ROADBLOCKS START TOMORROW

Local RCMP launch fight against impaired drivers

By ANDREW PETTER Herald staff writer

If you plan to drink and drive in the Terrace-Kitimat area, watch out - you are probably going to get nailed. Following the announcement Monday of a province-wide offensive against impaired driving, Terrace and Kitimat RCMP are going to crack down on drunk driving with program of roadblocks and regular vehicle checks.

Constable Larry York of the Terrace detachment told the Herald that rotating roadblocks will go into effect this Friday and continue "probably every night...much the same as the Christmas roadblocking. A spokesman for the Kitimat RCMP said that his detachment is going to "sock it to" impaired drivers with road blocks and spot checks every Friday and Saturday night.

Attorney General Garde Gardom had described the program Monday as a "total assault" against imparied

"The province has had enough of roadside roulette," Gardom said. "We mean business."
Constable York warned that area residents should be prepared to produce their driver's licences and vehicle registration at the roadblocks. Anyone suspected of being intoxicated will be taken to police headquarters where they will be asked to submit to two breathalizer tests, 17 minutes apart:

Those found midly impaired will be finger-printed, photographed and sent home with a notice to appear in court. Those who are extremely impaired will be locked in the police cells until they sober up.

Although everyone with over a .08 blood alcohol level is automatically considered impaired, the police can lay charges for impaired driving even if the reading is below this level, York explained. Someone not accustomed to drinking alcohol can still be seriously impaired with a reading under .08, he said. Terrace and Kitimat residents should take the police crackdown seriously. The penalty for impaired driving is a fine of up to $2,000 and or six months in jail. In addition, those convicted of impaired driving have their driver's licences suspended for three months. No concessions are made for driving to and from work.

Anyone convicted of a second offence faces an automatic 14-day jail term on top of other penalties as well as a six month licence suspension. York announced that Terrace would be receiving a special breath analysis testing van in September--one of 14 in the province-which will enable the police to conduct breathalizer tests at the site of the roadblock. The van will serve the northwest region and will be used by a number of different police departments throughout the area.

The Terrace detachment will also use the roadblocks as an opportunity to check cars to ensure that they are in proper running order, York said.

He said that the police had already visited some schools in the area to discuss the drinking-driving problem. Any groups wishing to obtain information regarding impaired driving should not hesitate to contact their local police detachment, he said. He also indicated that he would be willing to speak to any groups or meetings about the

"I think it'll have a good effect," York commented, referring to the police crackdown. "A lot of people don't realize how little it takes to put them over." York said that over 50 per cent of accidents handled by the Terrace detachment involve the use of alcohol.

Tourists turned off

VANCOUVER (CP) -Don't blame Columbia's higher prices, poor weather last summer or increased fuel costs for the drop in tourists, says Wayne Currie, deputy minister for Tourism B.C.

"The real enemies of tourism in this province are apathy, discourtesy and indifference," Currie told a Mainland Southwest Tourist Association meeting Monday.

Currie said drought conditions in parts of the United States have given Americans another reason to visit B.C.

The two main factors which discourage tourists from visiting B.C., Currie said, are unfriendly attitudes and dirty or unkempt accommodation.

ADVANCE POLLING HEAVY

Returning officer sees chance of record high voter turnout

By ALLAN KRASNICK Managing editor

With a surprisingly large turnout for advance polling, chief returning officer Murdo Macdonald predicts that a record number of voters may cast ballots in Saturday's mayoral byelection.

Former aldermen Dave Maroney and Sharon Biggs have been waging a tough battle for the vacant mayor's chair and on June 4, they learn whose effort will bear the sweeter fruit. With an advanced voting turnout of 65 individuals, it seems that interest is high in this special election.

Also up for grabs is a seat on the regional district. Vic

Joliffe and Dave Pease are contesting that position.

Macdonald's optimism about the large turnout stems from the advanced balloting. It was the "biggest turnout at an advanced poll that we've ever had," the veteran returning officer told the Daily Herald.

If the same yardstick follows through on Saturday, the turnout would be in the neighborhood of 45-50 per cent, he predicted.

The precious record is 43 per cent and that was for a 'major fight,' he said, including voting for mayor, aldermen, school board trustees, regional district directors, and a money bylaw. Macdonald believes a high turnout can only be healthy for the community.

ballots at the Clarence Michiel school between 8 a.m. and 8 p.m., Saturday, they will find Macdonald and his helpers manning three polling stations.

Voters are asked to pick up and return ballots to the same station.

Though the machinery will all be in place for a smooth running vote and count, the election people do run into a number of problems, not the least of which is individuals pocketing or destroying the ballot they marched into the polling booth to cast.

This year, voters will receive two ballots: one for the mayoralty byelection, the other for regional district director. Though district director. they are under no obligation to actually make a choice on the voting slip, said Mac-donald, the law clearly states that a voter must return the ballots.

Some people have been casting only one vote and destroying the other, thus imbalancing the final counts, Macdonald said. Abstaining is legal but the voting slip, even if blank, must be placed back in the bállot box.

Otherwise the elector is breaking the law. About 4,500 people are eligible to vote, Saturday.

I've had enough. listening to the political B.S. of Bennett, the emotional pap of Barrett, the sad journalism of the Province and the blabber of Council and the Chamber of Commerce mafia I've got to speak my mind on the state of our town: Terrace.

Having been here several years I've seen the "booms' and the so called "busts". These cycles are treated like unfair punishments heaped upon us northwesterners by some mysterious force called world market'' "socialism"

The truth is, we deserve all the doom and gloom beyond reason and expect to realize our aspirations on the whim of big business and politicians. Maybe it's time we stopped our outcries and took time to examine the things that are really important to us.

With the early 70's "boom" what did we get? There were more fights in the pubs, more vomit on the streets; we got a tacky semi-department store and junk-food restaurants-welfare rolls were up and racial clashes became somewhat common.

