A BRIEF HISTORY OF ARAUCANIAN STUDIES

By DONALD D. BRAND

The term Araucanian most properly refers to the language once spoken by the many Indian groups between the Río Choapa (Coquimbo Province) and the Gulf of Corcovado (Chiloé Province). However, growing usage—both vulgar and scientific—makes advisable the use of this name for the Indians themselves, although they were never a political, physical, or cultural unit.

Probably the first European contact with the Araucanians was in 1536, when some of Diego de Almagro's scouts advanced into central Chile. However, it remained for Pedro de Valdivia, in 1541, to conquer all of Araucanian Chile earlier held by the Incas (to the Río Maule), and to push southward across the Río Bío-Bío into the forest home of the unconquered Araucanians. Here, in 1553, Valdivia lost his life to these Indians—led by Lautaro and Caupolicán. The conquest was continued by García Hurtado de Mendoza, in whose small army was Alonso de Ercilla y Zúñiga (Madrid 1533-1594 Madrid). Although Ercilla spent only seventeen months in Chile (1557-59) his La Araucana has been considered the greatest epic poem in the Spanish language. This work was commenced in Chile, concluded in Spain, and was published in Madrid in three parts which appeared in 1569, 1578, and 1589. Although good poetry and fairly good history, La Araucana ennobled the Indians exceedingly and cannot be relied upon ethnographically. Similar in vein were El Arauco Domado (Lima, 1596), by a Chilean creole Pedro de Oña (Angol 1570-1643 Peru), which was good poetry but which made the Indian a highly romantic figure, and Purén Indómito (finished in 1599), by Fernando Álvarez de Toledo (born about middle of XVI century).

The century 1541-1641 saw a temporary conquest and settlement of most of the Araucanian country to Chiloé Island, followed by triumphant insurgence of the Indians which left only a few isolated settlements and missions south of the Bío-Bío—such as Arauco, Valdivia, and Castro—in the hands of the Spaniards. A treaty of 1641, confirmed in 1655, saw Spain recognize the independence of the Indians south of the Bío-Bío. During the next one hundred and twenty years (until the peace of 1773, not really effective until 1792) Spanish-Araucanian relationships consisted mainly of many guerrilla raids (for slaves, revenge, booty, and punitive) and numerous peace agreements. Only the uprisings of 1723 and 1766 were general. The period 1773-1859 was one almost of peace, excepting for the participation of many Araucanians on the side of the royalist Spaniards against the republican creole Chileans in the War for Independence, 1810-1826.

HISTORY

The 285 years of Spanish occupation of Chile and contacts with the Araucanians provided, in addition to the poems mentioned above, very little of interest to the anthropologist excepting through the writings of Jesuit missionaries. The Society of Jesus entered Chile in 1593 and was expelled in 1768. One might say that the history of the Jesuits in Chile is the history of the Araucanians. All the leading histories of Chile of this period and nearly all of the Araucanian grammars and dictionaries in use during the Spanish colonial period were composed by the Jesuit fathers. Their published works and unedited manuscripts are still among the chief historical sources. The principal historical works that the student of Araucanía should consult are (most important works are marked *):<sup>1</sup>

