Goldman on Jobs: 'Apply Now—Worry Later'

—Walt Pellegrini

"It's never too soon to send out resumes in search for a job," Leslie Goldman, director of the Placement Office advised. She also feels it is folly to set any artificial date for getting a job. She recommends applying early but warns, "don't put pressure on yourself now, it's always too soon to panic."

The age old adage 'no news is good news' is particularly applicable when searching for a job. Usually only the large major firms hire early, and this year fortunes will turn with the economy. Government agencies on the other hand have waited until as late as summer before responding after interviews.

If there is a first step to job seeking, Ms. Goldman suggests it be some honest soul searching. To remember what that is, students should go back to reading week before the first set of January law finals. "Sit down with yourself and decide what you really want as far as a job—anything is not the answer," Goldman stressed. This, she feels will facilitate the aspirant's next step: research.

Soul searching done, the next step is to plow through Martindale-Hubbell for firms in your field and in the locales you want, should you be that selective. "You should maximize your chances by covering all the firms in the specific field you've chosen." It is a shotgun approach but channeled. Again Ms. Goldman points out that the channel a student chooses is important because he or she is the one to be interviewed. "Only you know what you'll feel comfortable with," Goldman said.

The job applicant is advised that a standard resume form is most acceptable to facilitate matters for hiring committees. Cover letters should provide an opportunity for adding an 'individual touch' to the package. A short letter is preferred and it is stressed that it should be as neat as the resume.

As far as listing names for references, Ms. Goldman says, "They usually don't come into play unless you are seriously being considered—but do have them ready." She feels the 'to whom it may concern' letters are excess baggage.

This year the Placement Office has compiled lists of firms. They are listed according to their specialty where there is a predominant noted specialty, something never done before. Thus far these lists include Theatrical, Entertainment, Labor, and Patent law firms. They will be made available soon. Firms will begin interviewing here at Fordham on September 17th. Instructions concerning these interviews will be issued soon also.

Ms. Goldman informs the Advocate that there are opportunities outside the Tri-state area for Fordham Grads Generally, lack of student interest has prevented active recruiting from the 'hinterlands.' Ms. Goldman has alumni contacts, ferent parts of the country who in the past have assisted students in their job hunting.

The bicycle thief

The doors of Fordham have closed to crime in the first week of classes. An attempted bicycle theft has forced the locking of the basement level entrance to the law school.

Ira Goldberg, 3A, avid bicyclist, noticed metal cutting marks on his bicycle lock. Angered over the thought of crime in the law school he reported the incident to Dean Hanlon and demanded either an additional security guard at the entrance or the permanent locking of the doors. Goldberg noted that the cycle tampering was only the harbinger of possible muggings at the unprotected entrance and warned Professor Martin, whose office is near the entrance, of the danger.

According to Goldberg, Martin had scared off three men who appeared to have a metal cutting device.

When asked whether the doors would be permanently locked, Dean Hanlon replied, "I assume so." He said that the decision would be up to the security guards.

L Rev Despite Staff Upset, On Schedule

Editors and Staff Improve Rapport

—Walt Pellegrini

Mutiny, desertion, job action, whatever term you want to use, such were the overtones on Law Review this August. Although there were no threats of walk-out or dismissal there was a confrontation between the second year Law Review staffers united in quasi-association and the Board of Editors.

For the second time in as many years Law Review was beset with labor-management problems but unlike last years allegedly arbitrary firing of staffer Ridge Loux, this year's controversy seems to have been resolved without casualties, and the review is sticking to its publication schedule.

Staffer complaints began brewing during the summer when they felt they were subject to pawn treatment. "Some of us would make required trips into school only to discover we'd have no assignments," remarked one staffer who like all staffers interviewed requested anonymity.

Editor-in-chief Tom O'Connell feels the scheduling

Class of '78: 31% women; two dropouts per day

Minority and LSAT statistics not yet available.

