City flip-flops on truck buying policy

CITY COUNCILLORS are retreating from their decision to convert the city fleet to General Motors cars and trucks after stiff opposition to the move from other dealerships.

Council voted 3-1 Monday night to revisit the issue.

Val George, Rich McDaniel and Ed Graydon were in favour, with public works committee chairman Gordon Hull opposed. (David Hull and Ruth Hallock were absent).

The committee of the whole will debate the issue again next week.

Council last month voted unanimously to adopt a policy of gradually replacing its fleet of trucks and cars with GM vehicles, instead of going out to tender to various local dealers.

That incensed dealers like Terrace Totem Ford's Jake De Jong and Terrace Chrysler's Rob Onstein.

De Jong appeared before council Monday night and told councillors there is no way to guarantee taxpayers aren't getting hosed without a bid system.

"The taxpayers are going to end up paying more," he said. "If no bids are being taken you're going to end up paying whatever they want."

"It's public money you people are dealing with. People deserve the best deal for their money."

Gordon Hull defended the decision, saying that with about three-quarters of the 35-vehicle city fleet GM already, it makes sense to switch and save money by carrying only one set of parts and having city workers service just the one brand.

"It makes them more efficient," Hull said. "And the public is constantly at us to be efficient."

He also noted that the city can still call for bids from other northwest GM dealers if there's some reason to be concerned about the price quoted to them locally.

He noted that the shift to fleet pricing means generally uniform vehicle pricing across the country for buyers like the city.

"Just because we've decided to go with GM for a while, it doesn't mean it will be forever," Hull added. "Right now it makes the most sense."

De Jong said it would definitely anger him to see the city go to GM dealers outside of town and not tender to other dealers locally.

"Somebody is going to think that someone here is on the take," he said.

George said he's prepared to rescind the policy.

"I think Mr. De Jong made some very good points," George said. "I'm prepared to admit I don't think I paid sufficient attention to it and I'm prepared to reconsider it."

George said council can go with an open bidding process and still go with GM vehicles based on the efficiencies unless there's a significant difference on price.

"We have to be fair to the other dealers in town," added Graydon.

Councillor McDaniel congratulated George and Graydon for deciding to join him in opposition to the policy, stating he was the only one who voted against it.

In fact, McDaniel did not raise his hand for or against, according to administrator Bob Hallors, and, under the Municipal Act, an abstention is officially recorded as a vote in favour.

Hull maintained the decision was the right one and said council knew it was going to take heat on the issue.

"As soon as you exclude someone from the tendering process, someone's upset."

Stream savaged

A THORNHILL landowner is being investigated for damaging the shores of and waters of Thornhill Creek.

Environmental conservation officers received a complaint from a neighbor downstream that the waters of the creek were frequently becoming laden with silt.

Upon investigation, the officers discovered that a property-owner upstream had removed all of the vegetation from the areas along both sides of the creek, known as the riparian zone.

"This has had a substantial impact on the creek," says conservation officer James Hilgemann. "The integrity of the bank has been destroyed."

Hilgemann says that the owner removed approximately 150 metres of trees and bushes from the riparian zone, right down to the waters edge. The owner apparently was planning on putting in a pasture.

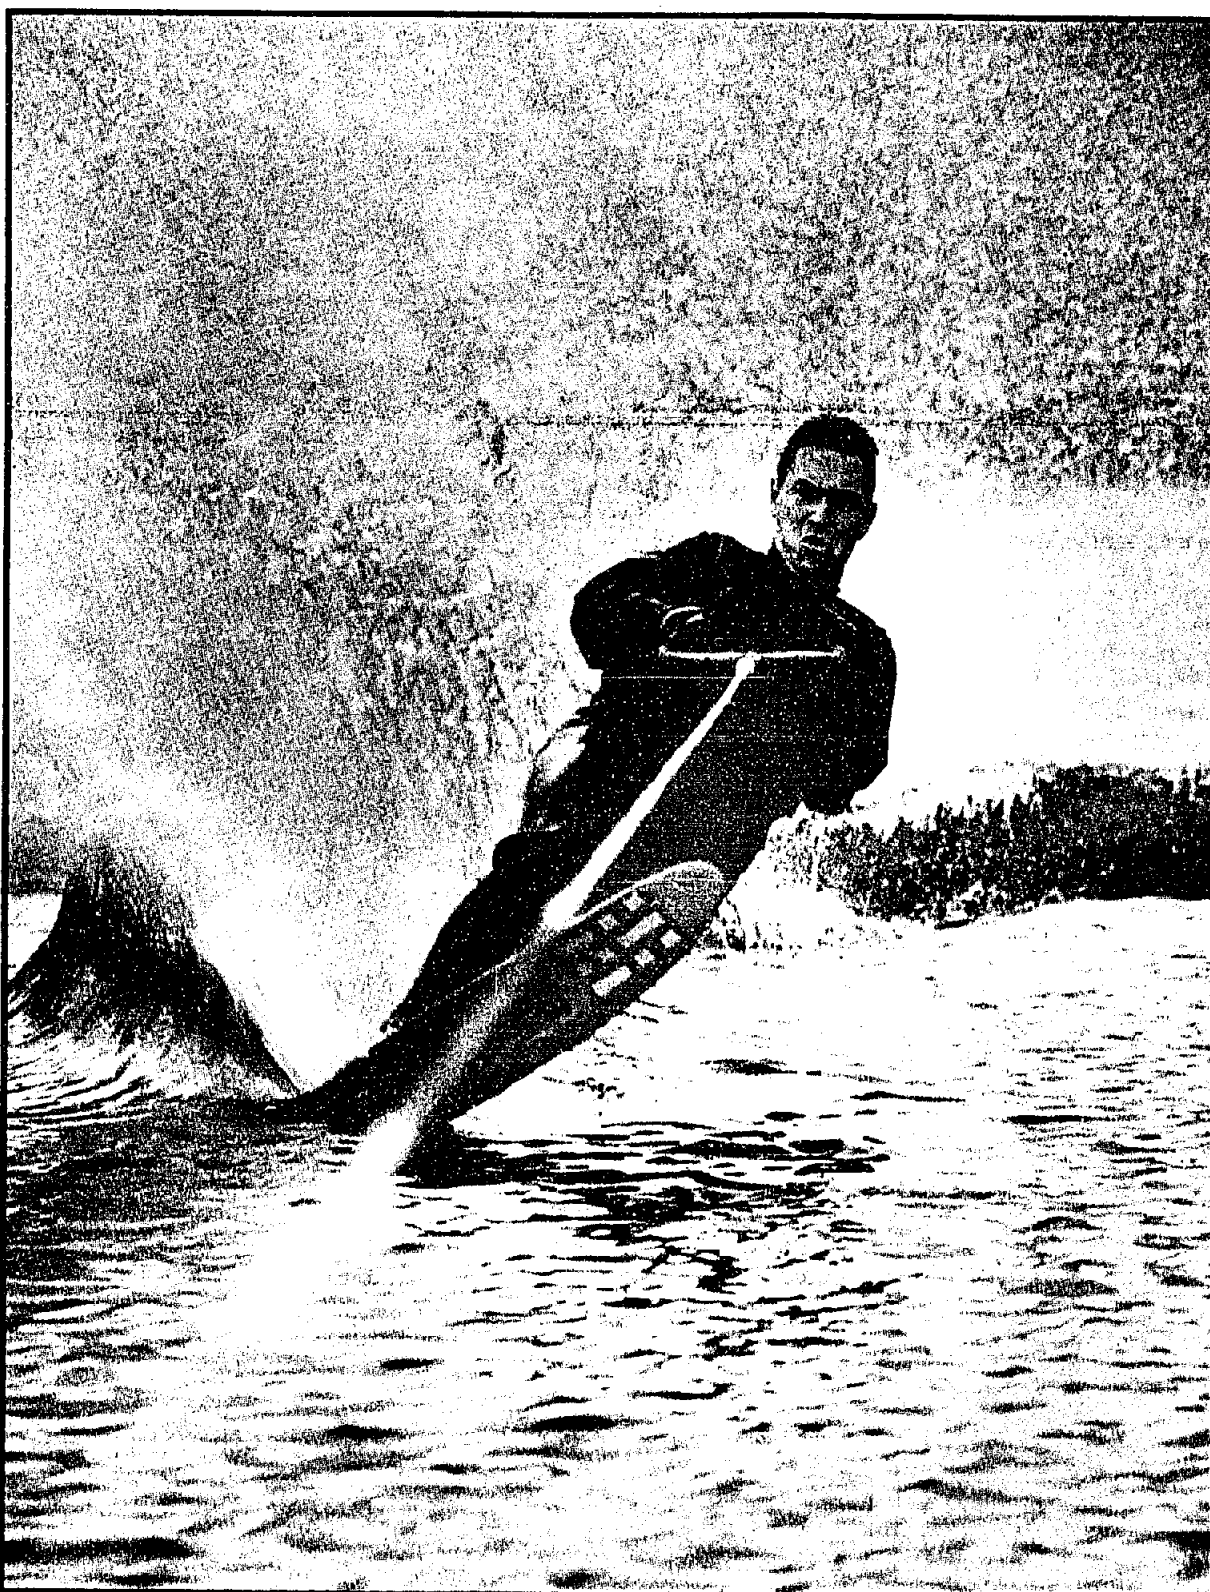

"Depending on the results of our investigation, charges could be laid," says Hilgemann.

Hilgemann points out that the riparian zone is very important to streams and wildlife. He says that trees and bushes in the zone shade the water, helping to keep it cool. They also keep the banks in tact — preventing erosion.

Hilgemann says that the stream has a good fish value, containing lots of cut-throat trout. He is concerned about what effects the removal of vegetation might have.

"There is quite substantial damage," he says.

The owner is facing possible charges under both the fisheries and waters acts.

Hold on!

TERRACE WATER-SKI Club member Mark Poppleton carves a nice turn during a run on Lakelse Lake. Last week, the lake was host to a British Columbia Water-Ski Association ski clinic. The ski-school catered to all ages and abilities of skiers. Organizers say that it was a huge success, despite the somewhat spotty weather and they hope to turn it into an annual event.

Fish runs look strong

WHAT'S SHAPING up to be a bumper year for most fish runs on the Skeena means a commercial aboriginal fishery will go ahead this year.

Federal fisheries issued licences last week granting the Tsimshian, Gitksan and Lake Babine Band initial allocations of 15,000 sockeye salmon each.

That number is expected to increase as the season goes on, says David Einarson, area chief of fisheries management at DFO's Prince Rupert office.

Tsimshian natives are carrying out fish wheel selective fisheries around Terrace and are conducting beach seining further down the river.

So far, the sockeye run is coming in larger than the 3.5 million fish expected.

"There are weekly escapement targets, so the number that they've got will likely go up if we get a good run," Einarson said last week. The sockeye are considered surplus, over and above the amount needed for spawning, native food fish and sport fishing.

"We now have a surplus of 100,000 (sockeye) in the river. Using a risk-averse approach we consider that 50 per cent of that is harvestable."

Last year, the three native groups ended up taking a total of approximately 200,000 surplus sockeye.

"At this stage it is early in the run, so we are being cautious," Einarson said of the allocation.

By Sunday the sockeye run was looking even better, with 450,000 fish up the river as of July 7, compared to the target of 200,000 fish.

An exceptional run is also shaping up for chinook, the largest, most prized salmon. Run-strength estimates generated by the Tyee test fishery so far suggest the chinook run is the second best on record and well ahead of most years.

Coho haven't started entering the river yet, but reports from the outside area suggest good numbers. Pink salmon, however, are not forecast to return in strength next month.

Meanwhile, at the mouth of the Skeena, a downsized commercial fishing fleet was working on its third sockeye opening late last week.

"The catches are good for this time of year. The fleet is down about 300 boats from last year, so that's a real bonus to the fishermen who are fishing out there because with less competition they should be able to catch more fish, I would think," Einarson said.

The strategy is to hit the fishery hard early on in the season to avoid unintentional by-catches of steelhead and coho, considered weak stocks.

"Basically, the strategy is to fish really hard in July and back way off in August. August is when the coho and steelhead move through the fishing area."

An overall plan is worked out in conjunction with the Skeena Watershed Commission, which consists of commercial, aboriginal and sports fishing representatives.

BEAR TRAP at Middletons' is still empty.

Ghost bear haunts family

By DAVE TAYLOR

SEVENTEEN acres and four bears.

That's what Doug and Debbie Middleton have, and it's keeping them up at night.

"We've got a sow and twin cubs living in the back," says Doug Middleton. "She's been great — never bothers us. But I can't let the kids play in the backyard."

What does bother the Middletons is a large, ghostly white Kermodei that has been terrorizing the family for three weeks.

"He's been getting into our garbage and our grain," says Debbie Middleton. "And he has no fear of dogs or people. He's a royal pain. I haven't had a decent night's sleep in weeks."

The Middletons live right across the road from the Terrace dump. They point out that they never had a bear problem before the dump put up an electrified fence.

Now they have four.

Debbie says that she doesn't understand why they would put a fence around a dump that is due to close within two years.

"They just dumped the problem in our laps," she says.

Doug Middleton is shocked about just how brazen the bears can be.

