Council to decide rec fees Monday doubts the value of recreation to the 15-per-cent option go to reconsider the massive fee increases proposed for arena and pool users next Monday.

The move follows last Friday's recreation committee meeting at which councillors Rich McDaniel and Val George argued for scrapping the 36 per cent recreation fee increase - slated for July 1.

Instead, they suggest raising rates by 15 per cent this year.

George said the 36 per cent hike would put Terrace fees well above most other communities.

"I feel we should back off to proposal," George said. "I personally think it's probably too drastic."

McDaniel proposed the 15 per cent figure, suggesting it may be more acceptable to users.

"I don't think we can ignore a major community objection to one part of the budget, which we have in this case," George added.

But finance committee chairman David Hull warned any change now will mean reworking the budget.

"It's a bit of a tough pill to swallow," he said. "Nobody the city. But this year, all around the city, is a bite-the-bullet year."

The fee increases are needed to raise revenues and get the pool and arena closer to the city's target of 60 per cent cost recovery.

Taxpayers already subsidize recreation facilities to the tune of nearly $1.1 million each year.

Cost recovery - the degree to which the arena and pool pay for themselves through user fees would sink to a 10-year low with a 15 per cent increase, Hull said.

McDaniel and George initially outvoted Hull 2-1 to recommend council.

But then Sandy Sandhals and Peggy Julseth - the Kitimat-Stikine regional district directors for Lakelse Lake and Thornhill voted with Hull to defeat the recommendation and send the whole issue to next Monday's committee of the whole meeting.

Since Thornhill and surrounding rural taxpayers share in the costs of the pool and arena, those directors have a seat on the city's recreation committee.

They'll also be at Monday night's meeting, but they won't get a vote there.

There's some dispute over whether they actually had a vote at the committee meeting, but the final decision on rec fees will likely be made by the entire council Monday night.

Angry pool and arena users continue to press their case each time councillors wrestle with the

And Terrace Skating Club past president Julia Mitchell lashed out at council for the fee hikes.

She argued that council should cut perks to senior management or add field maintenance fees for soccer and softball groups, which she claimed get a free ride.

But mayor Jack Talstra cut off Mitchell when she began a personal attack on David Hull.

SAFETY'S THE object of the crosswalk patrol at Uplands School and Karla Partel (left) and Natashia Porter are two of more than 25 students doing duty. The students ensure that drivers come to a stop at the intersection on the corner of Halliwell and Thomas on the bench. Drivers who don't stop are reported to the RCMP.

Patrol keys on traffic safety

"HEY! THE lady in the gray truck. She went through!"

The crossing guard patroller then repeats the licence plate number out loud until the patrol captain writes it down.

It's a weekday afternoon at Uplands Elementary and the crossing guards are doing their job.

Introduced last fall, the patrol stops vehicle traffic at the intersection of Halliwell and Thomas so that students can safely cross.

Members wear bright orange safety vests and use hand-held red and white stop signs.

Although that intersection already is a four-way stop, RCMP community policing Constable Kim Hall says it's so busy that a crosswalk patrol is more than justified.

"They're doing a great job," says Hall of the 25member patrol made up of Grade 6 and 7 students.

A key part of the crossing patrol is writing down des-criptions and licence plate numbers of vehicles which don't come to a full stop.

That information is forwarded to Hall who makes a phone call to the driver to remind them of the law and of the need for safety.

"They've been very receptive so far. Some just don't realize what they did," she

For now, Uplands is the only school to have a crossing patrol but the RCMP are now acting on a request to assist Veritas school.

Although Hall says crossing guards should be in the older elementary grades, primary schools can also have the benefit of a patrol.

shown little interest in discussing timber supply issues.

Only five people showed up for a recent public meeting on the Kalum South timber supply analysis report and the socioeconomic impact study...

The report suggests the amount of wood now being cut will have to be reduced -as will a number of jobs.

Despite the small turnout, Dave Nicholson, the local forest district staffer handling public comments. said the two and a half hour session produced interesting discus-

He said Lakelse Lake residents have raised the issue of the visual impact of clearcuts, particularly on how they affect the views from their homes.

The point was also made that tourism here did not rely solely on fishing, that many people came here "for the beauty of the area". There was a need therefore to ensure harvesting did not spoil the view from area highways.

Nicholson noted the district already had interim visual quality objectives (VQOs) in place. The issue was also being reviewed as part of the Land and Resource Management Plan (LRMP).

He anticipated that process would produce a couple of different VQO options for public consideration and discussion.

Although there is no firm date for that, Nicholson said the target was to reach a consensus on the LRMP by the end of the year.

Although VQO regulations do not change the available forest land base, he pointed out they could effect cutblock design and the rate of cutting in a given area. In the South Kalum, he added, the greatest impact of more barvest in the short term.

Another concern raised at the Kalum South meeting was flooding at Lakelse Lake, with people asking whether the rate of logging in the Williams Creek watershed was a contributory factor, he added.

While noting these were general forest management rather than timber supply issues, he added, "It was still good to hear those concerns."

And, along with the seven written submissions received to date, they would be passed on to chief forester, Larry Pedersen.

Pedersen is the one who makes the decision on what the annual allowable cut (AAC) should be in the province's timber supply areas.

Released in June 1994, the Kalum South timber supply analysis suggested the AAC would have to be reduced by 16.7 per to 400,000 cu.m. — the projected long term sustainable harvest figure - and even then there would be a minor shortfall at the 140 year mark.

The document put forward a base case which suggested an immediate 3.3 per cent reduction in harvesting, a further cut of 10 per cent in year 10 and a final, small reduction 20 years from now. The socio-economic report predicted there would be a loss of 106 jobs over the next 20 years if that scenario was followed.

Of those jobs, 67 would be in the Kalum South area itself with Terrace feeling the greatest im-

Although the deadline for submissions has now passed, Nicholson said the district would still accept then. "Better late than never," he said.

Orenda suitor promises more jobs

THE COMPANY which wants to buy Orenda Forest Products and its forest licence says it'll provide more northwest jobs and put an end to log exports.

OFP Acquisition Corp wants to use Orenda's wood to re-open a closed newsprint mill at Gold River on Vancouver Island.

Orenda's licence allowing it to cut 342,000 cubic metres a year will go a long way to feeding that mill, says OFP president Grant Sutherland.

And part of that plan includes putting in some kind of facility around Stewart to turn pulp fibre into chips for transport by barge to Gold River.

"Our plans are to put in a chipping facility for sure," said Sutherland, a B.C. lawyer hired by OFP to put the newsprint mill re-opening plan into place.

There would also be an end to log exports should the Orenda licence transfer be approved.

Log exports have always been a contentious issue in the northwest because it's viewed as the shipping overseas of a raw resource.

"We would not plan to export wood. That would be a major plus. In the past they had to export to be viable. Our scenario wouldn't require export," said Sutherland.

That's because for the first time Orenda's wood would be tied to a domestic processing facility, he

"On the positive side of the right away. For that story, see Page A7

The regional district wants Orenda's wood licence pulled ledger is the stability for the Orenda workforce. Logging companies have their ups and downs. What we're looking at here is security and stability for people in the Stewart area, not only for Orenda but for the other companies," said Sutherland.

Sutherland's comments are the first ones made by OFP Acquisition Corp since its plans to buy Orenda Forest Products became known in early February.

The company is made up of more than 10 American and Japanese investment companies.

Those companies formed a syndicate last year to buy the debt of the closed Gold River newsprint mill. That doesn't give OFP title to the mill but does give them control over its future.

The bid for Orenda is worth $45 million and OFP expects to spend another $65 million to finance the re-opening of the mill.

Combine this with the cost of buying the mill's debt and OFP is looking at a project worth nearly $200 million.

"It can happen that you have somebody with a vision but not the financial resources. In this case the syndicate has significant financial resources," Sutherland.

The transfer of Orenda's licence is subject to provincial government approval. It's already drawing opposition from northwest politicians and from Skeena Cellulose whichsays it needs Orenda's wood to feed its Prince Rupert pulp mills.

Skeena Cellulose has had a contract to buy up to 200,000 cubic metres of pulp fibre a year from Orenda since 1991 but up until now hasn't taken all that the contract calls for.

Sutherland was reluctant to comment on those aspects arising from the planned transfer.

But he did say OFP will honour the remaining two years of Skeena Cellulose's contract.

"We're trying to do something constructive here and that is reopening a newsprint mill which has been shut down for more than a year and which put 175 people out of work," said Sutherland.

He was confident OFP can find enough fibre, over and above what would come with the Orenda licence, to run the newsprint mill.

OFP's commitment to install a chipper will stand in its favour when the provincial government considers the request to transfer

Orenda's forest licence. That's because the licence calls for some kind of processing facil-

Schools get $182,000

HIGH-TECH equipment and better access to the Internet will be coming to local schools, thanks to a $182,000 grant from the province.

The Skills Now program grant to School District 88 is to be used to increase computer literacy and electronic communication, teach students to plan their careers, and improve course offerings for native students.

The money is also supposed to help in a range of other areas, such as work experience and apprenticeship programs for high school students.

Skeena MLA Helmut Giesbrecht, who made the announcement Monday at Caledonia Sr. Secondary school, said he runs into former Caledonia graduates in Victoria sometimes.

"These students have completed their degrees, but they're still working in restaurants and retail service stores."

He said students need training that is relevant to the job market.

Gitwangak mill granted six-year forest licence

WORKERS OF C GED Forest operation," said C GED chairman Products and their families at Gitwangak have a more secure future thanks to being awarded a licence last week to cut wood.

The mill was one of four bidders for a six-year licence to log up to 100,000 cubic metres a year in the Cranberry Timber Supply

Up until now the mill, owned by the Gilwangak band, had depended upon spot purchases to keep it in operation.

Approximately 60 people are now working at the mill and more iobs are promised when a $3 million value-added expansion is complete.

"C GED must show that it is providing employment and contract opportunities to Gitanyow and Nisga'a people in their traditional territories," announced forests minister Andrew Petter as a licence condition.

"The uncertainty of a wood supply for the sawmill has been the major concern for the future

Larry Moore.

The tenure represents our future, the continued life of the sawmill, security for the 60 employees now working, a cooperative woods operation, and expansion plans for the sawmill."

Ironically, the award to C GED returns to a situation in the early 1990s when the mill was owned by Westar using wood from Tree Farm Licence 51.

Westar closed the mill in the early 1990s and three years ago, surrendered TFL 51's licence back to the provincial government.

The Gitwangak band then formed C GED Forest Products to buy the mill and the provincial government turned TFL 51 into the Cranberry Timber Supply Area

Lawyers cash in on Liberal win

By JEFF NAGEL

THE SPOILS of victory are finally being handed out to loyal Liberal lawyers who worked for the party in the 1993 election.

