WLU gallopers packing heat

DA LOUISVILLE SLUGGAH

LAURIER SUN

It truly was a weekend to remember. WLUGA (WLU Gazelle Association), the self-proclaimed 'gazelle authority' and the winner of the last eight annual Gazelle Speed Championships, held their primaries for this year's meet and set the track on fire.

The school's reputation in the gazelle racing field, unhindered despite the much-publicized steroid scandal two years ago, springs from what head coach Zach Emery calls "an emphasis on scouting at early ages."

"The ideal time to start scouting a good animal is between one and one-and-a-half years of age," said the coach. "If you leave it any later you start to get into the lame ones."

'Lame' is exactly what the Laurier speedsters were not. Setting the pace with a blistering 9.52 seconds in the 500 metres, renowned sprinter "Bucky" showed that he is indeed entering the prime of his career and has recovered nicely from that nagging hoof injury suffered last year.

The third-year geography student had little to say about his dominant galloping, but maintained a confident look in the stall.

The WLU distance runners also showed that they are the ones to beat this year. Second-year runner "Sparkles" set a 72-year school record in her 10 km time trial, obliterating the old mark with a clocking of 5 minutes and 32 seconds.

"We've got a mass of talent in all areas," said the coach. "I know the hurdlers didn't fare so well today, but we're really counting on them to come through when it counts."

The much more highly-funded but less successful UWO program, when asked about Laurier's history of success on the track, scoffed at any notion of yet another WLU victory.

"What's in the past is in the past," said Western trainer Evelyn Munroe. "We know, pound for pound, that our quadrupeds are better than their quadrupeds this year. We're going to fucking annihilate them!"

All obscenities aside, both schools are confident of a victory at next month's OUAA Championships in North Bay. All that's left to do now for the animals is race.

Sleepy Derby a success

WILLIAM CURTIS

LAURIER SUN

Laurier's first ever Sleep Deprivation Crash-Up Derby was held yesterday in front of twenty thousand stunned spectators from all over Waterloo region.

The event, sponsored by Nytol and the Ontario Association of Marijuana Dealers, took place on a four mile circuit encompassing all of the city's major cross-walks and nursing homes. Forty-eight racers participated, all of whom had been certified 'awake' by a physician and a race marshal for at least one hundred consecutive hours prior to the race.

"It's a great goddamned sport," said Cletus Barber, Race Boss and chief gore mopper. "They get real tired, they drive real fast. Probably they're seeing things, like monkeys and other shit that ain't there. Anyway, it was a great day for racing and this is a great goddamned school." Although not an alumnus of Laurier, Barber did attend at one point the now defunct College of Animal Husbandry that was affiliated with Laurier until the goat-love scandal of 1971.

What did the fans think? "It was disgusting. There were baby teeth trapped in the grille of that Ford," remarked one observer. "These people were just too tired to get behind the wheel." Another response: "They could at least have blocked off the race course."

A lot of unsuspecting drivers got the surprise of their fucking life."

Forty-eight brightly painted stock cars tore out of the gates in front of the Joh Aird Building at exactly ten am. The pole position belonged to Rex Poon, racing a 1981 Firebird for the Prozac team. Despite leading the season with wins at the Monaco and San Francisco Class A derby events, he was quickly overtaken by Droopy McPhee driving a pink monster truck for the Bank of Montreal.

McPhee would surely have placed first if he hadn't fallen asleep while negotiating the corner of Westmount and Erb near the end of the race circuit, careening into a truckload of birthday ponies. As it turned out, the checkered flag went to amateur driver and horticulturalist David Fleen, one of only three drivers to cross the finish line. "Everything's so beautiful," he said, "I'm never going to bed again." Fleen will receive $100,000 for his victory.

Organizers are pleased with the derby turn-out and plan to do the same thing again next December. "Listen to all those screams of pleasure and excitement," Barber said. "How can we deny the good citizens of Waterloo the carnage they deserve?" Pop and chip receipts will be used to offset all property damage.

The school formerly known as Laurier

RUPERT RAMONE AND CATBERT
LAURIER SUN

In light of the recent events surrounding the Students' Union's failed attempt to rename its building after Dean Fred Nichols and with the administration budget increases, the Board of Governors has decided to put Laurier on the block. This decision came after months of extensive research, which determined Wilfrid Laurier neither attended this institution, nor contributed to its financial well-being.

"We at the administration are unclear on how this blatant oversight in school policy was allowed to occur. We can only assume it was an effort to maintain the school's original initials. You know, to save money on stationary and stuff," said Dr. Nick Riviera. As soon as the move to rename the school formerly known as WLU was announced, several large corporations offered their monetary support. The following is a synopsis of the front-runners' proposals:

Proctor and Gamble

Name Changes

WLU would become known as Proctor And Gamble University (PAGU). Therefore several residence and building names would be changed to reflect the new ownership. Clara Conrad residence would become "The Always with Wings" residence, Bricker will become "The Pampers Centre" and Little House would become "The Head and Shoulders" residence. However, Proctor and Gamble regrets to inform the school that it has declined to purchase Willison. Several other school facilities will be renamed, including the Dining Hall, which will now be known as Metamucil Hall, and the Science Building will be called the Stain Removal Research Centre.

Student Life

First, there would be major steps taken to restructure Laurier's Athletics program. This necessitates the alteration of the school's mascot to better reflect the new direction the school would be taking. Unfortunately, this means bye-bye birdie to our beloved 'Golden Hawk'. However do not be dismayed, he will be replaced by the Mighty Hawaiian Punch Guy. Also concerned by the lack of hardware found in Laurier's trophy cabinets, PAGU will institute a 'back to school' program for free agent professional athletes. Don't be surprised to see 'Neon' Deion Sanders strut into your Geography 100 class next year. And look for the 'Dream Team' hangin' out in the Twenty-Four Hour Lounge watching soaps.

