Shown are three of the students on the Work Experience program being run by Andy Barr as a pilot project for School District 88. Barr hopes that the School Board will consider running the program full time next year for students 16 years old. All the students are considered employees of the Crown for the purpose of the program and so are protected by the Worker's Compensation Board on the job. Shown are students at work for Finning Tractor, and the Ministry of Transport at the Terrace-Kitimat Airport.

New job opportunities

By JoAnne Ames
Herald Staff Writer

This year's work Experience program is a pilot project designed to expose students to different career opportunities, and to get and keep their interest in school. According to Richard Parker, Supervisor of Special Services at the Terrace School Board Office, the program is not a revolutionary idea.

Most districts in the north, excluding Terrace's District 88, have been running such programs as a part of their curriculum for quite some time. In fact, a similar kind of alternative to the Work Experience program has been offered to a few students from both Caledonia and Thornhill Secondary schools.

"It's being done right now in a very quiet, successful way," said Richard Parker. Caledonia has seven or eight students, Thornhill has two or three out each year working in the community.

That is what the Work Experience program is designed to do: get students out into "real" jobs in the community as a part of their educational process. It broadens their understanding of both the labour market and their own talents and interests.

There are two major differences between the other programs in other districts and the quietly running one in some of the schools here. The first is Andy Barr, an enthusiastic teacher from Skeena Jr. high school who is coordinating the trial run of the program. He has spent a lot of time and energy on the program, and is hoping to see it work so that the school board will consider "unringing it with a full-time coordinator next year.

The second difference is that "We are working with high risk students; that is, students who may well drop out of school or who may not finish grade twelve," said Parker. If the program can provide good and interesting work for the students involved, they may stay in school... Let's face it, school can be pretty boring if what you are being taught doesn't seem to be leading you to any goal.

The program is not a job replacement service, nor is it career training for everyone. Barr, the teacher in charge of the pilot project says the program, even if it is accepted for next year by the school board, "...will not become a part of every student's right as a secondary student."

The focus of the program is not, and probably will not be students who are "...having no difficulty pulling down high marks in school," says Richard Parker.

"The focus is on students who are having difficulty with the academics." If the program is approved, it will not be a part of everyone's education.

Parker voices his major concern with the "high risk" students again. "We hope the program will be the prelude to something bigger for students, and for the schools."

This year is a test run to get the reaction of the public, the employers, and the unions to the program. If it goes well, a request will be made for the program to continue next year on a larger scale, with a full-time coordinator. It will include Skeena Jr., Caledonia Sr. and Thornhill high schools.

What would the job of coordinator entail? Barr told me what he has done and is doing, and it sounds like a handful. He initially found positions for students with local employers. There were very few problems finding job areas for students in the community. "The reason the program enjoys success," says Barr, "is because of the response we've had from the business community. The program was very well received. Businesses have been pleased with the concept. I only have 9 or 10 students out, but I could have placed 150."

After finding positions, Barr selected students. A certain level of maturity and responsibility is required for the job program. No only must students be able to fulfill their responsibilities to employers, but they are also expected to keep up with the work that has gone on in their morning classes while they were at their job site. They must attend their afternoon classes, and keep up with all their school work.

Students spend half the day at the job. Some of them have to be at their jobs by eight in the morning. Barr drives them to the job sites and picks them up again at noon.

Each Monday, students change jobs so that by the end of the program, they have done 4 or 5 different jobs. On Monday mornings, Andy takes the time to introduce students to the work they will be doing and the people they will be working with during the following week.

While the students are in their afternoon classes, and at various other times during the day, Barr visits the job areas to "...ensure that the students are fulfilling their obligations, and that their work site is providing a learning situation for them." "This allows any problems that may arise to be handled immediately, rather than waiting until the end of the program." At the end of each week, each student evaluates himself.

These evaluations are compared with those of the employer, so that the student can become aware of his or her potential in that job area.

When I asked if students see the job evaluations given of them by the employers, Barr said, "Yes, but only at the end of the program."

The idea of the program is to familiarize the students with the kinds of jobs available to them later in life. "many students choose a vocation not on the basis of their interests, but their exposure to jobs. And their exposure is mainly to their own families and their occupations. We're providing some different exposure."

"The students are aware of opportunities and jobs that they didn't even think existed before." The students are at a level in the school system—grade 10—when they have to make a decision about if they want to be on technical, academic, or vocational programs. And of course, they are allowed to quit school after grade ten. The program might change their directions.

"The response of the students has been very keen," says Barr, "They've shown a lot of enthusiasm for the jobs they've been placed in."

WEST BANK

Begin pledges to retain land

Right-winger now in control

KADDUM, West Bank (AP) — Right-wing leader Menahem Begin, fresh from victory in Israel's national elections, journeyed to the West Bank of the Jordan River on Thursday and proclaimed the occupied territory "the land of liberated Israel."

Meanwhile, Shimon Peres, head of the defeated Labor party, told a meeting of party leaders in Tel Aviv he was rejecting Begin's invitation for Labor to join with Begin's fourparty Likud bloc to form a coalition government.

The largest contingent in the Israeli Parliament, the Likud, is a minority and must find coalition partners to form a majority government headed by Begin.

The Likud leader visited an unauthorized Jewish settlement at Kaddum, midway between Tel Aviv and the Jordan, and promised there would be many such settlements in the future.

It was an apparent show of determination by Begin to fulfill his campaign promise to make the West Bank, captured from Jordan in the 1967 Arab-Israeli war, part of Israel.

The defeated Labor government had viewed the possible return of much of the West Bank as a bargaining chip in the negotiations for a permanent Middle East peace, and the Arabs have demanded return of all of the West Bank as part of a new Palestinian state.

In Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, three Arab leaders—presidents Hafez Assad of Syria and Anwar Sadat of Egypt and Crown Prince Fahd of Saudi Arabia—met Thursday to discuss their next moves in light of the rightwing triumph in Israel. Arab commentators said Likud's victory meant war preparations must take precedence over peace initiatives.

Begin received an emotional welcome from the 200 Jews living in huts and house trailers at Kaddum.

"We stand on the land of liberated Israel, settled and made flowering by the wonderful pioneers and workers of the soil," he declared.

Begin told the crowd he wanted "at this time to tell our neighbors (West Bank Arabs) that we want to live with them in peace, mutual respect and prosperity... We do not want to dispossess a single one of them."

Former Lt.-Gen. Ariel Sharon, a hero of the 1973 Middle East war, accompanied Begin here and said Tuesday's Israeli national election showed that "the West Bank is a part of Israel and we will stay here forever." Sharon is expected to be in the Likud cabinet.

The settlers came here in December 1975 in defiance of the now-defeated Labor government's policy prohibiting new Jewish communities in the Arab-populated hinterland of the West Bank.

Column one Change of stance

MLA Cyril Shelford's "Kitimat Pipeline Questionnaire" is more a sign of a politician running scared than it is of someone concerned about public input.

Surely Shelford is not so naive as to suspect that the results of his questionnaire will be at all representative or carry any credibility.

What for example is to stop one side or the other picking up a few hundred of the questionnaires and filling them out on behalf of its members. Nothing. And given the degree of sentiment about the oil port-pipeline issue, this is probably just what will happen.

If the results come out in favour of a pipeline, environmental groups will claim that the questionnaires were stacked by pipeline advocates.

If, on the other hand, they show an anti-pipeline sentiment, local business groups will allege that pipeline opponents rigged the responses.

Just who is Mr. Shelford trying to kid?

The public already knows how Mr. Shelford feels about the oil port-pipeline issue — he favours it. Presumably, Mr. Shelford based this opinion on strongly-held, well-reasoned convictions; otherwise he would have reserved his judgement until after environmental studies and public hearings.

But he did not do so. Why then is he all of a sudden so concerned about community input?

Either Mr. Shelford should have reserved personal judgement from the beginning or he should stick with his own convictions — he cannot have it both ways.

His present position is reminiscent of "a politician who once said: "If you don't like my principles, don't worry, I can change them."

All of which leaves one with the distinct taste that Mr. Shelford's primary concern is promoting a questionnaire is not to get responsible public input — hopefully the Thompson hearings will do that — but rather to give the semblance of being open-minded and concerned.

Perhaps Mr. Shelford is finally realizing that his gung-ho, "develop everything" position is not as popular as he had expected. Perhaps he is beginning to understand that the environment is a precious resource to be preserved — not a community to be sold to the highest bidder.

If so, he should admit the error of his earlier position and inform the public of what he now believes. Not hide behind a gimicky questionnaire.

But, then again, perhaps he is just trying to win back votes. Let's hope not.

AMID BITTERNESS

Postal talks end

OTTAWA (CP) — The Canadian Union of Postal Workers (CUPW) said Thursday it has broken off contract talks with the post office because the government is bypassing union executives and going directly to the members.

"Today, the spokesman for the employer informed us that the employer would continue to distribute information concerning negotiations directly to our membership but would not allow the union's bulletin to be distributed during lunch breaks and rest periods," said Jean-Claude Parrot.

Negotiations adjourned only an hour after they started Thursday. Parrot said at a later news conference the union will not return to the bargaining table until the public service staff relations board has ruled on the question of whether the union has the right to distribute literature in the post office.

