

Federal vote soon, says MP

TERRACE - There'll have to be a federal election and a Quebec provincial election before any attempt at further constitutional movement takes place, says Skeena NDP MP Jim Fulton.

Speaking after voters rejected the Charlottetown Accord Monday evening, Fulton said Prime Minister Brian Mulroney will have no choice but to soon go to the polls.

There's a need to clear away a lot of the emotional debris created by the process that's just taken place," he said.

The same is true in Quebec where Premier Robert Bourassa faces a strong opposition, Fulton added.

And he's predicting there will be a new kind of method taken to bring about constitutional change.

That could be a constituent assembly, a gathering of perhaps a 1,000 people elected from across the country to discuss constitutional changes, said Fulton.

The federal Skeena riding rejected the Charlottetown Accord by 72.84 per cent. Of 176 of 186 polls reporting Monday evening, 23,959 people said 'no' and 8,790 people said 'yes'. Just over 78 per cent of registered voters cast ballots.

All areas of the riding solidly rejected the accord with the exception of the Nass Valley.

And one poll, at the Ellsworth Camp up Hwy. 37, was unanimous in approving the accord with 63 'yes' votes.

Across B.C., 67.9 per cent of voters said 'no' while 32.1 per cent said 'yes' in a turnout of 77 per cent of registered voters.

Fulton said B.C.'s rejection of the accord should not be considered as anti-native or anti-Quebec.

"There were five main components to vote 'yes' to. People found so many reasons to vote 'no' in what was a complicated package," he said.

The MP did acknowledge that there were what he called apprehensions and misapprehensions concerning native self-government in the northwest.

"That certainly came up at the 43 meetings I held (on the constitution). There were a constellation of reasons," he said.

Despite the defeat of the accord and its native self-government provision, Fulton said land claims in B.C. can be addressed by a treaty commission established in September.

But he doubted if Prime Minister Brian Mulroney would undertake any further discussion on native self government outside of any constitutional arrangement.

Fulton said Mulroney will campaign on the economy but won't be successful.

Claims deal held up as negotiators scrap in public

TERRACE — Nisga'a land claim negotiations are at an impasse because Canada won't sign an agreement that sets terms for resource use prior to a final settlement.

Word of that came out when a dispute between the federal and provincial negotiators surfaced unexpectedly at what was billed a media briefing session last Friday.

Sharp words from chief federal negotiator Gay Reardon and her provincial counterpart, Jack Ebbels, provided the first ever idea of how the talks are going.

It became clear the federal government will not sign the agreement without written assurances from the province that it had adequately consulted people in this area on the terms of the agreement.

At issue is the interim protection measures agreement — signed by the Nisga'a and the province, but missing the signature of Canada — that will determine what level of mining and logging can go on between now and the final settlement of the 25,000-square-kilometre Nisga'a land claim.

The agreement is also expected to yield clues as to the shape of the final agreement.

But Reardon bluntly stated Friday Canada will not sign the agreement without the provincial government's written assurance that the document was discussed with and supported by those who will be affected.

Without the federal signature, it is not known when it might be released to the public.

Although Ebbels' predecessor, Tony Sheridan, did give verbal assurance this has taken place with third party interests, Ebbels said it will not be provided in writing.

Both Reardon and Ebbels reacted strongly at the comments by each other, saying this was the first time they had heard them.

"Federal representatives were at these meetings (with third parties). They can advise Canada whether they were adequate or sufficient," said Ebbels.

"At no time did we receive a

request from Canada that we were asked for written assurances that there had been adequate consultation in the entire negotiation period of the interim protection measures until after it had been initiated. Until after it had been signed by the province and the tribal council," he continued.

Ebbels, appointed just this summer as the provincial government's chief negotiator, described a series of meetings over the past year with third parties who will be affected by the interim agreement. He said there were no strong objections to its content.

"Canada can draw its own conclusions. Canada had a full and complete opportunity to do all the consulting it wants if you look at

City wants opinion on stat shopping

TERRACE — Council's going to ask the business community what it thinks of the idea of having large stores open on statutory holidays.

That will come before council contemplates going to referendum on the matter, mayor Jack Talstra said last week.

The issue came up this spring when the larger retail stores, backed by the city's economic advisory commission, asked council to allow openings on statutory holidays.

It's prohibited by provincial law but the large stores have been opening on those holidays here since the spring.

Council decided several months ago to not pursue the matter until it spoke with provincial officials at the Union of B.C. Municipalities Convention last month.

"The sense we got is that there will be no provincial change contemplated and if we, Terrace, wanted to do something about it, which is a vote, it would be up to us," said Talstra of meetings with municipal affairs minister Robin Blencoe.

The mayor added council wanted to avoid the matter because of the acrimony that surfaced in 1987 and 1988 when Sunday shopping was discussed.

City voters turned down Sunday openings in a referendum but a court decision in Cranbrook struck down the Lord's Day Act in 1988.

"We had hoped there would be something sensible, province wide," said Talstra.

"It should really be the same all over and in the northwest. If Kitimat is open, we should be the same," he continued.

Talstra said he did not know when council would again discuss the matter but wanted to contact the chamber of commerce and other interest groups first.

"We don't want to act in isolation," he said.

The latest move surrounding statutory holiday openings comes at a time when four large stores here are being charged under the provincial Holiday Shopping Regulation Act.

The provincial government is alleging that Safeway, Overwaitea, KMart and Woolworth opened on July 1, a statutory holiday.

Representatives of those stores are scheduled to make a first appearance in provincial court here Nov. 4.

Police set for Hallowe'en

TERRACE — Youths won't run riot in the downtown streets this Hallowe'en if RCMP Inspector Larry Yeske has his way.

The city's top police officer says the local detachment will field more than the 20 officers it sent out last Oct. 31 to face the ghouls and goblins.

"We're going to have a lot more of our own people out there this year," Yeske said. "And we'll bring in more from other detachments if we need to."

Last Hallowe'en, police officers were outnumbered by a mob of 150 young people who barricaded Lakelse Ave. with shopping carts and rampaged through the downtown, smashing windows, throwing eggs and shooting fireworks at passing cars.

Police could only hold back and watch, and drew sharp criticism from merchants whose stores were vandalized.

"We want to make sure there's no repeat of this nonsense we had last year," Yeske said.

He said he's meeting with the Fire Department and other agencies to make preparations.

Yeske would not say what measures he will authorize to disperse youths this year.

It's hoped school dances will keep many local young people busy this Hallowe'en.

"When there's nothing to do that's when somebody starts some mischief," he said. "If we have things to keep them interested elsewhere, hopefully they'll go and enjoy themselves there instead of run the risk of running afoul of the law."

Yeske said he is also encouraging downtown merchants to lock up shopping carts and to maintain some kind of presence that night to deter vandals and thieves.

"We want to make sure a lot of the shenanigans don't get a chance to start."

"These negotiations aren't going to work unless this consultation takes place."

Gov't playing claims catch up

TERRACE — Last week's dispute between the provincial and federal governments over the Nisga'a land claim reveals some of the problems surrounding its negotiation.

Those problems center on the provincial government which got in on the negotiations much later than did the federal government.

And that's caused it to play catch up in an attempt to settle the claim.

The provincial government did not join the claims talks until the fall of 1990. A formal agreement between the Nisga'a and the two governments wasn't signed until the next year.

This agreement calls for an agreement in principle to be in place by March 1993, placing a sense of increasing urgency on a resolution.

Yet it's taken the provincial government a lot of time to prepare for the negotiations.

Its political philosophy also changed — from a stubborn Social Credit government to the NDP, which is more sympathetic to native claims.

This lead to new negotiating positions on the part of the provincial government that took time to develop.

The provincial government has also changed its chief negotiator four times since it joined the talks. Jack Ebbels, the newest negotiator, hired on in August.

And the provincial government just this spring reacted to comments that it wasn't doing enough explaining by meeting with interested groups.

But an August meeting attended by local government officials and civil servants was marred when provincial negotiators asked those in attendance to keep all information confidential.

Mayor Jack Talstra walked out of that session, saying that he couldn't sit through the meeting if he couldn't tell Terrace residents what was going on.

Ebbels acknowledges that the provincial government could have done a better job but that a separate group to negotiate the Nisga'a claim has now been set up.

"The province has signed this agreement," said Ebbels of the interim protection measures deal.

"I have confidence in the consultation procedure we're now engaged in. It seems to be working. We seem to be getting good feedback from industry representatives, local government representatives," he said.

Chief federal negotiator Gay Reardon said it's important that the province take all the measures it can to assure that those affected by the interim agreement are consulted.

"These negotiations aren't going to work unless this consultation takes place. This is why it's so important that Canada receives this assurance that the (interim protection measures agreement), which is solely the province's responsibility, they have consulted," she said.

From the front

Dispute becomes public

the framework agreement both parties can carry on consultations to the degree they feel is appropriate," he said.

Reardon said she sent a letter to Ebbels the third week of September asking for a written assurance.

"Since I wrote the letter about a month ago I had fully anticipated that I would be getting a reply to it. So to hear today at a media briefing that I'm not getting such a reply, I'm rather shocked," said Reardon.

She added that since the interim agreement covers land and resources, which fall under provincial responsibility, it was up to the province to determine if adequate discussion with third party groups had taken place.

And she said the negotiations and the final outcome are at risk if the province has not taken the proper steps to discuss the interim agreement with those affected.

Ebbels said he did send a letter to Reardon giving an outline of discussions the province had with third party groups.

"I couldn't comment on whether they were adequate or satisfactory. Whether they're ultimately adequate or satisfactory will depend in large part on the people we talked to," said Ebbels.

Nisga'a Tribal Council executive member Harry Nyce said he was disturbed at the outbreak between Reardon and Ebbels.

"Protecting the resources of our territory (is what) we're discussing. It's unfortunate officials can't get around the issues," said Nyce.

"While we negotiate, the resources are marching out of our territory. Look outside this community and see how many trucks are coming in with the resources that we're talking about," he added.

Things better, says the mayor

TERRACE — Mayor Jack Talstra isn't sure what's going on with the Nisga'a land claims negotiations but he does know that things are getting a bit better.

Talstra, whose been critical about the lack of local involvement in the talks between the Nisga'a, the federal and provincial governments, said a provincial civil servant has now been named to keep in touch with local governments.

But he adds that the provincial government has a way to go in terms of telling local people what is going on and taking their opinions into account.

Talstra was commenting on the provincial refusal to say in writing that there has been an adequate consultation process on the interim protection measures agreement.

That's become a requirement of the federal government before it will sign the agreement.

"I think there has been, if your issue is openness and communication with local government on what is taking place behind closed doors, improvements on the provincial side over the last few months," said Talstra after meeting with federal and provincial negotiators last week.

"My sense is that the federal side is more open and more agreeable to openness but their topics of negotiation are more limited," he said.

"The feds seems to be more willing to communicate with all of the population up here. If that's what they have in mind with the interim protection measures (agreement) I can see, I can understand that point," said Talstra.

News in brief

It's Immigration Week

Nearly 32,000 immigrants came to British Columbia in 1991, a 10 per cent increase from 1990, report the provincial and federal governments. The number represented 14 per cent of the national immigrant total.

These and other figures form part of the governments' efforts to promote Immigration Week, Oct. 26 — Nov. 1. The number coming to B.C. is less than 1957 when 37,000 immigrants arrived in B.C. but higher than 1961 when only 6,500 newcomers settled here.

The largest percentage of arrivals in B.C. in 1991 — 39.5 per cent — were spouses, fiancées, unmarried children, parents, grandparents and children sponsored by a Canadian citizen or permanent resident.

Entrepreneurs, investors and self-employed people represented 19 per cent of 1991 immigrants. Government figures indicate that this is more than double the percentage amount of similar immigrants who settled in other parts of Canada.