When reached for his comment, Jacques Strappe, a member of the athletics committee, said, "This move should help Laurier be more competitive within the athletic ranks. Students should not be concerned that these athletes are receiving special treatment. They will have to make all the same academic requirements as anyone else... basically."

Some other highlights include: Health Services will carry the entire "family of Vick's cough and cold medication." Food Services will also get in on the act, by providing a complete range of delicious McCain's frozen dinners. On a final note, Proctor & Gamble regrets that it will be forced to disband the Cord. However, on the positive side, the Atrium will expand to a five-page layout, and a twice-daily circulation.

Molson

Name Changes

Under Molson's proposal the name of WLU would change to Canadian University, with the school's motto being changed from "veritas omnia vincit" (truth conquers all) to "I am a university".

Name changes around campus will include the Science Building as the National Brewery Research Centre, Little House will become the Centre for the Furthering of Beer Consumption and Willison will become a beer recycling plant.

Student Life

In addition, all non-alcoholic beverages, which Molson executives call "counter-productive," will be eliminated from the campus. "We intend to have the happiest campus in Canada," Molson executives said. Beer will be available at the Dining Hall and Food Court as well.

"The drunken state of the students will cut down on complaints about the food" one Food Services employee noted.

New uniforms will also be introduced. Men will be required to wear flannel shirts, grow their hair to at least shoulder length and must change their names to "Joel", "Mike" or

"Steve." Women will be required to wear thong bikinis and change their names to "Cindy," "Betty" or "Bambi." In addition, women will no longer be permitted to speak in multi-syllabic words.

New courses to be offered include "Deceptive Advertising," "Industry Monopolization," "How to Improve Molson's Market Share" and "Microbreweries: The Fourth Sign of the Apocalypse?" The Psychology and Business Departments will be merged into a new department called "How to Convince 19-24 year old Average White Males to drink our Beer," Science students will be addressed as "Brewmasters" and Arts students will become "Menial Labour Drones."

However, the shift in ownership will result in more stringent admission practices. All new students will have to be at least 19 years of age or have convincing fake ID. In addition, all students will have to send in a 8-1/2" by 11" colour glossy photo to ensure they meet the necessary attractiveness requirements. Those who are lacking in this department should take heart since Molson's plans include having an "ugly people" quota of 5%. As a condition of admission those deemed "attractively challenged" will be forced to live underground to avoid tarnishing the reputation of the university.

The above are just a sampling of the numerous proposals that have been submitted to the school. Now it's up to the Administration to decide which proposal is Laurier's most viable option.

"It's not the money that's important... no really I'm serious. We're really concerned with what's best for the students. After all students are our most valuable revenue source, ah make that asset," said Wally Snodgrass, a member of the Stonecutters Society. Other proposals have included an offer from Trojan Condoms, which wants to use Laurier as a testing facility. One executive was heard saying, "Hey, at least students could look forward to finals."

Sex sells at WLU

MIKE CAESAR
LAURIER SUN

At this time next year, Laurier Students may have one more option in dealing with pre-exam stress. In a controversial move made earlier this week, school administration gave the go-ahead for the creation of Laurier's newest and sexiest varsity squad, the WLU Escort Team.

"The Escort Team will provide both a financial boost to the university and a psychological boost to our students and faculty," proclaimed one school official when asked about the merits of the new program. "We are breaking new ground here and I think that it is something everyone in the WLU community can be proud of."

Indeed, the WLU Escort Team will be the only one of its kind in Canada. However, it is not the first time this experiment has been implemented. That distinction belongs to Western, which had a team several years back. Western's escorts performed very poorly and the organization faded into extinction due to lack of public interest. The coach of the Laurier Escorts dismisses the possibility of our squad meeting that same fate. "I'm confident that I'll have our team whipped into shape by next fall," he said.

The idea of an escort team for WLU arose out of economic necessity. As we are all aware, tough economic times have resulted in massive cuts to all areas of the public sector, including education. With the number of students attending WLU steadily increasing, the Administration came to the realization that this university needs more funding. Since tuition has already been increased, school administrators began to look for "alternate sources of revenue" to pay for the academic expansion.

"The Escort Team was an obvious choice," said one school official, "in it we have a renewable resource that will always be in demand."

Though the exact rates are yet to be determined, Laurier Escorts will be available year-round for varying lengths of time. "You can have one of our Escorts for an entire evening," explained the coach, "or just a twenty-minute study break. It's really up to you."

School administrators are also looking into the possibility of allowing WLU students to charge Escort time to their meal cards, which could mean trouble for campus catering services. One A&W employee whimpered, "Why would students come here for dinner when they could stay in and eat?"

So far, most Laurier students have reacted favourably to the news of the Escort Team. "Finally a team I would pay to see perform!" exclaimed one jubilant first year student. WLU brass are also convinced that they have found a good solution to the budget crunch. "This is precisely the sort of initiative that we must be pursuing in Mike Harris' Ontario," one official proudly stated. "In the face of funding cuts we have staunchly refused to trim the fat, and still we have emerged with our heads held high."

Big Purple Satan Coming

Barney brings love to Laurier!

SARAH MOON
LAURIER SUN

As WLU becomes privatized, the owners would like to reassure the students that WLU is still one big happy family.

To uphold the image of family at WLU, the owners have selected Barney, the Purple Dinosaur as our new president.

Barney was chosen from a competitive panel consisting of Pamela Lee, Tommy Vu, Sammi from Days, Wayne Gretzky and/or Doug MacKenzie, the lead singer of the Tea Party, and Nolton Nash.

The owners thought that Barney projected the perfect image of WLU, commenting "He's very purple, very nice, and very expensive; and he leads thousands of moldable minds, future dollars for our business."