"The kermodei is what gets me," he says. "The conservation guys came up and left a trap, but the bear just laughs at it. He has no fear. I came out of the house one time and he was standing at the end of the porch. He didn't move, just looked at me."

Debbie Middleton says that the bear has been responsible for a number of sleepless nights.

"The dogs go nuts and keep everyone up," she says. "But if we let them in, then we have to watch our pig pen all night."

Their visitor isn't any showing signs of leaving either. In fact, his nocturnal escapades are increasing in frequency. He now shows up almost nightly.

NEWS

Grocery stores to open

CANADA SAFEWAY was expected to re-open today pending ratification by the unionized meat, deli and seafood employees of a deal worked out on the weekend.

The store remained closed despite the opening Sunday by Overwaitea after the other unions had approved a settlement reached last week.

The meat cutters at Safeway narrowly rejected the offer and a new proposal reached Sunday addressed their issues. They fear prepackaged meats will cost them their jobs.

The resolution calls for the dispute to be resolved through private mediation.

The 2,000 striking Safeway meat, deli and seafood workers were voting yesterday on the solution, and the union was recommending acceptance.

Safeway officials again threatened closure of the entire B.C. chain if an acceptable resolution to the labour dispute was not reached.

Huckleberry in court

An application to halt the Huckleberry mine project will be back in court this Friday.

The Sierra Legal Defence Fund, acting on behalf of the Carrier-Cheslatta Nation, is arguing for an injunction to halt construction on the project 80 kilometres south of Houston.

Karen Wristen, lawyer for Sierra Legal, said the B.C. Supreme Court justice hearing the case wants to reconvene because there wasn't enough time to finish on July 5.

The Cheslatta want construction on the mine stopped for a number of reasons, one of which is that a full wildlife habitat study must be completed.

"They're destroying habitat and they haven't assessed wildlife values in it yet," Wristen said. "If you don't know what you had before you started the project then you'll never know."

A few threatened species have been seen or are believed to be in the area, a wildlife consultant hired by the Cheslatta said in a report.

A wildlife report by the developers, Huckleberry/Princeton, was flawed and incomplete, Wristen argued.

Access to wildlife is an aboriginal right and must be addressed along with overlapping native claims in the area, she said.

The mine company doesn't agree that its wildlife study was flawed and argued that an injunction would have serious implications to the project.

"We're certainly confident we did everything required and that there's no basis for the injunction," said Peter Campbell, environmental affairs manager for Huckleberry Mines Ltd.

The company has made financial commitments to the tune of $50 million and any delays could mean the loss of a construction season, Campbell added.

Flora fire

THE TERRACE fire department responded to a call July 7 of a brush fire behind the REM Lee theatre at 4920 Straume.

The fire had been set in two locations, leading the fire department to believe that they had been intentionally set, likely by children playing with matches.

Power-outage problems

Two separate power failures in Terrace, Monday, caused at least one injury, as a woman tumbled down a flight of stairs in the new Park Avenue Medical Centre.

The fire department was already at the scene to help someone who had been stuck in an elevator as a result of the power failure. The woman who fell apparently could not see where she was going because the emergency lights failed to come on. She was taken to Mills Memorial Hospital.

Deputy-Chief Rick Owens says that because there were two power-failures that day, the batteries in the emergency lights may not have had time to recharge before the second failure.

FROM FRONT

Kermodei eludes trap

And Doug Middleton is concerned for the safety of his family and livestock.

"I don't want to shoot it, but if push comes to shove..." he says with a shrug. "I mean, I've got nothing against them. They have more right to be here than we do, really. But if he climbs out of that pen with a pig in his mouth, I'll have no choice. I can't afford that."

The Middletons say that conservation officers have been helpful and understanding. Unfortunately, the bear is still there.

"Quite often we'll get a bear that won't go in a trap," says conservation officer Doug Forsdick. "Bears are smart."

Forsdick says that tranquilizing the bear without trapping it first is really not an option. It takes quite some time for the drug to take effect. So officers try to trap or corner the bear in a tree before darting it.

"The last thing we want is a half-drugged bear wandering around," he says.

So if the bear doesn't take the trap, officers might have to shoot it, although that is only as a last resort.

And Forsdick doesn't think the dump fence is necessarily to blame.

"We are getting complaints," he says. "But it's less than last year."

Meanwhile, the ghost bear continues to haunt the Middletons.

"You can tell when you're not going to sleep when the dogs start barking at around 10 o'clock," says Doug Middleton. "Then you know he's coming."

Zoning to stay

A DEVELOPER has had second thoughts about his plan to rezone one of the last remaining chunks of multifamily land on the bench.

Ross Smith of Roscco Ventures has withdrawn his rezoning application — which was approved by city council against the advice of the city planner — for land off Mountain Vista and Floyd Streets.

Roscco wants to put in duplexes there, and it turns out the land-use contract for his subdivision, which supercedes the zoning, allows duplexes there.

Smith says he has therefore decided to keep his options open, and leave the zoning as multifamily for now.

The zoning was originally set as that to allow some type of apartment development, which made sense because of the proximity of the college.

City planner Dave Trawin had warned council that rezoning the property from R5 multifamily to R2 could have led to a shortage of multifamily space.

He said removing the property would eliminate 90 per cent of the multi-family zoned land on the bench and a quarter of all multifamily land in the city.

Horse bug hits contender

THE MYSTERIOUS illness which is affecting horses in Terrace and throughout the north is destroying a local woman's chance at competing in the provincial championships.

The disease has spread quickly throughout the area, since horse owners learned of it a couple weeks ago.

Horses develop pimple-like bumps on their tongues. These pimples can then turn into blisters and may be accompanied by heavy salivation. So far it seems the disease takes about a month to run its course.

At least 15 horses in Terrace have contracted the disease, including Carmie Flaherty's horse Grady.

She was planning to take him to the BC provincial dressage championships August 3-4, but she can't travel with him until she's sure he isn't contagious.

And since no one knows anything about the disease, local veterinarian David Farkvam can't say when the contagious stage is past.

"We just have to wait and let it run its course," says Flaherty.

Grady hasn't shown many symptoms, save for bumps on his tongue, but he's not 100 per cent, she says.

And when you're training for something as serious as provincial competition, your horse has to be at the top of his game.

"He doesn't have as much energy," says Flaherty. "Now I'm just waiting for him to get through it," she says. "It's a bigger pain in the ass than it is anything else."

She only purchased Grady last fall, and this was to be the first season she showed him.

If she did well at the provincials, as she'd hoped, she planned to take him to the national competition in September.

But in order to compete nationally, you have to qualify in the provincials. And that means she won't have a chance, even if she gets Grady back on his training schedule.

Flaherty has been training Grady at a barn in San Jose, and returned to Terrace to be with her husband — hockey goalie Wade Flaherty.

Her coach in San Jose who was training for the Olympics, told her she thought Grady could do very well, and could be ready to compete in pre-Olympic levels in a few years time.

"It really sets you back a long ways," says Flaherty. "Even just this week he's lost strength," she says, commenting on his conditioning.

However, Flaherty is still holding out some hope that she could qualify for the Nationals. There's a slim chance that the qualifying rules might be changed, to take into account the effect this mysterious disease has had.

SAY AHHHHH: Carmie Flaherty checks her horse's tongue to see if it's developed any more bumps. He's one of many horses in the Terrace area afflicted with a mysterious disease.

Disease may spread to humans

HORSE OWNERS who are checking their horses' mouths for signs of the mysterious disease which is affecting horses in the north should wear gloves when they do so, advises Skeena Health Unit medical health officer Dr. David Bowering.

Terrace veterinarian David Farkvam says the disease which causes blisters on horses' tongues, and may be accompanied by heavy salivation and a loss of appetite, could possibly be contagious to humans, cattle, sheep and goats.

It may be a good idea to wash tack, feed buckets and watering buckets with a bleach solution.

News in Brief

Easy come, easy go

B.C.'s $20 million surplus has turned into a $235 million deficit and critics of the government are crying foul.

Finance minister Andrew Petter blamed it on lower than anticipated forest industry revenues so far this year.

He said he was alerted to the situation when he was sworn in on June 17, and says he was not aware of potential trouble during the May provincial election campaign.

Skeena MLA Helmut Giesbrecht said it means tough times ahead.

"Clearly in the four or five years that we've got we're going to have to come up with surplus that's over and above the $235 million they're talking about now. That's a challenge."

"I was certainly one of the ones that was proud that we had come up with a balanced budget and now it isn't," he added. "So I'm not happy."

Liberal leader Gordon Campbell accused the government of misleading voters.

"The NDP knew exactly how bad things were, and has been trying to deceive British Columbians by hiding debt, and hiding deficits."

"Politicians at all levels and from all parties will be tarred by this. How can people be expected to believe anyone in public office after they receive this kind of treatment from a new government, still in its first month of office?"

Turf turner

A FERTILIZER SPREADER and an aerating machine will cost city taxpayers more than $10,000.

City council has approved the purchase of a fertilizer spreader from Multi Turf Specialists for $3,546 and an aerator from Rollins Machinery for $7,257.

The purchases are expected to improve the city's ability to keep the Christy Park soccer fields up to an acceptable standard.

Youths get active

A PRINCE RUPERT resident has been selected as the northwest representative for a province-wide youth initiative.

Chantal Farrell and six other regional youth workers across BC will be talking to youths, focusing on local problems such as violence and crime.

"We set up this initiative to ensure young people play a lead role in tackling youth violence and crime, and are part of the solution," said Attorney General Ujjal Dosanjh. "Chantal has a tremendous amount of experience that will help youth in the northwest develop and put into action crime prevention programs for themselves and their communities."

More than 60 communities, including Terrace and Kitimat, are participating in the project.

Farrell is setting up meetings throughout the northwest this month to get youths involved. In Terrace a meeting is set for July 16 from 7-8:30 p.m. in the Terrace arena banquet room.

Storms of November

FOR THOSE of you who thought the provincial election was the most excitement politics would bring this year, guess again.

This November's municipal elections will decide what mayor, council, regional district and school board representatives will guide us for the next three years.

It's conceivably the most important municipal election voters here have ever faced.

The school board alone will undergo a major upheaval as the Kitimat and Terrace boards amalgamate, effectively cutting in half the number of trustees representing us.

On the city side, there are a number of critical issues.

Foremost among them must be the effort to restructure and, in all probability, turn what are on the map two communities into one.

Amalgamation makes sense. Sensible development and planning can't happen until a single civic government is making the decisions.

But clearly it won't happen voluntarily without a provincial offer that shields residents on both sides of the river from steep tax hikes.

If such proposals go over well, we could be voting for a Greater Terrace mayor and council by November.

The future of the airport is another key to the long-term future of the city. Taking it over from the federal government could be vastly expensive, or it could give the city extra flexibility and options if done right.

All this is going on against the background of the fastest growth ever experienced in Terrace.

It's that rapid pace of development that creates a hard-to-define unease among many citizens that decisions being made might be regretted down the road.

That makes our choice of civic leaders for the next three years all the more important.

Elections are also traditionally the season that interest groups step forward to press their issues.

Ice users, the business community, developers, labour organizers and park proponents can all be expected to work to get their issues addressed and their candidates onto council.

Early indications are at least half the existing councillors won't run again.

That creates a big opening for people thinking of running for council.

And although politics is a generally thankless job, it's also worthwhile. Those who do run will do their community a service.

Air power

SPEAKING OF representation, the city is also looking for people to serve on a board of directors for an airport authority.

This body would eventually be in charge of running the airport without losing money — if the city is successful in taking over the airport.

It's going to be a difficult job — and one that will require unpleasant decisions over things like airport fees.

But it's a critical issue that also deserves the attention of the city's best and brightest minds.

Where's the $200 million?

VICTORIA — If you voted for the NDP because you believed the government's pre-election claim that it brought in two consecutive balanced budgets, you're probably a mile ticked off now.

Don't say I didn't warn you. When former finance minister Elizabeth Cull introduced the budget just hours before Premier Clark called the election, I wrote that it was a meaningless document.

True, the premier promised that he would submit the same budget if the NDP won re-election. I said maybe he will, maybe he won't.

Well, he didn't. For one thing, the new budget put a hold on a whole lot of capital expenditures. For another, the slight surplus the NDP forecast in the first budget, turned into a $200 million shortfall in the second.

What happened? Reality, that's what. Revenues turned out to be less than forecast, and expenditures higher.

The question is: did the premier know when his now defeated finance minister introduced the first budget that the promised surplus would be gone with the wind?

My mother taught me to give

FROM THE CAPITAL

people the benefit of the doubt. So I won't say the premier lied, but I would be mightily surprised if Clark didn't at least have an inkling that his claim of two balanced budgets in a row was fraught with jeopardy.

But I also must point out that anyone who voted for the NDP because of its fiscal performance needed their heads examined.

It became clear early on in the election campaign that the NDP's enthusiastic spending habits were high on the voters' minds. Liberal leader Gordon Campbell missed no opportunity to reinforce in the minds of voters that the NDP was playing footloose and fancy with taxpayers' money.