Highway signs to disappear

People with unauthorized signs on highways ministry rights-of-way will have them removed if they aren't taken down within a month after being notified.

The order from highways minister Art Charbonneau is in response to what he said were substantial complaints. "These signs block drivers' vision and detract from the province's natural scenery," he said.

Signs not considered to block vision are the blue and white ones brought in by the ministry three years ago as a way of standardizing tourists and other information.

There is one exception and that is for larger ones of a surface area greater than three metres. They'll be allowed to stand for up to six years in order to give their owners a chance to recoup their investment.

Truly a bright idea

B.C. Hydro says its Power Smart program has saved enough electricity to power more than 70,000 new homes for one year since it was brought in three years ago.

The program encourages electricity consumers to save on power use with the idea that conservation is cheaper than having to build more hydro-electric dams.

The provincial crown corporation has been selling its Power Smart program to other electrical utilities.

But B.C. Hydro has been less than successful in picking the night on which it wants residents to turn off unnecessary lights.

Last year, the night coincided with the provincial election. This year, it coincided with Game Four of the World Series.

B.C. Hydro says preliminary indications are that participation dipped by 10 per cent to 61 per cent. Awareness of what it bills as Power Smart Night remained at last year's level of 78 per cent.

"Although people were aware of Power Smart Night, it is understandable that some who would otherwise participate were celebrating the Blue Jays' victory," said B.C. Hydro official Ian Rankine.

More teachers hired

THREE EXTRA teachers here and one in Hazelton have been hired after more students enrolled than expected.

Schools superintendent Frank Hamilton said 5,458 are now enrolled in the district — up 76 from what was projected.

The year's budget was drawn up based on education ministry projections of 5,422 students.

The extra 36 students means an extra $250,000 or so in grants for the district.

But Hamilton said that money will go to pay for the new teachers the district had to hire.

FOUR CITIZENS from the remote Chinese province of Yunnan were in the area recently to investigate small tourism development projects. Part of the tour included a trip to Gitanyow and to the Queen Charlotte Islands. They are, from the left, Guo Dalie who is a vice-director of the Ethnology Society of Yunnan, engineer He Jiangyu, group interpreter He Zhixiong and He Xiaochun, the leader of the Baisha township in Yunnan.

Chinese probe native ways

Toward self-sufficiency

TERRACE — People from a remote province in China are reaching back 50 years to organize locally-owned businesses.

And they've been touring B.C. for ideas on how to establish themselves.

One group of four from Yunnan province recently visited Gitanyow (Kitwancool) and the Queen Charlotte Islands as part of their research.

Three of the four on the tour are Naxi (pronounced Na-jee with a soft 'j'), one of 56 national minority groups in China. The fourth is Han, the predominant ethnic group in that country.

They came interested in the Canadian co-operative movement and in seeing how natives in this province fit in socially and economically.

Those two factors are considered important for the Naxi who want to develop their own small businesses and preserve and enhance their culture.

Co-operatives are not a new thing in Yunnan. A number were organized in the 1930s and into the 1940s as a means of resisting Japan which occupied China before and during the Second World War.

The co-operatives were taken over by the Chinese Communist Party at the end of the country's civil war in 1949.

There are a lot of similarities between B.C. and Yunnan because in both, logging and milling form an important part of the economy.

One idea being pursued is eco-tourism, already a small but thriving industry in Yunnan.

It's considered ideal because not a lot of money is required and the people involved in eco-tourism co-operatives can be kept small.

Lijiang County, the home of the Naxi in Yunnan, is prized because of its scenery and mild climate.

Developing those co-operatives will not only improve local economic conditions but it will take advantage of changing policy in China, says He Zhixiong, one of those on the tour.

"Before it was central planning. Now we are looking at market driven," he said.

He Jiangyu, an engineer, said eco-tourism will benefit the Naxi who make their living in agriculture as opposed to forestry.

"When you cut down the trees, it is important to balance the cutting of trees and the growth rate of trees," he said.

Even though co-operatives developing eco-tourism may not require a lot of money, help is still needed because the agricultural base of the Naxi people does not provide ready investment capital.

Providing help in that area is Simon Fraser University's Office of International Co-operation which helped organize the tour.

Key to the development of the co-operatives is having the Naxi people involved from the start, said He Jiangyu.

He Xiaochun, the magistrate or mayor of Baisha Township, said one key aspect is having young people learn English so they can act as tour guides.

Tourism is expected to grow not only because of the efforts toward developing locally-owned co-operatives but because of development of an international airport.

Last year, 10,000 foreigners visited the Naxi area surrounding the city of Lijiang.

An increasing amount of Chinese are also becoming tourists in their own country.

A civil invasion

Roll out the red carpet. Hang out the welcome sign. We're the target of a friendly invasion.

Very soon a group of civil servants will be moving up from Victoria. They belong to the economic development ministry. It's decided to send people out into the regions instead of having them hunker down in the capital.

The idea is that people who make decisions about economic development in the regions should also live in those regions. They'll then have the kind of first hand knowledge and experience needed to make their decisions the right ones for the regions.

This decentralization concept is not new. Governments continually talk about it and some have made tentative moves. Yet the concept always seemed to fall apart when it came down to who makes the final decisions — the people in the regions or their masters who remain in Victoria.

The previous Social Credit government tried decentralization five years ago. It set up an economic development officer in each region and established regional advisory councils made up of people from local governments. A cabinet minister or MLA was involved in the advisory councils, providing a direct political line to Victoria.

This time, the NDP want to station a senior economic development official in each region backed up by a staff of experts. It's a more bureaucratic structure than the one tried by the Socreds and removes that political connection.

There's a tendency for anything bureaucratic to become bogged down in paperwork and inaction. The success of this venture depends upon the amount of authority and power given these civil servants who live in the region. They'll also have to learn to listen to those who live in the regions.

It's not an excuse

It was only one of many stories involving an act of violence to make the news around the province last week. A man was arrested and locked up. Later, a police officer noticed the man was on his stomach and was not moving. Upon entering the cell, the man attacked the police officer with a pair of small scissors. The officer was slashed across the face and stabbed in the chest. Doctors told the officer the chest wound came within centimetres of his heart.

The man was charged with attempted murder. That charge was reduced to aggravated assault and the man pleaded guilty. Why? Prosecutors doubted the original charge would stick because the man had been drinking. The reasoning is that the man's judgement may have been impaired. He may not have been able to form the intent behind his actions and so could not be responsible for what happened.

This is not an unusual occurrence. It makes little sense to prosecute people who do not know what they have done. And every person must be allowed to put forward the most vigorous of defences. But it does not make any sense at all to let alcohol or drug abuse become a reason for avoiding responsibility.

A person who drinks or takes drugs must take responsibility for any and all subsequent actions. The intent to drink or to take drugs cannot be used as an excuse. Anything else provides a large hole that does society a disservice.

Economic growth in B.C. depends on diversification

VICTORIA — Forestry and mining may not be sunset industries yet, but nobody can deny that their economic viability in British Columbia's economy is becoming more and more marginal.

The reasons are manifold: soft global markets, displacement of wood products by man-made plastics, and last but not least, a strong environmental lobby waging worldwide war on the province's resource-extraction industries.

Just recently, a British company cancelled a multi-million newsprint contract with Fletcher Challenge, after the president of the firm saw a film about forestry practices in British Columbia's old-growth forests.

The Western Canada Wilderness Committee announced last week that it will send speakers to Europe to "counter the misinformation campaign" recently launched by the B.C. forest ministry.

"We intend to take the biggest Wilderness Rescue Tour the world has ever seen to Europe in September of 1993," WCWC campaign coordinator Joe Foy said.

Regardless of the rights or wrongs of such tactics, make no mistake about them, they are effective and they will help accelerate the decline of the province's resource industries. And whether we like it or not, we had better prepare for the day when the last mine closes and clearcuts are a thing of the past.

The transition period will hurt like hell. Many communities will come perilously close to becoming ghost towns. Some will die. Even thinking about it is scary, but that doesn't change the inevitability of it.

In the long run, the only answer is diversification. We must find new and innovative ways of employing British

From the Capital

by Hubert Beyer

Columbians. And don't tell me it's not possible. We are a far cry today from the hewers of wood and drawers of water we once were.

Last week, a number of British Columbia companies received B.C. Trade Export Awards for excellence in marketing. They serve as great examples of that this province's entrepreneurs can do if they put their minds to it. Meet some of them.

Take H.A. Simons Ltd. Never heard of it? Most British Columbians haven't, but the Vancouver-based company employs about 1,500 people in Canada and 3,000 world wide.

Since starting out in 1944, H.A. Simons has been providing project and engineering management for clients in the pulp industry, completing more than 10,000 projects to date. The company has exported its expertise to dozens of countries, including Chile, Pakistan, Thailand, Norway and Russia.

And Tom Simons, president of H.A. Simons, believes that government can and should play a major role in helping B.C. industries invade off-shore markets.

"When companies go off-shore, especially the first time out, government can help by identifying opportunities and support," he says.

And who would have thought that a growing concern about eating the right food could become a major export opportunity. Arran Stephens did.

Stephen's B.C.-based Nature's Path Foods has become the manufacturer of one of the most popular lines of all-natural breakfast cereals in the world.

Stephens started his business in a tiny place in Richmond in 1985, making Manna Breads of all things. By 1988, the company marketed cereal products in the U.S. In 1989, it moved to a new 33,000 square foot plant, expanding to a 55,000 square foot plant the following year. And even that's fast becoming too small.

Today, four of the company's cereals are in the top ten of the 150 cereals sold in the $4 billion a year natural food market.

Spectrum Signal Processing Inc. of Burnaby, founded in 1987, is fast becoming a world leader in technology. The company manufacture circuit boards and markets them across North America.

Spectrum's products have found their way into numerous applications for digital signal processing technology, from cellular phones, digital audio, and defense communications to compact discs, high-definition television and a wide variety of industrial uses.

These are just a few examples of the modern pioneer spirit that offers the best hope yet for British Columbia's future. The bad news is: we won't be able to rely indefinitely on our resource industries for economic stability. The good news is: we don't have to.

Customer trust is slow to build but quick to destroy.

Recently a roving photographer representing an Ontario company rented three days' space in a local department store to take children's portraits. The store's promotional ad promised "Super package offer now only $14.99. Package offer features our selection (one pose) on traditional blue background."

Sitting fee for each child of $2 plus PST and GST was rung up on the store's till. Parents received a printed receipt showing sitting number and an appointment for picking up the finished photos three weeks later.

The receipt read in part, "Parents or grandparents must come to select your portraits. Additional portraits are available for your selection at reasonable prices."

Kids, perched on a small table, were photographed facing a black tripod camera amid a snarl of electrical cables, racks of jackets and curious customers.

For the first pose taken against the traditional blue background - the store's selection - many children were as apprehensive as a felon facing a firing squad.

In second and third poses, against backgrounds of puppies, teddybears, and sunny meadows, children relaxed and were preoccupied catching bubbles blown by the female photographer or reaching for

Through Bifocals

by Claudette Sandeck

an Oscar the Grouch puppet.

Three weeks later mothers were met by a male salesperson. He offered no leeway in pickup date, no chance to take pictures home to consult family, ("She's had three weeks to get her family here to help select pictures"), mothers were expected to make a snap choice while juggling newborns and catching toddlers. His attitude was pure Fonz. "October 19, 2:15. Be there."

The store's selection was $14.99. Second and third poses - more natural and far cuter - cost between $29.99 for a 10x13 picture and $239.00 depending upon picture sizes and combinations. Noting a pack of Players in the handbag of a mother who regretted being short of money for the cuter, more expensive photo, the Fonz said, "All you have to do is quit smoking and you could buy the pictures."

Mothers of young children are inexperienced consumers, too busy taking care of kids to fight for fair treatment from intimidating salespersons. Not us grandmothers.