Terrace lawyer and prominent northwest Liberal campaigner Jack Talstra is now back in the lucrative federal legal contract business, courtesy of Jean Chretien's Liberal government.

This month Talstra takes over the federal Crown counsel work - and responsibility for federal drug prosecutions in Terrace from local Tory lawyer Jeffrey Arndt.

Those contracts are awarded by the federal government and are commonly used to reward lawyers for political activity on behalf of the party in power.

Talstra had the federal contracts under Pierre Trudcau's Liberal governments.

But that ended in 1984 when Brian Mulroney's Conservatives came to power and Arndt was installed as the federal Crown counsel for the region.

Arndt's federal billings ranged from a high of $338,000 in 1988 to a low of $118,000 in 1992.

Keeping that work, however, became doubtful when Liberals won a large majority in the 1993 federal election.

Both lawyers were active during the local campaign.

Talstra donated $1,150 to Liberal candidate Rhoda Witherly's campaign in Skeena — the largest single individual donation - and he was her official agent for the election.

Arndt was on the Conservative Party's nominating committee in Skeena in the 1993 election, and his partner Don Brown was legal counsel to Conservative candidate Danny Sheridan. The firm Crampton, Brown and Arndt were regular contributors to Tory coffers during the Mulroney

But this time, Talstra won't get the federal contracts for the entire northwest. He'll just do the Terrace, Nass, and Stewart area.

Kitimat mayor Rick Wozney another lawyer with strong Liberal connections — gets the Kitimat

Prince Rupert lawyer Don Silversides - who was Witherly's campaign manager in '93 and has also contributed regularly to the Liberals - said the work was offered to his firm, but he turned it

"We were not interested," he explained. Arndt will remain as the federal prosecutor in Prince Rupert. "I guess there's no Liberal lawyers who wanted to do it in Rupert," Arndt said. Talstra said last week he isn't sure if he has time for the job or whether he'll keep it. "The pay is kinda lousy," he explained. "Not everybody wants The tariff is $82 per hour, he said, significantly lower than the private fees most lawyers charge. Arndt will continue to do some of the more specialized work, overseeing complex cases and working in conjunction with the Prince Rupert RCMP subdivision drug squad.

Union group stages rally

LABOUR UNIONS continue their campaign against what they call employer-dominated unions with a rally at the Thornhill Community Centre March 13.

The rally will key on the situation in Port Alberni where main line construction unions opposed MacMillan Bloedel's choice of a construction company to build a new plant, says Norm Lavallee of the Kitimat and Terrace District Labour Council. That lead to a lengthy strike last year which shut down the construction project and then of pulp and paper mills on Vancouver Island.

"This is an information meeting for people interested in what is going on," said Lavallee.

Scheduled to speak is Len Werden, president of the B.C. and Yukon Territory Building and Construction Trades Council.

The rally starts at 7:30 p.m. and there'll be people coming in on buses from Kitimat and Prince Rupert.

Silly games

SO, HOW does it feel to be the victim of a manipulation campaign? That's what northwest citizens should be asking over the most recent Nisga'a land claims negotiations dust up.

Despite all that talk when the negotiations started several years ago that things were to be kept confidential, the land claims ship has sprung a number of leaks. It's a sign things aren't going that well in the negotiations.

Just as is the case with labour-management contract talks, information is now being selectively and cynically leaked in hopes of mobilizing public opinion to embarrass or prod one side into action.

The side that does the leaking looks wounded and innocent. The other side really can't do much for fear of messing things up completely by making public accusations.

At any time this is a dangerous game but with land claims, it's even more so. We've been told over and over again that land claims are so important, so complex and so delicate that things just have to be done differently. We've been told to trust the negotiators, to trust the process. If differently means playing the old game of manipulating public opinion, obviously there's something terribly and drastically wrong.

Northwesterners have been asking for more information and more openness ever since the Nisga'a negotiations started. Instead of playing silly games, all sides should pay heed to those calls.

High flyers

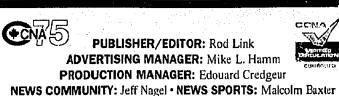

A TIP of the proverbial hat to city councillor Ruth Hallock for suggesting that the city drastically cut back its plans to attend the annual Union of B.C. Municipalities Conference in Vancouver this September.

The way things stand now, five councillors and two city officials will be there along with spouses who want to go. That comes to an estimated $13,000, approximately what eight homeowners will pay this year in property taxes. This is a pretty fair chunk of money considering council's recent budget cutting zeal. Mrs. Hallock suggested the entourage be reduced to two people — a councillor and a city official.

Unfortunately Mrs. Hallock's suggestion didn't get far. Indeed, her motion to reduce the amount of people going didn't receive a seconder.

That meant it wasn't even debated. It meant councillors weren't required to vote yes or no. Failure to do so only raises suspicions among taxpayers. Who knows. Perhaps there is good reason to send down a large group of people. Perhaps there's a reason why spouses should attend.

But we'll never know because Mrs. Hallock's fellow councillors seem reluctant to talk about it. The obvious conclusion is that the trip is some kind of boog-a-rama. If council wants to dispel that notion, it should do so.

Students face brutal future

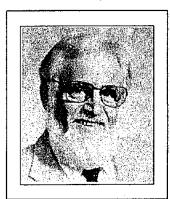

VICTORIA — If I were Jean Chretien, I wouldn't rely for re-election too much on my current popularity in the polls.

There's an army of young people out there who will be very, very angry with the prime minister if Ottawa goes through with its proposals for revamping post-secondary education funding.

Essentially, the federal government wants to cut transfer payments to the provinces by $2 billion a year and redirect that money into an unsubsidized student loans program. Students will have to repay those loans after they complete their education and find work.

The term for repayment bandied about is 20 to 25 years. That means, students will have to regard higher education as an investment, secured by a mortgage, which is to be repaid over what amounts to more than half a working life.

When Lloyd Axworthy, federal minister of human resources, released the discussion paper outlining the government's proposals for social security reform, which included the proposed changes to post-secondary education, he promised a national debate before implementing any of the changes.

FROM THE CAPITAL

HUBERT BEYER

There was a debate of sorts
— in the media, but many students who had wanted to appear before the Human Resources Development Committee during its three-day visit to British Columbia didn't get an opportunity to do so.

Prompted in part by genuine concern and in part by the opportunity to take a swing at Ottawa, the B.C. government asked the Canadian Federation of Students to review and report on the possible financial impact Ottawa's proposals could have on students and families in British Columbia.

About 650 students participated in the study of the federal proposals, and last week, they submitted their report to skills, training and labour minister Dan Miller. It is a sobering document which, I hope, will give Ottawa some cause for pause.

The study says that if the federal proposals are implemented, tuition fees will go up by $2,000 a year, which means that someone studying for one year in an arts faculty will pay $4,000 at most Canadian Universities. "That means a minimum $16,000 price tag for an undergraduate degree," the study says.

The loans would be incomecontingent, that is, they wouldn't be subsidized, but rather collect interest while students are studying and until they are repaid. Expect interest rates of up to 12 per cent. Canada Revenue would be responsible for collecting the loans.

The whole scheme is based on the assumption that students benefit from their education. While that is true, the assumption ignores that society, too, benefits from a well-educated and highly skilled work force.

Here are some comments from individual students who worked on the study. A male student with disabilities: "To be disabled means to be uneducated and poor in Canada. Education really does mean jobs for us and we are going to fall through the cracks if these proposals are implemented."

A 19-year-old female student: "I have the desire to learn. I have the intelligence to learn. Unfortunately, I was born within the wrong tax bracket."

A 27-year-old female science student who works between 24 and 32 hours a week during the academic year: "A loan is out of the question. I have a family and can't afford that much debt. I already have a mortgage."

One of the most poignant comment from a young male student: "We are going to have a whole generation of people who will just give up because the cost will be too high."

And finally, my comments: Successive governments at every level have worked hard for years to bring Canada to the brink of financial disaster. A country blessed with natural resources like few others, a country to which the 20th century was supposed to belong, is on the slide to Third-World status.

And to complete the destruction, Ottawa will now make sure that once Canada is a Third-World nation, it will have an under-educated, poorly-skilled work force to go along with it. What in God's name has gone wrong?

Playing footsie is stupid

SUPPOSEDLY OLD shoes bring good luck. But I doubt mailing old shoes to the finance minister will force him to step back from his funding cuts in this week's budget.

The National Action Committee for the Status of Women (NAC) came up with the notion of mailing worn shoes to Martin to stop his cuts to social programs, unemployment insurance, health and education.

Because the law allows mail addressed to a Member of Parliament to travel free while Parliament is in session, the shoes were mailed at taxpayers' expense.

Even such little unauthorized expenditures do their bit to bury this country in debt. Why should NAC help the government waste our money? Government has proven it can do the job by itself.

Mailing old shoes to Ottawa is akin to dumping a truckload

THROUGH BIFOCALS

of chicken manure on the steps of B.C.'s legislature. Both actions are smelly, unsanitary, and merely momentarily attention getting. Someone has to be paid to clean up the mess.

Imagine the poor postic already recling from the conflicting aromas of magazine perfume strips. Then to be further assailed by the malodorousness of sweat-soaked insoles.

When next the postal union bargains a new contract they'll argue to add protest pumps to the list of hazardous goods they're called upon to handle.

Footwear sent to influence

Ottawa will only take up Martin's office space, tie up staff time, and require extra garbage trucks. Already mail in this country takes far longer than it did in the 1940's when postage was one-tenth or less of today's rates. Now NAC proposes to clog the post office even more by shipping their garbage to Ontario.

NAC shouldn't expect me to happily fund their antics. They're not speaking for me. They're embarrassing me, just as I was chagrined when feminists burn their bras. I ask myself, why do these women strip when they battle?

Snobbishness manages to enter NAC's protest. One woman is mailing a ballet slipper, a subtle way of letting Martin know he's being toed by a cultured individual. Others are shipping their sturdy hiking boots, half-soled pumps or treadless sneakers,

I fear Statistics Canada may be moved to produce graphs on the incoming shoes: average size of Canadian women's feet; percentage of shoes tied with laces, closed with Velcro, or slip on; most popular colours; width of feet; price range of footwear.

Suppose NAC has kicked off a trend? What if farmers protest Crow rates by mailing their John Decre caps to the agriculture minister? Or shooters protest firearm registration by couriering their rifles to Allan Rock.

Come to think of it, NAC may have stumbled on some-

A SERIES of small reductions in harvesting limits in different timber supply areas could add up to one big headache for some community in the northwest.

That was the message area mayors gave the Forest ministry's Ian Delisle last week.

Delisle addressed the North Coast regional advisory board Friday on the subject of annual allowable cuts (AAC).