"The Silent Killer" he called the NDP's debt legacy in every speech he gave along the campaign trail. If you missed it, you didn't take much interest in the campaign. Nor did you take heed of my warning that any claim contained in the first budget, any forecast of revenues and expenditures, any fiscal outlook was unsubstantiated.

Mind you, a lot of the first budget's goodies resurfaced in the second one. There will be a slight tax relief for middle-income earners. Students won't have to worry about rising tuition fees. Motorists can feel some assurance over the freeze of ICBC rates, and you won't have to fork over more money to pay your hydro bills.

The hold on some capital expenditures is, of course, to compensate for the $200 million shortfall, so that in the end, the budget will still have some resemblance to balance.

The newly-discovered and admitted-to $200 million deficit in the budget will invariably make this session a nastier one than it would otherwise have been.

Liberal opposition members will keep balancing on the precarious edge of parliamentary language and decorum, and stop just short of calling the premier a liar. Some may even do that and have themselves evicted from the Legislature, just to make a point.

Having said all that, don't be surprised if the NDP government, in the end, balances the budget after all.

Clark has, on numerous occasions, shown that he's a keen student of the politics of W.A.C. Bennett. It should, therefore, not have escaped him that Bennett wrote the book on over-estimating expenditures, while under-estimating revenues, which invariably made him look like a better fiscal manager than even he predicted.

The $200 million shortfall is about one per cent of the whole budget, and it isn't too difficult to reduce total expenditures by that amount.

Councillors veering off course

TERRACE COUNCIL's latest moves make me want to fling myself on my keyboard and write madly off in all directions.

Council plans to buy only GM vehicles forsaking all tenders; accept free concrete to pave a skateboarding lot behind the firehall; and fast-track processing of development permit and rezoning requests.

Wrong. Wrong. Wrong.

The notion of GM exclusively supplying the city with vehicles is a coup for GM. But it's easy to see why other dealers would be incensed. In the late 1970's, feeling shut out of doing its fair share of business with the Terrace school district, GM complained about District #88's tendering process. Now the shoe is on the other foot.

Why some councillors consider proximity to a police station and a firehall desirable attributes for a paved skating area baffles me. Danny Sheridan's suggestion of paving the Farmers' Market lot makes more sense.

THROUGH BIFOCALS
 CLAUDETTE SANDECKI

Paving would improve accessibility for everyone to the Farmers' Market. The lot is handy to a convenience store and to the public washrooms in Lower Little Park — unless they're locked because of vandalism. And because the Market uses the lot only one morning a week it would be available to the kids the rest of the time.

Putting the kids on hold until a skating area can be incorporated into a recreational complex is fine except these kids will be taxpayers before that happens. Christy Park only recently opened its change rooms. Planning them began before 1983.

As for five weeks from application to decision for development permits and rezoning requests, that's not long. It's especially short notice for neighbors who may have a thing or two to say about changes to their community. Finding out about an application, mobilizing opposition, and arranging to meet with city hall cannot be done in the wink of an eye. Especially in summer when many residents may be out of town.

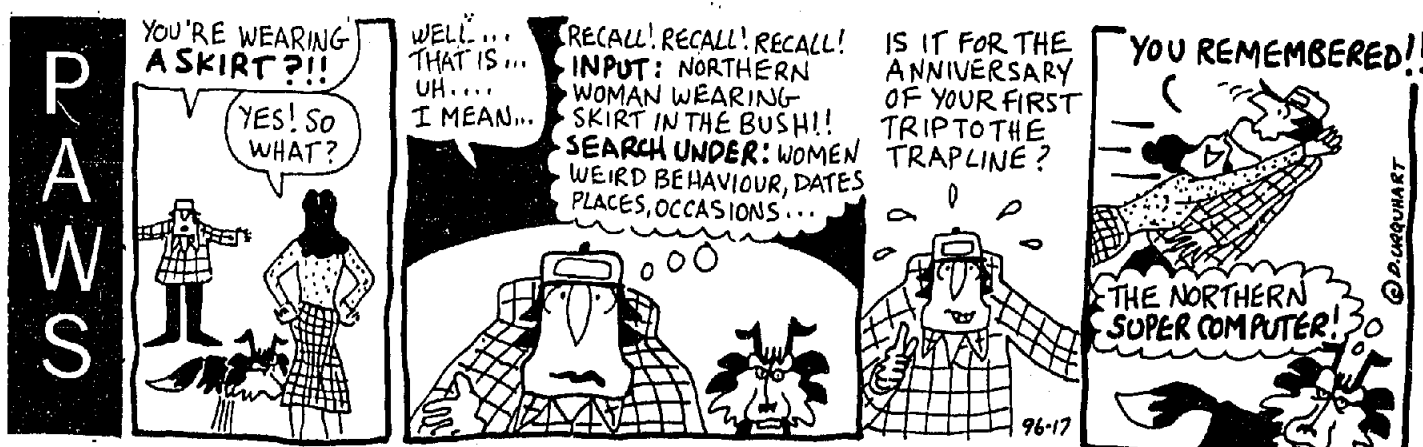

Developers know the time it takes to jump council's permit course. Rather than shrinking residents' reaction window, let developers apply earlier. Why they always apply so that they break ground in November is another unfathomable phenomenon. No construction worker thanks them for it.

The present permit system — applying to council, having it go before the planning committee, then returning it to council for a final vote — was designed to allow the public a chance to make their feelings known, and no doubt came about after a contentious permit got council into hot water.

Fast-tracking applications directly to the planning committee does three things: 1. Public reaction time is halved. 2. Because a committee has only three instead of seven councillors, fewer angles or consequences may be considered. And 3. When the proposal comes to council pre-pressed by the planning committee, it's carrying extra weight on the Yes side.

As for committee agendas posted on a wall at city hall... Most of us learn about council's doings from the media.

Pot calls kettle black

Dear Sir:

If ever there was a case of the pot calling the kettle black, it certainly happened in the June 26th issue of the Terrace Standard.

It concerned criticism by local dealers over the city's plan to buy GM vehicles and was headlined 'Dealers enraged by city plan'.

One dealer stated "It's not fair to the dealers who are trying to stay in business in this town and it's not fair to the tax payers who aren't getting the biggest bang for the buck!" Terrace Totem Ford's Jake De Jong echoed those sentiments. "It's bloody well wrong," he said. "All dealers of the Terrace area should have an opportunity to bid on the Terrace Vehicles."

Some time ago I approached Jake De Jong on behalf of the B.C. and Yukon Territory building and construction trades council to inquire as to why Terrace Totem Ford's $1.5 million expansion was not put out to tender to local construction contractors.

The contract was handed to Progressive Ventures and the local contractors were excluded from bidding.

Mr. De Jong's reply to me was that it was his company and his right to choose the contractor he pleased.

This may be so, but I hope Jake keeps in mind the fact that local building contractors and building trade workers, who were excluded from being given a chance to work on the Terrace Totem Ford project, may very well take the same approach as city council when they plan on leasing or buying their next new vehicle.

No justice here

Dear Sir:

I continue to reflect upon the stabbing death of my cousin, Dale Ellery Wilson.

I am concerned about the leniency of sentencing and the message being sent to our youth. They see young minors on the TV news who appear to get away with committing the most brutal of crimes.

Where is justice for Ellery's family when they see the youth in Kitwanga seemingly walking around as though he hasn't a care in the world?

These young offenders appear to be getting younger and younger. What do we do? Where is the justice?

Treaty deal is apartheid

Dear Sir:

Joe Barrett's letter to the editor negates comparing the "homelands" of South Africa with the "homelands" in Canada. The point is well taken. The south African situation is extreme, compared to Canada.

The framework, though, is comparable and is broadly referred to as the 'dependent domestic nation' model which incorporates the 'domestic nation' in the nation state.

It is apartheid, the principle of racial segregation upheld by law, and is the primary principle of the Agreement in Principle, I assert. It may be positive to the Nisga'a Nation — but it's still cleaved on racial lines.

Mr. Barrett says the "Nisga'a, B.C. and Canada sat together to negotiate willingly, freely, and fairly". I disagree. The Nisga'a Tribal Council, Canada's Department of Indian Affairs and BC's Ministry of Aboriginal Affairs were the negotiating parties, with peripheral inputs from others.

These bureaucracies serve the local, provincial and federal interests of the people registered under the Indian Act (a form of institutional racism) and reached a private agreement with little public input.

The AIP is a way the bureaucracies could function together in a framework with a 'dependent domestic nation'. I agree with Mr. Barrett to right the wrongs — it's just not possible with an apartheid framework.

Long distance details

An open letter to: Debbie Letawski

In response to your letter, I would like to clarify the deal with Westel and the long-distance calling plan for B.C. Chamber of Commerce members.

In May 1995, the B.C. Chamber of Commerce issued a request for proposal to 14 companies capable of providing the service required.

Through this comprehensive, competitive bidding process, four companies were asked to make oral presentations to the selection committee. These included BCTEL, Westel, ISM BC, and Trans National Group.

Westel Telecommunications was awarded the contract on the basis of price to the members, their marketing plan, level of customer service, and the common ability to meet the specific needs of the B.C. Chamber membership.

ISM BC, a subsidiary of BCTEL and a highly respected software and computing services company, was selected to provide billing services to B.C. chamber of commerce membership.

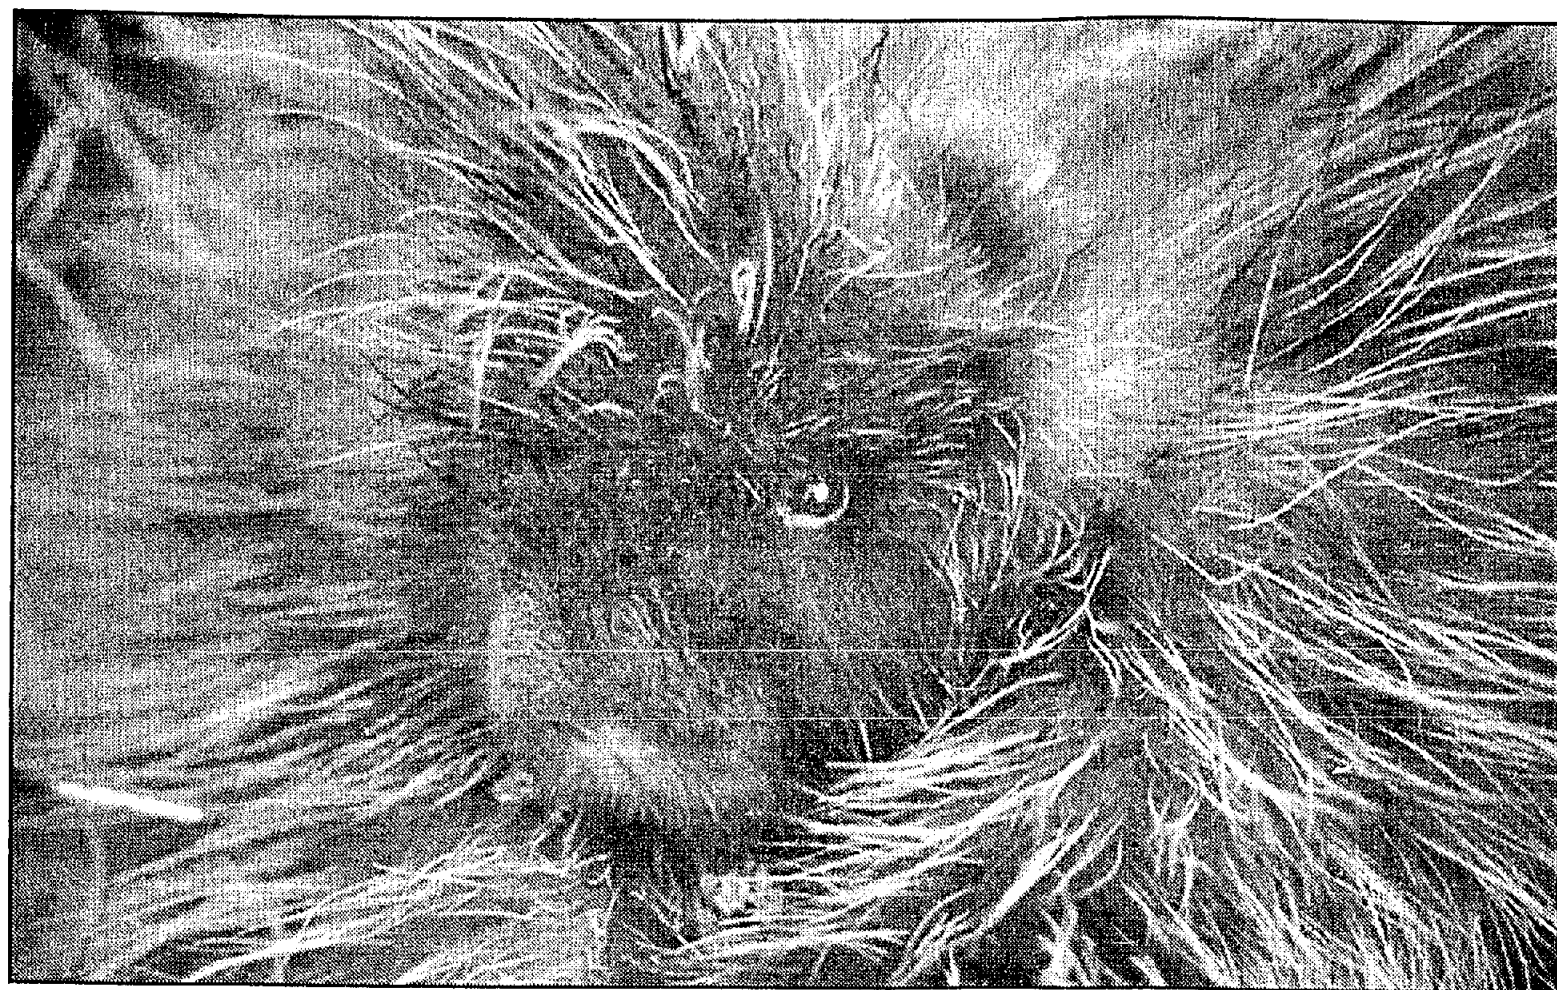

The selection committee recommended a one year contract, with the provision that should BCTEL be able to provide more attractive rates (which they indicated they were attempting to do then the chamber has the right to transfer the share group to BCTEL).