I've since learned licensees who rent space in this store must adhere to all of the store's policies -- including customer satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded. A store till receipt is a contract with the store.

Problems with the portrait people or any other licensee can be taken up with the store's manager.

Customers have up to 90 days in which to order from the Ontario head office where negatives are kept. Phone number and address appear on the sitting receipt. But prices are even more expensive.

The store backs customers' right to have money refunded at any time if dissatisfied with a purchase, including portraits.

The Fonz never hinted any of these routine safeguards applied to his customers.

It's a potential blueprint of the Terrace of the 21st century. The city has now released its draft land use plan for the community. And it is just a draft plan at this stage. Although the precise format of the meetings has yet to be decided, the public will get a chance to have their say on the plan. Below is an brief outline of some of the proposals contained in what is officially called the Comprehensive Development Plan Phase II: Land Use Options. If you want a closer look at the document, contact City Hall.

Mayor urges attention to details

Jack Talstra

TERRACE -- When residents look at the new land use plan released by the city, they should take special note of suggested options for two areas of the city, says mayor Jack Talstra.

The first is north of Lazelle Ave. between Eby and Kalum Sts., earmarked for the projected expansion of the downtown commercial core.

The other "critical" area is either side of Kalum St. north of the courthouse.

The land use plan puts forward two options for this area, one of which targets the area for commercial expansion (see story below).

Talstra also hoped people would look beyond the land use map and check out "the fine print" accompanying it.

He pointed out that offered a fuller explanation of what each suggested designation meant.

In the absence of a city planner following Marvin Kamenz's resignation last month, Talstra said the consultants used in drawing up the land use plan would be called back to guide it through the public input sessions.

But just what form those sessions would take had not yet been decided, he added.

The options, he explained, were to hold a single public meeting covering the entire plan, several such meetings or a series of them each looking at a specific neighbourhood only.

Emphasizing the consultants knew "most of the background" to the plan, Talstra also suggested it was perhaps a good thing to use them as a "buffer between the politicians and the public".

Once the public have had their say and council has decided what the final land use designations are to be, it will then bring in a new Official Community Plan (OCP) by-law.

However, while there is a case for then moving quickly to rezone properties so they comply with the new OCP, Talstra said council would have to exercise caution.

"We don't want huge areas becoming a non-conforming use," he explained.

For example, even if the Kalum St. commercial zone idea was approved, the city would not immediately rezone it as such.

While pleased with the land use plan, Talstra noted it had once again pointed to the lack of available land for future industrial development.

"That continues to be a problem," he said, agreeing the lack of an opportunity to expand the industrial tax base meant homeowners would continue to bear the brunt of the local tax burden.

Another problem the city has to deal with is the areas where many people would prefer to live and those where city services, particularly sewers, are located do not always match.

For example, Talstra pointed out the service infrastructure was in place on the south side of the city but people were not building on vacant land there as quickly as the city had hoped.

Instead, there was a strong preference for areas on the Bench, a large part of which had no sewer service at present.

Sewer installation being an expensive proposition, council had to decide "how quickly we want to move the Bench to residential," he added.

Kalum St. option sees commercial sector take over

TERRACE -- It's called Kalum Street Option 2 and it's the most sweeping change suggested in the city's recently released land use report.

The area in question is the stretch of Kalum from Davis to the foot of the escarpment.

"This neighbourhood presents an interesting planning situation," says the report.

"It is an area with high traffic volumes and apparent commercial potential and the existing residential development east of Kalum St. shows signs of aging," it adds.

of the area turning into a commercial centre in years to come, the report does recognize there's a downside to the concept.

"The one major concern with this option is the unavoidable displacement of the residents living in the mobile home parks and townhouses," it concedes.

For that reason, the city would have to ensure alternate and affordable housing was available for those people.

That could include non-profit housing projects on either the forty acre parcel of land east of Mountain Vista on which the city has already placed a reserve, or city-owned land extending from the arena to the courthouse.

Given the above and lack of large parcels of commercially designated land close to the existing downtown core, the report suggests most of the land on the east side of Kalum between the courthouse and Soucie could be earmarked for future commercial development.

A further alternative would be "new mobile home parks that could be constructed upon application to council".

Such a designation, it predicts, "would be of benefit to the city as it is likely to increase land values and therefore encourage its redevelopment."

Commenting on the commercial option, mayor Jack Talstra stressed the proposal was looking many years down the road.

Currently zoned multi-family residential, most of the land is occupied by trailer courts and townhouses.

Even if the option was approved, "Nothing's going to be torn down now," he added.

Describing the townhouse development at Hanson and Scott as "near the end of its life span", the report says "redevelopment for commercial uses would be more practical."

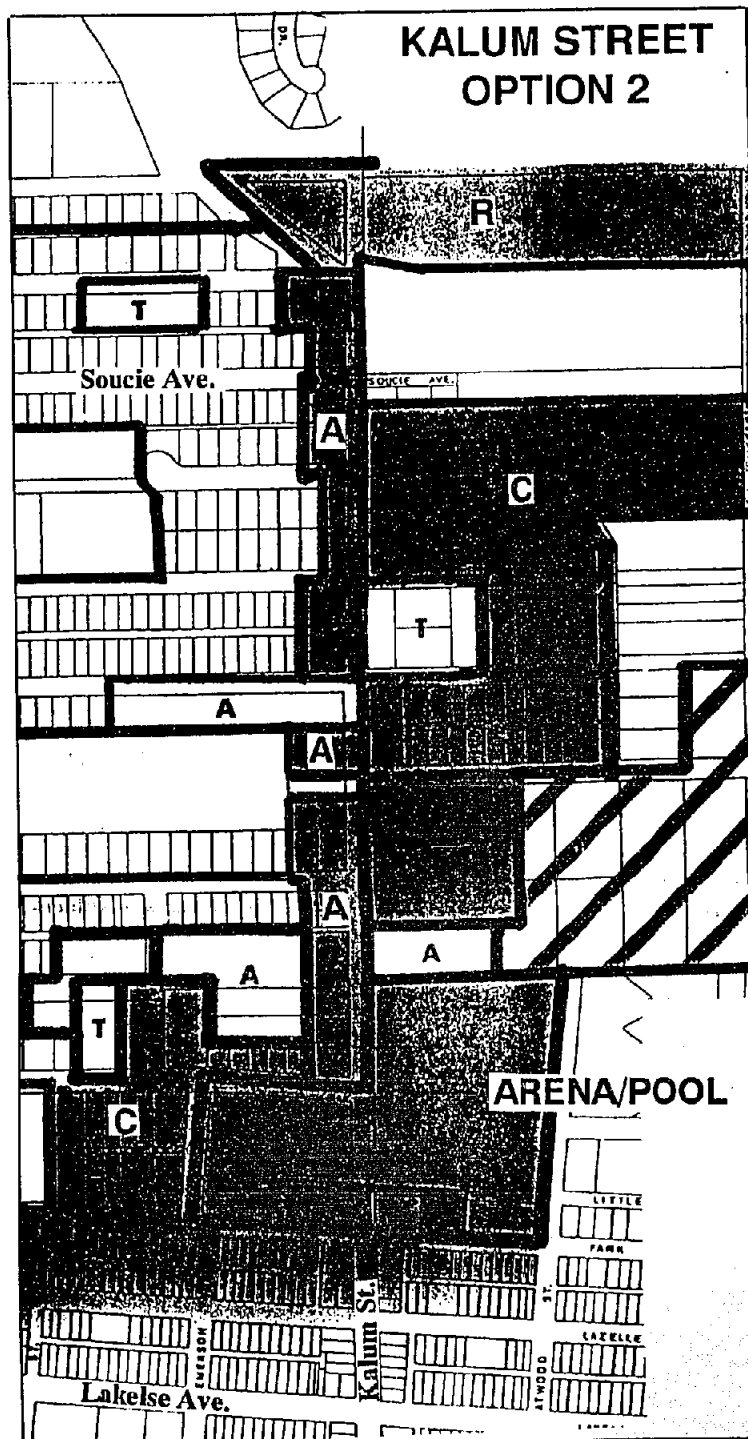

Option 2 also earmarks the strip of properties along the west side of Kalum St. for what it calls arterial commercial zoning.

Excluded from the commercial designation, however, are the Cedar Grove townhouses which it notes are "well maintained and unlikely to be redeveloped in the near future."

Explaining this designation would include commercial operations which did not conflict with adjacent residential areas, the report says it would create "a buffer between the residential area and the proposed core commercial area on the east side of Kalum."

Retaining a residential presence in a commercial area is also desirable because the 24-hour use provides diversity and improved security, the report adds.

The alternative Option 1 leaves the east side of Kalum as multi-family residential, gives the same designation to properties on the west side of the street and earmarks the land north of the arena for institutional development "such as a conference centre or second arena".

Key to planning map

- A (non-shaded areas) ..... Residential, apartments
- A (shaded areas) ..... Commercial, arterial
- C ..... Commercial, core
- R ..... Rural, five acre minimum lot size
- T ..... Residential, townhouses
- Striped ..... Mixed use, municipal use and non-profit housing
- Unmarked ..... Residential (one and two family) or existing parks, schools and public buildings.

Neighbourhood by neighbourhood

The Land Use Plan breaks the city down into a number of areas and outlines preferred zoning designations for each. Whatever council's final decision on those designations will eventually be incorporated into a new Official Community Plan which is intended to be the framework upon which future development in the city takes place.

Below, a quick summary of the main points for a number of neighbourhoods covered by the plan.

Central Core West

Extends from Sparks to Lanfear Hill and Sande Overpass to Olson.

Two options are offered here, the first described as "a conservative approach". It sees the commercial core extend up to include Park from Eby almost to Sparks. Most of the properties between Eby and Munroe and Lazelle and Park are designated residential up to and including apartments.

Option two sees creation of a mixed commercial-residential "buffer zone" extending north to take in part of Davis Ave. with a similar designation being given to an area just west of Eby at Lazelle.

East Bench

This area stretches from the Munthe neighbourhood west to Benner and north to Dairy.

Suggested designations here include rural, single family and two family residential.

The area north of Gair, except where single family homes are already in place, is earmarked as rural.

That will mean downgrading some properties which, although currently zoned single and two family residential, are being used as rural land.

Benner Street's zoning would change from two-family to single family, in line with present development.

Central Bench

Essentially Thomas to Eby and north to Gair.

Originally given a rural designation, this has been changed to residential because of existing residential development and potential view lots.

Included is a proposal to slate city-owned land on Twedle Ave. and overlooking the Skeena Valley as medium density residential.

West Bench

Covers Thomas west to Spring Creek and Mountain Vista north to Halliwell.

The designations here are largely in line with existing development. The Mountain Vista Drive area's present land use contract is considered to provide enough land to meet any commercial needs in the area for the next several years.

Crown land to the east of Mountain Vista is earmarked for municipal recreation and institutional use as well as non-profit and affordable housing.

Most of the area would get a rural designation with the minimum lot size reduced to two acres from five.

South Keith (West)

The area south of the railway tracks extending from Frank to South Eby.

Little change to existing zoning except for properties west of Braun. Those along Skeena and the west side of Braun would get a two-third acre residential designation while Haugland west of Braun gets a two acre minimum lot size.

South Keith (East)

The remaining area on the city's south side.

Highway 16 east retains its highway commercial designation except for land either side of the approach to the bridge which is designated as entertainment commercial (covers motels and restaurants).

Several areas between Tetrault and Kerr, including the present site of the animal shelter, have been proposed for multi-family residential.

Council must tackle infrastructure

TERRACE -- Before the city spends any more money on either upgrading or extending its services, it has to get a long term plan in place.

That warning is delivered by ex-planner Marvin Kamenz in the land use option report.