We also got an arena, pool and ski hill that were so fancy that we can't pay for

I think it's pretty obvious that not many of us profitted from the good times our trees and minerals bought us; that is, except southernbased companies and a few addicted to an overblown image of Terrace's present and future importance.

Let's face it, we have been and at this rate always will be a very small pawn in Vancouver's Victoria's and Ottawa's great resource

When will we realize that Terrace is a small town, not a budding metropolis, and that quality of life is more important than riches or a huge population?

Personally, I like the 'bust'' we are experiencing. I like it even better when Safeway is closed, Woolworth's profits are down, and McDonald's decides we aren't worthy of an outlet.

In what seems to be bad It's equally obvious that times we have an ideal our elected officials became chance to learn what it is to once again take charge of our own future.

We both are dependent on each other so let's stop the political bluff and amalgamate before southern bureaucrats do it

While we're doing this let's clean up Terrace. It's amazing what paint and some trees could do for places like Red's or the Safeway parking-lot desert. We need nine different kinds of politicians too. Let's check on their expense accounts, their abilities of city and regional government staffs. Let's force them to smarten up or get rid of them all.

Then we can start trying to keep our kids in town instead of forcing them south.

This will take northernoriented vocational training college-degree phobia for turning out ill-educated morons.

And on I could go. I like it here and will stay through thick or thin because I believe that Terrace and the

SALMON ENHANCEMENT PROGRAM ANNOUNCED

The federal government has given Northwestern British Columbia's salmon industry far-reaching assurances of stability through a massive salmonid enhancement program, announced this week.

The province-wide program will more than double the production of Canada's Pacific salmon and will involve the investment of $450-750 million

The Salmonid Enhancement Program was first announced in March 1975 and since that time federal and provincial fisheries and marine service officials have been involved in detailed planning of development projects for salmon, which will spread along the length of the B.C. coastline and to spawning and rearing waters in the interior of the province.

Fisheries experts expect to triple the recreational opportunities of salmon fishing and double to $400 million the value of annual commercial salmon production by 1980. Studies have shown that the B.C. commercial salmon industry has the capacity to catch and process the bulk of the projected increased production and that little in the way of plant expansion will be necessary. Enhancement techniques will include rehabilitation of imparied natural habitats and creation of artificial spawning channels, hatcheries, and fishways.

Enhancement measures will also be applied to sportfish other than salmon, particularly steelhead and cutthroat trout. Some of the first year projects in the 15-year plan will involve construction of rearing ponds in designated areas; the design of a Kitimat River hatchery; an enrichment program for certain lakes; and the design of artificial spawning channels - one on Mather's Creek on the Queen Charlotte Islands. As well, incubation boxes will be constructed for Pallant Creek in the Queen Charlottes.

Costs of the first year project, including engineering and biological surveys will amount to approximately $9 million. This investment by the federal government means a great deal to our area. It means significant, lasting returns in terms of jobs, regional development, environmental and social benefits, and the creation of the whole area about $150,000 has been set aside for small stream projects, particularly small stream clean-up.

The Kitimat hatchery

design has been allotted a budget of $400,000 while general biological recon-naissance in the Kalum River near Terrace will receive $200,000.

General biological reconnaissance in the Mathers and Pallant streams on the Queen Charlotte Islands will receive $50,000 and a Fulton River steelhead rearing project has been allotted $120,000.

As well, the Kispiox stream clearance project supported jointly by Canada Works and the Fish Production Program,! has been allotted a budget of over $100,000.

And in Vanderhoof, there will be music! I have just received confirmation that the federal government will award $3,995.00 to the Senior Citizens Musical Society of Vanderhoof for promotion of music in the area.

This is a delightful project and I think all citizens in the area will enjoy the group's revival of music which has been popular over the years.

My congratulations to Mr. Silver, President of the group, who reports that 35 senior citizens will be involved in the project. Funds were made available under the New Horizons program.

QUEEN CHARLOTTE WHARF REPAIRS

Soviet judges banned from skating competition

judges have been banned for a year from officiating in world and European figure skating competition because repeated national partiality," the International Skating Union reported Wednesday.

The union's president, Jacques Favart, said the decision was made Saturday at a meeting here of the executive council.

"The Russians took it very badly, of course. We don't exactly know yet what their official reaction will

The action came under an organization bylaw which allows suspension of a country's judges if there were negative reports on partiality for a period of Such negative reports had been made on Soviets over the last four years, Favart said.

The ban involves the 1978 world championships in Ottawa, the world junior championships in Megeve, France, and the European championships Strasbourg, France.

Soviet couples also placed second in pairs and dance at the world championships.

In recent years some Western skaters, including John Curry, the British Olympic gold medallist, have denounced political bloc voting and vote trading among judges at major events. Soviet judges were particular targets.

Toller Cranston, the sixtimes Canadian champion who won a bronze medal in the 1976 Olympics, criticized Soviet and other Eastern European judges last year, saying they tend to penalize Western skaters while protecting their own athletes in school figures.

WHA-NHL MERGER

_et 'em wither, says Campbell

President Clarence Campbell of the National Hockey League said Wednesday that he personally would prefer to let the rival World Hockey Association wither on the vine than accept a merger of the two major leagues.

In an interview,nCampbell pressed strong feelings about the WHA and continued rumors that at least four top WHA clubs have a chance of joining the NHL if they meet the financial requirements.

But Campbell said such a move would not solve the problem of the dissolution of player talent in the NHL since expansion began in 1967 and the WHA's creation in 1971 that led to the raiding of more than 100 players from the senior league.

Expansion was essential at the beginning, Campbell said, "but we didn't anticipate the invasion of Mr. Davidson and company.' He was referring to Gary Davidson, one of the founders and first president of the WHA who later resigned.

Campbell said that WHA candidates are not suitable for the NHL.

Stearns first grand slam overpowers Montreal

MONTREAL (CP) -John Stearns belted his first grand slam home run in the major leagues to cap a fiverun rally in the fifth inning that carried New York Mets to a 6-4 victory over Montreal Expos in National League baseball action Wednesday night.