Barney, the new president, is confident that he can keep WLU feeling warm fuzzies with the impending privatization.

"Whenever the students feel down, all they need to do is just hug their neighbor. If that doesn't work they can come visit me and we can play dress-up, I'll be the bad, bad dinosaur..." smiled Barney.

When asked what the students should do when faced with rising prices at WLU, Barney sang out "If you're lost call 911, if you're sad, just call your mom. It's okay to feel so glum, even when they're screwing you up the bum!"

Barney seems to have all the answers, is he missing the ingredient in the new WLU?

The big purple dinosaur has created a new school song, which will be piped into the Concourse. The new lyrics are sung to the original Barney tune:

I love you,
You love me,
We're the WLU family.
The big purple dinosaur is brainwashing me,
Happily we hand over all our money!

For his term as president Barney has negotiated a $4 million contract, open to deliberation, with no salary cap.

Baby Bop was unable to comment, as she is still in rehabilitation for prescription drug abuse.

More poutine SVP

JEN CLARKE
LAURIER SUN

The newest food craze to hit France is poutine. The French-Canadian dish was introduced to the country by a group of Laurier students, shortly after their FR110 midterm exam. "At first our remark about ordering poutine on the Champs-D'Elysees was purely facetious, but then we realized that there was a niche to be filled in the French market," remarked student B.N. Chance.

Now considered a national delicacy, poutine was test-marketed on the Champs-D'Elysees and served at selected McDonald's restaurants in the Royale with the cheese combo meal.

Despite receiving some dumb-founded looks when explaining the unknown dish to cafe managers, the students have now become celebrities on the French food circuit, replacing Jerry Lewis as a national hero.

In addition, the demand for French cheese has skyrocketed to unprecedented levels and French fromagers have recently named an obscure blue cheese from Poitiers after the university's French department.

"It was the least we could do. People in our country have been looking for alternatives to eat their cheese with. Baguettes and croissants are so passe," said Le Ministre du Fromage, Jean Brie.

At the request of French president Jacques Chirac, poutine is now being served at major state functions although slightly modified to include regional cheeses in place of mozzarella.

As a goodwill gesture, the president has sent three tons of poutine to New Zealand in gratitude for the nuclear testing facilities off the coast in the South Pacific.

Although the students have had to miss more than a few of their FR110 classes, their conversational French has shown marked improvement from being immersed in the language. As a result, some Laurier students have been asked to re-translate Victor Hugo's classic "Les Miserables" and write the answer keys for various international French textbooks. The students have not yet accepted the honour as they plan to expand the market for poutine into Spain and Cuba, seeing this as a great opportunity to learn Spanish.

The students tried to contact the spokesperson of the Canadian cheese commercials to promote poutine in France but his contract stipulates him from saying anything other than the various names of cheeses.

THE ONLY REASONABLE SOLUTION

The Board of Governors' recent decision to shut down the School of Business and Economics has given rise to one burning question in the minds of Laurier students: What will become of the Peters Building? Will it be left to stand ghostly and empty? Will it be knocked to the ground with one of those big bally swingy crane things?

Will new and better prostitutes take up residence now that the old prostitutes have been kicked out?

Of the many options open to the university, the clearest and brightest is something that few administrators would even dare to consider - the opening of a clown school. The opposing arguments are many: A clown school would attract subversive elements... There is already a clown school just down the street... A clown school would detract from the solemn dignity fostered at Laurier by the Waterbuffaloes and fraternities... However, let us examine for a moment the advantages of such a plan for the Peters Building:

1) Students interrupted in the middle of their program by the cancellation of the SBE could get their credits transferred over to a clown degree. The skills are roughly parallel: business students love to dress up in funny costumes, they are adept with visual aids, and they make everyone laugh uncontrollably without even trying. Clowning also requires little in the way of written communication - enough said.

2) An increase in applications would allow Laurier's admission standards to rise. Leading this charge for Laurier would be members of the provincial cabinet, eager to keep their clowning ability razor-sharp with refresher courses. Diligent practice and study is the only effective way for a politician to keep on behaving like a confused cretin in the face of hard experience. For some of these public servants, clown school would be the only post-secondary education they would ever have; hopefully, this 'book-learning' would not spoil their unique approach to running the province.

3) No existing physical assets would need to be sold at a loss. The tiny bicycles and rainbow wigs that business students use to entertain potential employers at job fairs could be used for classroom work. PRISM facilities could be dedicated to developing virtual models of the 'ideal clown' - a task only slightly different than the current one. The androids used to teach Economics courses would have their place as well; they could be used as props for 'Intro to Sledge-Hammer' lab sessions (in lieu of killing real people).

There are countless arguments for the establishment of a clown school. It would be a glorious phoenix rising from the ashes of the now-defunct SBE, claiming the Peters Building once again for the pursuit of Truth, Knowledge and Morality. The BBA may be no more, but hopefully the recipient of a B.C.I. could fill the same slot in society with little or no trouble. To the powers that be: try it, be brave, and let the MacLean's rankings figure it out - every idiot knows that those come straight down from God.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Dear Editor,

I am a fourth year Honours Technology student, and a frequent Cord reader. Although I usually enjoy the Cord, a recent issue has caused me considerable distress.

The root of my concern is the Cord's attitude towards sexual activity. Just a few issues ago, a "sex survey" was published. I was alarmed to find questions of a highly casual and immoral nature, especially in such a fine learning institution as Wilfrid Laurier University.

Sex is not an issue to be taken lightly. Not only is there a strong possibility of disease and pregnancy, but pre-marital copulation is simply not right. Intercourse has no place in the activities of unmarried students, and for those who are married, it should only serve the purpose of procreation. Anything else is sinful.

I demand a swift response, and expect the Cord to exercise better judgement in all future issues.