In the past couple of years analyses have been completed on a number of timber supply areas (TSAs) spanning the Prince Rupert Forest Region.

That covers an area from south of Kitimat to the Yukon border and from the coast to the Lakes district.

The analyses attempted to calculate what the long term sustainable harvest was in each TSA.

That's the amount of wood that could be cut each year in perpetuity — in other words the volume of new growth would match the amount felled each year.

In all but the case of the Cassiar TSA, the reports suggested the AACs would have to be reduced.

The amount of the suggested reduction varied significantly: in the Kalum South the figure was just under 17 per cent but in the Kalum North it was more than two-thirds.

In each case, the province's chief forester, Larry Pedersen will use the reports plus reactions from industry. interest groups and the public to decide what the new AAC should be.

The problem, says Terrace mayor Jack Talstra, is each of these decisions is made in "The reality in the northwest is logs go everywhere in the Prince Rupert forest region," he pointed out.

For example, what effect would a reduction of the Kalum South AAC have on a mill in, say, Kitwanga which is in the Kispiox TSA?

"We're saying you've got to look at the bigger picture," Talstra explained.

While cutting reductions in each of the individual TSAs might not be significant, if you added them up across all nine TSAs in the region, there could be cause for concern, he added.

The total loss of harvestable wood could translate into a mill somewhere in the northwest having to close. And maintaining employment in the region was "crucial", he said.

Therefore, Talstra

maintained, the chief forester should look at the AACs for all nine areas at one time and release simultaneous reports on each.

He also emphasized they should be reports, not decisions. "We need to know which way he is leaning and have an opportunity for input," Talstra explained.

There should also be a socioeconomic study to assess the impact of the combined AAC changes on the region as a whole and the communities within it,

While admitting there was "some resistance" to the advisory committee's suggestions, Talstra added, "I think they got the message by the end of it."

He said the committee had also used the same regional argument later when Warren Mitchell of the Environment ministry updated them on the Protected Areas Strategy.

THE PROVINCE is expected to announce within the next couple of weeks which community will get the Forest Renewal B.C. (FRBC) northwest regional office.

And that will soon be followed by the appointment of a regional director, applications for which close Wednesday, March 15.

Bonnieux, Dana vicepresident of FRBC, was in Terrace last week to outline the program and to the North Coast regional advisory committee. That body includes area mayors and regional district chairmen.

While confirming an announcement on the location of the office was close, Bonnieux was unable to say what the decision would be.

However, commenting after the meeting, mayor Jack Talstra said it was clear the choice was between Terrace and Smithers.

Terrace had been lobbying for FRBC to base its operations here, he added.

Announced last year, the FRBC is being financed through sharply increased stumpage fees paid by the forest industry.

Two-thirds of that extra government revenue earmarked for the program which targets watershed restoration, silviculture, inventory updates and woodlot expansion.

Some work was carried out in the northwest last year under the program, but the amount fell well short of target because of insufficient time to carry out the planning work required before any project can be approved.

Bonnieux said the plan is to have the program fully up and running in the northwest by this summer.

Apart from the appointment of a regional director, FRBC will soon be bringing out a handbook explaining how to apply for money under the program and setting up a system to receive proposals.

Forest provincial The Renewal board has also set priorities including a ranking system for projects, she added. As for the healthy salary to be paid the regional director — up to $77,000 — Bonnieux maintained it was a "very, very important" position given the successful applicant would have to work with numerous different organizations, have good planning and communication skills and be able to "work some magic" to come up with a regional plan all interests could agree with. In addition to the director, the regional office will have a staff of six to eight each with their own area of expertise.

Bonnieux was unable to provide a budget figure for the regional operation, but noted FRBC chief Roger Stanyer had been quoted as saying overheads would not be above three per cent of the program's total budget.

Although the choice of staff would be guided by the particular needs of a region, Bonnieux suggested people knowledgeable in land issues, community development and environment would be required.

However, she added, there was no intention the regional staff should duplicate or resign off silvicultural projects. FRBC would also contract the ministries to oversee implementation of projects that fell within their jurisdiction. For example, the Environment ministry would handle projects under FRBC's Watershed Restoration program. Bonnieux said ministry staff would also be involved in helping identify priorities in the region in the same way as community groups.

They would also be asked to assess the effectiveness of proposals and reasonableness of projected costs.

Based on that information and input from the regional advisory boards which would be set up, FRBC regional staff would pass on recommendations to the provincial Forest Renewal board.

As for the advisory boards, Bonnieux said they would be set based on regional staff recommendations as to the number of members and who they should be.

She anticipated that would vary from region to region but the main thrust would be to achieve a broad spectrum of representation.

Asked if money being spent on FRBC could have been just as effective if used to increase staffing levels of the ministries, Bonnieux contended. "We are able to take a broader perspective and take all interests into account. It provides for outside guidance."

Another important difference was FRBC's money did not come out of the province's general revenue. Because the source and amount of money was laid down in law, "We don't have to argue every year for our budget," she explained, adding, "It can't be diverted without a change in legislation." That was not the case with the ministries.

However, she conceded its money was tied to stumpage rates which could fluctuate significantly.

Therefore, the provincial board was setting aside some current revenue in a reserve fund. That would ensure there was enough money to pay for projects even if a change in market conditions reduced stumpage fees and therefore FRBC's revenues.

Having that buffer would allow it to enter into long term commitments which in turn offered more stability.

"Our purpose is to avoid short term thinking," Bonnieux emphasized.

Orenda disappointed

You are quoted in the press as saying, "At this point it's not that obvious that Orenda ever intended to build a processing facility." We are both disappointed and concerned with this comment. It is

More on Kemano

Dear Sir:

The discussion on the decision by the Harcourt government to shut down the Kemano Completion Project seems to be separated from the substance of the B.C. Utilities Commissions Review of the project.

The commission stated that the project impacts "on Fraser River flows would not effect salmon migration." However, it did recommend monitoring on a continued basis just to make sure that the efforts already undertaken will do the job necessary.

I don't know of anyone who said that the low salmon stocks or the missing salmon are a result of KCP. KCP has not been completed.

What has certainly happened is that in the other parts of the province there is heightened concern about anything which does or may affect the Fraser River fishery. The concern is focused on the Nechako which provides one-fifth of the Fraser salmon fishery.

Let me refer you to the comments of the B.C.U.C. commission review. These are only the ones taken from the summary and they refer to KCP as per the 1987 Settlement Agreement.

"The Kemano River would receive a 30 percent increase in flow. The Nechako River flow would be reduced to less than half the levels of recent years." (page vi)

"The most significant impacts of KCP would occur on the Nechako River as the water releases from the reservoir would be substantially reduced...These changes in river flows would have effects not only on fish, but on many other plants and animals of the river environment as well as on the communities near the banks of the river." (page vii)

"However, the commission has concluded that the negotiated provisions should be augmented to protect the potential future value of the sockeye resource. The commission recommends that cooling water releases from the Kenney Dam Release Facility by increased to provide a target temperature of 18.4 degrees C." (page viii)

On Chinook salmon and trout the comments in the B.C.U.C. are

"Nevertheless, the commission does not have confidence that the proposed program will be successful in achieving the conservation goal of maintaining the chinook at a population level of 3100 and has accordingly recommended increases in flow."

It would seem clear that KCP as defined by the 1987 Settlement Agreement gave the commission serious concern. At least serious enough to have prompted them to look at what would happen if more water was released than the 1987 agreement would allow. They commented on three flow scenarios.

For Flow Scenario 1 the commission stated that it "would be a bare minimum provision and would still place chinook and trout populations at considerable risk." The commission then recommended "a full scale hatchery operation should be undertaken immediately" and further added that a hatchery "could at least maintain the stocks to the level of the conservation goal, albeit artificially." Flow Scenario II again relies heavily on hatchery operations. It would "give greater assurance that wild stocks of chinook and trout would be maintained" but it also calls for a "pilot hatchery operation" to be "initiated at once" and then to be ready for more artificial enhancement should the need emerge.

Flow Scenario III is the only option which gives "reasonable confidence" that the natural stocks of chinook and trout could be maintained and with "only modest intervention and enhancement activities."

All three scenarios rely on artificial enhancement. The general attitude to artificial enhancement is that it should only be applied when mitigation is essential and there is no option of restoring or maintaining fish habitat to allow wild stocks to flourish. All three also have a risk of river sedimentation. Any change in KCP's water flow regimes would require a change in the 1987 Agreement. Approval of another option would have been subject to the new Environmental Assessment Review. The only option which might have been considered is option III. Could Alcan have made it work with reduced flows and

"reasonable confidence" as far as the general B.C. public is concerned? I really don't know. Certainly my preference would have been to throw the ball back into Alcan's court.

Given the risks of river sedimentation, the reliance on artificial enhancement, the questionable economic viability of the project under the best flow scenario (option II) and the concerns of the other users of the river, the government made a decision. Helmut Glesbrecht.

BUSINESS REVIEW

POPULARITY OF modular homes such as this one shown by Shirley Kyle at Kermode Park should grow.

Feds expand buying plan

A FEDERAL OFFICIAL is predicting a busy time now that it's become easier to finance the purchase of a modular home.

Qualifying purchasers of modular or manufactured homes can now do so with downpayments as low as 5 per cent.

That places modular homes on the same financing playing field as stick built ones and should make them even more attractive, says Gordon Johnson of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation (CMHC).

The new financing possibility comes from an expansion of CMHC's existing Chattel Loan Insurance Program.

The new rules also apply to resale manufactured homes.

"We figure our business will go up three or four fold this year," says Johnson who handled 100 modular home financing applications in the north last year.

"We did the most of any (CMHC) branch in the province last year," said "Manufactured Johnson. homes are becoming a very affordable alternative what with rising interest rates and other costs."

As with the lending program for stick built homes, CMHC does charge a premium.

Regional board calls for pulling of Orenda licence

ORENDA FOREST Products' forest licence should be pulled immediately until it makes a commitment to construct a northwest processing facility, says the Kitimat-Stikine regional district.

A motion outlining the district's position was passed at its Feb. 25 board meeting and follows word that Orenda is about to be sold.

Orenda ruckus

A LOCAL businessman says more local people should be talking about the proposed sale of Orenda Forest Products and its forest licence.

The prospect of Orenda's wood being part of a plan to re-open a closed newsprint mill on Vancouver Island deserves more comment and talk, says John Heighington, whose family owns drycleaning and laundry establishments here.

"Things are going faster than what we can see happening," said Heighington. "We need to tind out what's going on."

"We deserve to know what's going on before we read about a decision in the newspaper."

Heighington said he's opposed to the idea of wood from the northwest going down south.

"People should be phoning each other. There should be more interest," he said.