The role of the Terrace & District Chamber of Commerce is to offer benefits to its members. At the present, the long distance share group through Westel is the best plan available to small and medium size businesses. We don't make recommendations as to which benefits a member may choose.

You may also be interested to know that our Terrace & District Chamber of commerce office has chosen to maintain BCTEL as our long-distance carrier.

I hope this has been useful in clearing up the apparent misinformation. The Terrace & District Chamber of Commerce recognizes and values the contributions of BCTEL to our community.

Chamber of Commerce.

BEADY EYES of a porcupine stare out at its captor. Local researcher Todd Zimmerling tracks down the quilled creatures and outfits them with radio transmitter collars as part of his research towards his zoology PhD thesis from the University of British Columbia. He plans to have a total of about 15 wired porkies wandering the Shames River valley.

Porcupine plunder probed

$500,000 FRBC study may aid sapling survival

By JEFF NAGEL

TREE-CHOMPING porcupines are the focus of a $500,000 four-year study here bankrolled by Forest Renewal B.C.

The proposal by Terrace biologist Todd Zimmerling, of Applied Ecosystem Management, is one of $34.5 million worth of research grants handed out by the agency.

He's already got eight porkies outfitted with radio transmitter collars. They're roaming the Shames River valley, which Zimmerling says is his test area because of its high porcupine population.

Unlikely as it sounds, the study is considered highly valuable to the industry and got an early start last winter with backing from Repap and the forests ministry.

The quilled creatures are important because they nibble the inner bark off saplings, causing tremendous damage to young second growth forest stands.

In some parts of the north coast, Zimmerling says porcupines have damaged up to 60 per cent of the 20- to 25-year-old trees.

"That results in a non-commercial stand, essentially," he said.

Commercial thinning helps young trees grow faster, but it apparently also makes them yummier to the hungry porcupines.

And that means it's not a good policy in porcupine-infested areas.

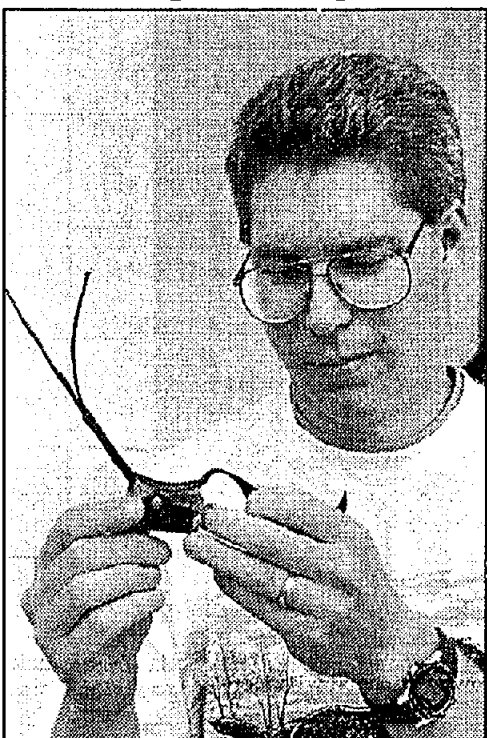

"They've just blown a whole pile of money and got nothing out of it," Zimmerling explained.

But Zimmerling's theory is that ultra-heavy thinning — down to a third the number of trees normally left after commercial thinning — may actually keep the porcupines away.

Porcupines feel uncomfortable wandering around relatively open areas where predators might nab them.

"They should feel less safe because they don't have a tree to run to," he said.

They prefer close in bush with plenty of trees to climb.

TODD ZIMMERLING inspects a radio-transmitter collar for a porcupine.

Snow is also heavier in the open and that makes the going more difficult for them.

"They shouldn't want to move in there," says Zimmerling.

But, he says, it's also possible all the extra thinning will just make the trees grow even faster and get even tastier.

"They could find the trees there so good to eat they would risk all those extra energy costs," he said.

If the porkies tend to stay out of the super-thinned area, he said, they'll try surrounding normally thinned stands with bands of ultra-thinned trees in an effort to keep them out.

"Hopefully they won't want to move beyond that buffer into the higher density stands."

Zimmerling will traipse around the valley three or four times a week to track down the whereabouts of his porcupines.

He plans to have a total of around 15 radio-tagged.

He'll track their movements — in particular which stands they've entered — and keep track of what they've been eating.

How do you put a radio transmitter collar on a prickly porky?

Zimmerling says it's a fairly simple matter of chasing them up a tree, throwing a fish net over them, and hauling down. He then steps on the quilled tail and injects a sedative.

Chasing down the collared porcupines for their thrice weekly checkups has become more challenging, however.

Although the creatures don't have a reputation for being the brightest light bulbs in the universe, Zimmerling says they cotton on to the radio transmitters very quickly.

The transmitter collar starts emitting a beeping noise when Zimmerling and his receiver start closing in on a wired porky.

Some of them have clued in that the noise means trouble and that their usual policy of running up a tree won't work.

"Some of them are intelligent enough to figure out what's going on," he said. "They just run for it — and keep right on going."

The thinning experiments follow past unsuccessful efforts to cull the population.

Several years ago there was a bounty with hunters paid $50 a nose for porcupines.

"There's been talk of trying to implement that again, but in this day and age that sort of thing doesn't fly with the public," Zimmerling said.

Research has also explored efforts to repel.

Aluminum skirts on trees have been found to protect saplings, but the measure is not economical.

The bulk of the money — at least $300,000 of the total project costs — pays for the thinning work being done by silviculture crews.

14 research projects in region get money

A TOTAL OF $34.5 million in Forest Renewal B.C. grants have been earmarked for a variety of research projects province-wide over the next year.

The intent is to create improved data bases for each region, which will in turn help planting and harvesting planning for the future.

"Planning is vital to forest management. It is what's needed to make informed decisions," says Smithers' FRBC communications officer Amy Hart. "Our job now is to educate and explain to the public why this is so important in understanding the forest sector and how it will help us move more smoothly into the future."

In the Skeena-Bulkley Region 14 projects have been approved for 1996/97 at a cost of $1,064,000.

Included is an in-depth study of the relationship between small forest operators and industry, with a focus on whether or not government, forests policy and corporations help or hinder small, forest-based communities and independent foresters.

University of B.C. researcher Elizabeth Brounson, is already half way through 100 interviews of businesses in Smithers, Hazelton, Houston and Burns Lake, and is expected to wrap up her study this fall.

The results will be made available to all forestry related agencies.

Two other local projects will concentrate on yield models for multiple species stands, also taking into consideration breaks in the forests canopy due to selective logging, the stress on trees in higher elevations and what the forest will like over the next 1,000 years with harvesting changes.

Right now the forests ministry largely relies on information gathered from undisturbed, one-species stands.

"A lot of this information just isn't there," says Hart. "As logging moves into higher elevations, and different techniques are implemented, we need to know what will happen to protect the resource."

In total there are 447 research projects under way across the province.

Making a profit against the rules

By MALCOLM BAXTER

Cariboo News Service
THE FIRST value-added grant has finally been handed out in the northwest by Forest Renewal BC (FRBC).

Value-added money has been available from the Crown corporation for about two years now, but it's not a lack of applications that has led to the lengthy delay in awarding one.

"We've had a lot of queries," confirmed Amy Hart, FRBC communications officer for the northwest.

The problem, she explained, was they were from individual businesses looking for money to buy new machinery or to cover part of similar capital costs.

And that's against FRBC rules.

Hart said the criteria when it comes to value-added money is it cannot be provided "to create direct profit or financial benefit for an individual."

Clearly, a business would look at buying equipment or investing in an expanded plant only if it intended to eventually generate additional revenue — and profits — as a result.

Hart said that restriction was in response to concerns raised by value-added companies in existence prior to the creation of FRBC.

Those operators feared potential competitors would use FRBC handouts to "pull the rug out from under our feet", she explained.

Therefore it had been decided FRBC money should not be awarded in a way that could undermine existing companies.

That determination also puts a crimp into plans a company might have to use FRBC money to research new technology or potential markets.

Again, because an applicant cannot be the sole beneficiary, any results of such research would have to be shared with others in the industry or thinking of getting into it.

The successful application is from the district of Stewart. It is getting $50,000 to research what kind of viable value-added operations might be developed there using wood from increased timber harvesting in the Cassiar forest district.

Because Stewart will be making any information generally available in an effort to encourage new industry in the community, the proposal meets the FRBC test.

Although individual businesses cannot get money out of what's called the "value-added envelope", Hart pointed out FRBC has set up an alternative way of helping them.

It's called the Community Business Program. Under the program, small and medium sized forest sector companies in the Skeena-Bulkley area can apply for loans from either community development corporations such as 16-37 Community Futures or the Northern Savings Credit Union in Terrace.

Community and native development corporations are matching FRBC's $625,000 contribution and will grant loans to a maximum of $75,000.

On the Credit Union side of the program, FRBC is providing the BC Central Credit Union with a $2 million "reserve" fund which it says will lever up to $20 million in loans province-wide. The maximum loan here is $250,000.

While that does mean money is available, Hart underlined it is in the form of a loan, not a grant.

WAITING FOR THE FISH: New selective gillnets being tested at the river mouth this year are hoped to allow more chinook, steelhead and coho upstream.

Selective gillnets get mixed reviews

There's no such thing, says ministry biologist

NEW, SELECTIVE gillnets being tested this year by commercial fishers on the northcoast are supposed to eventually help reduce rates of incidental catch. But not all biologists are so optimistic.

Bob Hooton of the B.C. Ministry of the Environment is not convinced of the feasibility of selective gillnets.

"Gillnetting is a very unselective method of harvesting fish," he says. "In fact, it is notoriously anti-selective."

Eleven four-boat groups are plying northcoast waters this summer, and 20 more vessels are fishing the Skeena using nets that have differing mesh sizes, materials and hang ratios.

The idea is to find the best nets that capture desirable fish like sockeye, while allowing unwanted species like steelhead to escape.

But Hooton isn't convinced.

"No matter how much you fine-tune it regarding mesh size or the way it's hung, it's still a gillnet," he says. "The term 'selective gillnet' is really a classic oxymoron. It isn't possible."

Hooton says that the choice ultimately comes down to whether or not gillnetting is a viable option.

"They are there to strain all of the fish out of the water, basically," he says. "If fish are there, they're dead. Period."

But Department of Fisheries and Oceans biologist Les Janz couldn't disagree more.

"People who make comments like those are probably pretty narrow-minded," he says of Hooton's position. "There were people who said it was impossible to walk on the moon too."

Janz claims that early indications of the net's success have been very positive.

"Previous studies suggest that there are selective properties to these nets," he says. "To me it makes sense. When you go from a pile of tangled netting that catches everything, to a net that catches only gilling fish — that's a big difference."

Janz says that it's too early to know how successful the nets have been, but the project is running smoothly so far.

"Anyone who says otherwise doesn't know what he's talking about," says Janz. "You have to test these things. Otherwise you'll never know."

Rivers on endangered list

THREE OF THE top ten most endangered river systems in B.C. are right here in the Northwest, according to the Outdoor Recreation Council of British Columbia.

Each year the council, which represents more than 40 recreation and conservation organizations, compiles a list of the provinces most endangered rivers.

This year the Stikine is number three.

The council says that the river has received international recognition for its scenic, cultural and recreational values. But it is threatened by increasing pressure from the forestry industry and road-building.

In particular, the council is concerned about the three-fold increase in the Annual Allowable Cut in the Cassiar Forest District. According to the council, this could have dramatic negative effects on the Stikine.

The council also argues that one of the Stikine's main tributaries, the Iskut, which is said to be the source of 40 per cent of the system's spawning salmon, is also in danger because of the use of a large hovercraft on the river.

The council says the craft is having negative effects on fish — killing them outright or stranding them on the banks.

The Taku River, further north, is inaccessible by road. But the council places this system fourth on their list because of a proposed access road into the region, which would open it up to large-scale logging.

Ninth is the Nechako. The Nechako had been first on the list in 1994 and still warrants a position, according to the council, because there is not enough water for salmon to survive, despite the cancellation of the Kemano Completion Project.