Technological change is a major issue in dispute, with CUPW demanding iron-clad guarantees that its members will not be adversely affected by changes in the post office.

Parrot said that post office negotiators told the union Thursday "that many of our demands are not negotiable."

Parrot said it is obvious to the union officials that the post office was not prepared to negotiate seriously with the union.

The union, which represents 23,000 mail sorters and postal clerks, says it is not opposed to changes which will improve the efficiency of the post office but its members must be protected.

CUPW wants the right to veto any technological changes unless agreement is reached between the two parties.

Nothing secretive about work study

VANCOUVER (CP) — Harold Wilson, the man named Wednesday at the royal commission into British Columbia Railway as the labor consultant who wanted to "demolish the hierarchy of B.C. Rail," said Wednesday that he is "no wild revolutionary."

Wilson, speaking in a telephone interview from his Ottawa home, said he is a chartered accountant and now is director of administration at the Inuit Tapirisat of Canada, the Inuit Arctic land claims organization.

Mac Norris, chief executive officer of BCR, told the royal commission Wednesday that Wilson was introduced to him in 1974 by former labor minister Bill King as an expert in industrial democracy. He said that three months later Wilson left because of the kind of shakeup he was trying to engineer in the BCR hierarchy.

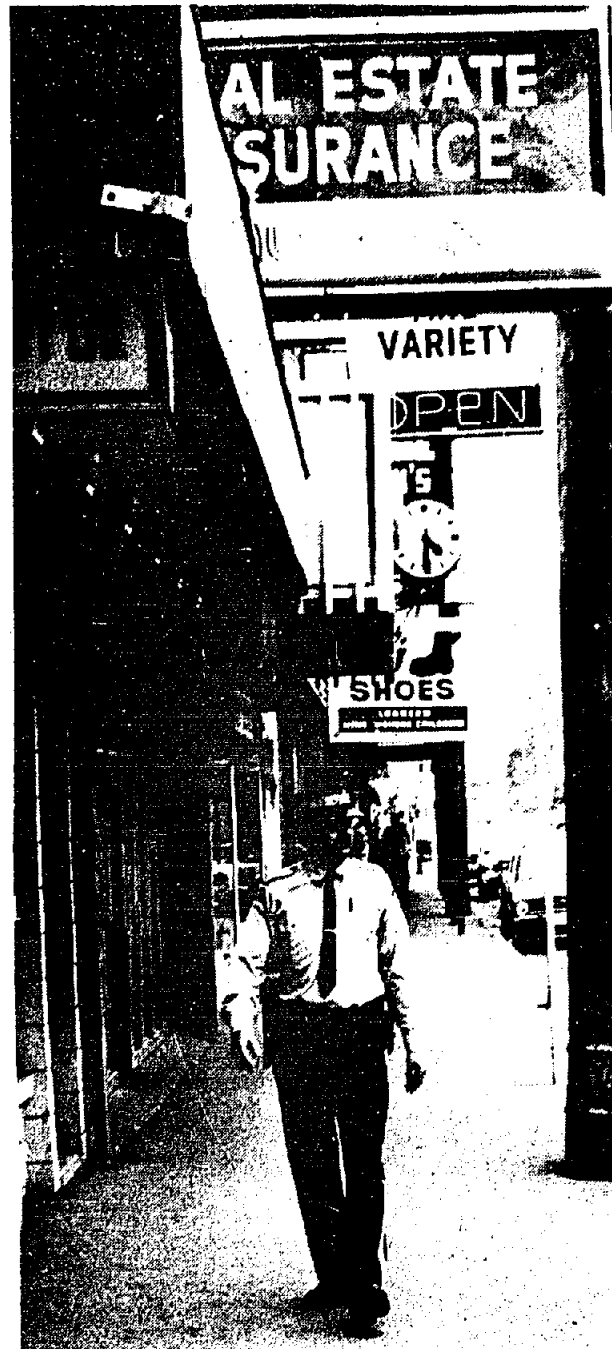

Wilson, who said he was an Ottawa-based labor consultant, chose BCR for a number of Crown corporations. King said he had help with industrial relations.

Wilson said demolish was "too emotion" a word for what he tried to accomplish at BCR.

"There had been problems on B.C. Railway for years and the problem seemed to be that they had a very rigid hierarchy," Wilson said. "My job was to try to break down that hierarchy."

POLICE WEEK 1977

Working together, supporting justness

This year's police week theme is "working together - Supporting Justness". I would like to take this opportunity to encourage the public to work together with the police with a common objective in mind. The objective should be to make our community a safe and pleasant place in which to enjoy our work and leisure time. Only by receiving the support of the community can the police hope to effectively control the criminal element which is working to prevent a harmonious co-existence.

Staff Sergeant Dick Latta

Not only during police week but every week of the year, the police and the community must work together towards their common goal. We are available to answer your questions and assist you concerning the security of your home, business, car or valuable property. We are available to answer questions dealing with the many provincial and federal statutes. We offer our assistance in a multitude of ways. What we ask in return is your help. We need you to call us on the phone, stop in to see us, speak to the policeman or policewoman on the street, and tell us about your suspicions, what you have seen that looked out of place or unusual. It may not seem important to you, but it could mean preventing another night of meaningless wilful damage or the theft of a car or bicycles, or another sale of drugs.

"Police Week" this year is stressing what the police have known for years. Crime is too big for us to handle alone, we need your help. By "working together - supporting justness" we will get the job done.

COMMUNITY RELATIONS OFFICER - Constable Larry York is kept busy answering questions from students in the Terrace area. Here a student is inquiring about this weeks theme of "working together supporting justness". York reminds the public the RCMP will have a booth again this year at the Jaycees Trades Fair.

SPlicing OF GENES NOW COMMONPLACE

SEATTLE (AP) — A new technique that cuts up genes and recombines them will be used within a month to produce a rare hormone insulin, a University of Washington microbiologist said Wednesday.

Insulin is used in the treatment of diabetes. The technique involves splicing the genetic material called DNA (deoxyribonucleic acid) from one gene and mixing it with another, he said.

Dr. Stanley Falkow said that research scientists in California are on the threshold of perfecting hybrid genes designed to produce animal insulin inexpensively.

Falkow said he has successfully spliced genes to develop a strain of bacteria capable of immunizing cattle and pigs against a killer intestinal disease.

BRAIN DISEASE HARD TO REMEDY

VANCOUVER (CP) — Finding cures for brain disease is like searching for oil, Education Minister Pat McGeer said Wednesday.

McGeer, who is on leave of absence from the University of British Columbia, where he was a professor and head of the Neurosciences Division, told a meeting of Canadians for Health Research that "to find the oil well, you have to send out people who know how to find it."

"Until we put people to work exploring for causes of (brain) disease, we're never going to find it," he added.

McGeer said great advances have been made in the field of brain disorders—

"only threequarters of a century ago, we didn't even know the brain was made of cells"—but that the big discovery needed now is to find out why certain cells die and others survive.

McGeer said Huntington's Chorea, an hereditary disease which terminates in death following years of mental deterioration and chronic jerky, involuntary movements, is one which needs more research.

It's a tragic thing when the brain goes faster than other organs in the body, he said.

"The brain is the zenith of nature's work."

No world ban on N-testing

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States failed to win Chinese and French backing for a world ban on all nuclear weapon test-shots.

Diplomatic sources said Thursday that the Peking government has declined the U.S. proposal and has said it intends to continue test-firing nuclear arms.

The Chinese have long argued that U.S.-Soviet attempts to stop tests and to limit strategic weapons add up to a superpower design to preserve their nuclear supremacy.

French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing also has told the Carter administration he is unlikely at this time to agree to a total ban on nuclear tests. France, like China, also has refused to sign the world pact to stop the spread of nuclear weapons, known as the nonproliferation treaty.

Carter, however, is continuing efforts to transform the existing partial test-ban treaty into a complete ban. He has stressed that a comprehensive test-ban treaty is essential if the spread of nuclear weapons is to be controlled.

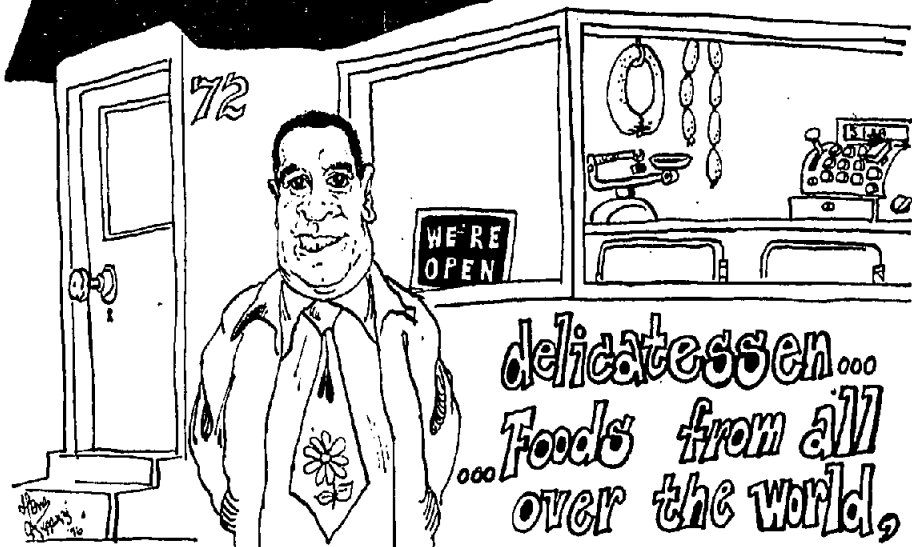

Administration sources say the U.S. and Soviet governments are arranging early talks—probably beginning in Washington next month—to conclude an expanded atomic testban treaty in two stages.

