First and foremost my thanks must go to my supervisor Dr. Kerry Taylor. His patience and knowledge have been invaluable from day one, as has his ability to keep me on track when faced with the temptation of wandering off on innumerable tangents. My thanks also to the staff of the Alexander Turnbull Library, the New Zealand National Archives, and Mrs. Mary Monckton of the South Taranaki Museum Archive. Their patience with my many requests, and their ability to occasionally point out the obvious made the research process much easier than it could have been. Thanks also to the Employers and Manufacturers Association (Central) and the Council of Trade Unions for allowing me access to their records housed in the Turnbull Library. To friends and family I say a big thank you. If patience is a virtue then they are certainly some of the more virtuous people I have had contact with this year. Irrationality can strike the best of us, yet they handled my often fragile nature with much understanding and care.