Sincerely,

Pat X

(You've got to be kidding... keep your head in the sand, buddy - the world's a better place for it)

Dear Editor,

I've been living on my own for about two years now, without the financial assistance of my parents to put me through school. But what frustrates me most is when people say that they know times are tough. I mean, are they the ones who are stuck eating Kraft Dinner 4 nights out of 7? DO they truly know what it's like to wear your jeans four times before washing, because you can't afford it?

People in the government have no idea how tough it really is. Spend a day in my shoes, shoes that are filled with holes and worn. I work about ten hours a day before I go to class, and yet I still don't have the cash to go to the Grocery Store and buy some decent food.

I don't think the leaders of today's government know what it's like to starve for food, to run a hot dog bun along the inside of a Tang! jar for flavour, to cut the mouldy pieces off the bread so that a sandwich can be made out of a deteriorating loaf.

I ask you, how can I put the spice back into my life? How can I make my life exciting, when I have no money, no food? What is a person to do?

Sincerely,

Albert

(Well, try adding some hot peppers to that Kraft Dinner - That'll spice up your life)

Dear Editor,

Last Sunday, I was walking to church when I passed a group of ruffians cavorting in the street with sticks and some sort of ball. I grabbed the one nearest to me by the fleshy part of the ear and said, "Young man, you should be in God's house, not playing this game of sin?" He told me to "relax", and advised me that I would probably fall if I wasn't more careful. "Relax"?! Where does this foul-mouthedness come from? Darwin, that's who, may he be flayed by the cloven hooved one for all time. I thought the world should know about the evil that's going on right here in Waterloo Region.

An addict reveals the truth

SARAH PAPPLE
CORD FEATURES

My addiction for Kinder Surprise Eggs is real. They contain the three things that I like most: chocolate, a surprise, and a toy all in that gorgeous orange and white wrapper. When I'm with an Egg, the problems of life disappear, my only focus is the instructions, stickers... oh what will it all bring? Once, when I was fourteen, I got a mini-car with a motor that really moved. After that - I couldn't stop.

I have decided that the Egg is the only thing that can mean something in my life. I am graduating, facing unemployment, possibly a failed marriage, delinquent kids, and then old age.

I have decided to pacify the screaming pain of life with Kinder Eggs. When I go to the supermarket I fill my cart haphazardly with German chocolate wonders. I can barely wait to get out of the store, to peel off the foil, split that chocolate in two (throw it away), and get into that toy.

Germany is making a play for world domination again. They purposely made the chocolate impossible to eat; this is so we would focus on the toy. The Kinder Surprise is the addiction which may destroy North America. One by one we are becoming slaves to the Eggs.

The little toys make us feel useful and smart.

The little toys are draining our logic and reasoning ability.

Each time you look through the glossy little leaflet, your mind leaves this world, and enters the Kinder Zone.

The Germans are preparing us for our fate through our fascination and hard work, along with the sharpening of fine motor skills. The Germans are preparing us for chained to assembly lines, putting dexterity to work for their economy. Germany may now be in the process of manufacturing millions of Kinder Surprise Packages; they will soon have us all addicted. They will threaten us with an Egg boycott, and then offer us an unlimited supply of Eggs for our country.

Which would I choose? The Egg. I need that little toy.

The addiction is slowly ruining my life. My school work has suffered, my employer fired me, I've lost touch with my family, I can't pay my rent - all due to my obsession with the Egg. Even sex has become a second priority, last weekend the only way my boyfriend could excite me was to rub himself with Kinder Eggs. We made love by the pool, while he covered himself with Eggs, me lustfully rubbing all over him in search of the instructions for the little toy, blinded by my single passion.

A support group will be in effect before Christmas. Through group therapy we can get through the holidays together - and may break free from the chains of the Egg Addiction.

subordination. We will soon be their little monkeys.

Kinder egg addiction at Laurier

ANN-MARIE SMITH
CORD FEATURES

Take a look at the trays in the Dining Hall - they are consistently filled with Kinder Surprise Eggs. People have become addicted to these gross little chocolate eggs and the nifty little toy inside. Students at Laurier are no longer going to the Dining Hall to eat - but to purchase, buy and binge on Kinder Eggs. In fact, the Dining Hall is noticing a huge profit decrease because no one is buying food anymore. Students are spending their money on Eggs and then chemical reaction of the chocolate and the excitement of receiving the toy creates a loss in appetite.

Kinder Egg Addiction has been noted by Counseling Services who have devised a 10 step program to help students kick the addiction. They have even developed a "Just for Fun" series for Kinder Eggs addicts. The program is a pro-active one, similar to AA., in which addicts must recognize and come to terms with their problem first and then start the program.

One addict was over-heard saying that the Kinder Eggs are only 74 cents in the Dining Hall where as at off-campus stores they are $1.20. Therefore, it seems that the university is helping contribute to the problem.

Wilfrid Laurier University received a number one ranking in the latest Maclean's magazine when rating universities for their Kinder Egg addicted students. Apparently, we have the most addicts per capita. A scary situation.

There are a number of signs to recognize a Kinder Egg addict. First check their pupils - if they are dilated then they are probably way to excited, try to calm them down by putting their head between their knees. Second, look for irritability. Many addicts become frustrated and mad when others around them receive a "better" toy. With this comes a possessive attitude as the owner of the "better" toy may become aggressive and snarky to protect their winnings. Thirdly, scan the scene where the addict binges on the Kinder Eggs. If you see numerous amounts of uneaten, half shells then it is obvious that the person simply wants the toy and is uninterested in their wasteful behavior.

Continue checking their living surroundings - observe their window sill or shelf unit for an intricate toy display. These serious addicts are proud of their habit and seek continual attention for their collection.

If you recognize these symptoms in yourself or in a friend then seek help! See Counseling Services for information.