The first stage would be a moratorium, lasting one or two years, that would outlaw the detonation of all nuclear weapons underground. The current agreement allows shots with a yield of up to 150 kilotons, or 150,000 tons of TNT.

The second stage would be the new treaty itself, lasting about five years.

NCMA GATHERING CALLED A SUCCESS

Work at hand on convention cruise

By BRIAN GREGG
Herald Staff Writer

George Thom

"I was really enthused (about the trip) although I didn't know what to expect.

One group conspicuous by its presence was the City of Prince George which has not attended an NCMA conference for several years. "They were out in force," Thom says.

Thom says Kitimat had been criticized in the past for not holding an NCMA conference since 1962. He explained it was necessary to go the ship route because Kitimat does not have the facilities for a conference that size.

"I expect I'll lose a few votes over it," he says with a shrug of his shoulders.

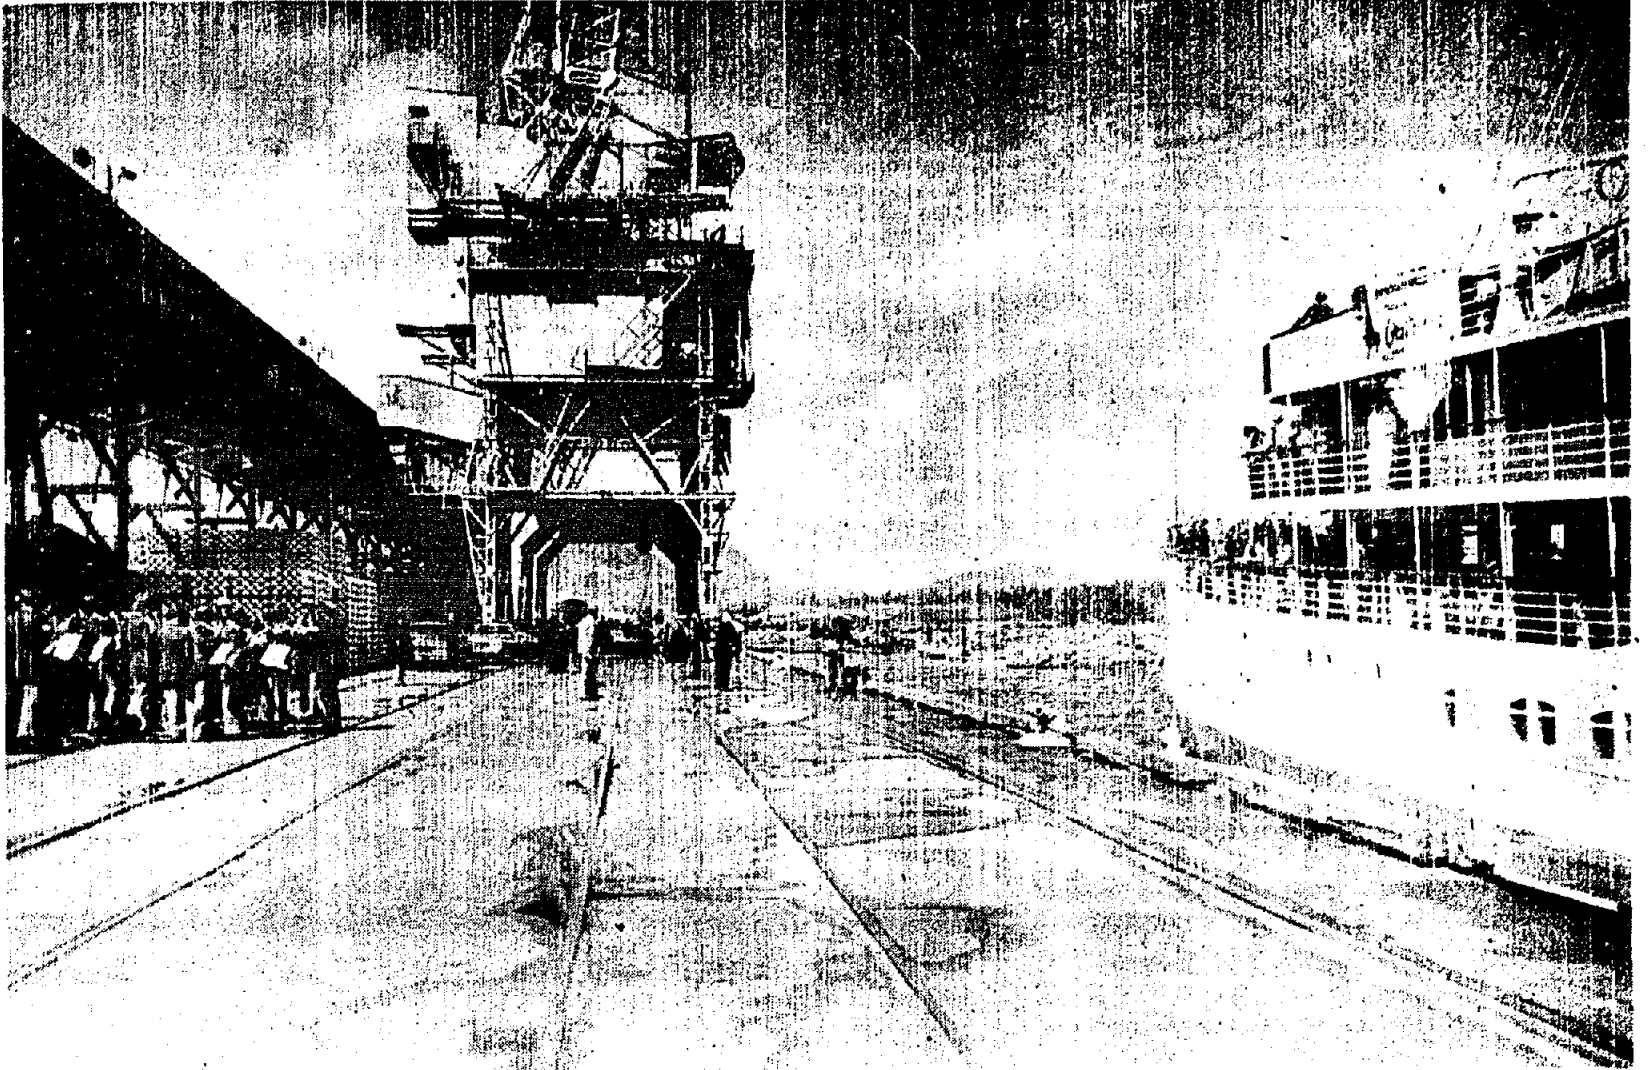

Thom was impressed with the "no holiday" attitude people took on board ship. "We had to cut them off at lunch time because if they didn't stop working they would not get any food...we had the same problem at supper time," he said.

He said people who make comments of "Ship of Fools" remind him of a big wheel. "...once you let the air out you have only a flat tire."

Of the 28 resolutions put forward 19 were carried. Kitimat withdrew a resolution asking that municipal officials be elected for three year terms instead of two year terms. The resolution was reworded and reintroduced later; it was carried. "The original resolution was badly written," Thom said.

NCMA delegates supported a Regional District of Kitimat-Stikine resolution calling for cost-sharing between municipal-Indian reserver governments for capital and operational costs such as water, sewer, garbage, recreation and parks services.

The regional district also called for crown provincial agencies, which plan resource management and development plans in the official regional development plan.

The regional district was also successful in presenting a resolution calling for an investigation into the feasibility of installing a central municipal computer system with common standard programs and suggesting that all municipalities with populations over 2,500 and under 500,000 will be required to use it.

Kitimat was successful in passing its resolution calling for no tax exemptions on teacher ages. The municipality argued that the school boards charge the teachers so why should not the cities charge the school boards?

Terrace was successful in putting forward its scheme to have the Attorney-General of B.C. consider, on a regional basis, the establishment and maintenance of facilities for the rehabilitation of juvenile offenders who do not require a completely secure environment.

The resolution argued that such offenders are not a security risk and do not require being dealt with in a completely secure facility such as those presently available in the lower mainland.

NO TOURIST FUTURE

According to local representatives at the conference, Victoria has negative thoughts about tourism as a future industry in this area. There were hints of major discoveries in natural resources yet to come in the north central region, however.

Dr. Bill Waters, Centre for Transportation Studies from the Faculty of Commerce at UBC, discussed northern rail, air, highway and water systems. His report on the northern transportation studies, soon to be released, is seen by Kitimat as the most important factor in the future of the northwest.

The report will begin a 20-year plan to open up the northern transportation corridor from Vancouver to Kitimat by sea and from Kitimat to Yukon by highway.

Dr. Peter Pearse, from the department of economics at UBC, hit home when he talked about big bang development versus incremental (slow and steady) growth.

His message was that municipalities must tie in their plans of secondary and primary industries with the local natural resources. He also got delegates thinking about how large they should plan the small town.