Heighington said it would be a good idea for Orenda and its proposed purchaser, a New Yorkbased investment syndicate, to come to Terrace for a public meeting.

"We're being faced with a double whammy. Already we're being told the cut will have to be reduced. To have the wood that'r left leave is something else again," he said.

Heighington also wants a stop or a reduction of raw log exports to other countries when local mills face shortages.

Heighington said the proposed Orenda sale comes too close for comfort after the death of the Kemano Completion Project.

Recreation committee members decided to give that a try. If it doesn't work, councillors recommendation of Scott and recreation department staff.

Under that plan, any new leisure access cards would be restricted to ministry-defined hardship cases and single parent families.

That would reduce the number of families eligible from about 1.900 to 650.

Also, card-holders would pay half the normal price, instead of getting in free. Most of the three-month passes

School probe

RCMP OFFICERS assigned to a province-wide investigation into reports of abuse at native residential schools have finished training and are now back at their home detachments.

is the first step in preparing for what the force says is its single largest ever investigation in B.C.

In this area, an investigator from the RCMP's subdivision headquarters in Prince Rupert is one of more than 20 officers from around the province assigned full time to the case, says RCMP Sgt. Peter Montague.

That officer will be able to draw on other resources and will have the assistance of other RCMP officers in the area when necessary. "We're getting ready to be in full operation April 1. That's when we'll be introducing our 1-800 numbers," said Montague.

Those 1-800 numbers are for the use of people who want to be interviewed on their experiences at residential schools.

Police officers are gearing up to interview several hundred people who attended the 13 residential schools that operated in B.C.

Two of those were in the northwest, Lower Post 1951 and 1975 and at Lejac near Fraser Lake from 1910 to 1976. Both were operated by the Roman Catholic church.

The RCMP announced the investigation in late 1994 at the request of the Nuu-Chah-Nulth Tribal Council.

It was once federal government policy to take native children from their families and put them in schools run by churches. In addition to the Roman Catholic church, schools were run by the Anglican and United churches.

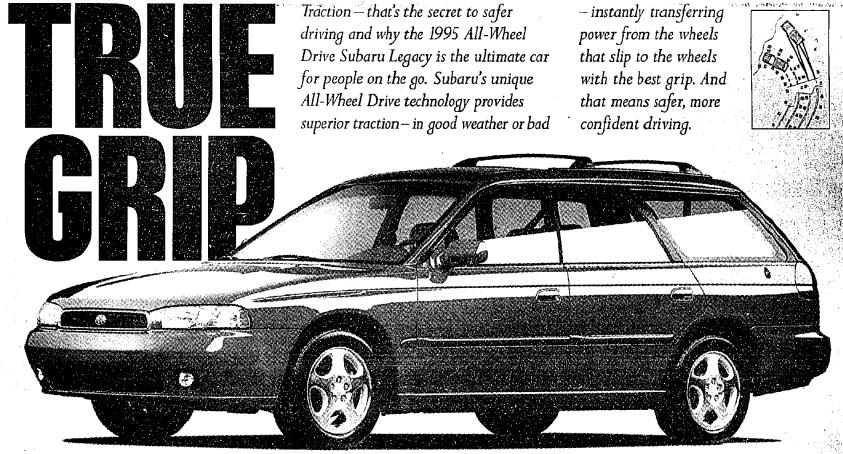

The first of these schools opened in 1890 and the last closed in 1983.

received "We've already several dozen phone calls from people and we've been getting out to see these people," said

Montague. Also being established is a network of counsellors and psychologists who'll work with those being interviewed. counsellors psychologists are also from various parts of the province and will be called upon when needed.

Nisga'a cite billion $ loss

BETWEEN $2.1 billion and $4.3 billion worth of resources have been taken out of the Nisga'a traditional territory, according to a study paid for by the Nisga'a Tribal Council.

The report, prepared by the firm Price-Waterhouse over two and a half years at a cost of $137,000, was released by the Nisga'a last week.

The move came on the heels of media reports that Nisga'a negotiators had initially demanded $2 billion in compensation.

In the report, Price Waterhouse consultant Bob Elton notes the study is based on the assumption that the land was developed and resources were extracted at a similar speed under a Nisga'a government as actually occurred.

The stated losses are Elton's estimates of the difference between the present economic situation of the Nisga'a and what their stalled and any further talks now depend on the "political will" of Premier Mike Harcourt and his cabinet, Nisga'a Tribal Council president Joe Gosnell says.

.and talks stalled

The negotiations over the Nisga'a claim to 25,000 square kilometres of the Nass River valley have hit the wall, Gosnell claims.

Gosnell says provincial negotiator Jack Ebbels has reached the limits of his negotiating mandate.

Ebbels has gone back to cabinet for further instructions, Gosnell

"It's in cabinet's hands," he said. "All we're doing is waiting. We're looking for an expanded mandate to the negotiator to allow the parties to come to an agreement."

He said there are no other reasons for delaying further.

"All the studies that have been requested by the province and the feds have been completed," he said. "There s no further need for any more studies to be done. It's political will that's required."

Gosnell said provincial rhetoric is that settlements must be "affordable".

Hints now of a provincial election complicate the issue, he said.

"I think the pressure is on the provincial government," he said. Gosnell pointed to provincial rhetoric that settlements must be "affordable".

"After more than a century of resource extraction by companies, governments, private individuals - everyone has been marching to the bank with a smile on their face — and now we're told it has to be 'affordable'," Gosnell said. "If the Nisga'a are asked to accept an offer that will not enable the Nisga people to be selfsufficient it will be a recipe for disaster. We would be in a worse state than we are now if we're asked to do that."

The target date for reaching an agreement in principle has been shifted from March to June 31.

In the meantime, Terrace mayor Jack Talstra said he and other northwest politicians are asking the provincial and federal governments for more information.

"If we don't hurry up and get information to the public, the public will pass us by," said Talstra is response to published reports of various offers made on the Nisga'a land claim.

"It's high time they pass us more information. Perhaps it's too late already," he said.

Talstra said he's learned nothing new in the two years and change he's sat in on various land claims advisory meetings.

"We have to read about the negotiating positions in the Globe and Mail, Vancouver Sun, Terrace Standard or wherever.'

Talstra did say federal and provincial negotiators got a 'little testy' at a recent meeting with area elected leaders.

"They said from their point of view they don't want to really negotiate through the media," he

"I and others want the see the provincial government position articulated by the premier or minister of aboriginal affairs, the federal position articulated the same way and the Nisga'a, if they feel so inclined, have their position articulated by them," Talstra.

situation would be if they had enjoyed the economic benefits of the land.

The numbers vary greatly because of different possibilities of Nisga'a involvement if they had governed the land.

The low number — $2.13 billion - is the estimate of what the Nisga'a would have received in royalties, taxes or lease income from companies that logged, mined and fished in their traditional territory.

The high number — $4.319 billion — also adds in Elton's projection of profits the Nisga'a would have earned from the resources if Nisga'a-owned companies had done most of the logging, mining and fishing instead of outside interests.

Elton says the study assumes the Nisga'a would have been capable of developing the territory in the same way it occurred under the jurisdiction of the pro-

He says the study did not look at the further argument that the Nisga'a likely would not have logged off the forests as rapidly if they had been in control.

"If the Nisga'a had indeed slowed down the rate of resource extraction, the value of the lands today would be much higher," he noted. "Again, it would be difficult in practice to determine the amounts."

Nisga'a Tribal Council president Joe Gosnell said the study provides an accounting of what the Nisga'a have lost while waiting for a treaty.

"We have made it abundantly clear --- we don't realistically expect full compensation for these losses," Gosnell said last week. "It's far in excess of what the finances of the country can absorb."

"But we are still prepared to sit at the table and see what we can agree on."

Gosnell confirmed the present government compensation offer to the Nisga'a totals $130 million.

"Is this what Nisga'a traditional territory is worth?" he demanded. "We're not going to

HERE BY CHOICE FAE COLLINS MOONEY

I'll remember you, my dear friend

S IT POSSIBLE to live each day as if it were our last, and end it with no regrets, having done all that was important?

I lost a friend recently. She died suddenly, unexpectedly.

She left us so quickly. There was no time to say good-bye.

No opportunity to express thanks...

I'll miss my friend. I'll miss her contribution to my life and all the special things we shared.

It was almost two years ago now that my friend was battling cancer, and apparently beating it.

From time to time I would take over to

From time to time I would take over to her a small friendship token, a small reminder that I cared. I did what friends have always done.

I was concerned, and wanted to remind her I was here close by.

Something deep inside us both seemed to connect; we seemed to know without having to say anything at all... At least, that's how it was for me.

Maybe it was the common bond we felt toward other living things - our dogs and wild feathered friends.

Among the small tokens given to her was a little silver tray.

Some time ago another friend of mine brought me this little tray piled high with home-made cookies. She said I may keep the tray if I wished, or pass it along to another.

For the longest time I kept the tray, as a token of her friendship, and a reminder of all that she and I have shared over the years. But I resolved that indeed I would pass it along when a special opportunity presented itself.

The day my friend called to announce she was cancer-free was the day I realized who this tray now belonged to.

I placed a paper lace doily on the little silver tray and filled it with fresh baked brownies, then gave it to my friend, to help her celebrate her triumph over that deadly foe.

I told her the story of how I acquired the silver try and why I was passing it along to her.

Through an act of kindness toward me, I was able to extend it to yet another.

If she wished, she too may pass the tray

She treasured that little tray. Whether she kept it or passed it on to someone else, I don't know.

Wherever it may be now, that little silver tray is still special, and always will be. Like my friend who gave it; like my friend who received it.

Although I feel sad at losing a special friend (the tears I shed are not for her, but for me), although I grieve my loss, I can't help rejoicing also. She is safe and secure. Nothing can harm her now.

Can I say good-bye to her, then, without feeling regrets?

No. There are still things I wish I had done, and said. The opportunities are gone now.

But I'll live tomorrow more carefully.
I'll remember my friend.

I value what she has added to my life.

I'll think of her when I walk my little dog and pass her quiet house. I'll remember the times when her dogs from inside would bark in the big front window as we passed, my little one stepping a little more lively, and look up at me with a happy face as if to say, those are my friends saying he...

Each time a new bird or squirrel visits my feeder I'll remember the love, appreciation, and respect for Nature we both shared, and how we liked to encourage the wildlife to sojourn in our back yards.

I'll think of her whenever I throw out a handful of seed for our feathered friends. Except now I'll be sure to throw out an extra handful, one for her as well.

And I'll try to live each day with fewer regrets.

Giving the gift of life

AREN REID gave her husband no less than the gift of life last year.

Al's kidneys had failed from diabetic complications, he was on dialysis and his health was deteriorating.

He had backspasms, frequent vomiting and had no strength to work or walk any distance.