And listed as the most endangered river, for the second year in a row, is the Fraser.

Repap hopes to cut wait on payments

Officials meet angry loggers on eve of Orenda hearings

REPAP OFFICIALS met with disgruntled Hazelton loggers last week in an effort to ease concerns over the company's delayed payment schedule.

"Some people were supportive and kind of understood the explanations we made," says Repap B.C. woodlands general manager Dan Tuomi.

He says the company hopes to get back to a normal payment schedule for its contractors by the end of the year, but added that depends on markets and the company cannot commit to it.

"We're not happy with having our contractors extended. It's a priority with us to get them back as quickly as we can."

The length of time waiting for payment right now ranges from around 35 days for Terrace-area contractors to 45 days in the Hazeltons and up to 90 days for some road-building contractors.

"The strike last fall knocked the sails out of us," Tuomi explained. "Hindsight is 20/20, but maybe we shouldn't have kept everything running. Maybe we should have taken some down time."

The issue blew up last week when nearly all of Repap's Hazelton-area contractors signed a petition calling on the forest minister to block the proposed $25 million sale of Orenda Forest Products and its forest licence to Repap until the payment policy changes.

The last thing the company wants is a confrontation with its own contractors on the eve of the public hearings over the licence transfer.

Tuomi said the purchase of Orenda would not be done on the backs of Repap's contractors.

"The financing is self-contained," he said. "The actual assets of Orenda are being used to secure financing for the purchase. And it will be a standalone business unit."

The Repap deal to purchase Orenda follows a failed attempt by a New York consortium to take the licence and ship the wood to a mill on Vancouver Island.

"This vulture fund takeover attempt last year was a wakeup call for us that this wood maybe wasn't going to stay in the area and we better look at it," Tuomi said.

Most of the Orenda wood has been bought by Repap for years, so the company views the purchase as securing the fibre it already relies on.

"We feel we better make sure it is secured for the future," he said.

Repap owns 65 per cent of the fibre it needs to feed its northwest mills, and has to buy the rest on the open market.

"We're at the low end of the totem pole right now in the province in terms of fibre security," Tuomi said.

Tuomi also noted that the company does pay interest on payments that wait beyond 14 days.

The hearings are expected to begin later this month. No dates have been set yet.

The purchase would give Repap control over an additional 342,000 cubic metres of wood, and help buffer the loss of as much as 170,000 cubic metres that goes to the Nisga'a as part of the proposed treaty.

Repap will in turn offer the Nisga'a a chance to buy 49 per cent of Orenda.

Conference planned

MORE ORGANIZERS are needed for an aboriginal youth conference to be held in April next year.

The conference will be for native youths from throughout the Pacific Northwest. Its purpose is to give youths a voice through workshops, meetings and it's also about youths just getting together and having a good time.

"We're hoping the conference will help to change the stats for the area," said organizer Bill Christiansen, referring to the number of native youths who suffer problems with alcohol, drugs and suicide.

Only 12 people showed up to one of the first meetings, held a couple weeks ago, including a few local elders.

Now Christiansen, referring to the number of native youths who suffer problems with alcohol, drugs and suicide.

"It'll be a chance for youths to speak and connect to elders," said Christiansen. He hopes aboriginal communities across the northwest will become involved.

The next meeting will be held September 15.

Crusader makes bid for bear hunting ban

By DAVE TAYLOR

AT ORIENTAL bear banquets, live bears in cages are lowered onto hot coals until their paws are cooked.

On the Chinese black market, workers extract gall bladder bile from live bears housed in tiny cages to sell as medicine.

These are some of the atrocities that Anthony Marr of the Western Canada Wilderness Committee says he's trying to prevent.

He's on an eight-week tour to drum up support for a province-wide vote to ban bear hunting in B.C.

While grizzly and black bears aren't endangered in B.C., Marr says that could soon change.

"The decimation of the Asiatic black bear and the rising affluence of the Asian community will lead to an increased demand for Canadian bears and bear parts," says Marr. "That will mean even more hunting and poaching in B.C."

According to Marr, when a species becomes endangered, it's probably already too late.

"It's a Catch-22 situation," he says. "Once a species becomes endangered, its black-market value goes way up. So poaching actually increases."

"There are only 10,000 grizzlies in B.C.," says Marr. "And at today's

210,000 names to force referendum

killing rate, within five years I predict it will be endangered."

Marr says that he has to go after legal hunting because stopping poaching in a province the size of B.C. is almost impossible. He points out that there are only 150 conservation officers in the entire province, which is five times as big as Washington State, which has 750 officers.

In order for Marr to call a referendum, he has to get 10 per cent of all of the registered voters in every riding in B.C. to sign a petition. That's 210,000 names.

Marr is confident he will succeed. If he does, it will be a Canadian first. The earliest the referendum could be held would be 1999.

If there is such a referendum, Marr thinks it will pass, citing a 1995 Angus Reid poll that indicated 85 per cent of British Columbians were opposed to bear trophy-hunting.

One person in the other 15 per cent is Bobby Ball. Ball was a bear-hunting guide for over 40 years. He disagrees with Marr.

"There is no danger to the bear population," he says. "There are more bears out there than you can shake a stick at."

Ball is not happy with people like Marr, who he says are misinformed.

"Those bear-watch yahoos really do more harm than good," he says. "What those armchair conservationists don't realize is that trophy hunters go after the old animals, so it's a good way to control the population."

Ball says that knowledgeable guides take hunters to old bears that rarely reproduce and can be a nuisance.

"When grizzlies get old, their teeth get weak and they can't eat well, and that makes them bold," he says. "We had one crash through our kitchen window at the ranch."

Ball also says he doesn't understand the reasoning behind the referendum bid, which goes after hunters, not poachers.

"Isn't that stupid?" he says. "Stop and think about it — isn't that stupid? Hunting brings lots of good, clean dollars to the region. If this guy wants to help, he should after the poachers, not the hunters."

But Marr sees a trophy-hunting ban as possibly the only hope to save the bears before things get out of control.

"We need to do something now," he says. "People have to take some responsibility before it's too late."

Fishery freeze sought

TSIMSHIAN natives say their future share of various specialty fisheries are being given away while they negotiate.

At issue are the rights to fish lucrative species like sea urchin, geoduck and harvest kelp.

Tsimshian negotiators say the Department of Fisheries and Oceans is handing out licences to take those species in areas that are likely to become part of a future Tsimshian land claim settlement.

They're looking for a commitment to protect a share of those fisheries for the future Tsimshian treaty entitlement — while there's still some left.

Already Tsimshian Tribal Council president Bob Hill says the undersea forests of kelp are disappearing from areas where natives have traditionally harvested the seaweed.

The kelp and some of the shellfish at issue are traditional native foods which some marketers have discovered sell well in Japan.

Spawned-on kelp was never harvested here commercially until recent years when someone discovered the Japanese will buy it, Hill explained.

The Tsimshian want the issue of allocations in those fisheries dealt with as soon as possible as an interim measure, ahead of treaty negotiations.

So far federal officials have been reluctant to make that commitment.

"The management of the resource has to continue even while negotiations are underway," says federal negotiator Bill Zaharoff.

Hartley Bay representative Art Sterritt said it only makes sense for the government to put some restraints on the issuing of urchin, geoduck and kelp licences in light of the treaty negotiations.

"They're creating third party interests in the fishery," he said. "It's pointless. The public ends up paying compensation at the end of the day. It doesn't make sense."

"They'll actually finance people to go out and harvest these species," says Sterritt.

"It's akin to trying to create a new tree farm licence in the middle of a land claim negotiation."

Sterritt says the issue around shellfish and kelp is simpler to deal with than salmon, because they don't migrate thousands of miles.

COMPANY vs. HIGHWAYS

Store teeters on access

A PROPOSED Real Canadian Warehouse Club store has hit a roadblock over highway access to the property.

Highways planner David Fisher is so far refusing to grant approval for an unrestricted access from the Keith Ave. site to the highway.

He remained firm on the issue at last Thursday's city planning committee meeting.

The highways ministry is basing its restrictions on projections for major traffic and continued growth of Terrace/Thomhill.

The long-range plan for Keith Ave. calls for traffic lights at the intersections of Kalum and Kerr Streets.

Westfair Properties Ltd.'s Real Canadian Warehouse Club would fall right in between those two intersections, on land behind the Kermodei Trading yellow gift house.

Fisher says the distance between the intersections can accommodate future left turn lanes for those intersections, but can't handle additional turning lanes in and out of the store.

He says traffic going to the store should turn off at Kalum or Kerr St. and use side streets to reach the store.

"I have trouble understanding why something this big can't survive with the traffic turning 100 metres earlier," he said.

That has some councillors worried about channelling lots of traffic through the residential neighbourhood surrounding the store.

Councillor David Hull said he didn't want to see Feeney turn into a "race track."

"It's our intent to keep traffic away from the residential area," said Westfair assistant development manager James Rinzeema.

So far neither side is budging.

"We have to come up with something, otherwise there will be nothing developed there," said property owner Glen Saunders.

Rinzeema also indicated the development could be in trouble if highways sticks to its position.

"We'd have a serious problem," he said. "At the end of the day you need to have adequate access to the highway."

Fisher said the ministry is trying to plan for the future.

"We're not trying to stop development. We're trying to keep the highway from getting too congested and keep customers away from the businesses."

"We're trying to avoid having to spend $15 million and build a new highway around the city."

Saunders said that seemed unlikely, pointing to Nanaimo, where he said there are 37 lit intersections, and the city is only now getting a bypass.

Mayor Jack Talstra suggested the developers try to cut a deal with Canadian Freightways — which owns the property immediately west — in an effort to get an access road west to Kalum St.

Rinzeema said they would try that.

A proposal for a southern access to the site off of Feeney Ave. has also worried residents, who fear a lot of traffic may come up their streets from Haugland to get to the property.

City councillors indicated they favour West Fair's proposed option of one direct highway access in and out of the property.

"I guess we throw it back to highways and the developer to fight it out," said Hull.

The firm had been asking for two unrestricted entrances off of Keith.

Without highways approval, city council can't approve the subdivision of the property required.

The Chamber of Commerce is concerned the eventual plan to shunt highway access through Kalum or Kerr will hamper the ability of RVs and motor homes to get to the Tourist Infocentre.

Road is in, school's out

PLANS TO extend the Nisga'a Highway from Greenville to Kincolith won't be stopped by the province's new freeze on capital projects.

"We rescued the Nisga'a highway from the flames," said Ian McLeod, director of communication for the Transportation Finance Authority.

"It's now agreed at all levels that the project is legally committed and the design work will proceed as previously stated."

That's because all the money to be spent this year — $700,000 for design and engineering so far — is coming out of a federal government commitment to provide $10 million for the Nisga'a Highway.

"We're using the 10 million they provided in cash up front," McLeod explained. "The first 10 million that will be spent on this project will be the federal dollars."

The total estimated cost of the project is $30 million.

The capital projects freeze does mean a six-month postponement of planning and design of a replacement for Skeena Jr. Secondary school.

Hospital plan status unknown under capital project freeze

Helmut Giesbrecht

The project is on the under-review list that has frozen work on hundreds of projects around the province.

"Anybody who wants to give me a hand in lobbying for a continuation of the project would be most appreciated," says Skeena MLA Helmut Giesbrecht.

Planned renovations to make Mills Memorial Hospital more efficient aren't on the review list, but Giesbrecht is wary about that project as well.

"It's entirely possible approvals might be a little harder to get," he said. "I'm a little uneasy about that one."

The issue of the smaller projects is not yet resolved, added hospital administrator Michael Leisinger.

"The pot of money that we're applying towards is still in question," he said. "I'm still expecting an answer sometime this month."

The capital project freeze was announced in the wake of new forest revenue figures that showed a quarter-billion-dollar drop in revenues for the province.

Finance minister Andrew Petter's budget did keep some promises, however, including freezes in B.C. Hydro rates, ICBC premiums, and college and university tuition fees.

B.C. also cut its provincial personal income tax rate by one per cent effective July

1. A second percentage point will be cut in July, 1997. The tax reduction is capped for taxpayers earning more than $80,000.

There's also a tax cut worth $29 million for small businesses.

Fires set

THE THORNHILL Fire Department called the RCMP July 2 to investigate a fire they had just extinguished behind Thornhill Secondary School.

The fire had been intentionally set and youths had been seen in the wooded area prior to smoke being visible.

Police say that this is not the first time such fires have been set, and that it seems to be an ongoing problem. They stress that this kind of activity is extremely dangerous.

Police are asking anyone who has any information on these fires to please call Crimestoppers. All calls are confidential.

Police raid pot plantation

The Terrace Standard, Wednesday, July 10, 1996 - A11

CONSERVATION OFFICER Doug Forsdick and Terrace RCMP officers discovered a 250-plant marijuana grow operation near the Exchamsiks River.

POLICE BAGGED more than 250 marijuana plants in a raid on an outdoor grow operation near the Exchamsiks River.

RCMP Cpl. Anders Udsen says the plants grown to maturity would have fetched well over $100,000.

The pot growers could not be located, but Udsen says the matter is still under investigation.

Conservation officers in the area June 28 saw some suspicious activity, and — suspecting a grow operation — called in police.