Jack Kempf, MLA for Omenica, said local governments must get tough and demand stronger policies. He said they must thwart developing minority groups and labour and management must learn to agree or there will be no future in industry.

FLOURIDE CITY HAS LESS CANCER

PRINCE GEORGE, B.C. (CP) — This northern town was the first community in British Columbia to fluoridate its water supply and now has fewer cancer deaths than the provincial average, said Dr. Walter Korzenowski, B.C.'s regional dental consultant.

Dr. Korzenowski said statistics obtained recently by the Northern Interior Health Unit disprove a Washington cancer researcher's report that fluoridated drinking water can cause cancer.

"They show there is absolutely no indication of a trend that can link fluoridated water with cancer," he said, adding that statistics show the opposite—"more deaths in non-fluoridated communities."

Dr. Korzenowski said 12 communities with fluoridated water in B.C. had almost 35 per cent fewer cancer deaths with a cancer death rate per 100,000 population of 123.4 compared with the provincial average of 157.9.

Compiled during a four-year period ending in 1974, the statistics showed Prince George to have the second-lowest cancer death rate. Kitimat, which also has a fluoridated water supply, had the lowest rate.

The 12 communities surveyed with fluoridated water systems included were Campbell River, Courtenay, Cranbrook, Fort St. John, Kamloops, Kelowna, Kimberley, Prince Rupert, Squamish and Terrace.

Kelowna and Campbell River were the only two communities with a cancer rate higher than the provincial average.

Dr. Korzenowski attributes Kelowna's high cancer death rate to the large number of older, retired people living there and said that although he didn't know the reason behind the 177.2 rate at Campbell River it wasn't higher than the provincial average.

"Anyone who says fluoridated water causes cancer simply doesn't know what he's talking about.

"Age and industrialization are the key factors when it comes to death from cancer," said the doctor.

Small town values needed

Tuesday, the Supreme Court of Canada decided that a municipal government has no right to withhold a business licence in order to protect the values of the community it represents.

Concerned with the letter of the law, the court, in a 5-0 judgement, stated that a lawful business, such as a "sex shop", should not be denied a licence to operate on the grounds that it might offend the sensibilities of the community in which it proposes to operate.

The ruling came in connection with a legal conflict between the town of Prince George and John Payne, a sex shop owner.

In denying Payne a licence to open a store dealing in sexual apparatus, the town has overstepped its jurisdiction, the court maintained. The inference seems to be, that if sex shops are legal in B.C., they are legal in Prince George.

Fair enough, but the decision of the court raises an interesting political question. If municipal authorities are not qualified to protect, through bylaws and licensing, the values of the people they represent, who is?

From the point of view of legal uniformity, the court's decision is quite correct. If John Payne can legally open a sex shop in Victoria, as he has done, why should he not be able to do likewise in Prince George or anywhere else in the province?

But perhaps those precise and proper legal minds are overlooking something very real and vital, namely, the collective personalities that make small towns different from big cities.

Many of the people who inhabit the small towns of B.C. and the rest of Canada are "escapes" from the exploitative, slightly perverted madness of cities. If body rub parlors, porno theatres and sex peddlers were to their liking, they would probably have remained in or moved to a big city.

One might also ask: if local municipalities are not constituted to protect the specific interests of their residents, what exactly is their purpose?

If the citizens of Prince George really want a sex shop their views will sooner or later be expressed at the electoral level. In the meantime, what is to become of the personalities of small towns if the decisions of local government are undermined for the sake of legal consistencies?

OVER NATIONAL DESTINY Citizen groups should have control

MONTREAL (CP) — Senator Maurice Lamontagne, a Quebecer with a long career in education, public service and public life, says that although federal and provincial governments are engaged in a tussle over power, what they should be doing is finding ways to give people more authority and the means to use it.

He says citizen groups in which individuals try to work out their own destinies are increasing in number. Such voluntary and popular movements indicate that growing numbers of citizens find that higher levels of government, both federal and provincial, have grown too large, too bureaucratic and too remote.

Basically, what people possibly want is not a constitutional rearrangement but a redefinition of the role of the state and a regional decentralization of administrative apparatus and decision centres so they will be more visible and more human.

Senator Lamontagne contends that efforts devoted to the cause of separatism by the Quebec government do not correspond to an over-riding preoccupation of the great majority of people.

He says former premier Robert Bourassa realized too late that his policy of cultural sovereignty did not get a popular response, while Jean Lesage, an earlier premier, failed to capture the interest of average citizens with what was called a "policy of grandeur."

Modern Quebecers, like the citizens of other societies said to be advanced, are better educated and informed and have better living standards than preceding generations.

Individuals now were more inclined to set their own priorities and find their own ways of self-fulfillment. It was a renaissance of individualism with a "very positive" aspect since the pursuit of happiness can only be undertaken by individuals.

Senator Lamontagne made his comment on the current political and constitutional issues in Canada in a long and detailed lecture at Université de Montreal.

The 9,300-word address was presented under the auspices of the Canada Studies Foundation and the text was published in three sections by Le Devoir which makes a practice of printing documents regarded as important.

The lecture dealt with opposing trends of thought in Quebec that date back more than a century, with aspects of Quebec's economic history for about two centuries and with current thinking about reform of the Canadian constitution.

The senator, a native of Mont Joli in the Lower St. Lawrence area of the province, belongs to an early generation of Quebec reformers, many of them trained at the social sciences faculty of Laval University in the late 1950s.

He studied economics at Harvard and taught at Laval before joining the federal public service where he became economic adviser to the Privy Council and later to Lester Pearson while he was opposition leader in Parliament. He was a member of Parliament and a cabinet minister before appointment to the Senate in 1967. He is 59.

In his Montreal lecture, Senator Lamontagne said that current debate among federalists about reform of the constitution may prove to be more important than the issue of Quebec separatism.

He mentioned two general theories of constitutional change, one held by "structuralists" and the other by "functionalists." The former want fundamental changes in the federal structure, talking even in terms of a five-province country or about provinces having practically all government responsibility.

The "functionalists," whom he regards as "more flexible and democratic," have no particular doctrine of decentralization but feel that government should be decentralized if that is wanted by people rather than by elite.

He said a myth that has become current is that Canada has a rigid form of federalism although in fact the country has one of the most flexible forms of federalism in the world.

The competing philosophies propounded by leaders in the French-language community for more than 100 years have been nationalist on one side and "humanist" on the other.

"The two tendencies differ profoundly in their spirit, their manner and their issue," he said.

The nationalist line of thought conceives revolutionary changes in political structure as the only way of solving the problems of Quebec society. Independence is regarded as a great, collective project, a historic undertaking of liberation.

He said the humanist tendency is based on the idea that what counts first of all is the achievement of good policies to ensure that the citizen thrives and that political structures, always imperfect, should be built around the citizen's needs.

Through the years, it is true that French-speaking Canadians have had to overcome serious obstacles and have had reason for serious grievances, he said. But there were other aspects of the past that were forgotten or badly interpreted by several generations of historians.

He cited as an example the conquest of 1759. In Quebec, the conquest of that year was that of "dark nationalism." In 1753, after the Seven Years' War, France did not have to cede Canada to Britain but preferred Guadeloupe sugar to Canadian furs.

Under the British regime, commerce in wheat offered relief for a declining fur trade and then lumber trade and shipbuilding took their place.

Senator Lamontagne said that although the nationalists of the day opposed it, Confederation in 1867 resulted in development of railways, canals and port facilities and led to creation of a vast common market in Canada.

The federal government's National Policy of 1879 provided tariff protection for developing industries, and toward the end of the century rapid population growth in the West produced benefits for manufacturing industries in Quebec as well as Ontario.

He attributed to federal government initiative the launching of industrial development in Quebec, adding that when natural resources became a factor of dynamic growth, provincial governments played only a passive role initially.

The federal government filled a void that might have been tragic for French-Canadian culture, by creating the National Research Council, the CBC and Radio-Canada, the National Film Board, the Canada Council, the film development corporation and by grants to universities.

"It is in this area that the nationalist elites fought their hardest combats, believing that the federal institutions and programs represented a serious danger to our collective personality," he said.

"But, without these 'intrusions,' what would have become of the individual personality of our researchers, artists, actors, singers and authors? What would have happened to our cultural institutions such as our universities, orchestras and theatre and ballet companies?"

Senator Lamontagne said the part played by Radio-Canada in cultural resurgence and progress of the French-language cannot be discounted.

"And, further, it must be pointed out, that direct or indirect federal aid in the cultural field was more respectful of the liberty of institutions and individuals than were some of the interventions of provincial governments."

He said that any process leading to a constitutional rearrangement should focus on the needs, desires and preoccupations of all citizens, in particular the large number whose views become known only through public opinion polls or when there are elections.

Real issue overlooked?

Editor, Terrace Herald
Re: Blaze guts five apartments. Fire leaves families homeless. Firemen quick to scene. At the scene. "They've given up on it."

The headlines and the pictures on your May 18, 1977, issue are very impressive. Joanne Ames, you've hit the nail right on the head with your coverage on the human tragedy which occurred in Terrace.

The real tragedy is that again you've missed the point. I cannot sit by and let this attitude prevail in a Just Society.