After the establishment of the Chilean republic, the Chileans recognized the territorial integrity of Araucanía until the middle of the nineteenth century. Then began the planned colonization (1850-) of western Europeans—chiefly Germans, Britishers, French, and Iberians—in the various borderlands of Araucanía. Here only (essentially 37° to 44° S. Lat.) were there unoccupied lands, timber, water, and climate favorable for agriculturalists from western Europe. However, most of the land was claimed by the Araucanians, and much of this was too waterlogged or too densely vegetated to be attractive to farmers. Friction developed between the Indians and the immigrants, who settled mainly in the southern mainland in the province of Valdivia. Unsuccessful participants in the Chilean insurrections of 1851 and 1859 went among the Araucanians and stirred them up to a warlike activity, 1859-62. This was also the period, 1861-62, of the French adventurer king of Araucanía—Orélie-Antoine I. The demonstrated intention of the Chileans to advance at Araucanian expense (e.g., the law of 1868 which provided for the placing of the Indians on reducciones, allotted in title to the chiefs representing the various family groups) led to the revolt of 1868-70. This culminated with the reduction of much of Araucanía, and the founding of a line of forts south of the Bio-Bío along the Río Malleco. However, during the War of the Pacific (1879-83) Chile moved most of her garrison troops north into Bolivia and Chile, and the Araucanians commenced their final revolt. The capitulation of Lima in 1881 released experienced and equipped soldiers who (1881-84) completely conquered Araucanía. The Araucanian capacity for resistance was definitely crushed by the cholera epidemic of 1886-87. A string of towns, such as Victoria and Temuco, 1881, were established along the north-south road between Angol and Puerto Montt; new laws were set up regarding the Araucanians and their lands in 1883; and the Frontera was incorporated in the national domain by the organization of the provinces of Malleco and Cautín in 1887. This ended the epic resistance of the Araucanians against Spanish and Chilean aggression that had lasted more than 340 years. During this period the main wars and insurrections were ten in number: War of initial conquest, 1598-1602, 1654-1655, 1723, 1766, 1813-1825, 1835, 1859, 1868-1870, and 1879-1884.

POPULATION

Now, thanks to disease (smallpox, phthisis, typhus, malaria, measles, cholera, etc.), alcoholism, and war, the Araucanians were at their nadir. In the succeeding years the land situation became somewhat stabilized; a subsistence and barter economy (based upon livestock, cereals, potatoes, fruits, lumber, textiles, silverwork, etc.) functioned; schools, new missions, hospitals, and improved lines of communication and transportation were established; and the Araucanian population began to increase.

The number of Araucanians living at various periods during the past 60 years has been a matter more of guessing than of counting. National censuses have been taken in Chile in 1835, 1843, 1854, 1865, 1875, 1885, 1895, 1907, 1920, 1930, and the last one in November of 1940. These censuses have been of varying reliability, but none made any real attempt to enumerate the Araucanians prior to that of 1895. Most of the estimates place the number of Araucanians in 1890 between 20,000 and 50,000. These were obviously wrong since the census of 1907 listed 101,000 and that of 1920 gave a total of 105,000 Araucanians. In the writings of both Chileans and foreigners during the past 20 years one most commonly encounters a statement such as "somewhat more than 100,000." The statements actually range from 40,000 (Pericot y García: América Indígena, 1936, p. 682) to 180,000 (Carlson: Geography of Latin America, 1936, p. 121). Although the details of the 1940 census have not been published as yet, the author was informed that the government recognized the existence of some 187,000 Araucanians. However, this number reflects upon the validity of the previous census figures; and the writer is inclined to accept the number of around 300,000 claimed in March of 1941 by an Araucanian leader (Martín Collió Huaiquilaf) who helped with the census of 1940. The acceptance of such a large number rests upon (1) the wild and broken nature of much of the country in which the Araucanians reside; (2) the unwillingness of most Chileans to recognize the existence of a large Indian block of population; (3) numbers mentioned by Collió as present at markets in certain Chilean towns; and (4) the method of defining an "Araucanian Indian." It is impossible to determine a full-blooded Indian, since a mixed-blood may physically resemble a pure white, a pure Indian, or a definite mixture of the two. Possibly blood-typing might segregate the pure Indians, but only a few hundred Chileans have ever been typed. Due to illiteracy, paucity of legal recorded marriages, and lack of written records, few of the Indians and mestizos of Chile know their ancestry back three generations. It is an historic fact that Spanish renegades, and Chilean outlaws, squatters, and mestizos sought refuge with and settled down and intermarried with the Araucanians south of the Bío-Bío as early as the 16th century, and the process continued well through the 19th century. Further, the Araucanians carried back white and mestizo women from their raids into the Valley of Chile and elsewhere. All this has placed white blood in the veins of thousands of so-called pure Indians. However, most of this dilution seemingly has resulted in a people among whom the majority of individuals have less than one-quarter white blood, judging from the shaky evidence of physical characteristics. If we count as "Indian" anyone who physically seems to be Indian, and all who linguistically or socially are considered Indian, then the estimate of 300,000 Araucanians probably is not too high.