The wait list for a kidney transplant was more than two years long and uncertainties were beginning to build.

So Karen gave him one of hers.

"It seemed to be the right thing to do all the way down the line," she says. "We'd lived together for 18 years. We shared everything else. Why not that?"

Al first told her that she could be tested as a possible match last spring.

"I knew then and there, that this would be my opportunity to help," Karen says. "I just knew it was going to work. We didn't even know if we were the same blood type then."

They went through batteries of tests. Karen underwent psychological tests to ensure her decision wasn't made under duress.

There were dangers to both of them, but they both felt upbeat and confident the transplant would work.

"We had great optimism and faith that we would ride through this," she says. "We looked at all of the what ifs but the possibility of good outshines the probability of bad."

Al and Karen went into surgery on Sept. 26 and the couple sailed through in flying colours.

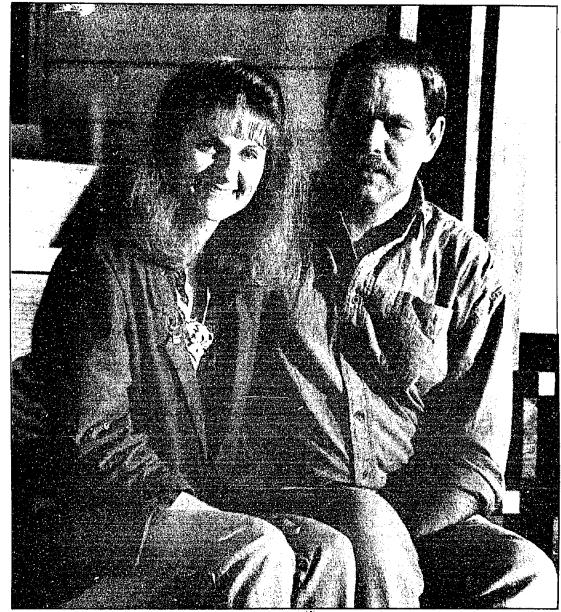

Almost immediately, Al gained strength and weight. He was soon walking for blocks in Vancouver without getting tired.

"I feel like a new person," he says now.

He got his dialysis tube taken out two weeks ago.

"It's the first time since last April that I haven't had a in the right direction anyway."

KAREN AND AL REID share their life, their love and their kidneys. And now they're asking you to help others with what they've gone through.

bandage on me or a tube in me," he says.

Since then he's been going back periodically for testing to ensure there are no signs of rejection.

The monitoring will continue, as there can be a rejection anytime in the first year after a transplant.

There have been no adverse effects for Karen of going down to just one kidney. It's as if she never needed the second one.

Other patients waiting for kidneys face increasingly long waits.

When Al was in hospital there were 280 other patients on the waiting list and the average wait for a kidney was 26 months.

That's a long time if you're on dialysis.

Karen says the donor situation is actually getting worse for patients like Al. Safer cars with features like air bags mean there are fewer head injury deaths, and fewer organs available for transplant. That makes live donations increasingly important.

The live donation rate for kidney transplants in the U.S. is 50 per cent, she notes. In Canada it's less than five per people have had kidney transplants, including Terrace Community Band leader Jim Ryan.

And more people will need them in the future.

That's why Karen has undertaken the first-ever Kidney Foundation of Canada fundraising drive here in Terrace in the month of March.

She has 38 volunteers so far and canvassing should begin within a week. They'll also be distributing organ donor stickers to anyone who wants one.

Anyone who wants to help out can call Karen Reid at 638-1018.

Land donated for new theatre

TERRACE LITTLE THEATRE has been given a donation of river-front land for construction of a new theatre.

Theatre president Gordon Oates said local businessman Glen Saunders had donated three-quarters of an acre of land to the theatre group adjacent to River Industries on Keith Ave.

Oates says workers are putting in fill at the site now to stabilize the banks of the site.

The next step for the theatre groups is a visit by a theatre consultant on Mar. 16-18 to prepare studies and plan a design of the building.

Oates said the consultant is to come back in April to present plans and drawings to the TLT board.

Getting a donation of land is important, Oates said, because it will free up the theatre group to dispose of its existing property, where the McColl Playhouse is now located, on Kalum St.

Earlier plans involved tearing down the structure and rebuilding on the same parcel of land.

Between the McColl Playhouse building and the group's building fund, Oates said they have about $150,000 for construction.

"It's hard to guess how far we've got to go without knowing how emented family makes sense

NORA SAMUELS is completely out-to-lunch. Thugs have bloodied her son-in-law, but she doesn't want to annoy the people at 911. She's arrested for dealing drugs. She doesn't even recognize her abusive, alcoholic husband.

Her three daughters are even crazier than she is. But in Terrace Little

Theatre's upcoming production Escape from Happiness, Nora and her delightfully dysfunctional family prove that "crazy" can make perfect sense.

Theatre fans will recognize comes as Nora; with Joan Sangster, Jennifer Kenney, and Joelle Walker playing Nora's daughters. Alan Weston portrays her husband, and Patrick McIntyre, her son-inlaw.

This adult, dark comedy Canadian from veteran actress Karla Hennig playwright George F. Walker, and is directed by Marianne Weston. Be forewarned, there is some coarse language in the script.

Escape from Happiness runs two weekends: March 9, 10, and 11; and 17, 18, and 19 at the McColl Playhouse. Tickets are on sale at Carters

New library board elected

VETERAN LIBRARY board members George Clark and Maureen Ogawa were named chairman and vice chairman respectively at the Terrace Public Library's recent annual general meeting.

Clark replaces Dan Gilgan, a B.C. Hydro official, who was transferred to northeastern B.C.

The treasurer is Heather Piffer and the corresponding secretary is Peter Hepburn. Named as trustees are Mary Greenwood and newcomers Aileen Thomas, Dave Warner, Mary-Ann Lawrence and Dionys de Leeuiw. City councillor Val George is the city's representative on the board.

The library reported income of $420,123 for 1994 and expenditures of $437,416. That excess of spending over income was covered by a surplus which, at the end of 1994, stood at $19,065.

Statistics in the library board's annual report indicate it serves a population of 18,105 people, 10,043 of whom hold library cards.

Innovative string quartet disturbs and entertains

Contributed

ON FRIDAY Feb. 17 classical music lovers were treated to the Penderecki String Quartet's presentation of a program of music written strictly for string quartets dating through the 18th, 19th and 20th centuries.

The program was short but flawlessly executed by the quartet. It consisted of Franz Joseph Haydn's Quartet in D Major, Opus 71 No. 2 and Johannes Brahms' Quartet in A Minor, Opus 51 No. 2 as well as selections form two modern composers, Benjamin Britten and Randolph Peters.

The Haydn opened the program and was rich and lush and performed by the Penderecki quartet as a perfect example of what a string quartet can do. The evening was concluded with the Brahms', which was the smoothest and strongest of the four compositions.

In between, however, were selections by two modern composers. Cello player Paul Pulford was also speaker for the quartet and offered a brief explanation of the two modern pieces yet offered no introduction to or explanation of the two classical composers. Perhaps he assumed a knowledgeable audience.

The expressed opinion of some audience members was that the program would have been better had the modern composers been left out. However other listeners found the newer music innovative and expressive.

Two selections from Quartet No. 3 by Benjamin Britten were very modern. The music was discordant and jarring yet oddly compelling.

Randolph Peters' Tango for String Quartet was the more emotional of the four selections performed. A very unusual piece, it was an excerpt of music written for the Soundtrack of a National Film Board production, Smoked Lizard Lips.

It was not as discordant as the Britten but more disturbing. Because of Pulford's explanation the listener was better able to 'see' the music.

The quartet itself consists of four master musicians, violinists Piotr Buczek and Jerzy Kaplanek are both Polish born while Dov Scheindlin and Paul Pulford are Canadian. All four are currently situated at Wilfred Laurier University in Waterloo Ontario.

The next presentation in Terrace's concert series is the March 2 performance of Naughty Ladies of the Night, presented by Terrace and District Arts Council and the March 11 Concert Society performance by Michael and Helen Kim. Tickets are available at Erwin's House of Fine Jewellery in the Skeena Mall.

Boswell holds free workshop

ANYONE WHO wants to get in on a free workshop with guitarist Stephen Boswell should act now.

Boswell will be here with his Latin music trio, performing La Guitarra Latina Friday, Mar. 17 at the R.E.M. Lee Theatre.

But he's also going to be working closely with the Pacific Northwest Music Festival this year, and he's agreed to put on a workshop on the Saturday morning after the concert.

Anyone interested should call Nora Phillips at 635-5688.

Water Facts

What Is Meant By "Hard Water"

'Hardness' of water generally relates to the presence of calcium and magnesium in the water. Water 'hardness' can refer to the water's ability to produce a lather when using soap. Minerals in the water will react with the soap and produce 'curds' which are difficult to dissolve. The harder the water, the more difficult it is to produce a soap lather.

Hard water may also result in scale deposits in your pipes, where as soft water may have a corrosive effect on metal plumbing. Hard water also leaves spots on dishes and rings around the bath tub.

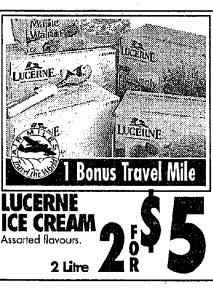

Well water is more commonly affected by hardness. More of a concern with water hardness are the offensive tastes and odours, discoloration of clothing and household fixtures caused by iron or manganese in the water supply. Proper water softening & conditioning can help control household water problems, although removal of certain minerals such as iron can be difficult.

45 yellow roses mark anniversary

A VERY SPECIAL belated 45th wedding anniversary greeting goes out to Bill and Diane Ingles.

The couple was married on Sept. 9, 1949 in Mt. Pleasant, Vancouver, B.C. and the rest is all history.

Bill Ingles arrived in Terrace in the spring of 1965 by car an expensive trip in those days and quite an experience.

Diane and their daughters Donna and Laurie arrived by train later that summer.

The Ingles bought a home on Feeney St. across from the tracks from the Moens and the real estate salesman who sold them the house was Mr. Clay.

Daughter Donna started Grade 4 and Laurie Grade 2 at Hall Cassie Elementary

In 1967, Diane resumed her career at the Royal Bank. She had started working for the bank after graduating from high school in Vancouver in 1947.

At the bank in Terrace, Diane made great strides.

She became a deposit officer and a supervisor of tellers.

After deducting the years that she stayed home with the family, she was a 30-year veteran when she retired in 1985 due to health reasons.

She was admired and loved by all whom she dealt with in her career.

Diane was also a Brownie leader and was invlved with the Rotary aims for over 20

Bill's career started with Delnor Frozen Foods, and he later moved over to Dairyland in Vancouver.