The plants were up to four and a half feet tall, and police also seized a boat and motor used to get to the grow site, gardening implements, fertilizer, fungicide and insecticide, as well as two full trays of 36 starter plants.

Investigators destroyed all plants at the scene except samples taken as evidence for any future court proceedings.

Udsen described it as an average-sized marijuana plantation.

"When they get bigger than 200 to 250 plants, it starts to become a problem to keep it concealed," he said.

Most operators run several scattered sites that size, he said, adding that if they lose one it's seen as a cost of doing business.

"Unfortunately we can't find all of them," he said.

"The area here around Terrace is very conducive to growing marijuana," Udsen added. "If you can grow an orchard you can grow marijuana."

Police Beat

Cavalier collision

A SINGLE vehicle accident on Highway 37, south of Krumm road brought police to the scene at around 1 a.m., July 3.

The car had been travelling northbound when it crossed the centreline, proceeded across the southbound lanes and over an embankment. The vehicle continued down the hill and struck a telephone pole on a private road, ejecting all three occupants.

They were transported to Mills Memorial Hospital with various injuries, none of which appeared to be life-threatening.

Alcohol and speed are believed to be factors in the accident. If anyone witnessed the maroon Chevrolet Cavalier involved, either before or during the accident is urged to contact Terrace RCMP.

Heartless

THE THEFT of a Heart and Stroke Foundation donation box last week brought police to the Rendezvous restaurant.

At about 10 p.m., a Caucasian youth, about 5'2" tall, aged 13-15 years, with light-coloured hair ran out of the restaurant with the donation box that was about half-full with change. He was wearing a black shirt and baggy jeans.

If anyone has any information on this crime, please contact Terrace RCMP or Crimestoppers.

Pole position

A BLACK CHRYSLER Daytona was southbound on Queensway Drive at 2:30 a.m. Saturday morning when it left the roadway and hit a power pole. It is undetermined what the cause of the accident was, but damage is estimated at about $8,000.

The driver remains in Mills Memorial hospital in good condition.

Adventures in England

TOURISM IS not a major industry in Terrace but judging from the number of American licence plates in town, it could be important.

Any merchant will tell you about the need for courtesy in the hospitality industry. Witness the following.

I have just returned from three weeks at a tourist resort in England. It is known for its twenty square miles of beach and hundreds of shops and is always crowded. I however, was not impressed with the hospitality of the place.

On my first day in town, I went to the post office to buy some stamps. There was a long line up. When it was my turn, I showed the clerk my postcard so she could see the destination and I asked politely, "What do I need on this?"

The answer came back quickly — "a stamp." I let this pass and eventually got what I needed.

A few days later, my wife went into a supermarket and when she presented my Visa card, the cashier refused to take it. She had to come out to the car and get it.

The supervisor who had now arrived asked me to sign the cash register receipt. This of course was narrower than my card so I signed with my first initial and last name. The card of course had my name written out in full and the supervisor would not accept my short form.

When a driver signals, it is to tell you that they are going to cut you off so you might as well brake now.

I thought it unlikely that someone would use a stolen North American credit card for thirty dollars worth of groceries so I wrote my name out in full, beginning on the paper and extending it across her counter top. She accepted this.

These and other adventures in shopping began with trying to get to the stores. The drivers and pedestrians in this town use the kami kaze technique.

When a driver signals, it is to tell you that they are going to cut you off so you might as well brake now.

Pedestrians are no better. I saw one pedestrian push the button to get a green light and he immediately stepped out onto the road without looking.

Cars came to a screeching stop and he was across the street before the light had changed, while we sat and waited for it to allow us to continue.

Maybe I should close with a few words about the beach. It costs four dollars to drive your car onto the beach, which as I mentioned earlier, is massive.

The speed limit is ten miles per hour and strictly enforced. Trying to do donuts will get you escorted off by the shore patrol.

On the land side, the sand is bone dry. You sink up to your ankles with every step and it is no good for building. The ocean is almost a mile away and if you ignore the red flags to go and get some water the shore patrol comes over and tells you off.

In the middle the sand is moist enough for the kids to dig but by the time they are down four inches it is black and soaked in oil.

It is often too windy for Frisbee but if you want to feed the gulls, look at the horses being exercised, or just go along and pick up litter as my wife seems compelled to do, it is a nice beach.

From The Standard's foreign correspondent, having a wonderful time, best wishes and happy holidays.

A new community centre

Kermode centre plans new home

By CRIS LEYKAUF
THE FACELIFT and addition proposed for the Kermode Friendship Centre will do much more than revitalize an aging building. Directors are also hoping the added space and new facilities will allow the centre to offer even a wider range of programs.

The Kermode Friendship Centre, located on Kalum, is a multicultural drop-in centre.

It offers advocacy services such as advice on welfare rights, native status, housing and medical issues, and gives support to people in distress.

The centre also offers a drug and alcohol counselling service, recreation programs for youths, a tutoring program, home comfort worker, parenting program and a variety of activities and workshops.

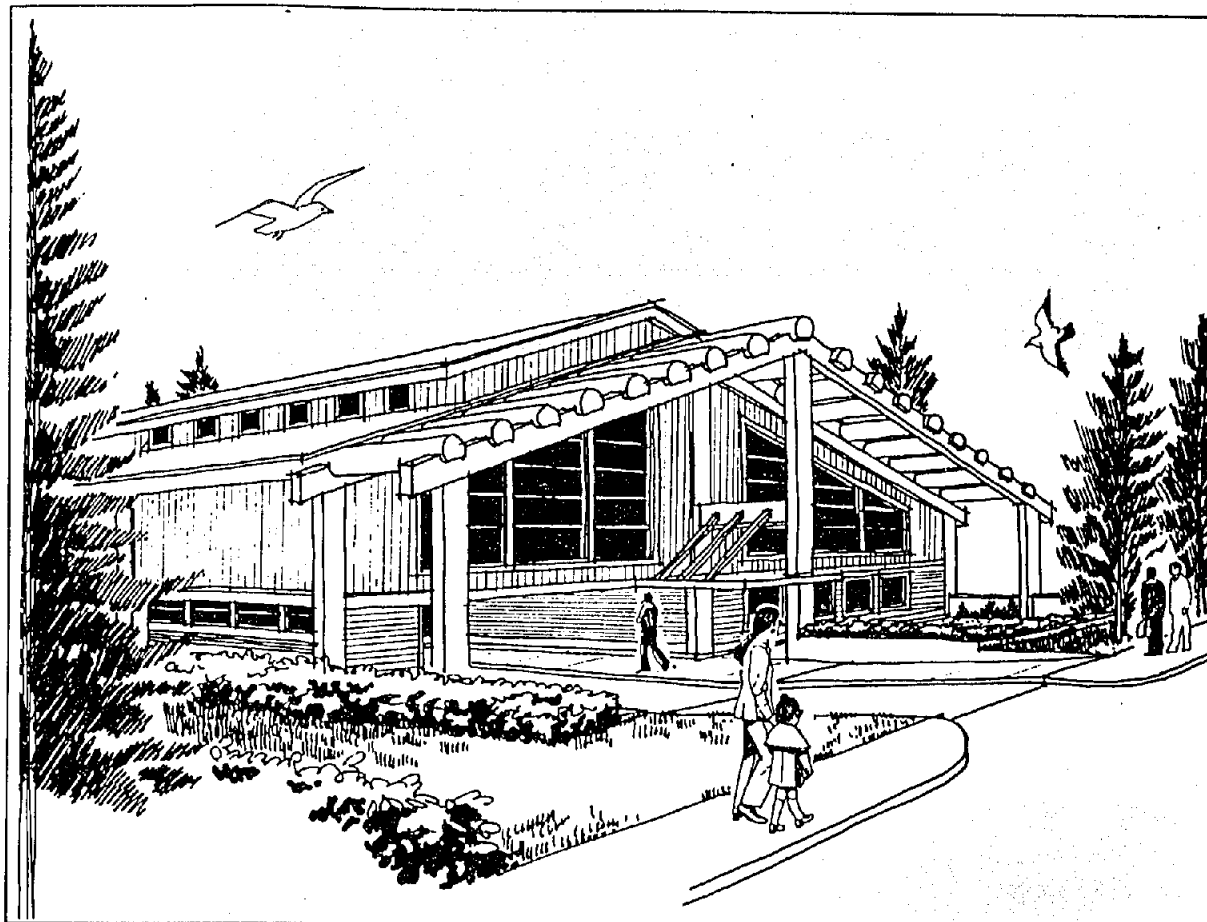

"We're don't have enough room," explains Stu Cotterill, the economic development officer at the centre. The new building would allow the centre to better meet its goals, he says.

What's planned is actually a new building, built overtop of the existing one.

"It's cheaper than tearing it down," says Cotterill.

The new building would be three floors, and would be about 26,700 sq. ft.

It would contain a large lobby, four good sized training rooms, general office, three separate offices and a daycare and outdoors play area on the main level.

THIS IS WHAT the new Kermode Friendship Centre might look like in a few years. The new building would be built overtop the old one, greatly expanding available space, as well as giving it a much needed face lift. The board of directors hope the new building would become more of a community centre for Terrace.

The second level would be a large multipurpose room with a stage, which could be used for presentations, performances and sports events. There is also significant office space available on the second floor, and even more on a planned third floor, which would be developed at a later date.

It's an ambitious plan, and Cotterill admits there's a lot to be done before breaking ground, hopefully by next spring.

For starters, city council still has to approve the centre's application to rezone the existing property.

The new building will cost an estimated $3 million, says Cotterill. Right now he has applications into BC21 and Women's Equality for grants to offset the costs.

If that doesn't pan out, Cotterill says the centre will pay for the project itself, via lotteries and other projects.

The centre owns the land and building it's in now free and clear, and that alone is a good start, he says.

What they want to do with the new building is make it into a community centre, available to be rented out for weddings, non-liquor dances, meetings and a variety of functions.

"It's a perfect location for it," he says, pointing out that the centre is located close to the pool and the library, as well as downtown.

The centre also plans to rent office space to companies such as a service centre for home-based business, and other companies that could train people.

These are businesses the centre itself could start, says Cotterill.

But the most important emphasis of this new centre will be to promote multiculturalism.

"We try to create a non-threatening, non-judgmental environment," says Cotterill.

"We're a friendship centre and friendship has a tendency to be colour blind."

Great show planned for talent night

TALENT NIGHT is coming up soon for the nine contestants in the Miss Terrace competition.

And this year the night will be a bit different from many of the traditional talent nights past.

The evening starts with a separate effective speaking event. Each contestant chooses her own topics, and is judged on the quality of delivery of her speech.

Then comes the talent portion. This year will feature a photography exhibit, a few native dances a poem and a drama skit, to name a few. There will also be some events which will be pre-taped, such as one girl who will ride her horse in a series of movies which are set to music.

Talent night starts at 7 p.m. on July 20 at the Pentecostal Church. Tickets are $7 and are available at Erwin's Jewellers, ladies wear in the Co-op and from any contestant.

Three finalists will from the evening will perform their talents again at Awards Night, a week later at the REM Lee Theatre.

And below you can meet three more contestants. The final three will be featured next week.

Jamie Gibson entered the Miss Terrace contest to gain self esteem and to meet new people.

She graduated from Caledonia in 1994 and is currently working at Tim Hortons.

In her spare time in the winter months she enjoys snowmobiling, and this year she plans to try skiing for the first time.

She's hoping that being involved in the Miss Terrace pageant will help her "to be more comfortable around people," and teach her how to work with groups.

Her future goals involve a career with children. Her sponsor is Skeena Sawmills.

Darlynn Larsen is currently in her first year at Northwest Community College. There's she's starting to work on a bachelor of applied arts in journalism.

Larsen entered the Miss Terrace contest for the experience and to work on her people skills. She hopes it will teach her to be the best person she can be, and to use her best attributes.

She's currently employed by McDonalds, and in her spare time she enjoys playing softball and badminton.

Larsen is sponsored by McDonalds.

Bonnie Vivelros just graduated from Caledonia, and is planning to attend college next year.

She joined the Miss Terrace pageant to learn new skills and meet new people. She hopes to learn how to speak to large groups of people and expects to gain a great deal of personal satisfaction from being involved in the contest.

Vivelros is sponsored by the Terrace Co-op.

Hobby becomes retirement dream

SOME PEOPLE discover their true calling late in life, and that's what happened to market regular Bill Jmaeff.

Making knives, a craft he took up to ward off the boredom of retirement, has become much more than a hobby to Bill.

Collectors from as far away as Ceylon and Germany come to him, looking for one of his specialty knives.

Bill makes just about every kind of knife you can imagine, from small fold up knives to sabers and hunting knives.

Handles are made of exotic types of wood such as Australian rose wood and African calico, as well as oak and other local wood. Some of the blades are decorated with brass.

Nothing in Bill's childhood would lead you to think he would develop a passion for this type of craft.

Bill was born in Saskatchewan, the son of a Russian father and prairie-born woman.

The family worked very hard, trying to make a living farming.

"Farming is like a game of cards," said Bill, remembering his childhood. "It's always a gamble."

He remembers how the farmers had to support the town's people during the Depression.