The Expos had a 2-1 lead going into the inning, but a walk and singles by Felix Millan and Dave Kingman tied the score. Losing pitcher Jackie Brown, 1-4, intentionally walked Ed Kranepool to load the bases before Stearns delivered his sixth homer of the season.

LEONARD PELTIER GETS LIFE TERM

FARGO, N.D. (AP) — Indian activist Leonard Peltier has been sentenced to two consecutive life terms in prison for the murder of two FBI agents in 1975.

The sentence, delivered Wednesday by Chief U.S. District Judge Paul Benson, means Peltier, 32, would be eligible for parole in 30

Defence lawyer Elliot Taikeff of New York im-media ely filed notice of Peltier was found guilty by a district court jury on April 18 of two charges of first degree murder in the deaths of FBI agents Jack Coller and Ronald Williams. The men had been shot to death on South Dakota's Pine Ridge Indian Reserve in June, 1975.

Peltier, formerly of Grand Forks, N.D., was extradited from Canada to face the charges and pleaded not

Prior to sentencing, the American Indian Movement member said he had "no doubt" he would be sentenced to two consecutive life terms. He also told the judge that Benson's judge that Benson's dignified appearance had misled him into thinking he could get a fair trial.

Peltier said he believes Benson was prejudiced against him and "any native American who comes before

He criticized Benson for allowing the prosecution to introduce testimony relating to a number of isolated events, including an attempted murder charge against him in Milwaukee.

He also said the defence was not permitted to in-troduce evidence about what he called "FBI misconduct."

"White racist America is the criminal," he said.

LIBERALS CHIDED

Economic policies aren't Big Mac's

Liberal party is so devoid of economic policies that it would have to invent Rene Levesque and his threat to federalism if the Quebec premier did not already exist, Newfoundland MP John Crosbie (PC-St. John's West) said Wednesday. The Liberal approach to national unity as a note-catcher "is to outredneck the rednecks in nine provinces while telling Quebec that they (the Liberals) are the only French-Canadians that can protect them," Crosbie said in the Commons.

As for the government's economic policies, "one McDonald's hamburger offers more meat and sustinence for the unemployed than one Macdonald budget." Donald Macdonald is finance minister.

Crosbie was speaking during debate on a Social Credit motion condemning the government's alleged lack of foresight and leadership in deliberatly permitting unemployment and inflation.

Gilles Caouette, who won Temiscamingue byelection for the Social Credit May 24, introduced the motion moments after being officially seated in the Commons. He was an MP from 1972 to 1974. He said the Liberal government was "passing the buck onto the provinces and municipalities rather than trying to tackle problems and coming up with pragmatic, realistic

Rather than spending $13 million on developing the Dash-7 airplane that no one wants, the government should have used the money to help small businesses employ people, Caouette said.

Crosbie said the government has failed so miserably on economic issues that it seized on national unity as the only way to stay in power.

David Orlikow (NDP— Winnipeg North) said one reason for the growth of Quebec separatist sentiments was the high unemployment in the province.

Quebec youth are turning to the Parti Quebecois because they believe an independent Quebec would be able to do a better job of providing jobs than the current Canadian government, Orlikow said.

Judd Buchanan, public works minister, defended his government's record on the economic front.

Canada's economic performance in recent years has been better than that of most of its trading partners, Buchanan said.

Nevertheless, Canada had problems of inflation and unemployment which the government was trying to solve through recent budgetary measures he hoped would stimulate the economy. Eudore Allard (SC—Rimouski) complained that the federal government has all the power to legislate solutions to unemployment but has failed to use its

The group of eight, with MacEachen, government House Leader in the Commons, as its chairman, was seeking a commitment from oil exporters to continue a so-called energy dialogue after the end of the current conference.

Sources said Venezuela and Iraq were leading the fight against the eight Western countries, arguing that such a commitment to consumers would limit their own freedom to price and export oil as they see fit.

National Indian Brotherhood said it was tinged with racism and irrationality. Timbrell apologized this week, saying he had not intended to impugn the integrity of the native people.

Also last week, Consumer Affairs Minister Sid Handleman said findings of Minamata Disease in northwestern Ontario have been made by Communists from Japan. Canadian doctors had found no such disease.

Medical experts from Japan, where Minamata has killed hundreds and maimed thousands, have done tests at the EnglishWabigoon reserves of Grassy Narrows and White Dog. They have said some Indians have symptoms of the irreversible disease.

sport fishing, something that Indian leaders have been urging. Miller publicly called his colleague's idea superficial and simplistic. Indian leaders say they cannot convince their people not to eat the contaminated fish while white anglers continue to fish the waters.

The white anglers are mainly tourists who are not in the area long enough to build dangerous levels of toxic mercury.

The federal government has been negotiating with Ontario to close the river completely. Closure likely would involve compensation to Indians and tourist operators, some type of job creation program and might set a precedent for future pollution problems.

Ottawa can close the river system unilaterally but would have to bear all the responsibility and costs.

New Democrat Leader Stephen Lewis has called for Kerr's resignation on grounds of lack of cabinet support for closure. Liberal Leader Stuart Smith has called Kerr "a gutless wonder.

BENNETT LAMENTS DIXY'S DAM STAND

B.C. (CP)--Premier Bill Bennett said Wednesday it is unfortunate Washington State Governor Dixy Lee Ray supports raising the Ross Dam and indicated that providing power from a dam being built near here may be an appropriate trade-off to save the Skagit Valley. Bennett, attending meeting, said Ray has "absolutely no part" in the negotiations on raising the dam now going on between the provincial government and Seattle Power and Light Company.

Opponents of the Ross Dam project have said that proviting power to Seattle from a new dam on the Pend d'Oreille River, to be completed near here in 1980, could be an alternative to Bennett said in an interview that the new dam "could represent and appropriate trade-off even-tually for the Skagit Valley in terms of power for Seattle.