—Jay Couzens

This year's entering class originally had 270 Day students and 145 Evening students. Dean Hanlon stated that there have been about two drop-outs per day, possibly due to the early starting date.

As of Friday, Section 1A only has 109 students after 13 dropped out. In Section 1B 13 students have left since mid-August leaving the count for 1B at 137.

Dean Hanlon stated that ideally each of the three sections should have 120 students but Fordham refuses to arbitrarily reject equally qualified applicants. The total of first year students is 246 day and 135 evening.

Women comprise thirty-one percent of this year's entering class. While last year the figure was 23%. Hanlon said it was not a policy decision to increase by eight percent the number of women but that all applicants are judged equally. However, women this year still only comprise twenty four (24) percent of the total student body, last year that total was eighteen (18) percent. The entire enrollment this year is 1111 students, last year there were 1096.

One-hundred and thirty two colleges and universities were represented by the first year class. Approximately 30 of these schools were Catholic. Hanlon did not have figures on the total number of students from Catholic schools although in years past there have been as many as twenty students from Fordham College alone in a class.

Perhaps the most significant statistics on minority enrollment and average LSAT scores are not yet available. Hanlon said he expects to have those stats this week.

Summer Employment

Layoffs for lawyers

—Ed Wallace

Labor Law and Collective Bargaining have become required courses for job seeking law students—not for clients-to-be, but for themselves. Layoffs and unemployment compensation are no longer strangers to the legal profession, or Fordham students.

In August, the Legal Aid Society terminated thirty-one law interns, seven of them Fordham students. Lofton Holder graduated from Fordham last June and was offered a job at Legal Aid which he accepted. Shortly after taking his bar exam, Holder was informed by the Society that the job he had counted on was no longer available.

Jim Mackevich, 3-A, returned to the summer employment of his college days to supplement his part time job in a law firm. He delivered toilet paper and other paper products for Morris Bros. Paper Co. of New Jersey ("If Its Paper We Make It.") All was not a waste since as Jim pointed out "I expect to get an offer of full time employment once I graduate." From the paper company that is, not the law firm.

Bob Grant, 3-A, avoided the worries of legal employment and went to sea. He was able to earn over $300 a week on a tug boat towing city garbage out to sea until the budget crisis forced the tug boat company to lay him off. Bob continues to pay his union dues in order to retain his seniority in the hope of being rehired. He is counting on the fact that the garbage will have to be towed eventually and he looks forward to enjoying a distinction few lawyers enjoy: "My boss told me I'd be the only lawyer towing New York City garbage."

Students working on Wall Street and environs did not feel the economic pinch Tom Milton, 3-A, worked at Dewey, Ballantine, Bushby, Palmer & Wood, Melinda Roberts continued at Hughes, Hubbard & Reed, and Bill Brennan was a summer associate at Mudge, Rose, Guthrie & Alexander. All

Presidential Box

Stu McGregor

On behalf of the Student Bar Association I would like to welcome you back to the Law School and hope that this will be an enjoyable and rewarding year for us all.

It would appear that once final exams have ended and graduation is complete, the doors lock and the building becomes silent until the start of the following fall semester. Nothing could be further from the truth. Although the noise and activity associated with 1100 students disappears there is a great deal happening throughout the summer months. Not only is the Administration, Placement, and Library working feverishly to prepare for the incoming class, but groups of students are also busy with activities which are of importance to us all. The Moot Court Board presented an excellent Mulligan Moot Court Competition and congratulations are in order for their fine work. Congratulations as well to the winners and finalists Dan Brambilla Dave Goldstein, Vic Zimmerman and John Peterson. Lights were always burning on the second floor as Law Review was busy with another publication. The same was true for the third floor and the Urban Law Journal. The Orientation Committee headed by Louise Meller and Ellen Martin prepared an extremely professional and enjoyable orientation program. That this program ran so smoothly was a tribute to the thoroughness and long hours that each member of the committee contributed. In conjunction with Orientation, Biblio-Juris, Inc., the Student Book Store under the direction of Tom Penett and Andy Marchese has achieved new status in organization and professionalism. I believe only fourth year evening students can now recall the long lines, short hours, lack of books, and the cash only policy of the University Book Shop. Limited stationary supplies are being offered for the first time and as usual at a reduced price. In late July the Black and Puerto Rican Law Student Associations co-sponsored a minority program which was a first for the metropolitan community and its success speaks well for the future and importance of such programs at Fordham.