His parents would fill a wagon with pork and beef and eggs and chickens, geese, grain. They would give it to people in need.

"Some people were moved to tears, when they received the much needed supplies," Bill says.

But farming wasn't in Bill's blood. When he was 19, the family sold everything and moved to BC. Bill worked in the orchards, and then in the logging industry. He never really enjoyed these trades.

Bill later switched to carpentry work, and he found satisfaction in doing construction.

Bill came to Terrace in the

AT THE MARKET

60s. He had always thought about living up north. He says he fell in love with Terrace and decided to make it home.

When Bill retired he couldn't take the idleness. In the summer he filled the empty hours with fishing, but winters were really hard to take.

Then one day, while at the dump, Bill found a metal head to make knives.

His friend Peter Nicholson, knew something about making knives, so got Bill started in the right direction.

Now, eight years down the road, Bill says he really loves his craft and only wishes he had discovered it a lot sooner in life.

Aside from selling his knives, Bill just loves being down at the market. It's a really pleasant way to spend the morning just visiting with people, says Bill.

You can meet Bill Jmaeff and see his beautiful craftsmanship at the Skeena Valley farmers market every Saturday morning.

Trails spruced up

I'D LIKE TO start this week with a little thank you to Lovina Tyler and the Terrace Volunteer Bureau.

Two Saturdays ago I and Helen Haselmeyer, representing the Terrace Beautification Society, went up to the old Kitsumkalum cemetery location.

There we met up with two nice young men, Dan and Josh Benson, referred by the volunteer society, and Tom Kofoed for a work bee.

We spent a few hours working on the beautiful little nature trails that were built on the hillside by Jim Ougley.

It's a beautiful spot. As you walk the trails you can certainly get a feeling of peace and comfort. You can tell the trails have been built with loving care and with mother nature in mind.

But sadly, the trails have been vandalized a few times.

To Jim, who has spent many hours working on the trails, and takes pride in his work, I say, please don't give up and be patient.

All those who have used and enjoyed the trails appreciate your hard work.

And to the fellows — Dan, Josh and Tom, thank you for the pride you take in our city.

Divorce a source of passive abuse

By JOHN J. SMITH
Sacred Heart Parish

I FULLY endorse every effort to prevent child abuse at all levels of our society. Recently I was required to submit to a criminal record check in this respect.

This is because I am pastor of a church with a school and I have a lot of contact with children. Staff of all schools in B.C. must now comply with this new policy. It's a good one and I fully support it.

But I would like to see legislation go further. I think children are the victims of two kinds of abuse. The first is active abuse which speaks for itself.

The second is what I call passive abuse which I need to explain.

We sin either by commission or omission. Meaning, we do wrong or we fail to do good. Abuse as passive is sin by omission.

I believe divorce is a source of passive abuse. Let me be clear from the outset that I am not judging or condemning couples who divorce. I am talking about divorce per se, in itself. It's bad legislation.

I am against the law, not the couples. The greatest need of a child is not love. It is security. Not even the security of parents. What a child needs is the security of his or her mom and dad in a stable, lifelong commitment that we call marriage.

We hear a lot today about parenting. Very little about marriage, about how to be good husbands and wives and remain in relationship.

Quite the contrary. Marriage is under attack. Children are suffering the consequences.

Divorce divides. Children are torn apart. Their world collapses around them. We can have all the legislation in the world that will guarantee custody and visiting rights for the parents. It will never make up for the security a child finds in the committed love of a husband and wife.

If over fifty per-cent of all marriages end up in divorce, then we have a lot of emotionally wounded children. No couple intentionally sets out to hurt their child. They are simply victims of poor legislation.

It is almost as easy to obtain a divorce as it to get a driver's license. I would like to see that change.

First, government must recognize and accept the truth that children of divorced parents are emotionally hurt.

Second, it must acknowledge its part in this. If the government grants divorces then it follows that it is part of the problem.

Third, introduce legislation in favor of the child.

Presently, all the focus seems to be on the couple. Why not make pre-marriage preparation mandatory so as to prevent divorce?

The government must also make divorce more difficult to obtain. It could legislate that lengthy counselling over a long period.

Further, serious effort at reconciliation over a lengthy period be mandatory.

This kind of legislation would aim at preventing divorce in the first place.

Human nature being what it is, we are going to have marriages that do not work. But we shouldn't settle for the lowest common denominator and dish out divorces like cookies.

We must strive for the ideal, keep marriages together, and minimize hurting the innocent victims — the children.

The column reflects the views of the writer and not necessarily those of The Terrace Standard.

A double birthday

ANNETTE SMITH and her husband Wayne had two reasons to celebrate on Canada Day.

Their fourth child, Chelsea Janelle, was born at 2:11 a.m. on July 1, making her the first Canada Day baby born in Terrace. Little Chelsea was actually due a week earlier, but held off in order to make the holiday. She weighed in at 7lbs, 11oz at birth.

Chelsea and her mother had to fly down to Vancouver's Children's Hospital last week, due to minor complications after the birth. However, baby and mother have now returned to Terrace.

Concert in the park

THE SUMMER POPS Youth Orchestra from Vancouver is making a stop in Terrace as part of a tour through the Caribou this summer.

The orchestra is made up of 100 young musicians, aged 12-19 years who come from all over BC. This is the tenth season for the orchestra.

This year audiences can expect a mix of show tunes, such as Miss Saigon, Cats and Showboat, popular medleys, classical and contemporary works such as A Salute to the Big Apple, and The Liberty Bell March.

Before the tour the young musicians take part in a ten day workshop in the beginning of July.

About 70 teens will take part in the tour which stretches from Prince Rupert to Prince George. In Terrace, the concert will be held at noon on July 24 at the library park.

CHELSEA SMITH was the first baby born in Terrace on Canada Day. She came into the world at 2:11 a.m., on the day Canada turned 129 years old.

Try not to breathe

Energy burned. The crewman had to do something, and do it quickly. With his partner's boat disabled, and no other boats in sight — and none likely to pass this deserted stretch of the river — there was no hope of being plucked from the wooden gun barrel.

He hurled himself forward, hoping the current would be kind and sweep him past the edge of the jam. He kicked, trying to get free of the water-filled waders. He glanced behind him. The logs seemed to creep forward like a beast about to pounce.

The jam with its subterranean snares was unavoidable. The crewman sank like a brick, struggling all the while with the elastic strap on his coat.

Limbs, dark shadows, lures hanging from the water logged beams flickered like Christmas tree lights as he drifted by. The river pushed him deeper. He thought of air, nothing but air. Light — Yes, there was light. They pushed him toward it.

His legs flipped up. The end of the coat caught a log. After drifting for 50 yards underwater, he shot to the top. Air.

Frantically he struggled to the strip of beach upon which the log fortress squatted.

Meanwhile, his partner stood frozen, staring at the spot where his good friend had disappeared, sucked down to a certain death, swallowed by the most dangerous hazard on any river.

"You should see all the lures hanging under that thing."

It was an electric shock. The partner spun then turned to see the impossible: his partner, back from the beyond, dripping, clambering over the logs.

Together the men managed to ride the crippled boat back to the bar where Tetreau waited with a steelhead in the tube. That afternoon the boat was retrieved. The motor was later repaired for 25 bucks. Even the crewman's jacket was recovered. A pair of waders and an electro shocker were the only fatalities.

Two hours after escaping the jaws of the jam, the crewman sat on the gravel bar a short way upstream, fishing and thinking. He thought about life jackets, and how, if he'd had one on two hours earlier, he'd be dead.

The thought turned his legs to jelly.

The adventure of radio tagging continued. In the second year of the program 100 fish carried radios in the largest program of its kind anywhere. All kinds of new information poured in.

A 15 pound fish was tagged. After spawning, it mended, returned to the sea, then was caught again on its second spawning run. The spaghetti tag was still in its hide, the transmitter, now stone dead, was still firmly in place. The only perceptible change was the weight of the fish. The creature had gained a full ten pounds despite the radio transmitter that almost plugged its gullet. Steelhead were indeed strong fish.

A Lakelse River fish was caught, radio tagged, released, then caught and released another half dozen times before an angler dispatched it and returned the transmitter. This, and many other recaptures, made it clear that the primitive, aggressive nature of steelhead gave the mistaken impression of abundance.

The B.C. Fish and Wildlife Branch continued to conduct radio studies on individual rivers within the Skeena drainage. In the late eighties, Colin Spence, also a pioneer in steelhead telemetry, took over from Lough, conducting experiments with fish seined in the Market fishery and others caught by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans test boat, a craft working the lower Skeena River just above tide that samples the salmon runs in with a gill net for the federal fisheries officials.

Though steelhead, like salmon, spawn at approximately the same time every year, the former enter freshwater at different times. Some steelhead, so-called late winter or spring fish show up in the low flows of spring, spend about a month in the river then spawn. Other steelhead slide into the rivers late in fall or in the winter.

The summer run steelhead, most prized of all steelhead races, show up in the summer months then take up residency for as long as eight months. Identifying different strains of steelhead and getting a fix on both populations and run timing was a formidable, if not impossible task before the advent of radio telemetry.

Next week more on the radio fishing odyssey.

Ray races to the Nationals

Local triathlete has his eye set on the World's

IN THE DAYS before a race he feels like a caged animal.

Anxious.

Tense.

"But that's the way you want to feel," he says. "That's what drives you on race day."

Ray Warner is Terrace's only competitive triathlete, and he's serious about his sport.

"I like to push myself," he says.

The 40-year-old just got back from Lillooet where he competed in the B.C. Triathlon Championships. Warner finished second in the Master's 40-44 age group. That result was good enough to qualify him for the Provincial team.

"It was a tough course," Warner says. "The lake was glacier-fed, so it was really cold. I didn't mind, although my hands and feet were numb."

His feet were actually so numb that Warner didn't realize until after the race that he had badly bruised his foot getting out of the water after the 1.5k swim.

Then he still had to bike 40k and run 10k.

"The cycle was brutal," he says. "It was so hilly. Boy, it was tough. I'll tell ya, everyone's times were slow."

Those hills left Warner out of steam in the run, so he fell back a bit.

"You can only go so fast," he says. "Every time I tried to pick up the pace, it felt like someone was knifing me in the side."

Warner's placement on the Provincial team means that he will be heading to the July 28 Nationals in Welland, Ontario. If he fares well, Warner will join the National team for the World Championships in Cleveland, Ohio.

Warner thinks he has a good chance to make the National team.

"I'm going for just under two hours on a flat course," he says. "Not many people in my age group can beat that."

Warner is building slowly through the summer and hopes to peak at the Cleveland race. Right now he is training each week at 10,000m swimming, 220k on the bike, and 40k running.

"I want to get up to 300k on the bike pretty quick," he says. "That's probably my weakest section."

Along with the training, Warner adheres to a strict diet. He eats very

Selects stamped at Williams Lake event

THERE WAS trouble at the corral as our Northmen visited Williams Lake on the Canada Day long weekend.

The Northmen were in cattle country for the annual Williams Lake Stampede Rugby Tournament. They were joined by members of the Smithers Camels and Prince Rupert Seamen to compete as the Northcoast Rugby Union Selects.

The tournament was open, meaning that any team from divisions one through three could attend. The Selects are a division three team.

In their first match, the Selects went up against Simon Fraser.

"We quickly found out that half drunk and hungover division one players are still better than sober, relatively clear-headed division three players," says Select David Hull.

The Selects were still licking their wounds from that 36-6 trouncing when they went up against Kelowna. One of Kelowna's members is on the Under-19 National team.

It was a better effort, but the Selects still went down 31-16.

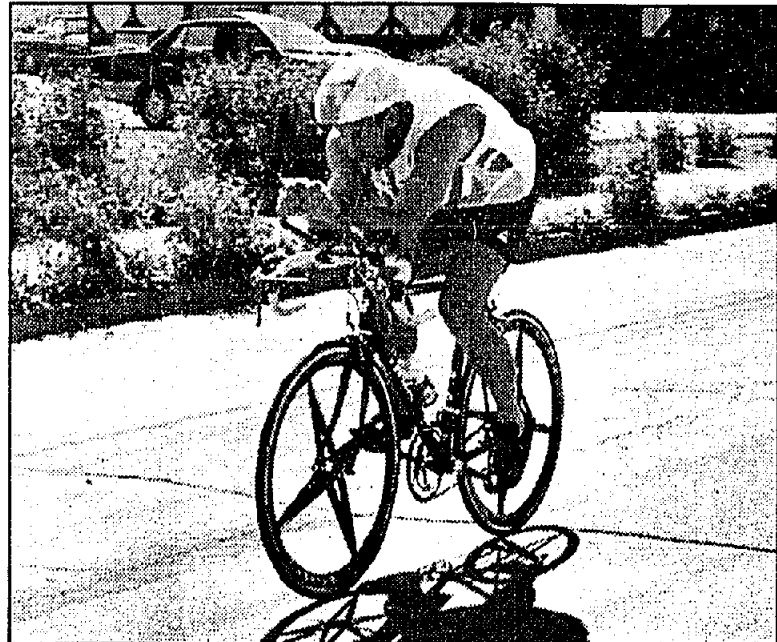

Sunday was an opportunity for the Selects to redeem themselves, as they played the Williams Lake Rustlers.