With this work experience, Dairyland asked Bill to move up to Terrace to expand the business. He was the right man for the job! He started Dairyland's Terrace operation, starting with a single refrigerated truck plugged in at a motel. That's how he ran the business until the depot in Thornhill was completed. And that's where Dairyland's operations are still based today.

Bill was a member of the Chamber of Commerce and was a Legion member for more than 20 years.

He was very active in the Rotary Club, holding positions of vice-president and president. As president, he was responsible for the first exchange student program, which brought Ana Bertalazze to town from Sao Paolo, Bra-

Bill also entered politics, running for alderman in 1974, but fell short by 15 votes.

By 1984, Bill had been promoted to northwest regional zone manager of Dairyland.

In 1986, Bill and Diane moved to Vernon where Bill had been transferred by Dairyland. In 1988 he retired after 25 years of service.

They mvoed to Abbotsford shortly after and are now enjoying their retirement in the Fraser Valley but still miss all their good friends and family in Terrace.

Daughters Donna and Laurie were active high school band members and piano students. They participated in the Terrace music festival from 1967-1976 and won many awards for piano and trumpet.

Both girls travelled with the band to Spokane, Toronto, Vancouver and Victoria.

Daughter Laurie Batke and Cassandra still live in Terrace. And daughter Donna and her children live in Abbotsford with her husband David and three stepchildren. At their 45th wedding anniversary, Diane was presented with 45 yellow roses by her grandchildren.

She had carried yellow roses at her wedding, and Bill has over the years presented her with yellow roses.

Many more years of happiness and good health to both Bill and Diane.

The Dairyland Terrace operation still operates out of the same location and has not really had many changes.

The manager is now Roy Oliarny, and there are two office staff, 10 employees and four

Lent is the time we face the shadows

By FATHER JOHN SMITH MOST OF us diet to lose weight and cut a pretty figure. The Church commands dieting for more serious reasons. We call it fasting.

The Church is simply being faithful to Christ. He not only calls us to fast. He did it. He began his ministry in the desert with forty days of fasting and prayer.

On Wednesday, March 1, some Christian Churches begin what is known as the season of Lent. This is a period of forty days of fasting, prayer and good works.

It leads up to and culminates in the great feast of the Resurrection which we celebrate at Easter. So Lent is not primarily about losing weight! That could be a bonus! It goes deeper than that.

The long tradition of forty days has its roots going back to the days of Moses. He remained on Mount Sinai for forty days preparing to receive the ten commandments. Much later on, Jesus felt the need of prolonged quiet, prayer and fasting to begin his public life.

The day on which we begin our 40-day fast is called "Ash Wednesday." It is the custom in my Church (Roman Catholic) to have the sign of the cross made on our foreheads with ashes. The ashes used are obtained by burning the left-over palm branches which we used the previous year on Palm Sunday.

While making the sign of the cross, the priest or minister says to the person: "Turn away from sin and be faithful to the Gospel."

The custom of placing ashes on the foreheads of the people on Ash Wednesday goes back to the fourth century. At that time public sinners would come to the Church to have ashes placed on their heads by the Bishop. Those were the days when one had to repent in public for sins committed.

This was a public sign that they wished to change. By the Middle Ages it had become the practice of all the members of the Church to receive ashes in Lent as a sign that they wished to repent, do penance and deepen their commitment to Christ.

Contrary to what people might think, the season of Lent is a positive and lifegiving experience. It's not all about doom and gloom or giving up. The Lenten exercises call us to get in touch with our inner-self.

We are challenged to look at our dark side or our shadow. In this way we come face to face with the truth and Jesus promised that only the truth sets us free. Like dieting, it is difficult at the beginning. But as we begin to experience an inner peace we are strengthened to continue the forty-day journey to Easter.

Conversion is the main theme of the whole Lenten experience.

Our religious commitment is like a marriage. It is all about relationship, not just a lot of doctrines or knowing the Bible.

To believe in Jesus is to be in relationship with him and other believers. When we are in relationship we are always converting. Conversion in scripture means a change of heart, turning round and facing the Lord. No couple, no believer, if they are honest, can say they are fully in relationship. There is always more. Lent challenges us to go after the more and not settle for the status quo,

There's a saying that "the good often becomes the enemy of the best". So we settle for 'good' marriages. We are comfortable being 'good' Christians. Jesus didn't call us to be good but to be perfect.

Lent is a time when we make a special effort to work at this ideal. Keeping in mind the joyful and glorious celebration of the risen Jesus at Easter, we embark on the Lenten penitential journey believing that we too will triumph with him.

Father John Smith is the priest at Sacred Heart Parish. Viewpoint is a column written on behalf of the Terrace Ministerial Association. The opinions are those of the authors.

Marasportathon gathers steam

ATHLETES TAKING part in a challenge with Prince Rupert are out this week collecting pledges and donations for a different kind of competition.

The marasportathon challenge will benefit B.C.'s Children's Hospital and involves taking part in eight athletic endeavours over a 24-hour continuous period.

Each team for the March 18-19 competition to take place in Prince Rupert is made up of six men and six women.

The events are are curling, dancercize, aquabasketball, hockey, bowling, indoor soccer, volleyball and basketball.

The marasportathon in support of the children's hospital has been staged several times over the years in Prince Rupert and this is the first time it'll involve a challenge between two cities.

Prince Rupert organizer Doug Kydd said the children's hospital is a worthy recipient because its programs and services benefit children from all over the province.

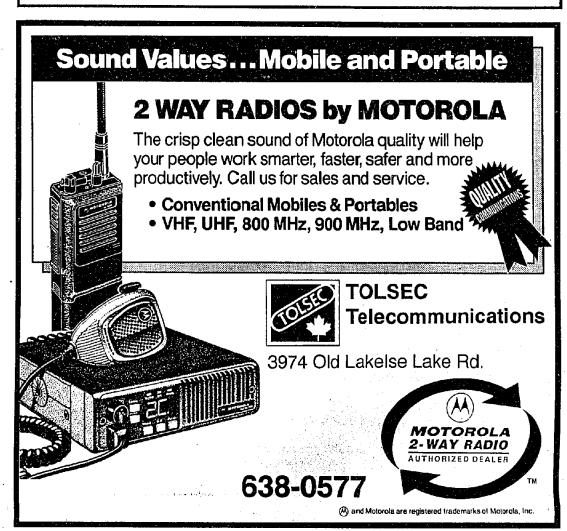

Those who wish to make direct donations can do so at the service desk of the Overwaitea store in the Skeena Mall. It'll also be the collection point for those who received pledge or donation envelopes from team members.

More information is available by calling city recreation director Steve Scott at 638-4750.

REAL ESTATE

Stately two storey

BY M. TYNAN

Sure to be a welcome addition to the streetscape, this family home boasts a fashionable stucco exterior with feature windows and an elegant high arched entranceway.

Enter through double doors into the foyer, open to the second storey and brightened by an overhead window. A semi-open plan for the living and dining room creates a spacious area for entertaining and features a vaulted ceiling and boxed out window seat in the living room. A gourmet kitchen provides plenty of cupboard and counter space, a work island, and a walk-in pantry. A carousel breakfast area receives natural light from surrounding windows. The family room also has windows all along the rear, and features a cosy gas fireplace. The den, set apart from the main traffic areas, would make an ideal home office or study room.

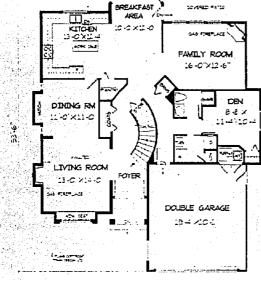

Upstairs, all bedrooms are a good size. The master features a walk-in closet and a four piece ensuite with a raised soaker tub. The games room boasts a stylish vaulted ceiling and a boxed out window seat. Complete with a closet, this room could easily be converted into a fourth bedroom if necessary.

U-889 may be obtained for $495.00 for a package of five complete sets of working prints and $45.00 for each additional set of the same plan. Allow $15.00 extra to cover the cost of postage and handling (B.C. residents add applicable sales tax to plan total)(All Canadian residents add 7% GST to plan total plus postage and handling).

False farming

MAGES OF hardworking, gum booted men working to raise fat salmonids in luxuriant natural surroundings rolled off the large metal reels of the old Bell and Howell projector and on to the screen. What a good idea, I thought. Was this the wave of the future?

Dennis Briscoe had acquired the documentary film for the Northwest Chapter of the Steelhead Society from the library. After the screening we kicked the idea around. Perhaps we ought to throw our support behind this environmentallyfriendly industry. Maybe we should push the notion that it eventually supplant the traditional market fishery causing so us much grief.

We were naive. We were wrong. As we soon found out, antibiotics, algaecides, hormones, fungicides, parasites, genetic pollution, are just some of the bricks that make up the foundation of the aqua cultural edifice - a structure as foul and ecologically reprehensible as any you can Consider the following consequences of fish farming. A fish farm is, in effect, an appetitewhetting buffet for marine creatures: magnets for heron, seals, otters and sea lions. When these animals follow the trail of their instincts to a farm they are either shot dead or blasted with an acoustic harassment device (AHD). Designed to scare away predators through the emission of a loud sound underwater an AHD may sound humane, but, at 210 decibels enough volume to make thrash metal sound like Brahm's lullaby — it ain't. Cetologists worry. these devices not only bar whales from preferred haunts, but may also disrupt their migratory paths.

Whales are not the only sentient creatures evicted from beautiful estuaries and bays by fish farms; we are too. Tourists tend to avoid places whose water has been covered in surface slime and fouled with fecal matter and toxic gases.

To the larvae of prawns and crabs the fish farm is a great gaping mouth. When these tiny crustacea find their way into the confines of the holding pens unnatural writhing masses of fish work them over in a most unnatural way.

The crap excreted by an average fish farm, according to Norwegian experts - who have had a long and tortured experience with fish farming - is roughly the waste equivalent of forty thousand people. That's a heap of poo. And what does it do? It filters to the bottom and smothers the creatures living there.

And that is not the only excrement excreted from the fish farming industry. From the lips of industry spokesmen ooze claims that tidal flushing takes care of waste. Once again we hear an industry make the preposterous claim that the solution to pollution is dilution. It just isn't so. Speak to divers or sport fishers who have experienced the effects of fish farming first hand. They call the farms dead zones.

And we mustn't overlook genetic pollution. Notwithstanding mounds of letters from environmental groups warning them of the perils, the Socreds permitted fishy entrepreneurs to import Atlantic Salmon. Apparently salmo salar grows more quickly and, like most Europeans, is accustomed to crowded conditions. Thanks to the stormy disposition of the sea, about ten to twenty-four thousand juvenile Atlantics have escaped each year since fish farms began to despoil our beautiful marine environs. As a result 15 rivers in this province contain Atlantic salmon; some have spawning populations.