It would be highly unusual if we were all to come back and find a perfect environment in which to study and a perfectly designed program of legal education. There are problems, major to some of us and minor to others, but all in need of solution. I mention this because of the variety we have at the Law School and hope that everyone will contribute in trying to solve as many of these problems as possible. From lack of lockers to lack of jobs in the profession, each area both professional and social can stand scrutiny and improvement. The function of our student government is not to govern but to present student input about what is right and what is wrong in our environment and to present suggestions for improving our legal education. Therefore I invite each of you to take part in helping to solve the problems and make the improvements in order that we all will find our stay at Fordham Law School much more enjoyable.

Student Co-op

Considering the difficulty of admission and its general reputation, Fordham Law School can be a frustrating disappointment to incoming students. The homogeneity of the student body and faculty make studying in the Big Apple a surprisingly bland experience. School spirit or sock hops are not the answer. This is a professional school where students properly concentrate on their future prospects and give little thought to the minor discomforts of law school life. Nevertheless, many discomforts reflect serious defects in the quality of a Fordham legal education. The placement office remains hopelessly understaffed. The curriculum is geared only to prepare graduates for "downtown" jobs that do not exist. The curve of the grading system puts students whose raw score knowledge is almost identical at opposite ends of the class when ranking time rolls around. Exams themselves often reward the memory rather than the understanding. Students who cooperate to fight these will improve Fordham while furthering their own interest in becoming capable employable lawyers.

RIP/RPM

Along with "lady lawyers," the phrase reasonable man is more offensive than it is helpful. Professors who have mastered the cacophony of legal jargon should enjoy referring to the reasonable person, and rephrasing their hypotheticals to include women in positions other than secretarial or wife. At common law a husband and wife were one person and that person was the husband. In the United States women are lawyers and doctors and recognition of these facts should not overtax their colleagues.

Rules of the Game

The administration can put up sound proof barriers in the Library but they serve no purpose when the noise comes from within. With the growing number of admitted students each year the Library is more apt to become Grand Central Terminal North unless we each think about and respect each others' rights.

Smoking is illegal in classrooms in New York City. More important overcrowded classrooms and poor ventilation make it offensive to non smokers and smokers alike. Air pollution is air pollution either by the big factory in suburbs or the cigarette smoker in the classroom.

Opinion: The Compleat Advocate

—Rich Nacchio

One not yet wise in the ways of Fordham might be led to believe that when the Chief Justice of the United States and the Lord Chief Justice of England appear at lectures sponsored by the Law School to extol the virtues of courtroom advocacy, that such appearances would signal the intention of the Law School to promote the development of skills in this area.

One more experienced in the ways of Fordham would probably expect the kind of situation that, in fact, exists.

In the day division of the Law School for the entire 1975-1976 year only one course in advocacy—criminal advocacy—will be offered. The effect of this shortcoming has been either to prevent day students from obtaining an education in this area or to force them into the evening division for the three hour course. In practical terms this has meant that at least fourteen day students who were permitted to register for criminal advocacy on registration day found themselves suddenly 'cut' from the class several days later when Prof. Putzel, who teaches the course, posted 'his' list of selected students. The inevitable question of 'why me?' was asked by these students who were left the owners of texts in advocacy and suddenly three credits short.

When asked by the ADVOCATE as to what criteria he used in selecting those students who would be admitted to Criminal Advocacy, from the many who applied, Prof. Putzel declined to answer. He would, however, comment more generally on the state of advocacy courses, pointing out that the classes must be limited in size in order to maximize their effectiveness.