"It is imperative that a comprehensive infrastructure program, which addresses infrastructure maintenance, upgrading and expansion be established in conjunction with a five year capital plan," Kamenz emphasizes.

He goes on to say, "Terrace is faced with an existing infrastructure system in critical need of upgrading, an insufficient level of infrastructure maintenance, no infrastructure improvement plan and no capital plan."

Unless such a comprehensive program is followed, he adds, it's possible "the current ad-hoc upgrading, maintenance and expansion of city infrastructure is at a level of service which the city cannot afford."

Kamenz's blast comes in a section of the report dealing with promoting development on the Bench.

Noting future development in the Horseshoe area is now limited to infilling the few remaining vacant lots, he says builders and buyers appear to regard the west and central bench areas as the best alternative location.

However, storm sewers draining those areas would flow into either Howe Creek (already over capacity) or the Mountain Vista ditch (close to capacity).

Taking that, existing sanitary sewers and recreation facilities into account, Kamenz concludes if the city is going to actively promote development by extending services, "development in the Central Bench would be more cost effective."

BUSINESS REVIEW

Bank on this

DARRIN AND RENE Roux from Wildwood Construction prepared forms for a 1,100 square foot addition to the Toronto-Dominion bank branch. There'll be more customer service space and a new home for the branch's cash machines. The existing interior will also be renovated. Completed is scheduled for next spring, perhaps in time to coincide with the branch's 25th anniversary of opening in Terrace.

Two stores progressing on projects

TERRACE — Months of construction at Safeway is beginning to take shape and Overwaita's renovations are coming along as the two food retailers prepare new looks and new features for their stores.

In total, the stores are spending close to $6 million in an effort to attract and keep customers.

The efforts reflect an increasing diversification for food stores in the 1990s, say their spokesmen.

Each store is adding specialty shops such as new delis, a fish counter at Safeway and a sausage kitchen at Overwaita.

Safeway is adding approximately 13,000 square feet and Overwaita is increasing the number of bulk food items.

The Safeway project amounts to $5 million, including the cost of purchasing land and paying for the relocation of Ottawa St. Overwaita's project will cost between $750,000 and $1 million.

Safeway is adding a pharmacy while Overwaita is installing new check stands.

Those check stands are only the second of their type to be installed in Overwaita and Save On Foods stores in B.C. and Alberta, says company spokesman Cheryl Gerhardt.

Customers will be able stay with their buggies while the cashier won't have to turn his or her back on the customer, she said.

"They'll be more flexible and efficient," Gerhardt added.

Safeway's Don Bell described his company's expansion here as part of a province wide initiative to improve its stores.

"We could see, with no problem, having between 25,000 and 30,000 items in that store," he said.

The Safeway project follows the opening of a brand new store in Prince Rupert earlier this year.

Safeway's new bakery has opened and other sections will open as they are finished.

Bell anticipates final finishing work will be done in January.

Overwaita's Gerhardt expects a mid-November conclusion to its project.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

Parliamentary Reform

CALL FOR SUBMISSIONS

Two referenda questions were presented to voters on October 17, 1991. The first asked whether the right of 'recall' should be instituted in British Columbia. That is, should voters be given the right, by legislation, to vote between elections for the removal of their Member of the Legislative Assembly?

The second question asked whether the right of 'initiative' should be introduced in the province. That is, should voters be given the right, by legislation, to propose questions that the Government of British Columbia must submit to voters by referendum?

The Select Standing Committee on Parliamentary Reform, Ethical Conduct, Standing Orders and Private Bills has been authorized by the House to examine and inquire into all matters and issues concerning these two referenda questions and to make appropriate recommendations to the Legislative Assembly.

This all-party Legislative Committee invites written submissions on all matters and issues relating to the two referenda questions including the introduction of recall and initiative legislation in British Columbia. Submissions will be accepted by the Committee until December 31, 1992. Public hearings are being scheduled and will be advertised.

Health projections worry local union

TERRACE — The head of a local health care union local is worried about health ministry projections which indicate fewer hospital beds will be needed.

Elaine Pigeau of the Hospital Employees Union says the document suggests a continued decline of hospital health care in the northwest.

The document projects population and bed demand in five-year increments from 1991 to 2011 for local health areas. Terrace's local health area takes in Stewart and the Hazeltons.

While the projection is for an increased population, the number of beds drops from existing levels in Mills Memorial Hospital here, at Wrinch Memorial in the Hazeltons and at the hospital in Stewart.

Those projections are divided into three sections — one for 2.75 beds per thousand population (the recommendation of the recent royal commission into health care), one for beds assuming present use and one for beds assuming a switch to community-based health care.

The result once the totals are added up, says Pigeau, is an overall decline.

The 2.75 beds per thousand projection total is 92, amounting to 68 beds at Mills assuming Wrinch keeps its 25 beds and Stewart its 10 beds, she said.

"That's one less than we have now — after the cuts of this year," said Pigeau.

The number drops to 68 beds overall in the three communities at present use and 69 overall with the switch to more community care, she added.

Elaine Pigeau

And even if there are bed declines in Stewart and Hazelton, there won't be a lot of beds remaining at Mills, Pigeau continued.

"That's hardly sufficient for local needs, let alone for Mills as a regional referral centre," she said.

Pigeau said the document might make some sense if there was evidence of more community services in the northwest as an alternative to hospital care.

"So far we haven't seen anything. Is it on, or isn't it?" she said.

The move to community care was used this year as an explanation when northern hospitals had their budgets frozen at 1991 levels.

Pigeau said the document was presented to health minister Elizabeth Cull when she visited here in June.

"She first denied all knowledge of it and then said it was only a working document anyway," said Pigeau.

That leaves Pigeau with the feeling that the health ministry is pursuing a plan without involving northwest hospitals.

"I think this is an example of the kind of back room dealing that's going on. We don't know the half of it," she said.

Terrace Regional Health Care Society chief executive officer Michael Leisinger described the document as interesting.

"It was like holding a cross to a vampire," said Leisinger of Cull's reaction when it was presented during her visit.

Yet he discounted the effect the document might have, saying it was probably created to provide information.

"It's clearly somebody playing with the numbers. I don't think it's a policy. We do that here, a 'what if' approach," Leisinger said.

Prepare a young mind for tomorrow.

Local control coming

TERRACE — A provincial association is predicting the day when health care planning and authority rests with regional boards.

Those boards will be made up of representatives of community health care groups, says Herman Crewson, president of the B.C. Health Association.

In town recently for a meeting of northwest health officials, Crewson said regional boards will be better able to respond to local needs.

He calls them a more efficient and practical way of providing health care with a limited amount of money.

"It'll be able to look long and hard at duplication of services, the administrative infrastructure," said Crewson.

He said moving health care planning into the regions will be the first step followed by the authority to make spending decisions.

Eventually, Crewson continued, regional health boards could be given a set amount of money each year with the power to spend it as it sees fit.

"It could simplify the allocation process to 18 or 20 regional boards," he said.

The key to that is breaking up what is now a highly decentralized health care bureaucracy based in Victoria.

But Crewson said that will be difficult to accomplish given a natural resistance to change.

"The (health) minister is going to have to have a lot of guts — pardon the expression, a lot of gumption," said Crewson of the prospect of transferring civil servants out of Victoria.

That's because of the power of civil service unions and their close connections with the NDP government.

"It'll be a very interesting dilemma. (Unions) will probably put as many roadblocks into place as they can to avoid it," Crewson commented.

Although decentralization has been talked about by many governments, Crewson believes the NDP government will follow through.

"So much of the reference material to allow this to happen is now in place for it to become policy," he said.

And there's a general feeling that limited health care budgets can be spent more efficiently away from centralized control and authority, he said.

More flooding forecast if dredging isn't done

TERRACE — Flooding at Lakelse Lake will be repeated next year — and could be even worse if flood-control measures aren't taken now.

That's the prediction of Lakelse Community Association president Sandy Sandhals, who wants the government to dredge the lake's outflow at Herman Creek.

"I'll bet bottom dollar next year will be the same thing," Sandhals said. "We're going to be flooded again. And it's going to become a yearly thing unless something's done."

The ministry of environment's water management technicians and the federal Department of Fisheries and Oceans are opposed to any dredging of the river, which is a rich salmon-spawning area.

"We're all browned off with the reaction of the ministries involved and our MLA," Sandhals said. "We're going to write some letters and see how far up the ladder we can go, and maybe get some results."

Environment ministry water management technician Wilf Dreher maintains dredging the river won't stop the flooding.

He says a 1988 study estimates that a dredging of a sand bar at Herman Creek would reduce the lake level by about three inches in a flood.

In order to reduce the flood level by two feet, a multi-million-dollar dredging of more than a kilometre of the river would have to be undertaken.

And even if that was done, the worst-affected homes would still be a couple feet under water.

"They're frustrated and we understand that," Dreher said. "But they have focussed on this one solution that we feel isn't going to solve the problem."

"We haven't seen any really good alternative other than raising individual buildings," he added.

Dreher said there's some sense in spending money to solve the problem rather than paying out more money each year for flood relief.

"The government has money for emergencies, but when it comes to taking preventative measures it's difficult to find the resources," he said.

Sandhals and other longtime lake residents believe the sand bar at Herman Creek is an important factor in the lake flooding, which has grown more frequent in recent years.

Sandhals says a fish fence installed in the 1950s caused the formation of the bar, which didn't exist before 1960.

He said taking a foot off the level of the bar could make a substantial difference in flooding. And he says an old exit channel of Herman Creek could be reopened to help slow or reverse the growth of the bar.

"They won't consider that," he said. "They won't consider anything. Nothing."

Lake residents decided to ask the Kitimat-Stikine regional district to review the 1988 study of lake flooding.

"If a review shows something can be done without damaging fish habitat, and will measurably affect flood levels, we would have no objection to it," Dreher said.

Police report

Cigarette smuggler nabbed

ABOUT $5,000 worth of cigarettes and tobacco smuggled in from Hyder, Alaska was seized by police last week.

RCMP Cpl. Rob MacKay said Terrace RCMP highway patrol officers stopped a Terrace woman just outside of town around 6 p.m. Oct. 9.

He said her vehicle was seized and the woman will have to pay more than $8,000 in customs penalties for the illegal smuggling in order to regain her car.

There is a $55 penalty assessed for each undeclared carton of cigarettes imported and $32 per can of tobacco.

MacKay said the woman was in possession of about 150 cartons of cigarettes and 100 cans of tobacco.

Three injured in collision

THREE PEOPLE were injured when two pickup trucks collided around 1 p.m. Oct. 19 at the corner of Munroe St. and Straume Ave.

RCMP said there was extensive damage to both vehicles.

CBC switches news show

TERRACE — Say good-bye to Peter Mansbridge at 10 p.m. beginning Nov. 2.

That's when the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is switching the The National and The Journal from 10 p.m. to 9 p.m.

It'll open the way to hour-long TV shows in the 10 p.m. to 11 p.m. slot, says Chris Holtom, television operations manager for CFTK.

The CBC is combining the news-oriented The National with the feature-oriented The Journal into a new format as part of the switch to 9 p.m.

It is also cancelling its 11 p.m. newscast out of Vancouver and that creates more room for half hour shows, said Holtom.

A local 15-minute news package will still run at 11:30 p.m.

On Fridays, TK will show movies between 10 p.m. and midnight.

Holtom said there are no current plans to pick up portions of an expanded CBC TV Vancouver supper hour newscast that starts Nov. 2.

"We can't say anything concrete either way because we don't know what format it will take," said Holtom of the longer supper hour show.

The station has brought back a morning news show originating with Newsworld, the CBC's all-news channel.

That morning show ran earlier this year until it was cancelled by TK.

CFTK receives only a couple of requests a year for Newsworld, says cablevision manager Sharon Taylor.