The Selects led up until the dying moments when a funny bounce ended up in a try and a 13-9 victory for the Rustlers. That funny bounce put the Selects out of the tournament.

But the Northmen still have a lot to look forward to. They will be going to Hawaii in October to play teams from around the world, and next April they will be in Victoria for the Division Three Championships.

Ray Warner

A PRACTICE RUN for Warner. He's rides nearly 300k weekly.

A WINNING TEAM: Matthew Dean, Lance Webber, Jonathon Thomsen, Blair Friel, Ryan Nixon, Mark Viveiros, Cory Paulson, Daniel Matthews, Sean Caspar, Robbie Stach, Bobby Lomas, Robert Garten-Zutter and Billy Packer of the Terrace Bambinos with coaches Bob Marcellin, G. Lomas and Warren Garten. Missing are players Matthew Beddie and Jonathon Marcellin.

Terrace bambinos flood Rupert

THE BATS were hot in Prince Rupert on the long weekend, even if the weather wasn't.

Our 10-12 year-old bambinos of Terrace Minor Baseball were in the city of rain for a best-of-three series to decide the Bulkley Valley Representative.

Short of snow, the weather couldn't have been worse Saturday, but the boys came out flying, scoring seven runs in the first inning.

Outstanding pitching efforts by Mark Viveiros and Daniel Matthews aided in keeping the Rupert bases virtually empty throughout the game. The boys added another run for insurance, ending with a decisive 8-0 win.

Rupert came back in the second game, getting on the board early. Terrace managed to crawl back to within one run, but couldn't pull ahead. Rupert handily won 16-9.

The sun peaked out from the clouds on Sunday, recharging Terrace's batteries. While the first two innings were scoreless for both teams, the Terrace bats were on fire in the third and fifth, scoring four runs in each.

But Prince Rupert wasn't about to go down without a fight, scoring five runs on solid hits in the fifth. Terrace's flawless fielding in the fifth ensured them a win, putting the final score at 8-5.

The win means that coaches Bob Marcellin, Warren Garten and George Lomas are off to the Provincials with our boys. Exhibition games along the way should ensure that the team is prepared for the exciting tournament in White Rock, July 12-15.

Local student scores Esteem trip

EARLIER THIS year, the Esteem Team was in town to help motivate young people and get them moving.

Now they're getting one student moving — literally.

Katrina O'Byrne, a Grade 6 student from Clarence Michiel Elementary will enjoy an all expenses-paid trip with her family to Vancouver this fall to meet with some of the Esteem Team athletes.

The Esteem Team is a program involving some of B.C.'s finest amateur and world-class athletes, who visit schools throughout the province. The athletes share personal stories with young people to demonstrate things like goal-setting, overcoming obstacles and making healthy choices.

Katrina was the winner of a contest that involved young people using the letters of the word "TEAM" to spell four things that would help them reach their goals.

Katrina's were: Trustworthy, Enthusiastic, Amiable and Accepting and Management.

Is it a REAL Medical Emergency?

Use Your Emergency Department Wisely

Your hospital EMERGENCY DEPARTMENT is organized for sudden, serious health problems. The hospital has a fixed budget, however, and unnecessary use of the emergency department diverts resources from other areas of the hospital. The same service provided in the doctor's office is much cheaper than if provided in the Emergency Department. It should not be used as a substitute for visits to your doctor's office.

Doctors' Office Versus Emergency Visit

If you have an ongoing medical problem that has not suddenly affected your well being, you should arrange to see your doctor in the office. If you are seriously injured or are suddenly taken ill, the EMERGENCY DEPARTMENT is where you belong.

What If You Don't Have a Doctor?

Plan to have a family doctor before an emergency occurs. Family doctors' office number in Terrace are listed in the Yellow Pages of your telephone directory under "Physicians & Surgeons." The EMERGENCY DEPARTMENT staff cannot recommend the name of a doctor to choose.

When It Really Is An Emergency

When you have a real emergency, bring the patient to the EMERGENCY DEPARTMENT, promptly, using ambulance services if necessary. Emergency room nurses are also not allowed to give medical advice over the phone. EMERGENCY patients are assessed on arrival and those with serious and/or life threatening problems are seen first. The hospital does not have on site emergency physicians. In a real emergency "on-call" doctors are available.

YOU BE THE JUDGE

by Claire Bernstein

"All I want for Christmas is my four front teeth."

Based On Actual Court Cases

"I have to see the dentist right away. I'm in terrible pain."

The receptionist looked up. "Mrs. Wilson, You must be in great pain to burst in here like this."

Mrs. Wilson practically stamped her feet. "If your top four front teeth were racked with pain, you wouldn't be sweet and calm either. Now are you going to let me see the dentist or do I just go directly in."

The receptionist rushed to the dentist's chair where he was drilling a patient's tooth. She told him of the woman's plight.

The dentist excused himself and hurried into the waiting room.

"Mrs. Wilson, I'm so sorry you're in pain. Please come with me into my other chair and we'll take a look at the problem."

The dentist examined Mrs. Wilson, and gave her his diagnosis.

"You've got four crowns on the top front four teeth. These crowns are splinted together. I think that one of the teeth underneath its crown is damaged. We're going to have to take off the crowns. And if that tooth is damaged, then all four teeth are going to have to come out."

Mrs. Wilson was desperate. "Do what you have to do. I can't live with the pain."

The dentist was cautious. "Mrs. Wilson, have you heard me? I said four teeth. There are other options. Why don't you get a second opinion?"

Mrs. Wilson was adamant. "I heard you. Now you hear me. Do it."

The dentist froze Mrs. Wilson's mouth, returned to finish the drilling on his other patient and then returned to Mrs. Wilson and removed the teeth.

"It's over, Mrs. Wilson. No more pain." Mrs. Wilson grabbed a mirror. She almost fainted.

"My teeth. My wonderful front teeth. Look at me. I'm a woman of 55, but it's an old hag that's staring back at me. You've ruined me. You're an incompetent dentist and a monster of a man. I'm going to sue you for all that you're worth."

"But Mrs. Wilson, I told you to get another opinion, but you said you wanted your teeth out."

"Yes, and you should have never listened to me. I was hysterical." Mrs. Wilson stomped out of the office and laid a complaint with the Royal College of Dental Surgeons.

They threw out her complaint so she went to court.

"Your honor, this man is not a dentist. He's a butcher. My four front teeth are gone. His work is unprofessional and sloppy. He should not be allowed to torture people like me. Make him pay."

"Your honor, this woman is obsessed with her toothlessness. There is not one scintilla of evidence that I behaved negligently. All of the risks and options were explained. She consented. Make her go away."

Should the dentist be liable? YOU! BE THE JUDGE. Then look below for the court's decision.

260. IN MEMORIAM

In loving Memory of
Janice Faye
Mason
Sept 6, 1942
- June 17, 1996

Jan (Baba) passed away peacefully at home on June 17, 1996, with her grandson Philip at her side. Jan came to Terrace in 1969 where she resided until the time of her passing. Upon arrival to Terrace Jan worked at Loretta's Coiffure's then for Gina's Coiffures. She then formed a partnership with Jon Roder's and formed Jan & Jan's Hairstyling. In 1976 Jan & Jan went on to independent ventures. Jan set up her salon in her home. Everyone who walked through her door was always welcomed and knew Jan would do her best. In 1992 Jan's illnesses had worsened and Jan sadly retired from her hairdressing career. Jan will be dearly and sadly missed by all who knew and loved her. She is gone but will never be forgotten. Jan leaves to mourn - daughter - Leisha Mason - Canaday, grandson Philip Tyrel Canaday and son in law Kevin Canaday. Sisters - Mary (Mike Holowachuk), Hazel (Mel Chute), Victoria (Gerald Stebeleski), Olive (Tony Semchuk). Predeceased by her parents Walter and Mary Shmon, sister Ann Stebeleski, brothers Ernie and Bill Shmon, and many nieces and nephews. Memorial Service was held Thursday June 20, 1996 at 1:00 pm from McKay's funeral Chapel. Father Nick Ford officiated. Interment followed at Terrace Municipal Cemetery. Cremation by McKay's Funeral Chapel. Gathering at Elks Hall.
God saw you were getting tired,
And a cure was not to be,
So he wrapped you in his loving arms,
And whispered "Come with me".
You suffered much in silence,
Your spirit did not bend,
You faced your pain with courage,
Until the very end.
You tried so hard to stay with us
Your fight was all in vain,
God took you in his loving arms
And saved you from all the pain.
Jan's love for her "Golden Girls" was very prominent. Her Taffy and Snubby were loved dearly and now they rest together. Donations can be made to the S.P.C.A. on behalf of Jan Mason.

TOC COM thrown at Stampede tournament

IT WAS A disappointing finish for Terrace's TOC Communications Athletics in at the Stampede Fastball Tournament this past long weekend.

Despite a couple of very good showings, the team failed to post a win at the Williams Lake tournament. This has been a familiar pattern for them all year.

"I'm hoping it's a sign we're on the verge of breaking through as a top-notch fastball team," says team captain Ken Veldman. "We're playing very well against clubs that have handled us pretty easily in the past. Unfortunately, we're not coming up with wins by losing tight games in the last inning."

The Athletics had fought valiantly to come back in their first game against Williams Lake's Inland Kenworth. They came close, with a solo home run in the fifth by Veldman that tied the game at two.

But in spite of TOC pitcher Kevin Neufeld's brilliant play, the boys gave up the winning run in the final inning.

In their second game, the TOC COM squad came out with guns blazing, exploding to a 5-0 lead over Williams Lake's Baron Floors.

But the hometown squad never gave up, and took full advantage of sloppy Athletics fielding for a great comeback.

The game was tied at five in the seventh inning, with nobody out and the bases loaded. Athletics starter Brad Neufeld had to come through, and he did, bravely pitching his way out of a tight spot.

But in extra innings, the Athletics couldn't pull through, stranding a runner on third in the eighth. Williams Lake quickly took advantage of the situation, scoring in the bottom half of the inning to clinch the game.

Sport Scope

Amazing Open

The Skeena Valley Open golf tournament was held two weekends ago under rare beautiful skies.

Organizer Bruce Carruthers was pleased with how things came together.

"We had a great turnout," he says. "And great weather. It really couldn't have been better."

Over 100 golfers turned out for the annual event. Dan Rosengren won with an overall low gross score of 212. Troy Farkvam was the overall net winner with 206.

Other top low gross scores were: Tyler Gibson in the Championship flight with 229, John Parsons in the A flight with 249, Don Collison in the B flight with 264, and Rob Monteith in the C flight with 272.

Other top low net scores included: Kelly Jones at 209 in the Championship flight, Rob Bell with 214 in the B flight, Eric Bennett also with 214 in the B flight, and Ron Marhauer with 211 in the C flight.

Master Hepburn

LOCAL SWIMMER Peter Hepburn made a big splash at the World Masters Swim Championships in England.

Hepburn finished an impressive 16th in his age group in the 4.5k open-water swim, 28th overall in the 800m freestyle and 28th in the 200m backstroke.

Hepburn said he was really pleased with his times, especially considering it was really windy in the open-water swim and he couldn't see the markers.

Swimming stars

A NUMBER of Terrace Blueback swimmers are ranked in the top 25 in the nation for their age groups.

Thomas Demetzer is ranked 6th in the boys 10-and-under 100m freestyle, and 19th in backstroke. Dylan Evans is 8th in the 11-12 boys 400m freestyle and 18th in the 1500m. And Kyle Narzt is 24th in the 100m backstroke.

Park Report

by
Eva-Marie Sarich

When you are out at Lakelse Lake Campground don't miss taking a walk on the Twin Spruce Trail. There is a fantastic opportunity to see some of this area's cultural heritage. If you have a keen eye you will notice there are a number of Red Cedar trees that have large sections of their bark removed. The bark was harvested by the local Natives many years ago. These Culturally Modified Cedar trees can be found mostly on the upper half of the trail.

The Cedar tree was so important to the coastal Natives that it is also referred to as "Tree of Life". The aboriginal people obtained the materials needed to provide themselves with shelter, clothing, tools and transportation from the Cedar tree.

The bark was harvested in the spring mostly by the women. To remove the bark from the tree a horizontal cut was made in the bark many meters from the ground and about 1/3 the circumference of the tree. Another cut was then made about a meter from the ground. A wedge was placed into the lower cut and used to pry up the bark. The bark was then pulled outward and upward until it came free in long strips. These strips were dried, then beaten until it separated into layers which were ready to then be woven into clothing, hats, baskets, mats, rope and more.

Cedar wood had coarse straight grain which can be easily split into planks. Therefore the aboriginal people were able to build extensive homes with simple tools. It is also a soft light wood that can be easily carved and was used to make dugout canoes, totems, bentwood boxes and much more.

There is a Native myth saying that the Great Spirit created redcedar in honour of a person who was always helping others. When they die and where they are buried, a cedar tree will grow and be useful to the people.

These Culturally Modified trees, our local heritage, are protected in the Park and they can be observed for many generations to come. Next time you come to Lakelse look for these Culturally Modified trees, or make sure you come this Thursday night and I'll point them out to you personally. See you in the Park!