And what of those students who might feel educationally shortchanged by the present system? Prof. Putzel felt that this was 'not an issue' indicating that the student who really wanted advocacy should take it at night.

What is, or should be, the issue is the quality and availability of advocacy training to all students.

The suggestion that day students should seek solace in the evening is no solution especially when those closed or cut out students learned of their status too late to register for the evening course even if they wanted to.

The irrationality of the present system could have been largely obviated had the registrar's office been notified in advance of the number each professor was willing to have in his class. Students could have been taken on a first come first served basis and would not have to wait to see if they were among the chosen. This simple alternative is both faster and fairer—it was not employed.

Why can't more sections of advocacy be added? "The problem is money," says Prof. Putzel (and everyone else). The adjuncts who teach these courses are not available in the daytime... which leads to the next question—"Can't we find someone who is available to teach day students?" Surely somewhere out there in the great sea of unemployed legal humanity there is someone qualified and courageous enough to take on the task.

Until then Fordham's commitment to produce the complete advocate will remain unfulfilled.

Alumni

The Fordham Law Alumni Association in conjunction with the Law School Placement Office has developed a program of guidance and counseling for each student in the Law School. The program's goals are threefold—(i) to give the student an understanding of the different areas of practice, (ii) to assist the student in selecting his or her own career area, and (iii) to help guide the student in obtaining employment in that selected area upon graduation.

During the first academic year, a member of the Alumni will be assigned to each freshman who elects to participate in the program. The member of the Alumni selected for a student will act as that student's counselor while the student is enrolled at the Law School.

When a counselor has been assigned, the student will be advised of the counselor selected and will be asked to communicate directly with him. Thereafter, the student will have a practicing attorney available to answer any questions concerning career objectives and he may also have the opportunity to observe a practicing attorney at work.

Among other Law Alumni placement activities, a series of programs and workshops on the practice of law will be presented in the fall and spring of the current academic year.

Sapinski on fish: 'JAWS'

by Rich Sapinski

The advent of warm weather and sunny days is a combination almost guaranteed to send crowds swarming to the beaches for a refreshing dip in the ocean. If, however, one noted bathers warily eyeing the water and staying within quick reach of land this past summer, one reason may well have been Universal Studios' "Jaws" which, in its first three to four weeks running, played to enough packed houses in area theaters to pay almost all its production costs. Based upon Peter Benchley's best-seller of the same name, "Jaws" seems to have struck a chord deep within most people, the terror of one of the most horrible deaths imaginable.

The story centers on a Northeastern resort community at the beginning of what is expected to be a profitable summer season. Suddenly, the town fathers are thrown into turmoil when the remains of a young woman are discovered on the beach one morning. Although she was obviously the victim of a very large shark, the local leaders, all of whom stand to lose a lot of money if the beaches have to be closed, force town Police Chief Brody, played by Roy Scheider, to label the incident a "boating accident" and to keep the beaches open.

Predictably, the result is a bloody reign of terror as the maneater, whose approach is always signalled by spine-tingling "mood music" calculated to keep the audience on the edge of their seats, strikes again and again without warning. This time, the shock of more deaths is enough to force the closing of the beaches and financial ruin for the community becomes imminent if something is not done and done fast. The shark must be found and destroyed. In desperation, the town leaders hire a local "old salt" and shark-hunter known as "Quint," played by Robert Shaw, to hunt the menace for a huge fee.

The stage is set for more than a confrontation with the killer when "Quint" is joined on board by Chief Brody and Matt Hooper, an oceanographer and shark expert, played by Richard Dreyfuss, who is sent to the community to help find the shark. "Quint" hunts sharks because he hates them, having survived shark attacks as a crewman of the cruiser Indianapolis in World War II. Of 1100 crewmen who went into the water, he was one of only 400 rescued; the remainder were shark victims. Hooper, on the other hand, is a rich, young scientist who is fascinated by sharks and considers this to be an excellent opportunity for scientific study. Brody is in the middle; a man who turns green in a wading pool, all he wants is to get back to dry land.