Similar to CNN, Newsworld is an all-news and information channel offered across the country.

"It doesn't seem to be a high priority for a majority of people in this area," said Taylor.

Broadcast regulations require that Newsworld, if offered, be put on the basic cable service between Channels 2 and 30 and that each cable subscriber has to pay for it.

That channel now costs 55 cents a month, an increase from the 32 cents a month it cost until this summer.

Newsworld is on the cable system in Prince Rupert.

LETTERS

Crony takes on the Angler

An open letter to:

Rob Brown,
The Skeena Angler

Dear Sir:

One of my cronies, referred to in your Oct. 14 column, called to let me know that my name had been mentioned therein. I am pleased that he called otherwise I would never have known even though I do subscribe to The Terrace Standard.

After reading your article I contacted my cronies, who have lived and fished in this area including Lakelse River long before you were born, to gather some non-pseudo factual data.

The first Lakelse Lake flood, known to native elders who were here at the time, occurred in 1935. This was not a localized flood and I can bear witness to this as I lived at Port Essington at the time and can recall seeing whole islands of trees, still standing, drifting up and down the Skeena River as the tide ebbed and flowed.

In 1952, Mr. Joe Martell of the Department of Fisheries, built a fish counting fence downstream from Herman Creek. It was constructed of sheet piling and rocks taken from the river bed. The Department of Fisheries personnel were very obliging and built in a "roller" at the top of a section of the fence in order to enable us cronies to get our boats over the fence. (Few motors in those days.)

The fish fence was removed in 1959 when it became apparent that gravel build up against the fence was causing an obstruction to the river's normal flow. In Mr. Martell's own words, and I quote, "The site was graded level with a bulldozer, the rocks being pushed against the banks."

Bulldozing to remove the fence had no detrimental effect on the Lakelse River as fish counts in the next few years indicated pink returns were triple amounts of gravel which has created Herman Bar. My pseudo-scientific hokum believes this is happening because Herman Creek flash floods before the lake rises to a level where it could wash some of the gravel emanating from Herman Creek downstream.

An additional outlet at the mouth of Herman Creek would ease the velocity of the flow now taking place from its only outlet.

Prior to about 1960, Herman Bar did not exist which means the outlet of Lakelse River at Herman tween 1978 and 1992 have been just at borderline flood stage.

Using my above ground basement floor as a gauge, I have been within a half-inch to one and a half inches of flooding many times since the 1978 flood. We were fortunate in 1992 that there was no new snowpack in the mountains or flooding would have been far worse and will become worse in future years.

The residents at Lakelse have never advocated "dredging" and most certainly not altering the depth of the channel at Herman Bar.

We cronies have known the value of the Lakelse Lake and River system long before you wet your first line, Mr. Brown, and have no desire or intent to destroy this valuable resource.

Among my occupations during my lifetime, I was a commercial fisherman. Prior to going overseas in 1943, as was my father, we fished the "mouth" of the Skeena for years.

Bulldozing the river in 1959 did not harm fish runs in subsequent years and I do not see why it should now.

I would also like to inform you, Mr. Brown, that our floodplain dwellings were not in a floodplain when the government subdivided Lakelse Lake into residential lots back in 1910 to provide a townsite when it was thought that Kitimat was to become the terminus of the Grand Trunk Pacific railway. I reside on one of these lots.

The 1988 study, prepared by P.J. Woods of the Special Projects Section of the Ministry of Environment and Parks, states it did not have adequate records of the Lakelse system when they did their study (see par 3.0). Consequently, they used data from the Zymacord River and correlated this information to the Lakelse system. This might be considered "pseudo scientific" and the accuracy of this study could be questioned.

If fish spawn on Herman Bar at its present elevation, the spawn would not survive the winter because it would be anywhere from two to four feet above the low level of the Lake during the winter and the spawn would freeze.

A letter dated June 22, 1989, from Allan W. Woody, Manager of the Terrace Ministry of the Solicitor General, Provincial Emergency Program, to Mr. Brian Fuhr, Regional Habitual Biologist, Ministry of the Environment, states as follows, and I quote:

"On Saturday, April 29, 1989, the Honourable David Parker, M.L.A., Mr. Wilf Dreher, Ministry of Environment, Mr. Lloyd Johnstone and I took a helicopter ride over Lakelse and Herman Creek estuary. The purpose of our trip was to establish if local flood conditions were to the degree that necessitated Water Management appraisal. As a result of that particular trip, it was generally agreed that the Herman Creek Gravel Bar significantly played a role in high water conditions. This factor greatly increases the level of flood risk to the homeowners in the Herman Creek and Lakelse area."

Like us cronies at Lakelse Lake, you are entitled to your opinion Mr. Brown, but until you know all the facts regarding this issue, I suggest you stick to teaching school where you have a slight edge in seniority and a captive audience.

Yes, we were all wet September 29, 30 and October 1, 1992, but we have dried out again. We may be down but we are not out!

Yours truly,
W.A. (Sandy) Sandhals
Lakelse Lake, B.C.

1959's 185,000 in 1962, and reached 1.2 million in 1964.

It appears that runs increased in the two and four year cycles.

Herman Creek, back before you, Mr. Brown, arrived in Terrace, had three outlets in the Lakelse River. In 1952, it had two outlets. It now has one. I'll inject a little pseudo-scientific hokum at this point by saying this could have been caused by a combination of the fish fence, logging in this watershed, and flash floods.

Consequently, flash floods at Herman Creek now deposit large

Bar has been reduced from approximately 150 feet to approximately 50 feet. You have heard the old saying that a picture speaks a thousand words; well, us cronies have photographs that show clearly how the bar has grown year after year and by some pseudo-scientific coincidence flooding at Lakelse is becoming more and more frequent.

The next major flood after 1935 was 42 years later (1978), and then 14 years after that in 1992. However, the years be-

Freedom from persecution is the real issue at stake

Dear Sir:

I can sympathize with Tom Brophy's frustration (letter to the editor, Oct. 7/92) at the encroachment that Sunday shopping has placed upon his freedom of religion. I also understand the moral dilemma of Christians who feel oppressed by having to work on the day that they would like to have off.

What Brophy is describing in his letter is exactly what I and others who observe another day of worship other than Sunday have faced in the past due to legislation which limits one's freedom of religion in the workplace.

The gist of Brophy's letter suggests however that he is not aware that when he argues for his religious freedoms, he is in fact limiting the freedoms of others, especially when he sees the solution to his problem to legislation of no shopping on Sundays.

The enactment of Sunday laws have been shown to create prejudice in the market-place against Sabbath observers. Hundreds of thousands of Seventh-day Adventist over time, have lost their jobs because of the oppressive laws which prohibit employment on Sunday in lieu of a Saturday-Sabbath rest.

Prior to his conversion experience, Brophy (at that time an agnostic) writes that he angrily considered Christians who limited his personal freedom as "blue-nose Christian bigots." Now, as an enlightened Christian, I trust that he would not treat others who do not agree with his religious views in a similar fashion by foisting upon such people restrictive Sunday legislation.

I, and fellow Seventh-day Adventists, do not seek to secularize Sunday to make it difficult for our Sunday-keeping brethren, but the matter of which day to observe must be left to the individual conscience, and what people ought to be allowed freedom to rest and worship, without the threat of economic or social penalty because of their choice.

Again I reiterate: the solution is not that of legislating people to keep the same day of rest/worship.

A suggested solution to the problem is to encourage labour unions to change their collective agreement policy which limits employers to hire part-time workers. This practice forces employers to ask their workers to work overtime when business hours are extended, as well as create shift work schedules that overlap the weekend.

It should be noted that labour unions have at the same time joined with religious interests to call for the enforcement of Sunday closing. Some view this as hypocritical. If the labour movement is interested in the welfare of the common man, why would it oppose free will Sunday employment? It is suggested that if labour unions would accept that employers may hire part-time workers from time to time, then Sunday shopping might become a non-issue.

In fact, Sunday retailing would provide considerable economic help for those who otherwise are totally unemployed.

People reading Mr. Brophy's letter may see that he is asking for justice, but it is sad if what he really means is "just us." The principle of freedom of religion should prevent the state from enacting laws which give an advantage to one religious grouping over another. In fact, Sunday-laws symbolize historical oppression of religion.

I invite your readers to support the principle of freedom from religious persecution in the workplace, a policy which would serve the purpose from all religious groups.

Sincerely,
Ulrich Unruh, Pastor

Computer money approved

The city is about to spend more than $50,000 to upgrade its computer system.

With the existing system running at capacity, treasurer Keith Norman had pointed out "problems are being encountered with backing up as well as the slow speed of accessing information."

Buying the new system would save the approximately $10,000 it would cost to upgrade the present one.

Norman anticipated the replacement system would meet the city's needs for at least five years.

Most of the $53,800 purchase price will come from penalty money collected for late payment of taxes with the rest being drawn from the city's accumulated surplus.

City to cast bread upon waters

Council has approved spending $500 to sponsor a function at the Nov. 19-21 North by Northwest Tourism Association convention in Smithers.

In recommending the move, tourism and economic development officer Peter Monteith noted Terrace was bidding for the 1994 convention and therefore "it would be wise to be a sponsor at this year's convention".

Appointments confirmed

Aldermen have confirmed appointments for two of the city's advisory bodies.

Bob Walch will be the chamber of commerce representative on the Recycling Advisory committee while Mitch Stolarchuk will sit on the Parks and Recreation Advisory commission.

Hang over no problem

Council last week granted a request from Gary Morrison to relax the side yard clearance regulations on his new Birch Hill home.

Morrison explained an error during construction meant the roof overhang on one side of the house was six inches too close to the property line. The error had been spotted by a city building inspector.

Morrison also produced a letter showing his neighbour had no objection to a variance permit being issued.

Also approved was the rezoning of Herb Quast's property at the corner of McConnell and Thomas from A1 Rural to R1 Single Family Residential. The official community plan is also being similarly amended for all properties on the west side of Thomas St. between Halliwell and McConnell.

Mill group not formed

TERRACE — The committee being established to oversee the planned Orenda Forest Products pulp and paper mill still hasn't been formed.

It'll be headed by the Kitimat-Stikine regional district and native groups affected by the project.

But while the regional district has appointed its co-chairman, Lakelse Lake director Sandy Sandhals, and an alternate, a native co-chairman has yet to be named.

It's not yet known when that will take place.

After the native appointment, invitations will go out to government and other groups for representatives to sit on the committee, says regional district economic development officer Andrew Webber.

The monitoring committee was a condition of the project being given approval in principle last spring.

Some groups have already named their representatives.

Bert Orleans is the representative from the Lakelse Community Association.

The City of Terrace has named two people - mayor Jack Talstra if the committee is to be political in nature or economic development officer Peter Monteith if the committee won't be political.

Webber said the intent is not have the monitoring committee act as a political body.

Still to be decided are the powers the committee will have or if it will have its own budget for studies it may require.

That's the intent of the regional district and of the Tsimshian Tribal Council and the Haisla of Kitamaat Village near Kitimat.

Those groups made their point to provincial government officials over the summer.

But Webber said it was first decided to set up the committee before deciding its role and responsibility.

In the meantime, a decision on choosing a company to do a study on the socio economic affects of the project on area natives is close.

The latest in a series of meetings took place in Vancouver last week, says local economic development ministry official Harold Demetzer.

"We're closer to finishing this," said Demetzer.

The study is another one of the requirements attached to the approval in principle given the project.

Emergency man resigns position

TERRACE — Cliff Best has resigned as zone co-ordinator for the Provincial Emergency Program (PEP).

Best, who retired as local fire chief last year, took on the position following the January resignation of predecessor Ray Tank.

In his letter of resignation to council, Best explained the job "was taking a lot more time than I am able to give and more responsibility than I am prepared to accept."

