Copyright is owned by the Author of the thesis. Permission is given for a copy to be downloaded by an individual for the purpose of research and private study only. The thesis may not be reproduced elsewhere without the permission of the Author.

How is co-leadership enacted in the Green Party of Aotearoa New Zealand?

A 152.800 thesis presented in partial fulfilment of the requirements of the degree of Master of Management at Massey University

NEIL JAMES MILLER

09095616

22 February 2015

Word count: 29,080

ABSTRACT

This research report explores the enactment of a gender-balanced co-leadership throughout the organisation of the Green Party of Aotearoa New Zealand. This small-sized political organisation has had representatives in parliament since 1996. Its experimental model of a male and a female sharing positions arose out of the social movements of the baby boomer generation. Gender-balanced co-leadership was devised as an exception to the norm of a single leader (frequently presented as a heroic man). The metaphor of theatre is used to frame a description of the stage-managed performance of Green Party political co-leaders. I show how co-leaders have been portrayed over the life span of the party as if they were characters in play. The re-presentation of co-leaders is illustrated by images, primarily taken from the party magazine. Experiences of the enactment of this co-leader model are interpreted through five interviews with key informants who have all held formal positions of authority within the organisation. I provide an auto-ethnographic account as a party insider illustrated by snapshots. The Green Party's co-leadership model has endured over 25 plus years. By virtue of longevity it has demonstrated a viable way of sharing position power between two genders in a political party. Sharing positions in this organisation requires a significant investment of effort to maintain the desired presentation of the relationship. The lead actors are constrained to conform to the stage-setting. Parliamentary politics imposes isomorphic forces of order and hierarchy. The enactment of co-leadership has become increasingly gender stereotypical. Gender-balanced co-leadership is an experiment that has become a conventional routine.

MILLER, Neil 090951616

CONTENTS

1.	Introduction
	All the world's a stage		4
	The Green Pa	arty of Aotearoa New Zealand	6
2.	Literature Review
	Heroic leader	s	11
	Co-leaders		22
	Dramaturgy		23
	Photography		26
3.	Methodology	(	30
	Interviews		31
	Artefacts		33
	Representing	the story	35
4.	Review		38
	Prelude ACT I	Entering Parliament	40
	Scene I	Founders: Donald and Fitzsimons 1995–2005	43
	Scene II ACT II	Interregnum: Norman and Fitzsimons 2006–2009	50
	Scene I ACT III	The wedding: Norman and Turei 2009–2015	60
	Scene I	Adonises: Male Co-leadership Contest 2015	69
	Scene II	Grey Greens: Turei and Shaw 2015	73
	Epilogue		75
5.	Discussion		84
6.	Conclusion		98
APPENDIX		Schedule of questions	106
REFERENCES			107

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Politics is a relational process. This has been a work in progress over several years which began as a critique of heroic leadership, meandered through a cathartic drama and ended as a new beginning. This report is an inadequate prelude to the full symphonic complexity of leading in a social and political movement. My gratitude to the supervisors who have guided me from the conception to the completion of this research; namely Dr Andy Asquith for his wit, Dr Farah Palmer and Dr Suze Wilson for their guidance and A/Prof Craig Prichard for his erudition. Thanks to John Chapman for his evocative photographic contribution. I am grateful to Vernon Tava and Anne-Elise Smithson who aided my partial recovery from campaign management.