The people who lost their homes and belongings will never replace what was lost in that fire. Therefore, what are you doing about it?

They also lost the precious publicity that only you can provide. Also lost is the human dignity, which runs pretty thin in times of stress as was caused by the fire.

There are some facts that someone in the position that you hold in Terrace should be examining and finding answers to:

1. Why do people have to live in a place like the Flynn apartments?
2. Why are there people who own such establishments allowed to get fat off the back of people whose income only permits them to live in such apartments?
3. Where are all those people who work in government departments whose responsibility it is to oversee the premises?
4. What are our present municipal and provincial governments doing to improve these conditions which exist that provide poor housing, low income, poor working conditions?

There is more, Joanne. Look around Terrace and see what else exists that will provide fat insurance claims for owners and provide more misery and heartbreak for these people.

Quadra - it's B.C.'s special island

By ED AND

JEAN MacKENZIE

Love an island? British Columbians have hundreds to explore and Quadra Island is one of their favourites.

Quadra, halfway up Vancouver Island's sheltered eastern shore, is reached by a 12-minute car ferry from Campbell River.

The island is nearly 15 miles (24 kilometres) long — one of the largest along Georgia Strait — and swift tidal races are its coast's feature: Okisollo Channel in the north, Surge Narrows to the east, and Seymour Narrows — site of the once-dead Ripple Rock — to the west. Rock-studded inlets and curving bays deeply indent its shores. And Quadra's history is as intriguing as its jagged coastline.

The island is named after Juan Francisco de la Bodega y Quadra, Knight of the Order of Santiago and governor of the early Spanish settlement at Nootka in 1792. That year, Captain George Vancouver's sloop Discovery arrived off the steep bluff at the island's southern tip.

Exploring up from the Juan de Fuca Strait, Vancouver probed into the passage west of Quadra Island and found the route he had sought — through to Queen Charlotte Sound and the Pacific Ocean.

Not far from the Cape Mudge Lighthouse, which marks the entrance to Discovery Passage, was the Euclataw Indians' strong stockade. Here they had battled the Royal Navy's gunboat Forward when she steamed north in 1860 to arrest members of a hunting party who had attacked white migrants.

Today, the Indians operate the successful We Wai Kai campground on beautiful Drew Harbour. This campground has over 100 forest and beachfront camping spots with good facilities.

The Drew Harbour anchorage, where sleek white cruisers drop anchor at the night, is protected by a mile-long siver of land. This is Rebecca Spit, one of the loveliest provincial picnic parks.

In pioneer times, the Spit was a favourite site for day-long picnics that brought the isolated immigrant families together.

Quadra's rock shore is a rich foraging ground for shellfish lovers. Clam and oyster beds are so popular that limits are placed on the number of shellfish an individual may take.

A notice at the park entrance states: "Oysters — 25 in the shell or one quart of shucked oysters per person" and, "Clams — 24 per person per day."

The region's economy leans heavily on the sea's bounty. The huge, hard-fighting tyee hooked from the tidal waters have record weights and sportsmen from around the world, seeking one of these mighty salmon, zero in on Quadra.

The gravel roads at the island's northern end lead to freshwater lakes, the old Finnish settlement site at Granite Bay.

College entrants fail English test

VANCOUVER (CP) — John Scoggan, one of the 44 people at University of British Columbia who marked an English composition test written by university entrants, says about half received failing marks.

The placement test, written May 3 by Grade 12 students and others planning to enter postsecondary institutions in September, was commissioned by the provincial government to find out how many university and college entrants need remedial language help.

"There was a general consensus (among markers) that the problem is quite bad," said Scoggan, who marked the composition section but not the grammar quiz of 40 sentences.

Results of the test, which will be given as a mark out of 80, with equal weighting for the composition and sentence sections, will be sent to students next week.

"The literacy problem," said Scoggan, "stems from a separation of grammar and literature in schools, and students have been taking literature courses as a means of bypassing English."

"The problem is that English has become an elective instead of a necessity. Students have a difficult time expressing themselves in writing and they cannot develop ideas."

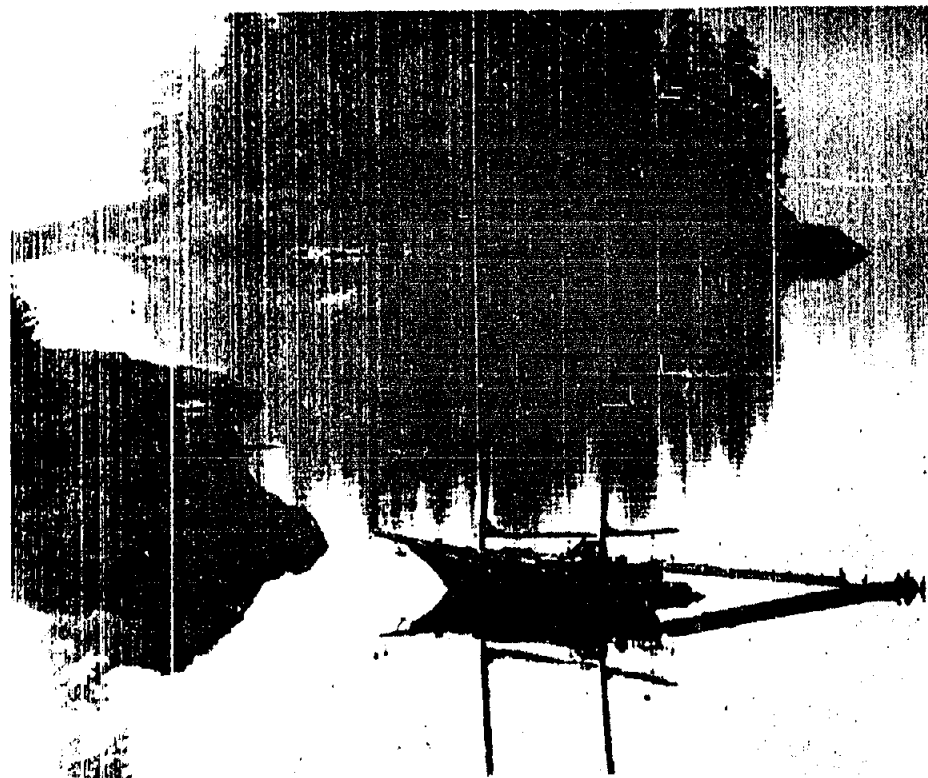

Markers also were working on the tests at Vancouver Community College, Castlegar, Kamloops and Victoria.

Lloyd MacDonald, director of the placement test project, said Scoggan's remarks "managed to break the trust we had with high school teachers, that this test would be no reflection on them."

"I'm very upset about it," MacDonald said Scoggan only saw a fraction of the tests and a full analysis of all the results has yet to be made.

He noted that a number of students writing the test had English as a second language.

MacDonald said test results will go to Education Minister Pat McGeer next week and the minister will announce the test findings.

For $150,000 Preakness

Slew is ready to run: Taylor

BALTIMORE (AP) — Seattle Slew will probably run the best race of his life Saturday, Mickey Taylor said Thursday, discussing the Kentucky Derby winner's forthcoming test in the $150,000-added Preakness.

husband of Karen Taylor, the listed owner of Seattle Slew.

The unbeaten colt will be called upon Saturday to run 1 1/2-16 miles around the Pimlico track. He is the early 3-to-5 favorite to do it faster than eight other three-year-olds and keep alive his shot at the U.S. thoroughbred racing's Triple Crown.

Seattle Slew, to be ridden by Jean Cruguet, drew the No. 8 post position for his bid for an eighth win. A large percentage of winners at this Pimlico meeting have been inside horses, but Seattle Slew has the speed to get to the rail quickly.

"It should be an interesting race because Cormorant and J.O. Tobin will be close and Run Dusty Run will be laying in right behind him," said Taylor. Canadian-bred Regal Sir, who has never raced outside of Canada, has started three times this year, winning once in a stakes. He is owned by John B.W. Carmichael of Toronto and ridden by Chris McCarron and will be going from the No. 4 post.

The speedy Cormorant, owned by Charles T. Berry Jr. and ridden by Danny Wright, drew the inside post and was made the second choice at 4-to-1. The bay colt won four straight as a two-year-old after an opening loss, then this year won the Iroquois Handicap and the Bay Shore and Gotham stakes before missing the Derby because of a fever and cough. Mrs. Robert E. Lehmann's Run Dusty Run, whose second place in the Derby was his fourth straight runner-up finish, was made the third early choice at 8-to-1. He will be ridden from the No. 9 slot by Darrel McHargue.

J.O. Tobin, listed at 10 to 1 with Iron Constitution, worked a half-mile in 47 flat. Bill Shoemaker will ride him from the No. 6 post. A virus also kept him out of the Derby.

The nationally-televised classic, scheduled to start at 5:40 p.m. EDT will be televised on CTV between 5

Re-adjustment difficult, says Jet player

WINNIPEG (CP) — Quiet Dan Labraaten says he still is making the adjustment from amateur hockey in Sweden to professional hockey in Canada.

But the 25-year-old right-winger is working well with linemates Peter Sullivan and Willy Lindstrom. "Peter and I both like to play with the puck at centre ice and it took me a while to get used to that," Labraaten said of centremen Sullivan.

