

A Message from Mike Rann

I congratulate all those associated with the very successful 7th International Conference on Greek Research.

The breadth and quality of the Conference presentations were outstanding, and the event reflected the high levels of energy and academic rigour shared today by Hellenic scholars across the world.

In particular, I applaud Flinders University and South Australia's Greek community for hosting the Conference. Their efforts were yet another example of South Australia's leadership in the fields of multiculturalism and higher education.

The 2007 International Conference on Greek Research deepened our understanding of Greek culture, history and language, and it strengthened links among peoples of the Hellenic diaspora.

It is vital that we continue to foster and defend Greek traditions – especially in the face of those who seek to undermine the historical and territorial integrity of Greece and Greek-speaking communities.

I commend these Conference Proceedings to you, and I look forward to Adelaide hosting another Conference on Greek Research in the near future.