Despite the dam controversy, Bennett said relations between British Columbia and Washington State are as good as they have ever been.

"We are good neighbors," he said. "I know the past premier of this province made some intemperate statements that made the people of Washington angry, but now there is a growing spirit of co-operation."

The cabinet moves to nearby Nelson today, where Bennett is expected to make an announcement on the future location of Notre Dame University.

WILLIAMS LAKE, B.C. (CP(- Progressive Conservative leader Joe Clark told a cheering audience of 350 Wednesday that his government would stop the "current trend in Canada that sees the government taking too much money to fill federal wallets." The high-spirited, tightly-organized rally was one of the best of Clark's British Columbia tour and seemed distant away from the sagging polls and internal party conflicts that are absorbing his colleagues in Ottawa.

"People out here knew things were not working well before Rene Levesque won his election," Clark said, adding that the time had come for the entire country to make a new beginning.

His partyhwould restructure national devel pment policies to put them in line with the need for new growth in Western Canada. he said.

"We need to restore a proper balance between the public sector and the private sector," said Clark, who claims that 43 per cent of the country's Gross National Product is consumed by government spending.

"Our policy is to break down that evel of spen-ding," Clar said, "so you will have more of your money to spend in ways you want to spend it rather than ways the government wants to spend it."

Responding to suggestions earlier this week by Justice Minister Ron Basford that permanent wage and price controls are a possibility, Clark promised that "a Progressive Conservative government will not impose permanent controls in Canada."

PAIR CROSSES THE ATLANTIC

First across the Big Pond

Fly across the Atlantic today and you can expect a comfortable jet, in-flight movies, reclining seats, hot meals, bar service, airsick bags and five or nine hours out of your life, depending on your route.

Back in 1919, things were somewhat different. The first non-stop trans-Atlantic flight was in a flimsy biplane with little in the way of comfort—a rain-lashed cockpit, some sandwiches and chocolate bars-and it took 16 gruelling, frightening hours, with not a single guarantee that its occupants would arrive.

But Jack Alcock and

Athur Whitten-Brown made it to Ireland to be the first men to fly across the Atlantic non-stop and open a new era of aviation.

They were the successful ones and their story is recounted in The Great Atlantic Air Race by Percy Rowe. But theirs wasn't the only story.

Lord Northcliffe, the enterprising "Napoleon of Fleet Street" had long been interested in flying and its potential. Through his publishing empire, particularly London Daily Mail, he had offered cash prizes for flyers in competition. In 1913, he set a prize of $50,000 for the first to successfully cross the Atlantic non-stop.

The race was on, post-poned for a few years by the First World War, but not forgotten.

And so in 1919, flyers from England and the United gathered States 'in Newfoundland to take up the challenge. The English aviators were mainly by airplane backed manufacturers, the Americans by the U.S. navy.

Newfoundland, excepting its geographical position, was a most unlikely place to start an air race. Air strips were, to be mild, far from ideal. One was as a local ideal. One was, as a local reporter put it, "... a series of gardens and farms, with rock walls between them" which all had to flattened and removed.

"The result, after a month, was a bumpy aerodrome."

The reporter was Joseph Smallwood.

It wasn't all drama and excitement. Newfoundland weather proved unco-operative—for nearly two months. The little colony, however, took on new life with the arrival of the flyers. The village of Tre-passey, boasting about 600 residents, suddenly found its population swelled by 8,000 American sailors who were helping to launch the U.S.

flying boats.
But now Newfoundland began to think of itself as "the air cross-roads of the world."

A favorite Sunday outing for the family was to trek out to the airfields to watch the competing planes being assembled.

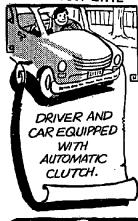

Finally, the weather allowed the race to begin. The American flying boats, four of them, left May 16 heading for the Azores. They were to stop there, after being assisted navigationally by a bridge of navy destroyers, and then on to Lisbon. One eventually made it. It took 19 days, and the Azores break made it ineligible for the prize.

The British flyers made their attempts. Alcock and Brown were the only ones to complete the crossing and even that finished nose down in an Irish bog.

The Great Atlantic Air
Race is great fun. Rowe has detailed backgrounding in his book and he has paid particular attention to the characters who people it. Hawker and MackenzieGrieve, the "magnificent failures," Santos-Dumont, the granddaddy of modern Total admirers among devotees of "executive Eve" the classic revival" and any lady of leisure. aviation, all of the figures of that era in flying history are discussed with their foibles and feats.

It's a nostalgia piece, certainly, of the days when men were men, and planes were kept flying on a wing and a prayer—and magnificent skill— but still Rowe has assembled a book of interest and excitement.

Voices from Quebec

MONTREAL (CP) - Since the November provincial election here, the rest of Canada wants more than ever to understand the Quebecois, say two Montrealers who have just edited an unusual and wideranging anthology called Voices FROM Michael Thomas and Philip Stratford have compiled 214 pages containing 85 selections by 66 Frnech-Canadian writers.

The anthology is organized as a series of confrontations: between the French and English politics and protest, sports and entertainment, love and fantasy, and the past and present.

The work of 4 translators if included, although tratford, a lanky professor of English at the University of Montreal, did about a third of the translations himself. Stratford says there is no other book of this knid in Canada. "It has to be the best representative work," he

Selections include work by Andre Langevin, Roch Carrier, Marie-Claire Blais, Gabrielle Roy and Rejean Ducharme; songs by Gilles igneault, Beau Dommage and Robert Charlebois; theatre pieces by Antonine Maillet and Michel Tremblay; plus poetry, photography, cartoons and painting reproductions.

A lot of material had to be rejected and other selections greatly reduced.

"We had an embarrassment of riches," Stratford said. "It was a gruesome job."