Think about the European Starling, consider the jeopardy of wild Norwegian salmon stocks as a result of disease introduced by escaped farm fish, and you have a sense of the problem.

Fugitive salmon range widely. In Alaska legislators wisely slapped a ban on fish farming. They are not pleased that Atlantic salmon from here are showing up in their commercial nets.

Antibiotics are fed to farm fish living in cramped quarters where the disease potential is magnified. Those drugs are then passed on to you, the unsuspecting consumer. Your immune system doesn't need any more, believe me.

Then there's the economic idiocy of feeding four pounds of wild herring and anchovies to produce one pound of drug soaked salmon. I've just scratched the surface here, but before I sign off, I simply must mention the Ministry of Agriculture, Food and Fish a.k.a. MAFF. Only the misguided Socreds under VanderZalm (whose name ironically means "of the salmon") could have created this monstrosity, and with it the ideal context for a turf war with the Ministry of Environment's Fish and Wildlife Branch.

What the MAFFioso must do is bring in a law that ensures all farmed fish are labeled as such. Then it must preside over the dismantling of a destructive industry that has no business being in business. Then it must dismantle part of itself and go back to dealing with agriculture.

SKEENA JR. GIRLS had not only their skills but also their stamina tested at the zone championships. And proved they had enough of both as they made it two years in a row. Above team members Felecia Arbuah, Elizabeth Clark, Kim Haugland, Terresa LeFebvre, Kathleen Gook, Stacey Marceau, Ruby Prihar, Roxanne Chow, Reyann Morrison, Lee-Anne Critchley and Shawna Davis show off their banner.

Zones leave 'Cats purring

SKEENA JR. GIRLS are zone champions again, but they gave themselves a bit of a before hitting the court again, scare on the way.

"We went about it the long way," admitted coach Bill Gook.

The tournament opened as expected, the Wildcats easily handling Prince Rupert secondary 74-47.

That put them through to the 'A' semi-final and a meeting with Charles Hayes, the other coast city team.

There Hayes took advantage of a slow Skeena start and early foul trouble to hang on for a 45-41 victory to send the But when the time came to put Wildcats to the 'B' side and a return against Prince Rupert.

This turned out to be a much closer affair, Skeena having had only a 15 minute break between games and "still in shock", said Gook. However, the 'Cats prevailed 45-35.

Which again meant they had time only to catch their breath against Hayes.

the double Because of knockout format, they also faced the task of defeating the Hays twice to take the title.

Hayes sank the first basket in the showdown, but that was the only time the Ruperteers were to enjoy a lead during a 54-24 rout by the Wildcats.

"They played really good defence," Gook said of his team. "They never allowed

"They played really good defence, they never allowed Hayes to get any momentum."...... GOOK.

tive game, it was no surprise Skeena deliberately kept the pace slow in the early going. the pressure on, they did what had to be done pulling away to a 46-30 win.

That victory, said Gook, gave the team a big psychological lift, and an hour break before the finale game didn't hurt either.

Now in their third consecu- Hayes to get any momentum."

As for what it took to slog through the back door, he suggested the experience of the squad had been a major factor. "They've played a lot of big games this season," he explained.

Although smaller than their rivals, Gook said Skeena had more speed and had played well as a unit.

Felecia Arbuah and Roxanne

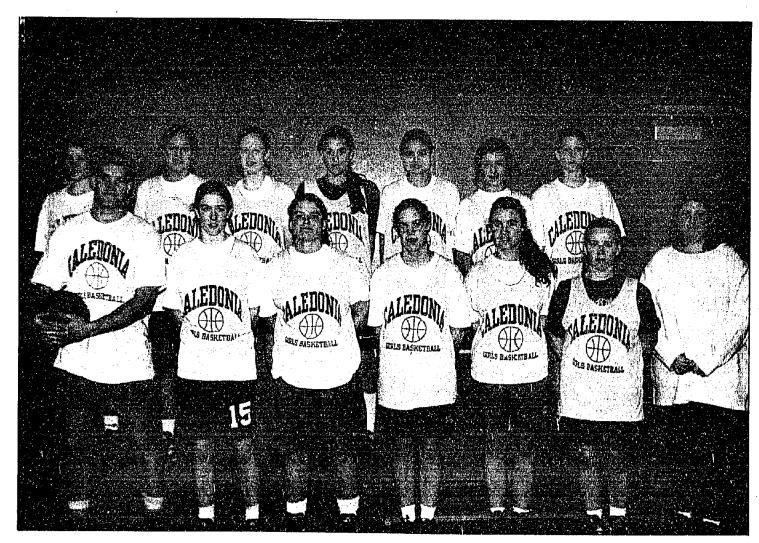

Chow were the Wildcat sharpshooters, Lee-Anne Critchley again proved a leader while Kathleen Gook controlled the boards.

Now the team wait for the trip to the provincials, to be held at Maple Ridge March 9-11. And also wait for news of where they have been ranked for the tournament.

That's a factor because a seeding near the bottom will pit them against one of the top teams in their opener.

"That first game is important," Gook said. "If you can get that under your belt, then you can go from there."

Given the way Skeena has handily defeated Duchess Park of Prince George — a highly regarded team provincially this season, he anticipated Skeena should get the seeding they want.

Number one

YOU'VE GOTTA have heart, and Caledonia Senior Girls basketballers showed they had a lot of that at the zone championships. Facing a tough Charles Hayes team they hadn't been able to beat during the regular season, Cal found themselves with their backs to the wall after losing the opener in the best-of-three series. But they dug deep to take the next two and upset the pre-playoff favourites. Next week Linnae Bee, Keri Brown, Lisa Clark, Joanne Cooley, Julie Gillanders, Becky Heenan, Louisa Hendriks, Nicole Rippon, Karen Shepherd, Karla Steadham, Tannis Trottier and Christine Zaporzan head for the provincials.

Kermodes can take nothing for granted

THE FORM LINE says split a two game series against Caledonia Kermodes should book themselves a berth in the provincial basketball championships.

However, emphasizes coach Cam MacKay they can't take anything for granted.

The Kermodes take to the Cal court this Friday at 7:30 p.m. for the first game of a best-of-three series against Prince Rupert.

Cal has played the Rainmakers twice this year. In Rupert they edged their rivals 67-61 while on home ground broke open a tight game with a 20 point string to cruise to an 88-64 victory.

"They've got talent and they work hard," MacKay said of the Rainmakers, noting they had beaten Vancouver College by 22 points this season.

In December the Kermodes that Lower Mainland squad.

Earlier this month Cal proved they could play with the best when they visited Abbotsford.

There they rolled over Mission 95-67, took Abbotsford to double overtime and had only one bad game, a 125-102 loss to McNair.

MacKay pointed out Cal were down by only five when their top offensive threats, Cross and Joseph Dominguez, fouled out early in the fourth quarter.

Lest with the "shortest of short benches" and no player over 6ft., he said the remaining Kermodes played well but simply couldn't stem the tide.

"It showed we could play with top notch teams," he

McNair were #6 in last week's 'AAA' Boys rankings in which Caledonia and Vancouver College both got honourable mentions.

One thing the Kermodes will be hoping for at this weekend's zones is that they only have to contend with the Rainmakers.

MacKay explained the lineup has been ravaged by a flu bug for the past month. In Cal's most recent outing, against Smithers and Charles Hays, it was without starters Sean Cross and Todd Kluss with several others still battling the effects of the bug.

The problem, he said, is just when a player thinks he's over it, the bug comes back full force. Game two of the zone championship goes Saturday night at 7:30 p.m. If a decider is needed, it will be played at 2 p.m. Sunday.

DESPITE a fourth quarter Blues defence limiting Prince Rupert to just two baskets over charge that saw Skeena sink 10 unanswered points, Prince the final minutes, Skeena put Rupert Secondary hung on to together an exciting cometake the Grade 8 Girls Basketback.

But it wasn't quite enough, Rupert hanging on 50-47 for the title.

Skeena had opened its campaign in convincing style, holding cross-river rivals Thornhill scoreless for the first half on the way to a 64-7 victory. Wendy Hadley led the charge with 16 points.

It was more of the same in game two, the Blues overpowering Nisga'a 42-12 with Arbuah contributing 13 to help Skeena to the final.

After their loss to Skeena, Thornhill were eliminated in a heartbreaker against Charles Leading for almost three quarters of the game, Thornhill fell four behind last in the fourth and couldn't quite make it up, dropping a 28-27 decision.

Tanya Middleton led the Timberwolves with 10 points.

In the playoff for third, Hazelton were never headed and held off a late charge to defeat Nisga'a 44-40.

Duo still on a roll

WINNING IS a habit Kosta Kollias is obviously in no hurry to break.

Coming off a triple gold Northern Winter Games performance, the Skeena student came away from a recent badminton tourney at Thornhill Jr. Secondary with 'A' flight titles in both his events.

Having taken the Junior Boys singles, Kollias went back out with Pheonix Dien to add victory in the doubles.

And it was the same story in Grade 8 Girls action where Laurie Sager gave the host school something to cheer about in the 'A' flight singles then paired up with third place finisher Marika Richard for the doubles crown, Completing the trio of double firsts was Alvaro Lopes from Houston on the Grade 8 Boys side, Kam Thidal aiding him in the doubles.

Adding further Skeena 'A' successes were Victoria Chemko (Jr. Girls singles) and the duo of Lindsay Smith and Laura Cummins in doubles. Smith had earlier taken top spot in the 'B' flight singles.

In the so-near department, Lino Osoria and Warren Conacher (Skeena) finished twothree in 'A' flight Junior Boys singles, then had to settle for the runner-up spot in doubles. Also in 'A' Flight, schoolmate Judith Casey was solidl to take second in Jr. Girls singles and add a third, with Meggie Casey, in doubles.

In 'B' Flight action, Centennial Christian picked up titles from Stewart McIsack and Pete Rolleman (Jr. Boys doubles), Jen Teichroeb (Jr. Girls) and Nathan Freeman (Grade 8

Use the Bumps to Help You

Mogul runs are rarely a series of perfectly spaced bumps and ruts. If you want to ski bumps in control you must follow a rhythmical turning pattern using aggressiveness and pressure control to guide you to the bottom.

At the top of the run plan your first three turns. This will help you get in a rhythm and increase your aggressiveness.

Now keep your skis on the snow, absorb each bump, turn on top and push your feet down the other side. Combine this with an aggressive pole plant keeping your hands out in front of you.

Think of each mogul as a stair in a stair case and you're going to walk right down! If there is a space, then continue down those stairs by making a quick turn. This extra turn will keep you under control and ready to take on the next bump.