These Araucanians are mainly in Chile between the Bío-Bío and the Gulf of Guafo. As a result of Spanish and Chilean pressure, some Araucanians groups, probably Pehuenche and Huilliche, sent bands eastward whose descendants, chiefly mixed with Patagonian and Pampas Indians, still live in the Argentinian provinces and territories of Mendoza, Neuquén, Río Negro, and Chubut. Their numbers have been estimated between a few hundred and three or four thousand. Whatever groups of Araucanian tongue, Picunche and the like, once existed north of the Maule no longer exist excepting as Spanish-speaking mestizos within the great lower class of rotos (laborers, etc.) and inquilinos (poor tenants). These Indians north of the Maule had lost much of their identity as Araucanians even before the Spanish conquest, due to conquest by the Incas about the middle of the 15th century,<sup>2</sup> and mixture with yanacunas and mitimaes brought to Chile from the north by both Incas and Spaniards. Upon the Spanish conquest, the Indians of the Valley of Chile were given as encomiendas to the more influential of the conquerors. Work, mistreatment, and disease killed off great numbers, and these were replaced in part by slaves brought in from raids southward, and by Indians from Peru and Bolivia. However, the number steadily diminished, and only a few thousand remained in 1791 when the king ordered complete abolishment of encomiendas. O'Higgins, royal governor of Chile, carried out the order and placed the remaining Indians in different villages and new settlements. Although the Indian language is dead, Indian physical types and customs still can be distinguished at some of these places, e.g., Pomaire near Melipilla.

The main Mapuche group is now represented between the Maule and the Bío-Bío by only a few scattered families and individuals. At a few villages, e. g., Quinchamalli near Chillán, there persist handicrafts which may represent a Mapuche origin, such as certain primitive-type ceramics. The Mapuche constitute the bulk of the existing Araucanians, and they are to be found mainly in the provinces of Malleco, Cautín, and Bío-Bío, with extension into the peripheral provinces of Arauco, Concepción, and Valdivia. The Huilliche are next in importance, followed by the closely allied Cunco (Kuncho); these two groups occupy Valdivia and Llanquihue provinces. A mixture of Huilliche and Cunco with the now extinct Poya and possibly Chono gave rise to the Chilotes, some of whose hispanized descendants still live in the province of Chiloé. Near the Chilean-Argentine border, and extending into Argentina are Picunche, Pehuenche, and Huilliche (Manzaneros) bands, which sometimes are referred to collectively as Araucanos Ranqueles or simply Pehuenches. The western Mapuche are the Moluche, just as eastern Araucanians are Pehuenche.

MISSIONS

The study of the Araucanians began with the Roman Catholic<sup>3</sup> missionaries who had to learn both language and customs in order to effectively preach to and convert the natives. Franciscans, 1535, Mercedarians, 1540, and Dominicans, 1557, came early to Chile, and the Jesuits, 1593, and Augustinians, 1595, came before the end of the 16th century. Most of the missionary work among the Araucanians has been done by the Franciscans, Jesuits (1593-1768), Capuchins (1848- ) and Salesians. During the colonial period the Jesuits wrote most of the works (letters and histories) that contained anthropological material, and also compiled most of the grammars and dictionaries. During much of the 19th century, Franciscans had missions in northern Araucanía, and the Valdivia-Chiloé area, and Capuchins worked to the south of the Río Cautín. Most of these missionaries were Chileans, Italians, and Germans. More recently the Roman Catholic missionary work has been through the Vicariato Apostólico de las Misiones Capuchinas de la Araucanía (established by Pope Leo XII in 1901 as the

3. The best guide to Roman Catholic missionary literature is Robert Streit [1875-1980]: Bibliotheca Missionum, 7 vols., Münster and Aachen, 1916-1981, the 2nd and 3rd volumes being devoted to the Americas.