"We refused to put in the old fashioned picturesque idea of Quebec, except for two examples: Louis Hemon's Maria Chapdelaine and Aubert de Gaspe's description of An Old-Fashioned Feast."

Stratford and Michael Thomas, an English consultant for the Protestant School Board of Montreal, spent' a year reading, discussing and determining selection.

Included is the FLQ manifesto, "which most people haven't seen."

Then there is Pierre Elliott Trudeau's essay on the Sorry Tale of Frnech-Canadian Nationalism, written in the early 1960s. In the selection, Trudeau bears down hard on separatism, its brand of nationalism, and the anti-Semitlsm among some separatists. Stratford said there is nothing from the Parti Quebecois politicians recently elected, but "we have the voices feeding them, the grass roots ideas expressed by artists."

"You couldn't read this book and not make con-

"You couldn't read this book and not make connections," he says. "They are all there."

One voice from the past is that of Mere Marie de l'Incarnation, an "amazing woman" who, in a letter to her son, gives an account of the devastation of an earthquake in Quebec City in 1663.

The anthology will be published by an Ian Nostrand Reichold Ltd.

Blacks in Canada have long history

The migration of blacks to Canada from the Caribbean in significant numbers since the early 1960s tends to give to many Canadians the impression that blacks are a new dimension to the Canadian mosaic.

This impression lingers despite the sizeable black population of Nova Scotia. Blacks have established communities in Nova Scotia since fleeing the United States in the pre-Emancipation period to escape slavery. They also settled elsewhere in Canada, particularly Ontario.

But by the time the inflow from the Caribbean started, the numbers of blacks, with the exception of the Nova Scotia communities, were not significant enough to stem the impression that a fundamental change was being made in the complexion of Canada.

Yet, blacks have long been part of the Canadian scene—before the U.S. Civil War—a visible reminder of the need to respect the dignity of all human beings and of what it means to be free. For when they fled here more than 100 years ago, they were seeking those things Canadians hold so dearly—freedom, dignity, humanity.

Barbara Smucker writes about that search for freedom; about that determination to affirm what blacks knew in their hearts—that human beings should be treated as such.

Underground to Canada is presented primarily as a children's book, but adults too should find it appealing. Its main characters are two young slave girls fleeing to Canada from their miserable life in the American South.

The two girls, abused by the injustices on a cotton plantation, are hounded by slave gatcherdas they make their way north. It's also a story about human kind ness, involving abolitionists—white and black—who helped the girls as they travelled the "underground railroad" to Canada. It's a story about hope and perseverence against great odds.

The title of the book is apt.

The title of the book is apt. The underground railroad was the treacherous route north followed by slaves fleeing to Canada. The stations were homes and other places along the way where abolitionists, hid, fed, clothed and generally assisted the slaves.

Barbara Smucker draws from incidents which did occur and some of the abolitionist characters she presents represent real personalities. What she produces is a story representative of actual occurrences.

There is a restaurant in Toronto called the Underground Railroad. Many American blacks seek it out when visiting the city. For them it has special significance.

Women demand right to chug with the boys

MANCHESTER, England (CP: - Women of Man chester have ebtxblished their right to order beer by the pint in local taverns. They did so in a test case brought by a woman teacher under Britain's new Sex Discrimination Act.

The teacher, 26-year-old Diane Williams, claimed in court that the licensee of The Churco Inn had contravened the act by refusing to serve her a pint.

Judge Henry Dershaw allowed her claim and ruled that under the Sex Discrimination Act landlords must serve pints to women if so requested.

"This is a great victory for all woem," Miss Williams said outside the court. "Whether they like to drink beer by the pint or not, they should not be denied what is their legal right."

Miss Williams said her court action was partly financed by the Equal Rights Commission.

In court William Imus, landlord of the Church Innonce used by bellringers at a local church-said he did not dispute the new law. He said he refused to serve Miss Williams fro reasons not connected with her sex. "I refused to serve her because she was with another woman I had barred from the tavern. There is nothing wrong with women drinking pints, but I don't like it. It's unladylike. Pints make women fat and ugly."

RAISE COST

Imms said he would have to put an extra penny on a pint of beer in his pub to pay for the 25 pounds of legal costs he had incurred over the case. A retired policman, he is the first landlord in Britain to be ordered to serve women with pints of book if requested.

beer if requested.
"But Inadlords still have intoxicated men or women," said a spokesman for the Equal Rights Commission. "What we have established is that un-intoxicated man and women have equal rights when drinking in a public house."

the right to refuse arink to

The commission claims that in some taverns women are not allowed to drink in bars reserved for men.
They say such bars are illegal under the Sex

Discrimination Act.
The landlord of a 500-yearold tavern at Chorley, near

Manchester, said his fourale bar was used only by

"We prefer it that way," he said, "because men sometimes like to talk among themselves in their own language. There are two other bars in this house where they can drink with women if they wish.

"Because of the new act, I cannot exclude women from the four-ale bar but, so far, no woman has used it and I hope it will stay that way."

Ripper walk for Queen's Jubilee

LONDON (CP) — "... and this is where he done her in.

A delicious shudder runs through the group, mostly Canadian and United States tourists, gathered in the silence and chill of a wet London morning.

It's Sunday and, for 60 pence a head—about $1.20 Canadian—you can walk in the bloody footsteps of Jack the Ripper, in the custody of a guide who obviously loves his work.

But there are other walks you can take in this jubilee

You can visit famous pubs- yes, the pubs are open on Sunday—and while you might not see the shade of the White Lady, be assured that others have.

Or take the church walk and gaze in wonder at spires you know of from the nursery rhymes of your childhood—"oranges and lemons sing the bells of St.

Clements. ..."
But it's the Ripper Walk, through the stinking streets of Whitechapel and down the debris of Petticoat Lane, captures that imagination.

It's a grim, tasteless journey but with flashes of incredible beauty.

While the guide is describing the death of the Ripper's first victim in a tiny square—"there she lay, half on the curb"—the bells of St. Paul's Cathedral ring out in counterpoint in the background.