Practice makes perfect. Start on the easier run and progress to tougher ones, thinking about these movements and ideas.

Quintet make their mark

THE RESULTS have been tallied and five Terrace youngsters have been confirmed as district champions in the Knights of Columbus Free Throw Championship, Meghan Janes Uplands was the highest scoring 10-year-old girl while Centennial Christian's Justin Voogd took the boys title for that age.

Ricky Dhaliwal of Clarence Michiel was the district's 11-year-old male sharpshooter and Centennial Christian's Allison Mantel the most accurate 12-year-old girl.

Rounding out the quintet was Andrea Van Gelder, 14, also of CCS, who potted 20 of 25 to take her title.

X-ski racers carve a path

A RECORD ENTRY and fresh snow made for a successful 14th annual Alcan Marathon cross country ski event at Onion Lake.

A total of 140 skiers took part in the event, most tackling the 5km course over the Clearwater Trail.

Jackrabbits Kevin Thorne and Bobbie Durocher braved the 20km half-marathon to get their touring badge while Adele Thorne and Nathan Dumais finished first in the Jr. Female and Male categories.

Eight skiers went for the full marathon distance with coaches Walter Thorne and Cheryl taking respective divisions.

Ringetters take second

THE JUNIOR C ringetters found only one team too hot for them during a recent trip to Quesnel.

Terrace opened with a tight battle against Quesnel, edging the host squad 7-6. They then pummeled Vanderhoof 20-3.

However, the winning streak ended next time out, Prince George outgunning then 13-6.

Terrace closed out with another victory over Quesnel, this time by a comfortable 11-4 margin.

Locals solid on Quesnel slopes

ELEVEN TOP 10 divisional finishes highlighted the Shames Mountain Alpine Ski team's recent trip to Quesnel.

Jana Trappl had another fine weekend's racing, opening with a fourth in J3 in Saturday's Giant Slalom then following with the second fastest time in the division in Sunday's Slalom.

That last run saw her finish 21st overall, a six place improvement over her starting position.

Chris Paziuk, Josh Mac-Donald and Graeme Dediluke, all JB class skiers, engaged in a private battle in Men's races. Paziuk came out on top in the GS, taking eighth in the division two seconds clear of ninth placed MacDonald with Dediluke more than a second Sunday's Slalom first run saw MacDonald come out of the gate immediately after Dediluke to clip just over a second off his teammate's time. Dediluke reversed the order for the second run but couldn't make up the Iceway.

MacDonald took fifth in the class by only three tenths of a second with Dediluke and Paziuk filling the next two Sunday was also the better of the two days for lan Macand Matthieu Cormac LeClerc. Despite being among the last to ski, MacCormac sped to 17th overall and seventh in the JB class while LeClerc took the same spot among J2 skiers.

Alesha Boyko rounded out the top ten finishes with a seventh in the J3 GS race.

Patrollers set to defend zone title

SHAMES MOUNTAIN ski patrol team head for Smithers this weekend looking to repeat last year's success in the First Aid and Toboggan Handling zone championships.

Ski patrol zone president Barry Peters explained the competition requires the teams to solve two first aid problems, then handle a toboggan down the mountain over a specially designed course.

That last test includes two runs, one with the toboggan empty, one with someone strapped to it.

The course will include a mix of terrain, flat, steep and moguls, he added.

Last year Shames knocked off the '93 national champions from Prince George on the way to the zone title.

Peters said five teams from Quesnel to Terrace took part last year and he hoped to see more this time.

The Shames team will be Scott Trent, Ariane Vlasblom, Faye Campbell and Jean-Pierre Harvey.

Once the serious competition is done, the patrollers will wind up the Sunday, March 4 event with a fun GS race.

Only praise for the rookie

If this kid is so lazy, how come he never seems to leave the ice?

That was the question after watching the youngest player in the NHL look like the best player in a game his team won before its home fans.

Eighteen-year-old Jeff Friesen came out of junior hockey as one of its most talented players but there were rumblings about his work ethic and willingness to give his all. Rumblings the San Jose Sharks let fall on deaf ears. Now they're hearing league-wide praise for their prized rookie.

"A lot of things were blown out of proportion," Friesen said, kicking back in his stall in the Sharks dressing room. "People said I'd float at times and then show up and score a couple of goals but a lot of what was said wasn't fair or true."

Regardless, some teams listened because Friesen was rated the top junior in his class before draft day, then slipped to 11th overall.

It's remarkable how players get branded unfairly but it happens all the time. Mike Bossy couldn't check, Doug Gilmour was too small and Ron Francis was just too soft. All three will end up in the Hall of Fame.

"I was kind of a wild card at the draft," said Friesen, "Nobody before the Sharks wanted to take a chance on me."

Now it doesn't look like they took a chance at all. Friesen is more dangerous than the Sharks' No. 1 right-winger, Sergei Makarov, who's been in a few more games.

The rookie comes from Meadow Lake, Sask., a town of 4,500 that he says has produced its fair share of good junior players. None better than Jeff.

At 16, he was in the Western Hockey League scoring 45 goals for the Regina Pats. At 17 he improved to 51 goals and made the national junior team. This season he made the team again and struck gold for the second time in Red Deer. He was ready for the big time and is making the most of the opportunity.

"My understanding of the game his speed and strength. has changed a lot," he said. "In junior we just played run and gun. generally gushed over the never had to play defence arrival of Paul Kariya and Peter because they just wanted me to Forsberg and declared the score goals. Now here I am killing rookie-of-the-year award a twopenalties in the NHL and playing skater race, Friesen may have against other teams' top lines."

His linemates are Ray Whitney from Fort Saskatchewan, Alta., thinking about that," he says. and Pat Falloon, from Foxwarren. Man. Together they cover the improvement." prairies and opposing lines centred by reputable forces like that lazy streak that's holding Roenick and Modano. But him to 25 minutes a game.

KEMANO COMPLETION PROJECT

4555 Lakelse Ave.

CITIZENS, READ THE REPORT!

To sort through the contradictory arguments surrounding the Kemano Completion Project, Mr. Harcourt appointed the British Columbia Utilities Commission. According "the most comprehensive public review of its kind in B.C. history."

Following the completion of the Report, the Premier cancelled the Project with no prior public consultation. Citizens might wonder why, since the Report is clearly favourable to the Project on environmental grounds. It seems Mr. Harcourt is the one with the back room deal.

The Premier says "My government's decision protects the Fraser River System and our salmon fishery forever". Good politics perhaps, but there is no logical connection between this motherhood pronouncement and cancelling the project.

The Commission says:

"...fishways at Hells Gate, together with other works designated to facilitate migration should ensure that any minor effect of KCP on the Fraser River Flows would not affect salmon migration." (p. viii, Summary Report.)

"The Commission recognizes that the provisions of the (1967) Settlement Agreement provide the opportunity for greater protection for Sockeye with the KCP." (p. viii, Summary Report.)

"...In the view of the Commission, the potential rehabilitation of the Murray /Cheslatta system is a major benefit arising from the Kenny Dam Release Facility component of the Kemano Completion Project .: " (p. 215, Summary Report.)

"... With these releases there will be the opportunity to undertake enhancements in the Stuart and Nautiey systems which could very significantly increase the annual value of this (Sockeye Salmon) fishery." (p. viii, Summary Report.)

Surprised by these comments? So were we.

It is important for Mr. Harcourt that the Report not be widely read by those citizens who were relying on it to wade through the vitriolic, uninformed, and often hysterical media debate, at least until after the next election. This is why the decision was made before the public was allowed to review the Report.

The KCP was an environmentally friendly way to generate great wealth for all British Columbians, with little or no taxpayer funding. This decision will mean higher hydro costs, higher taxes, and lost economic opportunities for all British Columbians.

Considering the misinformation given by the Government in defense of its decision, one questions if they read their Report. But British Columbians should. The summary Report is about one hour's interesting read. Get one at::

British Columbia Utilities Commission c/o Ms. Constant Smith 6th Floor, 900 Howe Street, Box 250, Vancouver, B.C., V6Z 2N3. Phone Toll Free: 1-800-663-1385.

We urge every British Columbian who has an interest in truth, good government and rational decision making to get their facts first hand.

This will appeal to those individuals who wish to own their own business and form a partnership with one of Canada's industry leaders.

To qualify you must have a keen desire to develop business accounts, a class 5 licence with a clean driving record, and must be in good physical condition. You must also have a late model curb or cube size van, or, the financial stability to purchase or lease such a vehicle.

We offer sales support and customer service, advanced barcode tracking, vehicle lease arrangements, as well as the opportunity to participate in group benefit programs.

> If you feel this applies to you, please call 1-800-354-2067 during normal working hours to schedule an interview.

Project Literacy Terrace CENTRE DIRECTOR

Reporting to the Board of Directors, the Centre Director is responsible for the initiation and management of various Literacy related projects.

The successful candidate will provide advice and information as requested by the Board and will demonstrate fiscal responsibility in budgeting, cost control, and financial reporting. Working with a small number of employees, the Director will facilitate the recrultment and training of volunteer tutors and develop strategies to ensure awareness of learning opportunities for potential students. To best serve the learner, it is imperative that Project Literacy Terrace work in harmony and share expertise and resources with other community agencies and a Northwest regional

Qualifications should include a post-secondary degree and/or diploma which has provided skills and knowledge such as business administration, public relations, computer literacy education, literacy and numeracy training; and the capability of communicating in plain language. In excess of five years of positive work experience where the above noted knowledge areas have been applied would be recognized as an appropriate background. Preferably some of this experience will have been acquired in a smaller northern community with a multicultural

International series sparks ticket rush

NOW YOU see them, now you don't.

By the time the first day of sales was over, hockey fans had snatched up one third of the available tickets for the B.C. Cup International Hockey tournament taking place in Kitimat, March 23-26.

A warm-up for the 1995 World Championships to be held in Stockholm and Gavle, Sweden, in April, the B.C. Cup will feature the Canadian, United States and German national teams in a three-game round robin and tourney final.

Canada and Germany open the action in the Tamitik arena Thursday, March 23 with the United States taking on the Germans the following night.

Saturday night Canada and the United States play the last of the round robins, All evening games start at 7:30 p.m.

The final will be played Sunday at 2 p.m.

"We are hoping for four sellouts," said tournament chairman Allan Hewitson, noting Tamitik had a 2,500 seating capacity.

Despite the brisk start to sales last week, Hewitson emphasized, "There are still plenty of seats left."

Locally tickets are available at the Copperside stores on Kalum St. and in Thornhill.

Single game prices are $24 for adults, $15 for children 14 years and younger. Tickets for the full series run $80 and $48.

"This will be the best hockey seen in Kitimat this year and it's going to be a great opportunity for young fans from the region to see some of the top international players on the world scene today," Hewitson said.