The clash of ideas, age differences, and class animosities among these three men from completely different backgrounds who are pitted in a life and death struggle with a seemingly supernatural shark becomes the central focus of the film. What starts out as a shark hunt becomes a nightmare as the quarry becomes the hunter in a series of fast-paced scenes climaxed by an ending which leaves even those who have read the book in doubt as to the outcome. This is accomplished by superb technical effects and masterful direction which puts the viewer right on board with the shark hunting trio.

Artistically, however, I felt that the movie sacrificed much of Benchley's story in exchange for added sensationalism and shock value. Character conflicts and feelings are elementary and predictable, while at times the story becomes merely a science fiction tale of a "super-shark." The book, on the other hand, had elements of "The Old Man and the Sea" in its battle between "Quint" and the shark, and remained on a more literary level throughout.

Despite these aesthetic drawbacks, "Jaws" is a first-rate action and adventure movie, which, by a combination of technical effects, mood, and effective acting, grabs the viewer and doesn't let go until the very end.

MOVIES AROUND TOWN

—Mark Lichtblau

DAY OF THE LOCUST—The end of the World as per Hollywood in the 1920's, adapted from Nathaniel West's novel. Pretentious, boring, pseudo, chic, and naive as it may sound, contains not one sympathetic character. Stars Karen black.

NASHVILLE—If you like country music, this might well be for you. If you don't mind a long, long, plotless film this is for you. The ending isn't bad, but its rather anticlimatic after spending 2½ trying to guess who's gonna do it.

LOVE AND DEATH—Woody Allen's newest effort with Diane Keaton. Not for fans of Woody's older movies, unless you don't mind hearing some of the same jokes again. Deals with a plot to assassinate Napoleon during his invasion of Russia. But as in all Allen films it does have its moments of hilarity.

WIND AND THE LION—Sean Connery as the last of the Tripoli pirates. Absolutely delightful adventure film of Connery swashbuckling around the desert à la Errol Flynn. Don't miss it.

ROLLERBALL—The sublimation of aggression and hostility into a futuristic gladiatorial game in the corporate world of tomorrow. Stars James Caan. Not for the squeamish but not to be missed.

RETURN OF THE PINK PANTHER—Does anyone remember when Peter Sellers was still a comedian? Well, he's back in a delightfully funny sequel to the Pink Panther. Not high comedy but some excellent slapstick.

MONTY PYTHON & THE HOLY GRAIL—The Hilarious English vaudeville group's first feature film. It soon becomes obvious that they should stick to skits, but the film does have its moments.

EATS IN THE AREA

—Mark Lichtblau

THEATER COFFEE SHOP—Lobby of Hotel Empire (in same building as O'Neals, see below).

CHOCK FULL O'NUTS—Broadway at 61st St.

TEMPTEE DELICATESSEN—good sandwiches; East side of Broadway at 61st St.

LITTLE ITALY PIZZA—Southwest rim of Columbus Circle;

Mc DONALDS—Walk north to Broadway and 71st or South to 8th Avenue and 56th.

BURGER JOINT—Broadway and 77th. Big burgers.

ANGELO'S ITALIAN RESTAURANT—Cheap but not bad Italian food. At 56th and 9th Ave.

PIOMEER MARKET—9th Avenue between 57th and 58th Street. This regular deli-store makes tasty, big sandwiches at reasonable prices.

LIBERTY CAFE—64th off B'way. Just beneath the uptown Statue of Liberty, they offer some of the best dessert values in the area. The ice cream is superb, and be sure to try the banana-chocolate whipped cream crepe. Stay away from a real meal though; the prices for lunch are outrageous.

LINCOLN DELI—62nd & B'way. A welcome new addition to the collection of nearby take-out sandwich places. Hot and cold foods are available. The sandwiches are good and the prices are quite reasonable for the area.