"He stuck her in the abdomen, then pulled up on the knife. That's why they called him the Ripper."

The group pauses outside a deserted warehouse. The guide almost has to shout to make himself heard shows. make himself heard above the downpour.

"... she was three months pregnant ... entrails hung from the plate rail. ..."

But this is an area where, in Queen Victoria's day, the silk weavers lived and worked. Look carefully beneath the grime of a century and see the delicate stonework of their houses and workshops.

There have been killers who have slain more imaginatively. There have been killers who claimed more victims—Jack limited himself to eight, all of them at this distance accepted as having been prostitutes.

But who was he? What

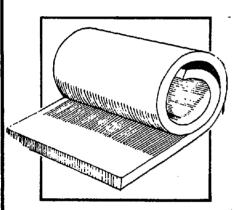

From his accomplished knife work, some claim he must have had medical training. Others surmise that he was infected by a prostitute and wrought a terrible vengeance upon the sisterhood.

PUREST VEAL FROM MOMTREAL

CP Family Editor HALIFAX (CP) -

When Philippa Monsarrat is teaching her cooking students how to prepare a dish using veal, she has it flown into Halifax from Montreal.

Because Mrs. Why? Monsarratis a self-admitted purist about the culinary arts and says that all the veal she can ever find in the Maritimes is already breaded and added to.

"That's the trouble with cooking well these days," she said men interview. "I she sxld men interview. mean I wouldn't go to an expensive rebtaurant to eat commercial salad dressing. Consequently, I won't either use or teach my students to use this pre-packaged crap."

Mrs. Monsarrat has been running thy coooking school from her modest but cozy home for three years.

And besides teaching local people the fine art of gourmet cooking, she has had students from as far away as Ottawa.

Monsarrat. The name might ring a bell with Canadians who read the novel or saw the movie of The Cruel Sea in the 1950s.

Its author, Nicholas Monsarrat, is Philippa's exhusband.

AWARDED CUSTODY

Since their muchpublicizez divorce in 1961, after Mrs. Monsarrat charged her husband with desertion and was awarded costs of the action and custody of the couple's two sons, Marc, now 23, and Anthony, 22, she has lived quietly in Toronto, Montreal and for the past eight years Halifax.

Today, Mrs. Monsarrat has carved out a natural career for herself. As her culinary school became well known, she received offers to do food-related television shows for the CBC regional service in the Maritimes and now is serving as a consultant to chefs in Liverpool, N.S.

HALIFAX

But she is not sold on food programming on television. "Food is getting a bad name via TV," she said. "I don't like such programs as Celebrity Cooks because it tends to cheapen the art. Food isn't something you throw aroun."

When designing the kitchen for teaching purposes, Mrs. Monsarrat had to absorb half a bedroom to have a larger working area for her students.

PREFERS GAS STOVES

The result is a well-planned room with numerous cupboards to hold every utensil imaginable for the gourment. She uses both electric and gas stoves-the latter she says are more popular as they are quick.

In the centre of the room is a large portable island unit with a chopping board top and generous old-fashioned bins where Mrs.

a time and charges $90 for a six-week course, one night a week.

"I believe in learning by doing," she said, "rather than by demonstration."

Students learn to cook complete meals from main course, salads and soups to

There is Philippa's whole baked fish consisting of delicate haddocks dressed and stuffed and topped with a shrimp sauce.

Or, bouillabaisse made Atlantic style with a variety of fishes, lobsters and mussels.

After students have prepared a delicacy, they can eat it and then must clean up after themsleves.

OUTSPOKEN QUALITY

Mrs. Monsarrat thinks that cooking has a long way to go to become excellent, especially in Canadian restaurants.

"Unfortunately, I don't think people really care," she said.

"It's unforgivable how badly cooked so many meals are in restaurants."

SHE FOUND IT "terribly difficult being an expatriate.

"I'm so very grateful now that my sons have been brought up in Canada," she "The situation there in said. South Africa now as I see it is lethal."

She printed and published a woman's magazine when she lived in South Africa and met Nicholas Monsarrat there.

"I was 17 when we met," she said. "We lived together for a time, then we married."

The couple moved to Canada where Monsarrat served as director of the United Kingdom fromation Office in Ottawa.

NOW LIVES IN MALTA

He left Canada in 1966 and after living in Guernsey, in the Channel Islands, moved to Malta where he resides quietly with his third wife

Mrs. Monsarrat Philippa reminisced abut the "grand days" after The Cruel Sea became a best-selling novel.

"That turned out to be a meaningless life of minks, rubies and Rolls Royces, she said slightly bitterly, Yet at 58, this witty, vibrant and attractive divorcee has come to terms with her own life.

She adores her two sons. Anthony is a free-lance photographer in Halifax, while her eldest son Marc lives in Vancouver.

Her constant companion is Cleopatra, a Dandy Dinmont terrier who shadows her mistress except when she bars her from cooking class.

"It was a bit upsetting for sons Marc and Anthony when I named her Cleopatra," she said with a

Luring in the tourists

Governments at all JUDY CREIGHTON Monsarrat keeps staples. levels are spending more She has seven students at money this year to convince money this year to convince free-spending Canadian tourists to leave more of their travel dollars in their own country.

Federal tourism officials say their budget for domestic advertising is being increased by one-third this year to get Canadians to see their own country first. Provincial tourist offices also are making a bigger push for the domestic dollar.

Federal officials say the affluent 50 per cent of Canadians who do most of the travelling now are doing more of it and in both winter and summer.

But increased winter travelling, most of it to warm southern weather, has led to a steady increase in the tourist deficit since the 1967 Centennial Year, the last time foreigners spent more money in Canada than Canadians spent abroad.

Last year, foreigners spent nearly $2 billion in Canada, up $115 million from the year before. But Canadians spent nearly $3.1 billion outside their borders, an increase of $579 million from 1975, leaving an over-all tourist deficit of about $1.1 billion.