Co-ed residences. Co-ed shared housing. Living in sin. It is the explicit belief of these two writers that the cohabitation of unrelated members of the opposite sex is a sin, regardless of the religious background of those individuals or their means of justification.

Although this university encourages the practice to a lesser extent than many others, it is still utterly inexcusable that it promotes, to any degree, cohabitation. Bricker, Euler, Leupold and Mac House are all houses of sin.

Those individuals who have made the decision to live in domiciles with members of the opposite sex have even more to be ashamed of. While some in the residences have little choice but to live in such a state, these wicked individuals have made the conscientious decision to do so.

Living, learning, eating and sleeping in the same building shall lead these poor souls to purgatory and hell. These are the houses of mammon, the houses of lust, the houses of gluttony, the houses of sin. To quietly acknowledge their actions and do nothing about it is not enough, for that is of an even greater evil. The redemption of these individuals begins with their renouncing this sinful practice.

What is to be done? These two writers believe that all those who are virtuous, upstanding and believe in doing right should take to these houses of sin and destroy them. Only then can there be an end to

British resort to eating dairy cows

BEEFY BETTY
LAURIER SUN

Britain's post-Mad Cow scare has left British citizens wondering whether or not they should continue eating beef. Many have lost hope in the safety of the beef cattle and have begun eating dairy cows instead. Dairy cows are thought to be impervious to Mad Cow disease as a result of a differing genetic make-up from their beef cow cousins. Dairy cows are now in high demand for their meat, which has led to soaring prices from the shortage of dairy products. Many are already addicted to this new brand of beef, stating that it tastes something like chicken. While some are willing to give up their love of dairy products for this new found fetish, numerous citizens are suffering from dairy withdrawal. People have been seen bumming swigs of milk from those rich enough to afford a pint. There are now international interests in British dairy cows for their meat, and many fear the inevitable collapse of the dairy market.

Static crisis hits Laurier

MURTL THE TURTLE
LAURIER SUN

The static cling around Laurier is at an all year high, breaking countless static records from previous years. Although having socks stuck to the outside of pants has proven embarrassing for many, hair has proven to be the largest problem. Numerous individuals can be seen with their hair standing straight on end. While Laurier's punk clique find this advantageous for their hair styling efforts, most people find this an annoying problem that doesn't appear to be leaving any time soon. Students heads are getting stuck together due to the natural electric attraction, the most devastating effect of this being the high voltage shock upon contact. Although some slackers are addicted to this "natural" buzz, the majority of students and faculty are quite annoyed. Super Dave's II in the SUB has been swamped by individuals with crazed expressions on their faces, begging the hairdressers to shave their heads. Though profits at Super Dave's are soaring, several hairdressers have quit, citing excessive pain from electrical shock and the loss of breaks and lunches. There are just too many students with static problems and not enough hairdressers. Keep your eyes open for this bizarre phenomenon.

As well, some companies plan to exploit this advantage as part of their advertising campaigns, in hopes that the testimonial will add to the firm's credibility. This year has been especially good for students as there are many employers to choose from (the employer to student ratio is 7.6:1).

A new feature this year is the option of working the first half of the term at one company and the second half at another, allowing the student to make only a half-term commitment to the employer. Some of the things students are looking for this year include: flexible working hours, good office atmosphere, relaxed work attire, and no training courses. Perks are also quite important; common among them are the use of lap tops on weekends, company cars, tickets to major sporting events, business trips to Europe, Asia, Hawaii, and Australia, as well as pens that they can keep after the work term is over.

Students are being asked to contact the co-op office so that they may schedule interviews at times convenient for them (generally after 6pm and before and after core).

In a related story, Waterloo co-op students are again being run ragged by the more traditional competitive interview process, trying to find a job for the next work term.

DADDY MACK LAURIER SUN

If you think people were shocked a few weeks back when Lou Holtz resigned from his head coaching post at Notre Dame, just wait for the reaction from his next move.

A source very close to Holtz has stated that there is a strong chance that he may bring his act to Waterloo where he will assume the post of Athletic Director at Wilfrid Laurier University. Current Athletic Director Rich Newbrough is set to retire at the end of this school year, therefore leaving the position open.

"I know that he has discussed the possibility with them," said James Nealy, a lifelong friend of Holtz. "I think he wants to try something new and needs to get away from the spotlight. Laurier would give him just that."

It certainly would. Coming to Laurier definitely would put Holtz in the exact opposite position than he was in with the Irish. The pressure of coaching the most exposed college football program in the United States would no longer exist. Instead he would be able to go about a somewhat normal life, something he hasn't done since taking over at South Bend in December of 1985.

What Holtz would do for Laurier is clear. His notoriety would benefit the school's image and athletic department. He would no doubt help the recruiting process, not only in football, but in all sports while his charismatic present would bring a new attitude to the school.

Holtz's accomplishments are no secret. He managed to revive a somewhat mediocre program when he took over from Gerry Faust eleven years ago. Within three seasons, Holtz guided his team to a 12-0 season which won him his one and only National title.

He has also been involved in some of the school's most important football games, the most notable being a 31-24 defeat of the then number one ranked Florida State

Seminoles in what was billed as the "Game of the Century."

It is clear why Laurier would want him, but why would Holtz even consider the move north of the border?

In the last few years, Holtz has fallen on hard times. The Irish have lost a few games they shouldn't have (see Northwestern, 1995, Air Force and Southern Cal, 1996) and have never really been in contention for a national title since Holtz managed to lure prize quarterback Ron Powlus to the program. All of this has taken its toll on Holtz who decided he had enough and resigned a few weeks ago.

"I think he is tired. Notre Dame has really taken its toll on him," said Sports Illustrated writer Tim Layden. "His recent health problems (neck surgery done last year) has affected him and lets not kid ourselves, he isn't exactly a young pup anymore."