"But now I know Peter, and Willy I know from Sweden."

Labraaten scored once and set up two other goals Thursday night to spark Winnipeg Jets to a 6-1 win over Quebec Nordiques and a 2-1 lead in the World Hockey Association final.

"He's a helluva hockey player," said Winnipeg coach Bobby Kromm.

"He's scored three great goals in this series. He's got great talent, speed and he's strong. He'll score 45-50 goals next season."

With the Jets' top line of Anders Hedberg, Ulf Nilsson and Bobby Hull having trouble scoring in this series, the Labraaten-Sullivan-Lindstrom line will again be a key in tonight's fourth game.

"We did not play too good in the San Diego series but we started to come on against Houston," said Labraaten who now has five goals and 13 assists in 16 playoff games.

"All season we were up and down. But we are always up for the important games."

A victory tonight would give Winnipeg a 3-1 lead in the best-of-seven final but a Quebec victory would even the series and restore the home-ice advantage to the Nordiques.

"That line has been playing well in this series and hopefully they'll continue," said Kromm.

"I'm a little concerned with their defensive play. They scare me at times the way they move the puck but then they control the puck so long they make things happen."

The line has been the key to Winnipeg's two victories over Quebec.

Prior to the third period Thursday night, the only other Winnipeg player to have pick up a point in the final was defenceman Dave Dunn with one assist.

The series moves back to Quebec for game five Friday night with the sixth back here Tuesday.

Boxing match delayed

TORONTO (CP) — The world welterweight boxing championship match between titleholder Jose Cuevas of Mexico and Clyde Gray of Toronto has been "postponed or cancelled," Gray's manager, Irv Ungerman, said Thursday.

The fight, originally slated for June 7 and later rescheduled for June 16 at Hamilton's Ivor Wynne Stadium, was "left in limbo," by various problems that arose during negotiations involving Ungerman, whose All-Canada Sports was co-promoting the affair with a group of Hamilton lawyers headed by Roger Yachetti, and Lupe Sanchez, manager of Cuevas.

Smythe still a race fan

TORONTO (CP) — Conn Smythe ignored doctors' orders and went to the races this week.

Smythe, the crusty former owner of the National Hockey League's Toronto Maple Leafs and one of the leading thoroughbred race horse stables in North America, suffered a heart attack a month ago.

The 82-year-old veteran of two world wars was supposed to watch the races at Woodbine from the air-conditioned comfort of his luxury car, but instead stood by the rail accompanied by his nurse of several years, Margaret Grose, to watch two of his horses race.

Grose admitted she was worried that Smythe would become overly excited and asked him several times to calm down. He referred to her as "The Boss."

Obviously she wasn't as Smythe continued to enjoy the action as much as he has in the past, especially when one of his favorite horses, Lucky Colonel S., a promising two-year-old, scored a three-length win in the third race.

It was only the second victory for a Smythe horse since the Woodbine meet opened May 1.

Reds are fast and strong

The Terrace Red's, reigning Bulkley Valley League champions, open their home season this Sunday at Kerr-Rotary Park. The Red's are working hard to duplicate last year's successes but hope to go one step further, win the regular season title as well. Last season the Red's and the Smithers Glaciers finished tied for first and the Glaciers won the playoff game 8-7. The next day the Red's won the championship by defeating the same team 6-1.

Once again the locals are a young, strong, fast team. They have strength at every position and every member of the club is capable of hitting the long ball. The Red's also have three or four speedsters and an excellent coaching staff.

The Red's starting lineup for Sunday is almost identical to last years as only two rookies have managed to crack the starting line. Five-balling, Gary Paulson is once again the Red's ace hurler and he should provide the team with a number of victories this season. Catching Gary will be last year's assistant coach Jack Richard, back from an ankle injury, and he supplies power from the left side of the plate. The infield is strong with a veteran at each of the four positions. The height and excellent glove of Al Olgue gives the club the best first baseman in the league. Garry L'Estrange and Willie Chemko combine to give the Red's an experienced double play combination at second and shortstop respectively. Over on third base the quick, sure hands of Phillip Webb provide the team with a solid corner man. The two rookies, Wayne L'Estrange and Lance Legouffe, flank veteran outfielder Dave Hamilton (the same) in the outfield. This gives the Red's a strong outfield as all three have good arms and field the ball well.

The club also has three rookies and three veterans to give them good depth. Returnees Lorrie Arnold-Smith, Donnie McCall and Gino Iamele give the Red's a strong pitching staff and in Arnold-Smith, last year's home run king. New men Doug Matheson, Barry Heit and Tom Morton will also help the team once they gain some more experience. All three are beginning to hit the ball well and it's just a matter of beating someone out of their starting position.

The Red's are here to provide the public with some good baseball and manager Red L'Estrange is confident his club can give it to them. L'Estrange has also prepared opening day ceremonies including guests Larry Paulson, Tony Gillard and Vic Joliffe. All the action begins at 1:30 at Kerr-Rotary Park.

Metrics could kill our football

OTTAWA (CP) — Converting football to the metric system could mean the end to the Canadian flavor in the game, Jake Gaudaur, Canadian Football League commissioner, said Thursday.

"I think an awful lot would be lost," Gaudaur told a luncheon meeting of cabinet ministers and MPs. One of the first results would be a switch to four downs from the current three, he said. "Three downs is one of the greatest things we have in our game."

The metres required for a first down would mean the equivalent of having to gain 10.9 yards, he said.

That would be difficult with three downs and would likely result in the switch to four downs. That would shift the offensive emphasis almost completely to running, he said. The sport would lose the appeal it gets now through a mix of passing and running.

Gus MacFarlane, the government whip and a former college football coach, said if four downs were accepted, it would not be much longer before our game would be the same as the American one.

Gaudaur was in Ottawa to meet Sport Minister Iona Campagnolo to see if more government sports support can be directed into amateur football. He said that because amateur football is not an international game, it doesn't get the same rate of federal funding as do other less popular games.

Gaudaur also told the luncheon that the CFL would like to expand into London, Ont., and especially into the Atlantic provinces.

The Halifax-Dartmouth area, with its population base of 275,000, seems strong enough to provide the 26,000-27,000 average per game attendance required to keep a team solvent, he said.

The team would likely have to be a community owned enterprise as are five of the nine existing CFL teams.

But the area lacks a football stadium capable of supporting a CFL team, Gaudaur said. This was an area for federal-provincial-municipal co-operation. A team could have its franchise fee repaid within 10 years from the league gate-equalization plan, Gaudaur said.

It was not possible for football teams, with their limited number of home games, to build their own stadiums. Most teams in Canada and the United States pay rental fees.

Last season, the CFL teams paid $2.5 million in stadium rental and $3 million in federal income tax. The eastern teams paid $1 million to the Ontario and Quebec governments in amusement taxes.

The league has been having regular attendance increases during the last few years reaching a record 2.5 million last season. It also attracted 50 million television viewers and heavily outdistanced National Football League teams in popularity among Canadian viewers, Gaudaur said.

In the nine franchise cities, football was more popular than professional hockey among viewers except for Vancouver, Montreal and Toronto, an independent survey shows.

Gaudaur told Les Benjamin (NDP—Regina-Lake Centre) that the league would like to be able to lift its local television blackout policy for home games but whenever it does, attendance falls off heavily.

Even conference championship games suffered if they were televised in the city where they are being played.

Smith, Brock signed by Lions

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia Lions of the Western Football Conference said today they have signed veteran line-man Wayne Smith and Paul Brock to new one-year Canadian Football League contracts.

Smith, 27, is an eight-year pro veteran who came to the Lions in 1976 in a trade which sent three players—David Boone, Brock Aynsley and Larry Cameron—to Ottawa Rough Riders of the Eastern Football Conference.

The London defensive end, who is six-foot-four and 240 pounds, was named to the all-CFL team in the 1972 and 1974 seasons. He is a native of Halifax who turned professional with the Riders at the age of 19 without college experience.

Cameron is the only player in the trade still with the Riders. Aynsley now is with Montreal Alouettes of the EFC and Boone is with Edmonton Eskimos of the WFC.

Brock, 22, joined the Lions midway through last season after being released by New York Jets of the National Football League. The import offensive tackle played college football at Tulane. He stands six-foot-three and weighs 250 pounds.

Hockey merger before fall?

EDMONTON (CP) — The Journal says a merger of the World Hockey Association and the National Hockey League is expected before the next hockey season.

The Journal, quoting an unidentified "highly-placed source," says the merger likely will be announced before the NHL draft of junior players early in June.

Edmonton will be one of six WHA teams to join the NHL, the newspaper says. Calgary, San Diego, Indianapolis and Birmingham are not expected to be asked to join.

However, NHL president Clarence Campbell says reports of a merger are unfounded. Campbell says representatives of both leagues have been meeting for several months to discuss "an accommodation or so-called merger" but they have no power to negotiate any kind of arrangement.

"The conditions under which it (a merger) could ever happen are so arduous and so expensive it's doubtful it can ever be successful," Campbell says.

The NHL asking price is reported to be slightly more than $2 million for each of the six new teams, with an additional $1 million to be paid over the next five years.

Softball for everyone

This year in Terrace there are a number of groups playing softball for social recreation. Teams are made up from various organizations, commercial operations or just plain friends. Games are played whenever two teams can arrange a time to play. The games are most often played at Caledonia Senior Secondary School.