This year, the federal government has added another $500,-000 to its

Canadian advertising budget to reduce the deficit. "We're saying, 'You're obviously going to travel someplace, don't overlook travelling in Canada," said Thomas Fletcher, heads the federal office of tourism. Federal government ads are once again pushing slogan the Canada—so much to go Tourism is a big industry in Canada. Canadians travelling within the country and visitors from abroad spent more than $9 billion last year, say tourist office officials.

That provided about 800,000 jobs, direct and indirect, including about 500,000 yearround.

Tourism earned more foreign exchange than the sale of wheat. It was the fifth largest earner of foreign exchange after cars, wood pulp, crude oil and newsprint.

Federal officials won't precise dollar predictions on what can be expected this year other than to say they expect the spending deficit to be re-

A few things are going for the tourist industry this year that might work for an increase in spending from the United States, which still accounts for about twothirds of the foreign tourist dollars spent in Canada.

The Canadian dollar has dropped nearly eight per cent relative to the American dollar in the last year, making the American dollar go farther here. That should also encourage more Canadians to spend their money in Canada because a goods and services in the U.S. will cost more,

Quebec, because of the Olympics, was one of the few provinces to record an increase in foreign travellers last year. Its government has increased its advertising budget to about $4.6 million from $3.2

Although part of that increase will be spent on promotion in the U.S., the tourist office has begun a series of ads aimed at convincing Quebecers to visit a part of their own province.

The office is also increasing promotion of group tours from other parts of Canada in an attempt to make up for loss of convention business from the Ufine province also is doing joint advertising with On-tario and the federal government promoting government promoting highway tours that include historic sites in some of the oldest settled parts of the country.

The Ontario tourism office reports it will spend about 75 per cent of its advertising dollars in U.S. "quality magazines" and in radio and television ads in cities within 150 miles of the Canadian border.

In Newfoundland, preparations are under way for the Canada Summer Games, to be held in St.

John's, Aug. 7-19. The Games are held once every four years, and hotels report bookings are growing steadily. Private homes are being canvassed to provide extra beds.

The Nova Scotia tourist office is taking a more aggressive approach to selling its recreation areas in customer service centres in Toronto, Montreal and New York. A Chicago office serving the U.S. Midwest is

Nova Scotia and Newfoundland together with Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick have begun to co-operate on tourist promotion but so far the only joint venture is a program called "We Care," aimed at improving the quality of washroom facilities in service stations along the Trans-Canada highway. Tourist officials say poor washrooms are the most common source of complaint from visitors.

In British Columbia. tourist operators are hoping for better weather than last year to draw more visitors from the American West Coast.

As part of an intensive proviñcial government promotion in the U.S. northwest, a restored steam locomotive, the Royal Hudson, made a whistlestop tour to every West Coast

But the province is also advertising in Ontario for tourists to travel by air to Ontarians especially desirable visitors because they tend to stay longer in their destination and spend more money, says Dave Hall of the provincial tourism department.

Alberta, Manitoba and Saskatchewan are all promoting travel to their area by other Canadians. U.S. visitors make up only a small percentage of the total small percentage of the total out-of-province visitors to Saskatchewan because there are no large U.S. cities

Alberta is aiming ads at Albertans, trying to get them to do more travelling in their own province.

ARCINE

Starry eyed

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Star Wars is a dazzling galactic swashbuckler, a smashing movie and a smash hit.

Despite its futuristic theme it's an old-fashioned head-'emoff-at-the-pass movie that is fun to see. It is a comic strip come to life, with eye-popping special effects of flashing light swords, ray guns, strange creatures, spaceships and eerie planets.

In its first six days, the movie grossed $2.5 million in only 41 theatres. It's the biggest hit ever in 50 years at the Chinese Theatre in Hollywood, and it's breaking records all over.

Star Wars borrows heavily from the past in a nostalgic salute to western, gangster, pirate and war movies, but writer-director George Lucas, who previously made American Graffiti, has made it wholly his own. It is also touching in the innocence of the farm boy hero, Luke Skywalker, and the way two bumbling Laurel and Hardy robots, Threepio and ArtooDetoo, strive to be like humans.

The delineation between good and evil is so sharp that the hero wears white and the villain wears black.

Mark Hamill stars as Luke Skywalker, an adventurous farm boy who suddenly finds that he is virtually the only one standing between the villainous Darth Vader and destruction of freedom in the galaxy.

Luke yearns to leave the farm run by his aunt and uncle on the desert planet Tatooine when Threepio and Arto-Detoo bring word that rebel Princess Leia (Carrie Fisher) has been kidnapped by Darth Vader.

They are dropped off at the farm by desert scrap collectors. Luke enlists the aid of Ben Kenobi (Alec Guinness), an old wizard, and Han Solo (Harrison Ford), a soldier of fortune and captain of a pirate starship.

The movie has many corny lines, but instead of groaning, the audience loves them, whis tling and cheering. It's like reliving childhood fantasies, yet more imaginative, more intiguing, more spectacular than you ever dreamed.

Hamill, who previously played in the TV series The Texas Wheelers and five TV movies, said he didn't find his role difficult.

"It was a role that required little more from me than to be the innocent, adventurous farm boy who longed to see what's on the other side of the horizon."

Hamill said he believes Lucas plans a Star Wars trilogy because all the actors are under contract for two more films.

"The movie starts off at 60 miles an hour, and even when it slows down to give our backgrounds it's still moving so fast," the actor said.

Attack on Anarchist Mountain

Dy Lyn Hancock

Ask a driver: "Where is Canada's longest continuous hill?" He'll probably reply:
"Somewhere in the "Somewhere Rockies.

Ask a cyclist. He'll say with a groan: "Anarchist Mountain."

This three-lane, paved highway-to-the-sky, winding for 18 miles and to a 3000foot (4,800-metre) elevation from Osoyoos Lake and the summit near Bridesville, may be a tough climb for the cyclist intent on reaching the top without a stop, but it is a rewarding road for the traveller with time to tarry.