Best pointed out he had been asked to take six different courses during his brief tenure, the local Emergency Plan had been updated and local rescue groups had responded to more than 50 incidents.

Preparations to test the Emergency Plan in the near future and to stage a major information display during next year's P.E.P. Week were also under way.

Aldermen accepted the resignation "with regret" and have asked administration to begin the process of finding a successor.

EVERYONE on hand for the pole-raising was pressed into service to help hoist it into place.

RAISING A POLE

Canyon City natives replace lost 'idols'

GITWINKSIHLKW
HUNDREDS OF Nisga'a natives and visitors from afar joined together Oct. 17 to celebrate the making of history in the Nass Valley.

They met in Canyon City, now known as Gitwinksihlkw, for a totem pole raising — the first one in that village in more than a century.

The last standing totem poles in Gitwinksihlkw were cut down around the turn of the century on the orders of Anglican missionaries, who called them heathenous idols.

Some were sold to collectors in Europe, but most were cut up and used to buttress the foundation of the village's old Anglican church, which was later taken over by the Salvation Army.

"I was very disgruntled when I found out about that," Gitwinksihlkw band council member Art Azak recalls. "But the good Bible tells us to forgive."

Now, more than 80 years after those poles were destroyed, Anglican Church and Salvation Army officials came back to Canyon City to atone for that wrong.

They stood stiffly in the blinding snowstorm to bless the new totem pole and to thank God for the rich culture He gave the Nisga'a people.

Gitwinksihlkw chief Chester Moore said the pole raising represents a move to reclaim some of the Nisga'a spirituality that was lost during the missionary era.

The entire crowd was pressed into service for the raising of the pole. Every able-bodied man and woman helped heft the pole or grabbed a rope to help haul it upright.

Once upright, the crowd fled the frigid weather and headed inside the community hall, where Gitwinksihlkw wolf and eagle clan members hosted an elaborate feast of soup and traditional native seafood.

After the feast, speeches, gift-giving, and settlement of the feast was completed, visitors were treated to a display of traditional dancing that lasted late into the night.

ALL TIED UP: Joshua Azak secures the ropes just prior to the raising of the totem pole.

POLE CARVER Alver Tait touches his work for the last time. According to tradition, he will never again lay a hand on the pole after it is raised.

Pole celebrates village mother

The new totem pole in Gitwinksihlkw commemorates the life of Louisa Oyea, a wolf clan woman who lived in the 1800s in Canyon City and is considered the mother of the village. Here is a brief biography of her life, courtesy of the Gitwinksihlkw band council.

Louisa Oyea was a very beautiful young lady, born in 1847 and died on May 26, 1912.

Many young men were interested in her and she had many proposals, but because she was the only surviving young woman in Baxkap, wolf Phratry clan, her uncle Chief Oyea (the famous carver) kept refusing her suitors because she was very important to the house of Gitlaxtiyookhl.

One day she decided to have her own way and eloped with a white man named Bob Moore, who owned a sawmill in Victoria. She raised her family of three boys in Victoria — Johnny, Jacob and William. Bob Moore died while the boys were still very young.

Through the wisdom of one Killer Whale —

Chief Peter Williams — Louisa Oyea was brought home to Gitwinksihlkw. He asked Chief Oyea to marry Louisa, and permission was granted if Mr. Williams would take Louisa back home.

He prepared his journey, and set off in a large canoe for Victoria to look for her.

Once he found her, they bought a canoe from the Squamish people and escaped to New Westminster.

From there they boarded a steam boat home. Before they left they tipped the canoes over and pushed them out to sea, so that people would think they drowned and would not come after them.

They returned to Gitwinksihlkw in 1885. Chief Oyea was so happy, he wept for a long time and put on a big feast to celebrate. Louisa came home with a sewing machine and much linen, and made handkerchiefs and introduced them to the Nisga'a.

From Peter Williams, Louisa bore two daughters — Martha and Agnes. Today the expansion of the Louisa Oyea blood line populates over 400.

UNDER ARREST

NABBED: 'Kidnapping suspect' Robert Vagg gets his mugshot taken after being arrested for the abduction two weeks ago of a leader with the 8th Terrace Cubs. The cubs at last week's meeting used a series of clues to solve the case, rescue the missing leader and track down Vagg, who was taken away in handcuffs by Const. Jane Ruge. The cubs got an extensive tour of the RCMP detachment — including the drunk tank, the cells and the communications room. They got to talk to a real live prison guard, who told them the prisoners get three meals a day, which consist of microwaved TV dinners.

Confessions of a Big Mac-eating nutritionist

This week marks the first column by Skeena Health Unit nutritionist Gerry Kasten.

I have a terrible secret to reveal to you all: I like cheesecake and Big Macs!!!

It's true. At least now I don't have to wear a hat and sunglasses to go to McDonald's.

Just because we nutritionists know all about what's good to eat (and all about those foods to "choose less often"), it doesn't mean we always take our own advice.

As this is my first column in the Terrace Standard, and I thought I'd be self indulgent and take the space to share some of the real nutrition information that I've learned over the years:

Is it really true that anything you eat while walking has no calories?

Why are people with food allergies always allergic to whole wheat flour, milk, and raw carrots, and never allergic to nacho chips and Mars bars?

Don't you sometimes think that it'd be faster just to buy bran cereal and pour it into the toilet?

When you cut a birthday cake, do the calories leak out into the plate?

How do those pop-up timers in the turkeys really know when it's time to pop up?

Why do people with a freezer in the kitchen, a pantry, extra cupboard space, and a spare freezer in the basement still need to go shopping every single week?

The answers to these and many other questions will be answered in the weeks ahead.

Nutrition Notes by Gerry Kasten

But before I go, I leave you with the following guide to tell if someone is a real nutritionist.

He or she:
• Knows whole wheat flour makes terrible gravy, and wouldn't serve it with whole wheat Yorkshire puddings.

• Doesn't make soup from the water that was used to boil the beets.

• Doesn't pretend you can toss a salad in 1/2 a teaspoon of salad dressing.

• Accepts invitations to dessert and coffee parties.

- Turns down invitations to grape juice and cheese parties.
- Patronizes Anglican churches in search of real wine.
- Knows which liquor stores are open 'til 11:00 p.m.
- Takes back her own empties.
- Doesn't wear a disguise for the above.
- Doesn't perpetuate the myth that the Easter bunny deals in scrambled eggs.
- Doesn't give out home made spinach suckers for Hallowe'en.
- Gains weight over Christmas.
- Participates in pre- and post-Christmas diets.
- Has at least three recipes for chocolate cake.
- Knows the names and addresses of several bakeries.
- Doesn't make salt free play dough.

- Volunteers on hot dog days.
  - Sometimes sends in $1.98 and three "Rice Krispies" box tops.
  - Doesn't take carrot sticks to the movies.
  - Keeps strawberry liquorice in his desk drawer.
  - Makes occasional forays down the centre aisles of the supermarket.
  - Knows when to ignore the four food groups, the basic food plan, and all official nutrition guidelines!
- I'm looking forward to writing a column for the Standard, and hope you'll enjoy the information I'll be sharing about Nutrition. If there's a nutrition topic you'd like information about, let me know by writing to me (care of the Standard) or by calling me at the Skeena Health Unit.

Be a Foster Parent

Tribute

by Mike Nobel

I came to you a stranger afraid and filled with pain a tender kid with old and weary eyes inside the battle raging in my soul and mind from the heartache of the home I left behind.

*From a new abandoned baby to the streetwise boy and girl you offer us your shelter
the safety of your world
the healing happened slowly
one day at a time
even when the awful memories pull me down and with gentle understanding you cool the angry fires and do your best to turn my life around.*

*And I can't believe your kindness and how you're always there
I can't believe your patience and the ways you show you care
when I needed someplace safe to be you opened up your life to me
you've been a friend
through all the days of pain
you showed me how I can believe in love again.*

*And you looked beyond my anger,
my silence and my rage
even when I make your life a living hell and you show your satisfaction when I turn a brand new page and let some sunlight through my outer shell as I look into the future and I feel the love you give more than just surviving.
I'm learning how to live.*

*When I needed someplace safe to be
you opened up your life to me
you've been a friend
through all the days of pain
you showed me how I can believe in love again.*

*And so my foster parents
thank you for your love for your faith, for your guidance, and your time
I know you're not a savior
I know you're not a saint
I know the final choices will be mine.*

*No one sends you flowers and the world may never cheer for all your sacrifices and frustration and the tears
that I may never say I love you you may never see me cry
but the memories of your tenderness will keep my soul alive.*

*When I needed someplace safe to be
you opened up your life to me
you've been a friend
through all the days of pain
you showed me how I can believe in love again.*

Pioneering teachers

Now that all the children are back in school and everyone has settled into their routines, I'd like to send a big 'Welcome to Terrace' out to all the new teachers and students.

Welcome back to all the long-serving teachers in Terrace as well.

And on that note, I'd like to share some information on eight teachers who have been teaching in School District 88 for a number of years.

Christine Eide started her teaching career at a one-room school house at upper Klispix, which, of course, is no longer there.

She taught one year (1960-61) in Hazelton, and it was there that she met her man.

She came to Terrace in 1961, teaching first at Cassie Hall school, and then at Copper Mountain.

Christine was at Northwest Community College from 1979-1981 as a faculty associate on a Simon Fraser University training program.

She then received her principalship at Thornhill Elementary and since 1982, Mrs. Eide has been principal at Parkside School.

Al Cameron got his teaching degree at UBC and started teaching school in Terrace in 1962.

He first taught at Skeena School as a physical education and industrial education teacher.

He went to Caledonia in 1969 when it opened and stayed there until 1991, when he went over to Lakelse Alternate School. There he, another teacher and two youth workers work with students who have difficulty in regular classes and would otherwise drop out.

Mr. and Mrs. Cameron have three children who were raised in Terrace — son Allan, and daughters Alana and Carmie. They now have grandchildren growing up in Terrace.

Walt McIntyre first started teaching for School District 88 at Hazelton in 1965.

He came to Terrace in '66, teaching Grades 11-12 at Skeena School.

For a few years Walt went over to Riverside school, teaching at the old army huts the school district used as overflow for a few years.

"Here 'n There"

by Yvonne Moen

When Walt left there as vice-principal, he went back to Skeena for another seven years as a math consultant.

For the past 15 years Walt has been teaching at Caledonia — and is a great teacher!

Another well-known teacher here is Elizabeth Metzmeier.

Mrs. Metzmeier first taught for four years for the Prince George school district.

In 1965 she first started her teaching career in Terrace at Uplands Elementary School.

She also taught at Cassie Hall, Skeena Jr. Secondary, and then went to Thornhill Jr. Secondary.

She's been there since 1974 teaching Grades 8-10 and counselling as well.

As well as a dedicated teacher, Mrs. Metzmeier is a very active volunteer in the community.

Bonnie Shaw comes from an early settlers family that arrived in Terrace in 1949. She graduated at Skeena School.

She first taught in Alberta before returning to Terrace in 1965. Bonnie taught at Cassie Hall and Riverside School later going over to E.T. Kenney Primary for grade 3-4 special classes.

It was at Riverside that she fell in love with the man who would become her husband — Rick Shaw.

For four years Bonnie left teaching and went into real estate with her father.

In 1979 she returned to the classroom — at Skeena Jr. Secondary — teaching English part-time to new Canadians.

She's now teaching foods at Skeena, and Rick is retired.

Ed Kenny comes from a well-known pioneer family here.

His father was E.T. Kenny, whose name graces a primary school on Sparkes St.

Ed remembers going to grade 1 himself at a school where the Tilden Rent-a-Car franchise is located today.

He taught at Skeena first in 1962. Then he took a year hiatus to return to university before coming back to Skeena to teach again.

Ed made the move over to Caledonia Sr. Secondary in 1969 when it opened and is still there today.