Two games were played on Wednesday. A tractor

Well constructed 2 bdrm. from Lindsay's Cartage and Storage 16-15. In the second game, a team calling themselves Charlie's Brown Sox defeated a team headed by John Sandhal. The score in that wild and close game was 16-14 in favour of the Brown Sox.

There are other teams playing softball this year. The Ministry of Highways has three teams which are currently playing amongst themselves for the practice they desperately need. It is rumoured that the Royal Bank has formed a team but evidence of that statement is difficult to find. Members of the RCMP are also rumoured to have formed a team.

Any groups wishing to play softball for fun are encouraged to contact any of the previously mentioned groups. This is Terrace's 50th anniversary so everybody get out, have fun and meet new friends.

Clark shakes hands in Verdun

MONTREAL (CP) — Conservative leader Joe Clark stopped traffic at times Thursday as he mainstreeted in Verdun, a working-class municipality west of downtown Montreal. Some housewives did beat a retreat from their balconies as Clark, candidate Pierrette Lucas and a platoon of reporters came toward them. There was the man who wouldn't shake hands, and the kid on the motorcycle who thought Joe was president of the New Democratic Party. And 18-year-old John Simon, prompted by a TV cameraman, tried to hand Clark an NDP placard. Clark refused as the cameraman filmed the scene. These travails aside, Clark generally received a warm welcome as he stoked up the campaign for next Tuesday's byelection vote.

At the Lucas headquarters, Dale Johnston, wife of British Columbia MP Howard Johnston, helped fill out poll cards for the evening blitz amidst a hail of French and English conversation. "I'm the 'Godfather,'" veteran Conservative organizer Maurice Dupras said introducing himself to Los Angeles Times reporter Kenneth Rich, who is here to do a series on Quebec's new government.

nomination, upsetting Eddy Vigneau, who has run for the Conservatives in Verdun in the last two general elections. Now, he said, people recognize her in the street. Federally Verdun has been Liberal since 1962 but it went Parti Quebecois in last November's provincial election, electing a Liberal and a PQ member in its two provincial ridings. In a single riding, the PQ would have won.

"I've seen you on TV," housewives and taxi drivers said as Mrs. Lucas introduced them to Clark. One taxi driver added in French: "Where's your wife?"

Liberal candidate Raymond Savard, a city councillor, hopes to hold on to the 10,000-vote lead the party had in the 1974 general election. Bryce Mackasey, now a member of the Quebec National Assembly, won that one with 17,633 votes against 7,922 for Vigneau, the Conservative, and 2,232 for the New Democrat.

A reporter polled passersby to find out whether a Verdun newspaper was correct in saying no one in the city would recognize Clark. Seven out of 10 passersby identified him correctly.

MARGARET'S BACK IN NEW YORK CITY

NEW YORK (CP) — Margaret Trudeau popped up in Manhattan Wednesday evening and attended a benefit performance of the American Ballet Theatre with Princess Yasim Khan, with whom she has stayed on previous visits to New York.

Jackie Onassis, one of the many personalities of the social and entertainment world who attended the performance.

There was no indication how long Mrs. Trudeau planned to stay in New York.

Mrs. Trudeau, who has said she wants to become a professional photographer, arranged a news-photo assignment with People magazine during a four-day visit here in March. At that time, she stayed with Princess Yasim at her exclusive Central Park West apartment.

The two attended a post-performance party held to honor Russian ballet star Mikhail Baryshnikov, who staged the American Ballet's presentation of The Nutcracker at the Metropolitan Opera. News photos showed Mrs. Trudeau being introduced to

Some five years ago I wrote to the Herald after an item had been published that stated the spray used on the highway between Terrace and Prince Rupert was as "harmless as table salt." It seems to have taken awhile for the information about these sprays to become more public. In a recent edition of B.C. Today there is a very worthwhile article on pages 6 and 7 entitled "The danger of phenoxy herbicides," written by Theodorine Sterling. Dr. Sterling is a professor of computer science at Simon Fraser University and the article in question was abridged from the Humanist in Canada magazine.

Reading about the birth deformities that have resulted from the use of the Phenoxy herbicides, should put any sensible person firmly against their use. Also it seems it takes on the average, 20 years to pass between exposure to carcinogens and the subsequent appearance of cancers. Our twenty years are just about over and we are already beginning to see a "sleep increase in every form of cancer." So between the phenoxy herbicides and the chlorinated hydrocarbons we seem to be encouraging the extermination of the human race.

I should add that already "50 per cent of malformations reported by delivering physicians in British Columbia are of the kind that have also been observed in the offspring of mice, hamsters, rats and rabbits exposed to 2,4,5-T; spina bifid, hydrocephalus, cleft palate and lip, and a variety of musculo-skeletal disorders." The next time you hear of people protecting their local environment from any spraying it would be as well to give them your own support!

We have been having many nice sunny days late on the Charlottes. The wind continues to blow each day though and those who went to enjoy the beach this past week-end needed to be bundled up in warm winter garb in order to contend with the cold.

The B.C. Canuck went out this past Friday and will probably not be back until this coming Thursday. One local fisherman spent four days out with his son in law and came in with a catch valued at $4,000, so if one can put up with the constant wave movement, there are fish out there to be caught.

For the past two days I have managed to spend part of the time out in the flower beds getting the weeds kept down. It is most interesting to watch the growth of the plants each day. At first I kept a detailed plan of just where everything had been planted, but lately there hasn't been enough room on the original to add the new additions, so one can only put in some sticks or stakes and hope that these are not blown over before the plants take shape.

Ed Woode had to take time out from constructing the greenhouse, this weekend, in order to make a rabbit pen. (Lareina is going to look after the rabbit as one of the Brownie tasks.) No doubt all will go well until a stray racoon comes along to look for a feed of fresh rabbit! Tom, the Baker, has been giving bags of bread crusts to the Woodes for the birds across the way. Just recently when one bag had been left outside for a short time, a racoon came along for his share of the "goodies." Tanis was able to take three pictures of the intruder, so now we know there are racoons in this neighbourhood.

Last month I received a very nice letter from Roy Bonsteel, Host of "Man Alive". I had written for a copy of "Intervention" and had also mentioned how much we had enjoyed the film shown of Aiyansh and the programmes that will be repeated was also sent. It would seem that if you really enjoy watching some of our television programmes, the people who are involved with their presentation, would really appreciate a few lines from you.

It was a little over two months ago that I was surprised one day to see "Father Blythe" in Delmas wardens and vestry members. Today I received a very nice letter from Frieda Desreux, who has moved back to Canada from Australia as had been planned before her husband died suddenly. I believe I mentioned this in a previous letter as David was a chiropractor at Kitimat when we were living there during the construction days. At that time doctors and chiropractors were not working as well together for the benefit of people as they are today, and David spent part of his time selling cars!

wardens and vestry members.

Today I received a very nice letter from Frieda Desreux, who has moved back to Canada from Australia as had been planned before her husband died suddenly. I believe I mentioned this in a previous letter as David was a chiropractor at Kitimat when we were living there during the construction days. At that time doctors and chiropractors were not working as well together for the benefit of people as they are today, and David spent part of his time selling cars!

Now whenever a chiropractor is established in a town, he is lucky if he has enough time to get out for a drive in his own car. We are gradually making progress.

Frieda is now living in Richmond handy to all shopping needs, but on the fourth floor of a high rise apartment. This place of residence does not appeal to me, but then I have not been living for many years in Queensland, Australia, which could make quite a difference. Sam and Jessie Simpson, who have lived in this area for many years, have left on their tour of British Columbia, and some parts of the United States. This couple were given tickets to Hawaii at a special dinner held in their honor, by the Directors and Manager of Delmas Cooperative Association. However they had been planning this trip by camper before this so after Sam's eyes were back to normal (following an operation earlier in the year), plans for the first holiday were finalized. The Hawaii trip may be saved until the winter time.

It was very interesting this morning to hear someone from this area speaking of the days when the deer were in herds here. The announcer said Art Collins would be speaking tomorrow again, but people I have spoken to today say the name probably should have been Art Collinson, as there is no oldtimer here with Collins as a last name. Since the speaker is now 71 and came here in 1910, it is quite possible that he came to the Masset area from Alaska.

This past Friday was set aside for the Islands' Sports Day. The morning was wet and miserable up until the time that the bus arrived from Queen Charlotte City with participants from the southern parts. After that the sun stayed out for the balance of the meet, and even though the wind kept the temperature down, it was an ideal day to compete on.

Brits investigate scandal at home

LONDON (Reuter) — Britain's Labor government announced Thursday a high-level inquiry into allegations that the state-owned Leyland car company had been indulging in worldwide bribery in order to increase sales.

The claims came only 11 days after Prime Minister James Callaghan placed his signature on a pledge made at London's Western economic summit conference to stamp out international corruption.

Callaghan told

Parliament Thursday: "We will not tolerate these kinds of practices and they must be rooted out, although a heavy responsibility rests with the host countries themselves."

Statements in Parliament followed a hectic day of accusation and denial, starting with an exclusive story on the front page of the right-wing tabloid Daily Mail newspaper claiming to have evidence of bribery by Leyland.