Layden went on to say that Holtz needs a change. The Laurier opportunity would allow him to try something new, something Holtz apparently has always wanted to do.

"I think he wants to get away from coaching for awhile. I'm sure as Athletic Director he could still play a big role in the football program," commented Layden.

So all this talk about Holtz going to the NFL is not true? "I think it is pure speculation. He's through with coaching for now... It isn't fun for him anymore," said Layden, although he did not entirely rule out the possibility of Holtz returning to the coaching ranks in the future.

If Holtz does decide to come to take over for Newbrough, his job will be no walk in the park. He will be faced with the dilemmas of severe budget cuts and dwindling attendance figures among others. If Holtz wants a new challenge, this job does offer just that.

At the time of press, both Holtz and Laurier officials were unavailable for comment.

Holtz would no doubt bolster the athletic program at Laurier. The move seems to make sense for the school and after hearing about the way Holtz apparently feels, it seems to be just the type of change he is looking for.

It may not be long until the second most winning coach in Notre Dame history is strolling around the Laurier campus full time, still wearing gold, but replacing the blue with Laurier purple.

"Buffoon" causes brew-ha-ha

DA LOUISVILLE SLUGGAH
LAURIER SUN

The so-called 'Battle of Waterloo', always a heated affair, escalated itself to a new level this past Monday night at the Columbia Icefields.

With Laurier leading the Warriors 2-0 in the second period on a pair of controversial goals, incensed Waterloo fan Jacob Kennedy decided to take the game into his own hands.

In an act that was both selfish and incredibly stupid, the fan, who was obviously intoxicated at the time, poured his half-full can of beer over Laurier head coach Wayne Gowing's exposed head.

Several Laurier fans, fervently cheering for their school and anxious to hurt anyone even associated with Waterloo, promptly shot up from their seats and charged at the helpless Kennedy. The fool would have been torn to bits if it wasn't for a legion of Waterloosers that rushed in front of him to meet the oncoming stampede.

As the two factions collided, thrashed, and churned behind the Laurier bench, Kennedy (shown in picture with can) desperately tried to escape the fray. Having already opened another beer he evidently was focused much more on not spilling it than helping his Waterloo brethren, who were beaten to a pulp by the enraged Laurier mob.

When asked if the man holding the can of beer in the picture is indeed him, Kennedy responded with ignorant defiance.

"Of course it's me! I poured my other can all over that bastard's head, and I'm glad I did! You notice how I'm not spilling a drop there?"

Injuries suffered in the melee were 12 broken legs, 10 sprained eyes, 2 popped spleens, and several psychological disorders that may or may not have been related but are under investigation.

The University of Waterloo, facing a number of sticky liability suits, has released an official comment on the situation: "We had no idea that such brainless individuals such as the instigator of this altercation could possibly be involved with our university, or any university. Because of this we are initiating an immediate purge of all faculties to rid our fine school of these buffoons."

A Laurier official, when asked to comment on U of W's actions, said little except that the school "...should have done something like that a long time ago." This feeling was the general consensus of most Laurier students and was reiterated by the comments of second-year student Darryl Rogers. "I could tell that kid was a little weird when I met him. All those Parry Sounders have something wrong with them, I think."

Almost without a school, Kennedy lashed out with hostility at his former university.

"I didn't do it for them, anyway.

The problem with that school is that they have no sense of humour."

While one is certainly forced to agree with this statement, it is still impossible to condone Kennedy's brainless actions on Monday night.

These guys are FAN-tastic

DADDY MACK
LAURIER SUN

If there is such thing as a textbook definition of "superfan", one needs to look no further than the five individuals who are found, in rain sleet or snow, each and every Saturday supporting their beloved Golden Hawk football squad.

The five, commonly referred to as the "HAWKS", can be seen with painted, bare chests wearing their Waterbuffalo hats sitting in the first row at all home games. They are always being loud and sometimes a little obnoxious. The crew has even been known to make the occasional road trip to such destinations as Western.

"It is what we do best. Our talents aren't displayed on the field, but instead in the stands," said Jon Forbes, who also goes by the alias "K". "We know our role and are just glad to be of help. As long as we make a contribution, we are happy."

The tradition started last year when the original five traveled to Western to see the Hawks upset the Mustangs on their home field. That game, which was televised on CHCH-TV, saw the group plastered across television screens all over Ontario. That surely gave the boys an incentive to continue the trend.

What really gave them notoriety was their appearance during last year's playoffs. A game against Toronto, which was played in a snowfall, did not stop these guys from baring all. The following week's Yates Cup game against Western was no different. Despite a torrential downpour, the guys went all out once again, this time landing themselves their first television interview with CHCH's Ken Welch.

"Ken seems to like us a lot. He always makes sure we get our appearance on the tube," said Mike McKenna, who poses as the letter "H". "He definitely has helped get us to where we have gotten."

The tradition continued throughout the 1996 season, beginning with their return visit to Western's J.W. Little Stadium in what was another rain storm. It appears that Western always give them the worst conditions, but these guys thrive on such days.

"We always get bad weather against Western, but it never stops us. A little help from our personal trainer, John Labatt, and we are doing okay," said "W" man Scott Tubman. "Mr. Labatt has kept us in great shape," Tubman said in reference to the intense off season program as well as the pre game preparations they are put through.

This past season also brought more television appearances, courtesy of CHCH and Welch. The boys handled the introductions of the stations halftime show as well as made a regular appearance on the "Hits of the Week" segment. An appearance on a nationally broadcast game on TSN topped off the year.

"These guys are great. They really exemplify what university is all about," said Welch in a recent conversation. "Out of the schools I have been to, there aren't any better fans than these guys. They are building a great tradition at Laurier. I look forward to seeing them each time we come to do a Laurier game."