Heather Piffer is another teacher from a local pioneer family.

Fred and Cassie Hall, her grandparents, came here in 1920.

Heather graduated from Skeena in 1964 and has now been teaching for 11 years here.

She now teaches at Cassie Hall Elementary School — which was named after her grandmother — and must feel very proud.

A very special visitor to Terrace earlier was Irene Bowie. Irene was born in Mar. 28, 1906 at Kitselas and was the first non-native baby born between the coast and Hazelton.

She was baptized aboard the paddlewheeler Hazelton. And Irene's sister Elsie Whitlow in Vancouver just had her 101st birthday on Sept. 9.

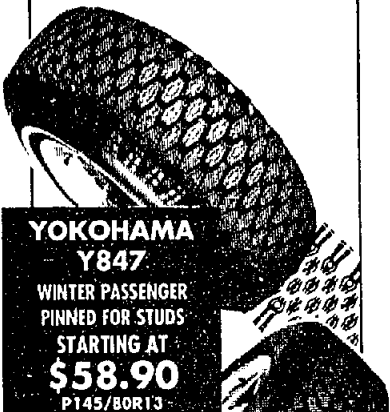

While in Terrace, Irene visited her sister Kay Varner and other family, including her granddaughter — Helene McRae.

And an early happy birthday wish goes out to Kay Varner for Nov. 28. She was born at Kitselas on Nov. 28, 1908

Sister Paddy also lives in Vancouver and will be 91 in November.

Best of health wishes go out to all four sisters.

Tips for a safe Hallowe'en

Contributed by the Terrace Fire Department

If your little ones will be participating in Hallowe'en activities this year, plan ahead to protect them from fire and burn injuries.

There are three key things to remember: Flame-resistant fabrics for costumes, Flame-resistant decorations for parties, and NO candles.

Hallowe'en can be a fun celebration, but children should be closely supervised and their costumes made with fire safety in mind. The Terrace Fire Department suggests the following

Come out to dance for heart

It's a celebration of health and fitness.

The Heart and Stroke Foundation celebrates the 10th anniversary of the Dance for Heart on Nov. 11 at 3 p.m. in the Skeena Jr. Secondary School gym.

The aerobic event promotes cardiovascular health and fitness while raising money to aid in research and education on Canada's number one killer — heart disease and stroke.

You can get involved by picking up a pledge form at the Terrace Arena or Aquatic Centre or at any fitness class.

To mark the 10th anniversary, pledge collectors will receive exciting gifts from a portable water bottle to an incredible warm up suit. There will also be prizes, music, refreshments.

Show your big heart. Participate in the Dance for Heart.

For more information, call Carol Wall at 638-4750.

guidelines for a safer Hallowe'en.

- Purchase only those costumes, wigs and props labeled as flame resistant or retardant. If using old clothing or fabric to construct a costume, plan carefully and create a costume that won't ignite easily if it comes in contact with heat or flame. No costume should have billowing or long-trailing features that present a higher risk of ignition.

- When planning party decorations bear in mind that dried flowers and cornstalks are highly flammable. Keep crepe paper and other decorations well away from heat sources. Do not decorate with candles. Pumpkins can be safely illuminated with small, inexpensive flashlights. When decorating, remember to keep exits clear. Be sure children are supervised at all times.

- Do not decorate your walkway or yard with candles or torch lights. With a little creativity, flashlights can be just as effective in creating a festive atmosphere.

- Instruct children to stay away from open flames or other heat sources. Be sure each child knows the Stop, Drop and Roll technique in the event their clothing catches fire. (Stop immediately, drop to the ground covering your face with your hands, and roll over and over to extinguish the flames.) Instruct children who are attending parties at others' homes to locate the exits and plan how they would get out in an emergency.

- Don't allow children to carry candles for lighting or as part of their costume. Provide lightweight flashlights for them to carry.

- Planning ahead can help make this Hallowe'en a firesafe one. For additional information on fire and burn prevention, contact the Terrace Fire Department at 638-4734.

FLYING FORM. One of several Bluebacks to enjoy success at the swim season's opening meet in Prince Rupert, David Vanderlee (above) beat all comers in the senior boys 100m butterfly on his way to a third place overall finish in his age group. Audrey Erb (below) went one better in her 9-10 years division as she picked up two wins and three thirds. The club is looking for even more impressive performances when it heads to the Kitimat meet held at the end of next month.

Bluebacks ease into season

Despite only being back in the water for two weeks, Terrace Bluebacks turned in impressive performances in the Oct. 17-18 Prince Rupert Invitational swim meet.

Leading the assault was Aimee Peacock, 14, who smashed a pool record on her way to a four wins/two seconds tally.

Peacock's record of 37.63 seconds in the Senior Girls 50m breast stroke carved more than two seconds off the old mark of 40 seconds even.

Her other victories came in the 200m individual medley, 100m breast stroke and 50m butterfly where she only just squeezed out team mate Jocelyn Coxford by 3/100ths of a second.

Almost as close, but the wrong way, were Peacock's two runner-up performances where she missed out by only 9/100ths in the 100m free style and 14/100ths in the 50m free.

Peacock was named the meet's top senior girls competitor.

Jocelyn Coxford, 15, whose weekend haul also included a win in the 100m 'fly and three thirds, finished third overall in the same group.

Garth Coxford once again proved unstoppable, streaking to a near record-breaking 34.59 in the 50m 'fly on the way to a five win performance and top honours for 11-12 year old boys.

Equally impressive among the junior swimmers was Audrey Erb.

Delivering on last season's promise, the 10-year-old ended the meet with two wins, three seconds and second overall in her age group.

David Vanderlee's two wins, three seconds earned him third overall in senior boys while Jason Kumpolt took fourth among 9-10 years boys.

Although the Bluebacks could finish no better than third in the four team meet, coach Mike Carlyle said he was in no way displeased by the result.

With the Bluebacks only just back in training, he'd not been too concerned with placings and times at the Rupert meet.

Instead, it had been an opportunity for the new coach to assess his swimmers' techniques and skills and establish where there was room for improvement.

As a result, the Bluebacks are now going to be spending more time working on their starts and turns, he added.

Host club Prince Rupert won the meet from Kitimat, Terrace and Masset.

Carlyle pointed out the final points standings reflected a decision to limit the number of races each Blueback entered.

That was taken because of the limited pool-time they'd had prior to the competition.

However, things will be quite different when they head for Kitimat's meet in late November. "We'll be entering as many as possible there," Carlyle said.

Timbermen cruise to top spot

A rampaging offence led by the line of Bob Cooper, Harold Cox and Dick Shinde catapulted Terrace Timbermen to the top of the Oldtimers division in last week's recreational hockey league action.

The trio combined for five goals and seven assists in a 9-3 rout of Riverside Auto Wranglers, division leaders going into the Oct. 21 game.

Not that the Timbermen didn't get an early scare when, with the game just 12 seconds old, Dave Sarsiat snapped in a Del Meashaw pass to give the Wranglers first blood.

But the tide quickly turned, Larry Krause equalizing two minutes later and the Timberman being propelled to the lead when John Taylor took a feed off the boards to net a five minute marker.

Rob Bogart hauled the Wranglers back to their last share of the lead with 7:18 gone when he pounced on a rebound to tie it at two.

That, however, was all she wrote for Riverside.

With a Wrangler in the box, trailer Chris Bode slapped a centering pass through Rocky Beauvert's pads to give the Timbermen a lead they would not give up.

Piling on the agony, Cox and Cooper both turned on the light and Taylor casually deked Beauvert to cash in on a breakaway and open the gap to 6-2 by the end of the period.

The punishment continued into the second when Shinde struck less than four minutes in for the first of his two goals.

With the Timbermen keeping up relentless pressure, it fell to goalie Beauvert to prevent the game turning into a massacre.

At times little short of brilliant, he flung himself across the goal mouth time and again to snuff out scoring chances, including two fine saves to negate the Timbermen's second power play opportunity of the night.

SCORING THREAT. Bob Cooper (12) unleashes a shot goalward as the Terrace Timbermen once again put Wrangler goalie Rocky Beauvert to the test. Copper and linemates Harold Cox and Dick Shinde accounted for the bulk of the Timbermen's scoring in their 9-3 victory.

Inspired by their backstop's performance, the Wranglers launched an all-out attack which culminated in Smoley's blast to make it 7-3 with 15 minutes to go.

And an entertaining quarter hour it turned out to be with skaters on both sides cranking up the speed several notches.

Effectively smothering Wrangler attacks as they came across their blue line, the Timbermen still had the better chances in the end-to-end play that followed.

However, Beauvert's acrobatics and a couple of open misses kept the score unchanged until the last five minutes.

Left unmolested in front, Cox knocked home a rebound with 4:29 to go and in the dying seconds Shinde picked up his second goal and fifth point of the night to make the final 9-3.

The win gives the Timbermen a one point lead in the division with two games in hand.

Kermodes edged in v'ball final

There's never a good time for a team to lose a player to injury.

But the final of a tournament is about the worst time for it to happen as the Caledonia Kermodes senior boys volleyball squad found out.

Emerging undefeated from the round robin portion of the Oct. 17 Vanderhoof competition, the Kermodes kept the momentum up in the semi-finals by blitzing Correlieu 15-7, 15-4.

That set up a championship battle with Prince George Senior Secondary, a team Caledonia had dropped 15-12, 15-12 in round robin action.

In a thriller of a final, the Kermodes snuck the first game 17-15 and appeared set to snatch the title from their arch rivals.

Unfortunately, said coach Tom Hamakawa, an injury to Kurt Muller cost the team dearly as Prince George rallied to take the next two 15-12 and 15-10.

There was some consolation for Muller and teammate Chris Tomas, however, when both were named to the tournament's first all-star team.

Correlieu crushed D.P. Todd 15-2, 15-6 in the match to settle third place.

The remaining placings were College Heights fifth followed by Kelly Road, Nechako, Fort St. James and Duchess Park with Kitimat occupying the basement in the 10 team tourney.

Despite the loss, the Kermodes are clearly going to be a force to be reckoned with at the Nov. 14 zone finals, to be hosted by Caledonia this year.

New line looks like winner

Fly line is intriguing stuff. An angler does not cast a fly: pick one up in your hand, even a weighted one, and you will quickly see why.

No, it is the weight of the line as it is flung rearward that loads the rod, and the power of the forward cast against that weight that enables the angler to send his fly out to the fish -- or, at any rate, to where the fish are supposed to be.

In olden times lines were woven from horse hair: the more strands used the stronger and heavier the line, obviously.

Later, silk from the Orient was the material of choice for line makers and remained so until sometime around World War II when the first synthetic lines of plastic and, later, poly vinyl chloride were invented.

Unlike silk lines, the new artificial contraptions did not soak up water and required no dressing.

By varying the amount of PVC upon the core of the line manufacturers could easily make lines of all different weights, and since the coating material was so pliant only the imagination of the engineer limited the different kinds types of lines that could be fabricated.

The selection of lines is now so varied that choosing the right line or lines can be a daunting experience for the novice.

Thus, there are level floating lines, good for beginners, anglers on a tight budget and those who only venture forth on windless days.

There are floating lines with

The Skeena Angler

by Rob Brown

more weight on the forward end, spin-offs from the sport of tournament or distance casting, ideal for those who figure the fish are always on the far side of the river, and for show boat fishermen who like to dazzle their peers.

There are floating lines tapered at both ends, easily the most pleasurable to fish, and capable of the most delicate presentation in skilled hands.

And if all this were not enough, the same profiles are available in versions that sink at all sorts of rates: some go down like anvils, others like rocks, still others at the same rate as a water logged cigarette butt, and a fairly recent development are lines with a uniform sink rate: that is, lines whose bellies do not sink quicker than their tip and vice versa.

