verb. This is so as prefix functions to change a base lexeme to another lexeme. Inflection process is based on lexical change. Verb serves to express meanings including the circumstance, process, and occurrence.