PHILLY MIGNON—9th Ave & 57th. Now you can find out what your friends in Philadelphia have been raving about. A large selection of heroes is available and the cheese steak and onions sandwich is a must.

FOOTLIGHTS CAFE—Lincoln Center. Footlights has a larger selection of food than our law school cafeteria, but that's about all. The food isn't that good and it sure ain't cheap.

LINCOLN LOUNGE—62nd near B'way. Fordham Law School's very own. Wanda has added place-settings on the tables and a large lunch menu, notably featuring Chinese food. We haven't eaten there yet, but it's probably worth a try.

TJW GLEASON'S—B'way past 71st. Great neighborhood bar with a very competent kitchen. The draft beer served is cold and delicious but goes for 75c a stein. The chili, cheeseburger deluxe and the chef's salad are a must with their reasonable prices.

problems were unavoidable. "Staffers assignments depend on so many other variables such as when manuscripts arrive," O'Connell explained.

By mid-August 10 staffers were tossing around their mutual gripes. They complained that there was no notice given on their assignments, no notice on when required to report to the office, no advance notice of whether they'd be free or busy for a weekend. Another of the disgruntled staffers quipped, "We realized there'd be a lot of work when we joined the Review, but all we ask is for a little consideration."

A cry for human consideration, for human dignity, became the foundation of their position. Later in August they met with Tom O'Connell. They noted that O'Connell didn't seem receptive to their idea of an association of the staff, but did appear sensitive to their grievances.

"We had the same complaints," he said, "In fact we tried to bend over backwards because we felt last years board had been a little rough."

Little was done though, until the third confrontation occurring at a Law Review orientation party. "I don't know if it was the beer or the mounting frustration, but it turned into a shouting match," noted one participant. The editors pleaded to 'give us time' and it appears the controversy has passed.

The staff has noticed a change in attitude by the editors, and ample notice of assignments both for the week and weekends is being given. "From what I've gathered, had we approached last years editors the same way, we'd have been tossed off the Review and nothing would have changed. We're all grateful and respect the open mindedness our editors have shown," was posited by another staffer.

O'Connell said that each student had been guaranteed a week off as well as the labor day weekend. "We have tried to set it up so everyone will be free from Thanksgiving until New Year's," he added.

Every Law Review member interviewed expressed concern with the Editors' difficult position and share their zeal for quality publication. "We're willing to do whatever is necessary to produce a top flight Review, since it defeats our own interests to be published in a Rag," added another member.

Through it all the editors and staff have managed to keep to a tough schedule. Two books are already in galleys.

"One thing I'd like the staff to know," O'Connell stressed, "is that the board thinks very highly of the staff, particularly in terms of their ability to produce publishable material."

In short, the possible unionization of sorts, of a staff of the Law School publication has been put off for now, but the concern for human dignity may ring again.

The federal government was no exception to unemployment syndrome. Late in the spring semester, Leslie Goldman, Fordham placement director got word from Washington D.C. that the newly established Clemency Board would hire dozens of law students to process the cases of returning deserters and draft resisters. The description indicated that law students would appear before the Board and function as litigators.

Several Fordham students applied for the job and about ten were sent telegrams offering nearly $200 a week on the condition that students arrive to start work in the middle of their Evidence exam.

The Dean's office cooperated in having the exam administered at Georgetown, and several students, including Colleen Sullivan 3-B, forewent other employment, rented an apartment in the capital only to be informed that no funds would be available to pay the new interns.

Several students desperately tried to reclaim other offers, and many, having heard the tales of no pay and no organization stayed away altogether. At one point Ms. Sullivan, a stringer for the New York Times was asked if she wanted to handle press relations for the Clemency Board, and she declined. Finally through perseverance, she and other students who stayed were able to enjoy work for the Board and earn $175 a week for their effort.

The moral of the story for summer job seekers is to persevere and badger prospective employers while at the same time, renew their hack licenses.

THERE WILL BE an SBA discount tickets to the meeting tonight. Your money will be allocated. Open to all students. 5 p.m. Moot Court Room.