The newspaper said Leyland was "paying bribes and conspiring to defraud foreign governments on a massive scale in a desperate effort to win overseas orders."

"In the financial year 1975-76, Leyland's own records show a forecast of 11,372,700 sterling (about $19,450,000) to be paid overseas in 'slush money'—bribes and undercover commissions."

The Daily Mail's claim to have exposed "the amazing truth about Britain's state-owned car makers" was criticised Thursday, but editor David English issued a statement standing by the allegations.

The Mail's story was based on what it said was a letter alleged to be written by Lord Ryder, chairman of the National Enterprise Board, the government agency helping to finance Leyland, which referred to "special account arrangements."

The board in a statement denied that such a letter had been written to the corporation, and British Leyland "categorically denied" receiving the letter.

Industry Secretary Eric Varley told Parliament that "the Daily Mail does not seem to differentiate between illegal bribes and justified commission." He thought it would be "naive at the very least for a company to put in its own records that they were to pay bribes..."

The Mail allegations drew an angry response from left-wing Labor members of Parliament who claim that the British press has frequently attacked state-owned enterprises.

Editor David English insisted that his newspaper had spoken to people in authority who had seen the letter alleged to be from Lord Ryder to Leylands, and declared: "Tomorrow the Daily Mail will publish a photograph of the letter."

Former Leyland managing director John Barber told reporters that "the Daily Mail does not seem to differentiate between illegal bribes and justified commission." He thought it would be "naive at the very least for a company to put in its own records that they were to pay bribes..."

NO PEACE PAYOFF, NIXON MAINTAINS

WASHINGTON (Reuter) — Former U.S. president Richard Nixon has denied that the price of the 1973 Vietnam peace accord was a promise of $4.75 billion in U.S. post-war aid.

The question of post-war assistance is a major issue in the discussions recently started in Paris aimed at improving U.S.-Vietnamese relations.

Nixon acknowledged in a letter to Congressman Lester Wolff that he sent a secret message Feb. 1, 1973, to Vietnamese Premier Pham Van Dong mentioning post-war aid and containing the $4.75-billion figure.

But he said it involved "no commitment of any kind, moral or legal" to provide U.S. funds because Hanoi had broken a peace agreement made public in January, 1973.

Wolff made public Thursday the May 14, 1977, letter he received from Nixon and a copy of the former president's Feb. 1, 1973, message to Hanoi.

In the renewed U.S. negotiations with Vietnam in Paris, Vietnam has tried to link a U.S. demand for accounting of missing servicemen to proposals for foreign aid. Congress has gone on record against any such linkage.

Nixon's letter to Wolff, a New York Democrat, insisted the Hanoi government had violated the January, 1973, peace accord.

Nixon said there were violations "too numerous to mention."

However, he did list several, including what he described as a Vietnamese refusal to withdraw forces from Cambodia and Laos as required by the 1973 peace agreement.

EXCEPT TO NATO Carter cuts arms sale

WASHINGTON (Reuter) — President Carter announced Thursday that he is cutting U.S. weapons sales abroad and said future transactions will be made under tightened restrictions to control the arms traffic.

All future sales are covered by the new policy, except those to NATO countries, Japan, Australia and New Zealand, with whom the U.S. has major defence treaties, and to Israel.

The president reserved the right to waive the new controls under extraordinary circumstances, which he did not define, or when he determined that friendly countries must depend on advanced weaponry to maintain a security balance in a specific region.

The White House said the U.S. will begin talks soon with the Soviet Union, Britain, France and West Germany, the world's other major arms suppliers, on a possible agreement on measures for multilateral action aimed at reducing weapons transactions.

The president said a virtually unrestrained spread of conventional weaponry threatens stability in every region of the world.

He estimated that total arms sales in recent years had risen to more than $20 billion, with the United States accounting for more than one-half of that amount.

Each year, Carter said, the weapons transferred are not only more numerous but also more sophisticated and deadly.

He said new American commitments under military assistance programs will be reduced in 1978 from a total that officials estimated at $8.8 billion this year.

Commercial sales of weapons, estimated at $3.5 billion, are excluded from the new policy, but officials said those transactions do not include weapons systems such as planes or any other sophisticated military items. In addition, regulations are being drawn up to prevent an increase in the commercial sale of arms.

Carter said the United States will not be the first supplier to introduce into a region newly developed, advanced weapons systems which would create a new or significantly higher combat capability.

He also placed restrictions on co-production by the United States and any other country of sophisticated weapons.

RUSSIA-USA

Strategic arms deadlock

GENEVA (AP) — U.S. State Secretary Cyrus Vance and Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko were reported on Thursday to be working on a compromise formula to break the deadlock over a new treaty limiting strategic nuclear weapons.

After more than five hours of what U.S. officials described as intensive and good faith negotiations, an overnight recess was taken to allow Gromyko to contact the Kremlin for instructions.

Vance also was in touch with President Carter.

Asked by reporters how the arms talks were going, Gromyko replied in Russian, "It will become clearer today or tomorrow."

Informed sources said the compromise formula would blend U.S. proposals rejected in March by Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev with a modified Soviet proposal.

The formula would impose some limitations on the U.S. cruise missile while cutting the weapons arsenals of the two superpowers, the sources said. It would also impose restrictions on where the Russians could base their advanced Backfire bomber.

The two superpowers would commit themselves to begin a new stage of negotiations in the near future on further weapons cuts. This step would be in line with Carter's objective of moving toward eventual disarmament.

The report followed a pessimistic assessment earlier Thursday by United Nations Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim who told reporters it would take "quite a long time" before the two superpowers could reach a new agreement to replace the current SALT, which expires in October.

The two officials, meanwhile, shifted their attention to the Middle East where their expressed hopes for reconvening a peace conference by the end of the year were dimmed by the Likud bloc's victory in Tuesday's Israeli elections.

At a news conference, Waldheim also presented a gloomy assessment on peace prospects in the Middle East.

"I expect a delay in the Geneva conference," he said. "I don't see that we can reconvene the conference early, even before the end of the year."

Initially, Vance and Gromyko planned to meet for only two days on the arms negotiations and the agreement to hold a third round of talks on Friday, again at the Soviet Mission, was interpreted by observers as a sign of progress.

Apart from the Vance-Gromyko negotiations, arms specialists were drafting understandings between the two countries on several subsidiary issues.

These included verifying weapons with multiple, independently targetable warheads, known as MIRVs, overcoming deliberate concealment of weapons from satellite or aircraft reconnaissance, furnishing an inventory of strategic weapons and guarding against transfers to other countries of sophisticated weapons technology.

B.C. OFFERS TO SELL

Even in drought, water too expensive

VANCOUVER (CP) - Power agencies in the drought-stricken northwest region of the United States have decided emergency purchases of British Columbia water would be too expensive, a British Columbia Hydro spokesman said Wednesday. Dave Robertson said the sale would have reduced B.C. Hydro reservoir levels to an undesirable point and, at the price the Americans were willing to pay, would have cost Hydro money in terms of lost generating capacity. The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers and the Bonneville Power Administration - which supplies power to Washington, Oregon, Idaho and western Montana - had been seeking early release of 500,000 acre-feet of water that Bonneville was to have received later this year from the Duncan storage dam on the B.C. section of the Columbia River. Bonneville has already obtained one early release of water from B.C. Hydro this year. A special arrangement allowed up to 1.7 million acre-feet of water to go south from the Duncan and arrow dams. About 900,000 acre-feet has been released to Bonneville under this agreement so that it can provide power to industrial customers, Hector Durocher, administration manager said

Wednesday. A U.S. Army Corps of Engineers spokesman said the extra water would have cost about $4 million, about $1.5 million more than the Americans would have been able to obtain from the additional power produced in the U.S.

ANOTHER DELAY SOUGHT IN PIPELINE

OLYMPIA, Wash. (AP) - Transmountain Pipeline Co. of Vancouver is asking Washington state to delay hearings on the Cherry Point dock expansion and construction of a pipeline spur.

Last month Transmountain and the Atlantic Richfield Co. made joint application to build a seven-mile pipeline to the existing Transmountain line. The pipeline would facilitate movement of Alaskan crude oil to the U.S. Midwest via Transmountain lines to Alberta. In its letter to the Energy Facility Site Evaluation Council, the firm said only that ARCO "is reviewing technical aspects of proposed modifications" to its refinery at Cherry Point in Whatcom County.

Representative Rick Smith (D-Silverdale) told the House Energy Committee he fears the request for the deferral can lead to the "worst of both worlds." Smith said the request probably means ARCO has accepted the idea of an "all-American pipeline," which means it will pipe crude oil south from Cherry Point and then over Slocan or Naches Pass.

Don't wait on vote

VICTORIA (CP) - Quebec Premier Rene Levesque should hold his separation referendum "tout de suite" and, if necessary, equalization payments to the province should be withheld to hasten the vote, Attorney General Garde Gardom said Thursday.

"He's flirting with it (the referendum) and toying with it and I don't think that is in the interests of the country," Gardom said.

The attorney general was expanding on remarks made earlier this week that Levesque was a tempting to finance separation with money received in equalization payments from British Columbia, Alberta and Ontario.

He said the $1.2 billion contribution of Quebec annually from the three provinces should be put in an interest-bearing trust account until after the referendum.