The group had the ultimate compliment paid to them this year when a group of "HAWKS" impostors showed up at a home game. Although it didn't sit well with the boys at the time, they must remember that imitation is the highest form of flattery.

When asked if the tradition will continue next season, Eric Angevine ("A") said, "You bet. We aren't quitting until we make it to the Vanier. We've seen the rain and the snow and we took it. Nothing will stop us."

Jason Gruberbauer, who took over this season as the "S" for the departed Craig Tullett (who managed to crack the Hawks dress roster this year) echoed the same thoughts. "I don't think it can get much worse than what we have already been through. We have seen it all, so I know the tradition will continue."

There isn't much doubt that it won't. With increased notoriety, their are rumours of the boys hiring an agent in order to keep track of all their appearance requests, although nothing has been finalized at this point.

What ever the case may be, these five guys may not be found in any textbook, but by the time they are done, the "HAWKS" will be a part of the school's history books.

Treble Charger tribute dazzles all

JIZZMAC THE GUSHER

LAURIER SUN

A cavalcade of music industry celebrities showed up at the Volcano in Kitchener on Saturday to pay homage to Treble Charger, and a packed house enjoyed every minute of the affair.

The musical guests, spanning many generations and artistic genres, united in recognition of the effort Treble Charger has put forth to advance various musical styles. It is no secret that rap, classical, rhythm & blues, and death metal artists owe everything they have to the Toronto-based quartet, and this night served as the perfect opportunity for the musical community to say "thanks."

The first group to take the stage was the Originoo Gun Clapazz, hailing from South Compton. Their eclectic blend of intelligent lyrics (performed by the critically acclaimed Top Dogg) and innovative stylings were a treat for the audience. They closed out their set with a cover of Treble Charger's "10th Grade Love."

Artists such as Harem Scarem, John Michael Montgomery, Snoop Doggy Dog (released on day parole specially for this event), the entire Boston Pops Symphony Orchestra and the cast of "Cats" all followed with equally impressive performances. Kudos to skate-punkers Trigger Happy for their touching rendition of the treble charger hit, "Red."

Even the Volcano, already known for its luxurious aura and tasteful tropical fish decor, was noticeably refurbished for this gala event. But then, what else would one expect with the number of foreign dignitaries and heads-of-state that were in attendance?

After what seemed like an eternity, Treble Charger finally took the stage. Inconspicuously dressed as the four members of KISS, the band whipped through a furious set of pop-rock. All their ground-breaking albums were represented, including their latest effort, due for release early in the new year.

Despite a new drummer (this reporter has discovered that ex-drummer Morris has acquired a CFL expansion team to be known as the Mississauga Rough Riders), treble charger was technically perfect. Hits such as "Sick Friend Called," "Trinity Bellwoods," and "The Theme from the Facts of Life" (which few people realize was written by the band) all induced standing ovations from the VIP crowd.

The show was stopped momentarily when Russian President Boris Yeltsin, apparently in a state of inebriation, made his way on-stage and bear-hugged guitarist Greg Nori. Treble charger recovered well, though, with a spine-chilling version of mega-hit "Morale".

"Treble charger finally took the stage inconspicuously dressed as the four members of KISS..."

As the night wrapped up, it became apparent just what treble charger means to music. We should all be thankful for what they have done.

New robot excretes TV fun

AARON HUNTER

LAURIER SUN

When Roland Barthes wrote about the 'death of the author,' it's doubtful he was talking about this - scientists at the Artificial Intelligence

Research Unit in St. Jacob's have developed a machine that can write scripts for television just as easily as it can calculate pi.

"The technology will become more compact as time goes by," said Myron Bucke, proud project leader, as he conducted a tour of the facilities for a host of entertainment journalists. "Just look back to ENIAC in the fifties - it took up a whole building, and all it could do was add single digits. Now, look at our system - SHITE may take up a lot of room, but at least it can come up with marketable plots."

The new invention is a sight to behold: hundreds of shining toilets connected in series to a central control. "We modelled the central control on the brain of a rabid skunk - it was the only way we could get SHITE to duplicate the kind of sitcom banter you see on programs like The Single Guy."

Bucke invited the crowd to look into one of the many toilet bowls. "There's an ink-jet assembly in each one," he revealed, "and when the toilets go through the 'reverse delivery' process, a printed page explodes out of the bowl and is collected by an attendant."

How does the attendant know what order the sheets go in? "Oh, it doesn't matter," Bucke explained.

Earlier versions of SHITE were not as successful as the current Mark VII version. Mark II, for instance, was plagued by artistic integrity and produced nothing but adaptations of Jane Austen novels. Mark IV was constructed of toilets that had not been properly cleaned, and produced dialogue suitable only for cable programming. (Sample: "You fuckin' killed my fuckin' girlfriend with that so-called musical saw. What, do you think you're some sort of cool thing? Fuckin' guy.") A bug in the Mark V version caused it to write nothing but unappealing pilots about poor people and old people. Mark VI was perfect, except for an unfortunate tendency to create openly gay characters.

Six years and nearly a billion dollars later, Bucke and his team of researchers have finally built the ideal script machine. "We replicated the entire last season of Party of Five just last night," Bucke boasted. "Tinkering with the profit-margin software produced slightly improved drafts of the scripts - the computer suggested that all the show's beautiful people sleep together regardless of family decency and cultural taboos. We called the network and they said to send it right down."

When pressed, Bucke admitted that the project purposely used toilets instead of some other vessel for the scripts. "There's something magical about a toilet," he claimed. "It's got an aura of earthiness about it. We wanted something charismatic. SHITE is a writer for the people - it knows how to calculate the lowest common denominator."