When you add to this arsenal lines with sinking tips, tips of five, ten, fifteen, twenty or thirty feet attached to a floating running line in all the aforementioned profiles, things start to get far too complex.

Most of us have spent wads of money experimenting with various lines -- if you're interested I have a large drawer full of them in a spectrum of colours.

My friend, veteran angler Bob Taylor, since he has fished many more years than I, had an even greater collection.

Unlike me, Bob is a real craftsman who builds beautiful flies, cane rods with delicate silk wraps that are almost invisible, and lately, flylines.

Bob likes to refine. Intrigued by the exploits of a British Atlantic Salmon fisherman named George Grant who reputedly made casts the length of a soccer pitch using his "Grant Vibration" cane rod and a hybrid silk line, Bob began constructing his own tapers by sewing different lengths and weights of line together.

Taylor accomplishes this tedious task by determining the diameter of the line sections with a micrometer. Then he sews the chunks together with needle and thread and coats the splices with plobond. The resulting joints are so smooth and well made they run through the guides without a hitch.

After putting together a number of prototypes, Bob convinced the 3M corporation, the largest and best manufacturers of flyline in the world, that there was a future in a line tapering from butt to tip over its entire length. The line makers at 3M put together some lines according to Bob's specifications whereupon Bob sent them to some decent casters for field tests.

My Taylor Single Taper Floating line came in the mail recently. I opened the package like a kid at Christmas, wound it on an empty reel and took it out to the river. At first my casts did not unfurl as they should, but once I had adjusted my timing to accommodate for the line, they began sailing out over the water in graceful loops.

At the end of my first field trial, I am convinced Bob is really on to something. His line lands softly since the forward end tapers to such a fine diameter. I was also able to make longer casts than ever before.

The line seems to perform better and better with more line through the guides, which should be a real boon to anglers fishing big rods on big rivers.

Finally, the whole idea of a single taper will make it possible for the angler to fish a number of rods with differing weights with only one line.

I cast my single taper on everything from a 7 weight, one-handed rod to a fifteen foot, ten weight.

Once perfected Bob's line will make life simpler and more pleasurable for the flyfisherman.

Time to cash in

Teams from as far away Prince George are expected to converge on the Terrace curling club next weekend for the '92 Cash Spiel.

The attraction will be chance to sweep up a share of the more than $7,000 of cash and prizes that will be up for grabs at the Nov. 6-8 event.

Top prize in the double knockout format men's spiel will be worth $2,000, half that in cash while having its entry into the Smithers Super Cash will account for the remainder.

And with more than $60,000 in cash and prizes on the line at the Smithers event, that entry could end up leading to a lot more moolah.

The Terrace men's spiel is limited to 16 teams. The entry fee is $280 with a $100 deposit being due by Tuesday, Nov. 3.

Assuming a full 16 team turnout, the top eight teams will pick up cash ranging from $1,200 for the runner-up to $200 for fifth through eighth.

The consolation winner will take home $400 and the runner-up $250.

Play gets under way at 7 p.m. Friday, Nov. 6 with the finals set for Sunday afternoon. There will also be a dinner for the curlers Saturday evening.

Also planned for the same weekend is a ladies cash which, based on a six team entry, will offer a total of $2,000. Entry fee here is $200.

Curling may have been dropped from by Kitimat's '93 B.C. Winter Games organizers, but junior rinks will still get a chance to shoot for gold.

Arrangements have been made for the Junior curlers event to be held in Mission. Northwest zone playdowns will take place at the Terrace curling rink Dec. 5-6.

By DAVID HULL

Always the bridesmaid, never the bride -- that's the story of the Terrace Northmen over the past decade of playing in the Abbotsford Gobbler Thanksgiving weekend rugby tournament.

Over that period, the Northmen have earned the dubious honour of placing second five times and third twice.

This year, they fielded one of their strongest teams ever both in ability and numbers.

With only a few of the regular team members unable to make the trip, coach Mike McCuish and captain Ernie Dusdal had a roster of 26 available.

Following a two month break at the end of the Northcoast Rugby Union league regular season, the Northmen went into intensive training at the beginning of September.

Under the critical eye of McCuish, they were driven hard right up to the final practice prior to heading south.

Arriving in Abbotsford, they found themselves facing one of the toughest Gobblers in years with teams from Alberta, Washington State, Oregon and B.C.

The first match set the tone for a weekend during which stingy defence would be their strong suit in the quest to be '92 Cranberry Cup third division champions.

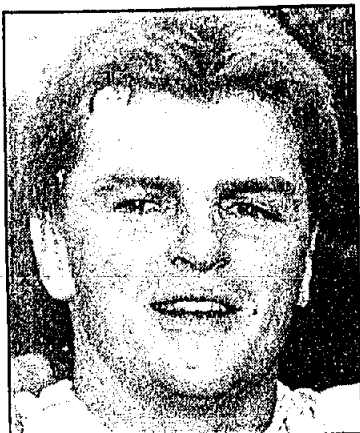

Royal Roads Military College from Vancouver Island were the first opponents. Despite being 'fit as a fiddle' from military discipline and exercise, the military boys were crushed 20-0 by the Northmen.

(Are fiddles really fit? They seem to have a profile like a retired prop forward.)

The Northmen drew on the strength of many veterans players in the match including Ernie Dusdal and Willie McCleary who scored a try apiece.

Adding another was Doug Wilson who had a very strong tournament at centre even after a Saturday match left him with a badly swollen hand.

The final score of the game came after a tremendous effort by all Northmen on the field culminated with the Kiwi Blur, the 'Rocket from Down Under' Jeff Schultz going over for the try.

Jeff Schultz

With place kicking not making such a strong showing in this game, all four tries went unconverted.

With the new laws of rugby having only come into effect Sept. 1, there was some confusion at times.

Scoring has been changed so a try is now worth five points instead of four. Conversions continue to count for two and penalties three.

That, combined with rule changes regarding penalties, means a lot of place kicking for points has been removed from the game and much more emphasis placed on running the ball in for a try.

The Northmen's next victims were Samish Bay from Washington State.

In a hard fought battle, the boys from the bay could score nary a point while the Northmen racked up two tries.

The highlight of the game saw grizzled veteran J.P. (John) Dodd sprint an incredible distance to score the game's first try.

There was some considerable post-game discussion as to just how far the sprint had been. Final figures put it somewhere between 50 metres (J.P.) and 20 metres (most everyone else).

Putting the cap on the scoring was rookie sensation Arnie Pelletier who broke through two Bay defenders for his try.

Once again, the kicking team of McCleary and Wilson were unable to make the conversions.

Saturday's final game was a must-win one for the Northmen if they were to advance to the following day's championship pool action. The opponents were the Nelson Grizzlies and they too proved unable to cross the Northmen's line.

Terrace tries came from Doug Wilson, after some very good ball handling among the backs, 'Rocket' Schultz's goal line plunge and 'Turbo Boost' Pelletier's charge through the Grizzlies' back field.

Willie McCleary rounded out a 19 point Northmen tally with an on target penalty kick.

Owing to a very strange quirk of round robin results and scoring totals, the Northmen again found themselves facing Canada's future military men first thing Sunday morning.

Proving the first trouncing was no fluke, the Northmen rolled over the Royal Rodents 10-0.

Doug Wilson scored the game's only try, Willie McCleary got the convert and later added a penalty as Terrace earned a berth in the semi-final. In the opinion of many at the awards ceremony and social at the end of the tournament, that next game against Pocomo of Port Coquitlam was the true tournament final, pitting the two best Cranberry division teams against each other.

The Northmen found themselves restricted to three points on a Willie McCleary penalty kick while the Pocomo squad produced a converted try and penalty for a 10-3 victory.

Pocomo went on to capture the Cup by swatting the Prince George Gnats in the final, a team the Northmen have beaten handily in each of the last four year's meetings.

Commenting on the Terrace effort, McCuish and Dusdal pronounced themselves well pleased and credited the team with putting up one of the Northmen's best tournament performances in years.

The Northmen now take the winter off to recover from what's been a busy year.

Tentative plans for '93 include heading for Hawaii and the World Invitational Rugby tournament.

First up, however, is the Northmen's annual awards dinner and dance to be held Saturday, Nov. 14 at the Elks Hall.

All former players, friends, fans and those who appreciate a really good time are invited to come.

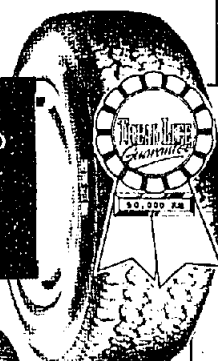

Information and tickets can be obtained from David D. Hull at 638-1327 or Justin 'Bob Hope' Riggsby at 638-1716.

The Northmen wish to thank all the fans and friends who have supported them and the world's last great amateur sport throughout 1992 and look forward to even bigger and better in '93.

Mountain readies for new season on slopes

With snow already falling on the mountain, Ski Smithers staff are busy preparing for the '92-'93 season on Hudson Bay Mountain.

Opening day is set for Saturday, Nov. 20 and will feature the mountain's first huge clinic.

Skiers will find a few new things waiting for them when they arrive including a 60 seat expansion to the Upper Chalet and several new ticket wickets.

The Green T expansion of last season has been completed with graveling and ditching along the road and turnaround.

And, for tree skiers, an extensive clean-up has started between Chapman's Challenge and Alpenhorn.

Events planned for the season include the Winterfest celebration, Masters Alpine series in February and March's Schuss Boomer.

The Kids Kamps will again be staged during the Christmas Week and pre-registration will once more be required.

The ski school will also be up and running once the mountain opens, offering a variety of programs for skiers of all ability levels.

And there'll be lots happening during National Ski Week in January.

For more information on any of the above, contact Ski Smithers at 847-2058.

Masters entry cut

Any local Masters Basketball team vying for a spot in next year's B.C. Winter Games is going to face more opposition than usual.

That's because a lack of gymnasium space in host community Kitimat has forced Basketball B.C. to halve the number of teams taking part in the competition.

As a result, teams from both the northwest's Zone 7 (Prince Rupert to Vanderhoof) and its neighbouring zone (Fort St. John to Quesnel) will have to play off for a berth in the men's and women's divisions.

Normally, each zone would have its own representative in both competitions.

Tracey Robertson, program coordinator for Basket B.C., said the organization will select the venue for the two-zone playdowns based on the number of teams entered and where they are from.

Although the Winter Games office picks up the tab for travel and accommodation at the Games themselves, Robertson pointed out teams will have to pay their own way to the playdowns.

That will include the cost of hiring referees, she added.

Basketball B.C. can help put people in touch with qualified referees.

She also reminded interested teams they must register with Basketball B.C. before Friday, Nov. 13 if they want to have a shot at a Games berth.

Men must be 35 years old by Jan. 1, 1993 and women 30 by the same date to qualify for Masters competition.

Robertson can be contacted at 737-3032.

On the line

Signed, sealed and delivered is Terrace Mayor Jack Talstra's signature on the official city proclamation declaring that this is Small Business Week. It recognizes small businesses which are increasingly taking a vital role in the growth of the economy and labour force. With Mr. Talstra is Paul Williams from the local office of the Federal Business Development Bank and Bobbie Phillips, the manager of the Terrace and District Chamber of Commerce.

Quesnel Games deadline looms

SEVENTY-TWO HOURS!

That's all the time you have left if you want to take a shot at qualifying for the 1993 Northern B.C. Winter Games, being held Feb. 4-7 in Quesnel.

That's because the deadline for entering zone playdowns is this Saturday, Oct. 31, says local coordinator Steve Scott.

Individuals or teams wanting to get in on the action can contact Scott at 638-4750 during the day or 635-5719 evenings.

Pointing out most zone playoffs have to be completed by Dec. 13, he said dates and locations would be finalized early next month.