Its history is as exciting as its geography is spec-

From the lakeside resort town of Osoyoos you leave the lush orchards and fruit stands of Santos, Vieros and Garcia to meander among the ranch lands of Sidley andkinney and Johnson Creek.

Dig into the history behind sagging settlements or lopsided signs along the filigree of back country roads that crisscross the mountain and you will glimpse turbulent times behind the sleepy desert scenes.

Cows graze now among the cactus and antelope bush, but at the turn of the century, loggers attacked stands of ponderosa pine that were three feet through the butt.

The mountain's very name is anything but peaceful. The story goes that it is named after Dick Sidley, a wild Irish radical of extreme political views who was often called an anarchist. A homesteader there in 1885, Sidley was the mountain's first postpostmaster, customs officer and justice of the peace until his outspoken ways got him fired.

Another story suggests that it was not Sidley who was the anarchist but a gang of horse rustling outlaws that roamed the mountain. Sidley call the outlaws the anarchists.

Whichever is correct, the name is unique and lives longer than the village of Sidley itself now buried by the forest.

Straddling the boundary between canada and the United States, Anarchist Mountain has been involved several amusing situations.

When ¹ Canadian farmer needed threshing to be done but the nearest machine belonged to an American farmer across the border, he solved the problems by placing his neighbour's thresher parallel to the boundary. One man tossed the sheaves over to the United States while the straw and the chaff were blown back to Canada.

In another situation, two brothers had a sawing machine on one side of the boundary and a planer on the other. They shipped and sold the lumber in the country of the best price.

As the signpost says at one f the two official viewpoints, Anarchist Mountain is a "crossroads of the centuries."

Down the valley running north and south came the Indians, the fur traders, the miners and the early settlers. Across the sandspit east and west ran the busy Dewdney Trail to the Kootenay goldfields. Today, you enjoy not only the history geneath your tires but a spectacular diorama of lake and river, mountain and forest in every direction.

As you loop to the summit ingsing towards the Sales then zagging towards Canada, gaining elevation at each switchback, you leave behind the sand and the sage bush and reach the cool of mountain stream and tamarack.

Here several rest areas and a provincial cam-pground at Johnson Creek allow you tranquility to contemplate the peace of the present as you remember the zest of the past.

new image for Van Cleef

By JAY SHARBUTT

LOS ANGELES AP - After a 12-year absence, Lee Van Cleef, the hard-eyed Old West gunsel of High Noon and later Clint Eastwood's For a Few Dollars More, is returning to television.

Vav Cleef's show, airing Sunday on NBC, is a series pilot called NO Where to Hide. He plays Ike Scanlan, a U.S. Marshall protecting an informant the mob wishes to kill.

It's a strange role for the man who, because of 60 movies and 150 TV shows, is well known as one of acting's most sinister villains. But the 51-year-old native of Somerville, N.J., who started acting in the early 1950s in the road company of Mister Roberts, says he's played non-villains, too.

"Back in the 50s I did a couple of good guys," he said. After thinking hard, he mentioned a Medic episode in which he played a doctor. But Van Cleef, who at home does such unvillainous things as paint, play guitar and sing, admits his Bad Guy image does cause him woe at times.

He says he has suffered two broken hands in bar fights brought on by persons wanting to know if he is as tough off the screen as he is

SAYS OLD TEST PILOT

Aircraft industry out to lunch

TORONTO (CP) figure from aviation's past recently presented a paper to the Canadian Aviation Historical Society recalling his work as chief development pilot with Avro Aircraft Ltd., during the heyday of Canada's aircraft industry. industry.

Jan Zurakowski emigrated from Great Britain in 1952 and became involved in the development of the Avro CF-100 and later the Arrow interceptor aircraft.

In 1959 he retired after then Prime Minister John Diefenbaker cancelled the Arrow aircraft program.

When Zurakowski arrived in Canada, the old Toronto Telegram wrote, "Thirty-sevenyear-old Zurakowski is small and balding and looks like anything but a test

One year later he broke the sound barrier while flying an Ayro CF-100 aircraft—the first straight, winged airplane to be pushed past the speed of sound.

At the Farnborough air show in England in 1955, he impressed crowds with an aerobatic "falling leaf" manoeuvre in a similar airplane.

With the CF-100 in quantity production and considered the finest allweather interceptor aircraft in the West, Avro Aircraft Ltd., in Toronto started designing a supersonic fighter for the RCAF to be called the Arrow.

The first Arrow was flown by Zurakowski, March 25, 1958, and more than 1,000 Avro employees watched. The second Arrow was flown in August the same year. On the seventh flight of the first aircraft a speed of 1,000 m.p.h. was exceeded while still climbing at 50,000 feet.

Six prototype aircraft were completed but on Feb. 20, 1959, known as "Black Friday," Avro employees Avro employees informed that were that: Diefenbaker had announced the termination of the Arrow aircraft and Iroquois engine

The ending of the program "was a nasty shock to the pride of the average Canadian and this was probably highly а depressing factor in the years ahead, only reinforcing the widely-held splendid aircraft. It also belief that Canadians cannot happened to be the wrong succeed in anything.

Zurakowski said he had never heard of such a decision being taken without preparation being made to use released manpower and facilities.

In an article by James Eayrs in Ottawa Citizen, Zurakowski was quoted: "The Arrow was a superb piece of machinery, a really aircraft, produced by the wrong country at the wrong time.

At the time, Zurakowski accused government leaders of having sacrificed a superb aircraft for pennypinching.

In 1958, he was awarded the McKee Trophy in recognition of his experimental flying with the aviation."

He was named to Canada's Aviation Hall of Fame in 1973 for "the dedication of his aeronautical skills to the suc-cessful flight testing of Canada's first supersonic aircraft, resulting in sub-stantial benefit to Canadian