Bucke favoured the crowd with a demonstration. With the touch of a button, the room started shaking. Ten seconds later, there was a hideous roar as the endless rows of toilets vomited forth a potential Road to Avonlea script about sado-masochist buggy-drivers. I picked up a page and read: Felix rubbed the welts with horse-fat... He had learned his lesson. Fade out.

The innovative system is scheduled for mass production and sale starting in early 1997. Bucke advises all writers to apply for jobs as toilet attendants: "At least they'll be part of the creative process," he said.

Cobain spotted at Wilf's

Grunge guru Kurt Cobain was seen in Wilf's this past Wednesday, according to one undergrad who chooses to remain nameless. Apparently, the third-year poli-sci student is embarrassed to admit she saw the presumably dead former Nirvana frontman.

"At first, I thought it was Tom Cochrane," said the exhausted informer, who ran immediately to the Cord offices upon sighting Cobain.

"But then I realized it was just Kurt."

When questioned about the validity of the student's claim, doorman Rob said, "Yeah, like, at first I didn't recognize him 'cause he had this mustache and stuff. Kinda like, I dunno, Tom Cochrane, only with a mustache."

Word got out quickly as dozens of Turret goers (who had been at the Big Sugar concert that night) flocked in droves to catch a glimpse of the 182 pound rocker. According to several eye-witness accounts, Cobain fled through Wilf's emergency exit, setting off the fire alarm.

"Alarm? What alarm? No, I didn't hear no alarm," said a man who'd been at the Big Sugar concert. I thought it was feedback or a keyboard, or some other effect...Oh, oh, that alarm. The ringing, oh, the ringing, I can still hear it!"

The man's friend suggested his ears were still ringing from the Big Sugar concert itself, and not the fire bell.

In an exclusive interview with Courtney Love, Cobain's ex-widow denied he could have been at Laurier at all.

"Bastards! You fuckers! Kurt's taking music at Western! You ... oh shit, did I say that?!"

The Student Union is currently trying to book Cobain for an acoustic set in the Crystal Solarium in January.

There hasn't been such an interest in the return of the dead here since Elvis was spotted at Forwell's in 1986.

Harris survives brush with trash

HARDWICK COCKBURN
LAURIER SUN

In the latest high profile celebrity news, Ben Harris, author of such memorable items as "Sexy Robots Imminent" and "Mad About Hair," was found burrowing through the garbage behind the Students' Union Building.

"The only reason we found him was because of his loud sobbing," an on-duty library attendant remarked.

"It was strange and somewhat shocking to see the wit of his generation floundering and blubbing in a dumpster."

An unnamed source confirmed that Harris, the notorious letter-writer, had been seen at the Turret the night before, harrasing (one is tempted to say "Harris-ing") patrons and staff alike.

Bartender Richard Lohung said he had "never before seen a person annoyed with so many things. He was almost like Andy Rooney on acid."

Before anyone could get severely chastised, however, Harris was escorted out of the bar and banned from re-entering.

"We all have to respect people's freedom to do moronic things," remarked Big John Thomas, a well-known critic of social evils, "but Harris crossed the line. For God's sake, he was yanking the cigarettes out of people's mouths!"

According to doctors, Harris will spend much of the Christmas season undergoing therapy for a number of tolerance-related ailments, primarily "Fotheringham's Disease" and "Roger Ebert Syndrome." Although the prognosis is neutral at this point, there is still hope for Harris.

A compilation of Harris's more inflammatory statements is scheduled to be released in case he dies.

In a press conference yesterday, Lynn calmed the fears of Laurier students and university officials. "I am aware of the scandal that would arise from my belonging to any sort of rock band or performing troupe,"

Lynn said. "Let me assure my friends and colleagues that any yearnings I might have had in that direction are over. I will not follow in the shameful footsteps of others."

Lynn may have been referring to the disastrous career of "$" (the Artist Formerly Known as Mike faculty members, the lowering of admission standards, and an epidemic of student nausea.

Also at the press conference was a spokesman for the Disney corporation, vehemently denying the membership of Walt Disney's corpse in the same rumoured supergroup.

"Walt's remains are where they have always been," Disney's Carl Unter stated emphatically: "lying next to Stalin's in a secret bunker in Florida until the time comes when the two bodies can be surgically joined and re-animated."

Disney is nervous about the scandalous rumours because of their potential to hurt the box-office performance of 101 Dalmatians and its immediate sequels, 101 Dalmatians Eat Their Own Vomit and 101 Dalmatians Get Put to Sleep.

Cronenberg to appear before DAC

HAZARD LEPAGE
LAURIER SUN

Filmmaker David Cronenberg appears before the Dean's Advisory Council tomorrow on charges that his controversial film, Flush, has inspired copy-cat incidents around Laurier's campus.

"It's sheer irresponsibility," claims Bill Hrbek, director of Washroom Services at Laurier. "If you make a movie about people having sex with urinals, what do you expect?" Flush contains several scenes of graphic nudity revolving around the characters' fetish for urinals (and to some degree, for disinfectant urinal pucks). One particularly notorious scene shows two people in a high state of sexual ed twelve individuals in the past month who were surprised in the acts of molesting a urinal, destroying a urinal erotically, or thinking erotically about urinals while drunk or sober. "Oh, they have all sorts of excuses," said student security officer, Joe Football. "They say stuff like, 'I was just going to the washroom' or, 'It was an accident' or, 'You're crushing my arm, you big stupid cretin,' but you know it's all bull. Eventually, they all stop screaming and admit it was the movie that made them do it."

Cronenberg was served with a summons last week. Industry insiders report that he will plead freedom of expression when he comes to Laurier, despite the sheer idiocy of this plan. If convicted, he could face penalties ranging from repairing all the traumatized urinals to spending a day in the smelly desk drawer of Student Publications' Photo Department. The washroom security crisis, however, continues.