THE ADVOCATE will publish twice as often this year to keep students up to date. If you think you have a story please contact the paper at 956-3715.

THE WORMSER MOOT COURT arguments will be held between Oct. 13 and Nov. 6 this year. Briefs are due Oct 1. The last day to sign up is Sept. 17, at 9:00 p.m. Meetings will be held for interested students: Evening-rm. 305, at 5:30 today; Day-MCR on Thursday at 1:00 p.m. The two finalists will represent the school on the National Moot Court Team.

DISCOUNT MOVIE TICKETS are available to law students at Activities office on 2nd floor in Lowenstein. Check there also for

Intramural Football

3-B PREDICTS SUCCESS

By James Zellinger
& Frank Hertz

Due to the lack of participation rather than the clear superiority of a good team, 3B has emerged with a perfect gridiron record. Unlike the fall of 1973, when 3B, then light of beard and brow, cinderallas at the dawn of their game, unranked and untamed, crushed the upperclass powers and created their dynasty, they are now older, heavier, more awkward than in the past, and ripe for dethroning from their gridiron monarchy.

Yet 3B's undaunted members are returning with high expectations for another unbeaten season and for another keg at the end of the rainbow. By mid-August the team had finally washed last year's sweats, sharpened their spikes and finished deodorizing '88'. Fresh from outfitting at his Italian haberdasher's, Bob Woodruff will repeat at quarterback navigating 3B's offense. Unlike completed, will be soon. —the Speakers Forum will get off the ground possibly later in the month to be chaired by Charlie Carberry, 3B, and Kevin Frawley 3A.

SBA

—Treasurer Steve Markstein states SBA books show $12,300, most from new members at higher $25 entrance fee. Markstein announced a hope that we'll get a $3,500 stipend from the Bronx.

—SBA has been evicted from its second floor office to make room for the two additional Law Review editors. SBA has moved to the ground floor in the same room as the co-op bookstore.

—First year orientation cost the S A $965 this year, surely an all time record.

—Vice resident Sullivan 2A, will chair a New Budget Committee to review requisitions, on Tuesday September 9.

—elections for the first year class officers are to be held later in the month.

—the student directory is nearing completion with a cost of close to $500 and projected revenues of $1200.

—course evaluations for the fall semester have not been his performance with the Orangemen, Woody's disorganized style of play has inadvertently created a champion. Attempting to catch Woody's watermelons, will be Glenn '88' Niemy who has proven a strong odor is more valuable than good speed for loosening up defensive coverage.

Jim Zellinger, alias Z, captain and curator of the team, will return as the monster (man?) in 3B's defense. Known for his aggressive rather than winning style of play, the Tang (57 seconds) champion has promised to down the opposition "like flies in my beer". Mike 'Bubba' Beatrice will be starting in this year's backfield and his coaching experience with the Jersey City 'pee wees' should prove to be an absurdly minimal asset for 3B. Mike Cornacchia, whose mouthguard has successfully protected those pearly whites during the past campaigns, will again attempt to keep those cuspid intact while assisting 'Maddog' Letizia, 'Too Tall' Wolff and 'Big Tool' Tuffin with the defensive onslaught.

Contra to last season, wide receiver Steve Ingram has promised to display some of the conditioning that he acquired while hiking high in the Himalayas. He and Dennis 'Claws' Crossley will attempt to tangle and confuse the opposition's secondary as successfully as they have perplexed the quarterbacks of 3B. Finn 'the lion' O'Neill will be returning at the brutal middle linebacker spot. However, Finn is expected to meet and survive the challenge since he is accustomed to taking a good whipping. Finally Frank 'the buzzsaw' Hertz returns in the backfield of 3B. The lilliputian predicts great success, unlike his flagpole venture, in chopping down the opposition's defensive charge.

"It would be worthwhile to drag the children here by the ears" — Robert Potts, NBC-News March 11, 1975