Prefectura Apostólica de la Araucanía, which he gave to German Capuchins from the Province of Bavaria). Salesian missionaries have worked among the Araucanians of Argentine Patagonia since 1879 (cf. Bollettino Salesiano, monthly, Turin, 1877- ). Since the pacification of Araucanía several Protestant groups have entered the field, e.g., the Anglican Church's South American Missionary Society of London which opened its Araucanian mission<sup>4</sup> in 1895 (some valuable material is to be found in the South American Missionary Magazine), the Methodist Episcopal Board of Foreign Missions' Araucanian Indian Mission, and the American Southern Baptists. Temuco, capital of Cautín province, is the chief Araucanian market-town and headquarters, and here are several mission schools and convents. Among these are establishments of the Capuchins, Methodists, Baptists, and Hermanas de la Providencia. It is an interesting commentary on Protestant work in Araucanía that no Protestant missionary has yet made an outstanding contribution in linguistics or ethnology. Further, one might quote a Capuchin father concerning "Ciertas sectas protestantes o evangélicas de Inglaterra y Estados Unidos," that they are "sectas que predicán con odio poco cristiano contra los sacerdotes católicos y las doctrinas e instituciones de nuestra santa religión. . . . En general estos nuestros hermanos disidentes ayudan a aumentar la confusión."

LINGUISTICS

The earliest known works on the Araucanian language and dialects (known variously as Araucano, Auca, Chileno or Chilidugu, Moluche, Che, Mapuche or Mapudungu, etc.) are lost, such as the grammar and dictionary of ca. 1595 by Padre Gabriel de la Vega, S. J. The earliest preserved work is by Padre Valdivia, S. J., a rather incomplete grammar published around the beginning of the 16th century. Then a long period ensued<sup>5</sup> before the much better works of Padre Febrés, S. J., and Padre Havestadt, S. J., appeared in 1765 and 1777. These were improved upon by Fray Hernández, O. F. M., in 1846. Little new or constructive work was accomplished until a trained philologist, Dr. Lenz, placed the study of Araucanian on a scientific basis in 1895. His work and example inspired a number of Chilean writers and Capuchin missionaries to collect and publish texts, and to revise the old grammars and dictionaries. Lenz was ably assisted by another great German philologist, R. R. Schuller. Now the Araucanian language can be considered as one of the six or eight most intensively studied Indian languages, although yet far from completely studied or satisfactorily

(who was killed, 1851, in Tierra del Fuego) had planned such a mission. Dr. Sadleir later became affiliated with the Araucanian Indian Mission; has been elected honorary president of the Araucanian Federation of Chile; and, since 1901, has been translating various books of the Bible into Araucanian, with the assistance of Ambrosio Paillalef.

ETHNOGRAPHY

Although a great amount of ethnographic material exists in print concerning the Araucanians, there is yet to be written a definitive ethnography. No trained anthropologist has ever lived for any length of time among these Indians. Consequently, most works containing ethnographic material are primarily histories, travelogues, annals of the various religious, texts compiled for linguistic purposes, and scattered brief observations on various elements of Araucanian culture. The most comprehensive treatment is to be found in the writings of R. E. Latham, R. E. Housse, and T. Guevara. However, Vida y Costumbres, by Moesbach, gives—in the form of a detailed biography of Pascual Coña (1847-1927)—a very good picture of Araucanian life.

Greatest attention has been given to the collecting of folkloric material—myths, legends, tales, and songs, and items illustrating the religious concepts of the Araucanians. This undoubtedly grew out of the fact that priests have done the major share of primary collecting and recording. Among the leading contributors in this field (both primary and secondary) have been: F. J. de Augusta, G. Beck, J. Benigar, A. Cañas Pinochet, F. J. Cavada, H. J. Claude Joseph, S. Englert, E. Gerdts-Rupp, T. Guevara, M. Gusinde, R. E. Latham, R. Lehmann-Nitsche, R. Lenz, M. Manquilef, E. W. Moesbach, A. Oyarzún, E. Rivadeneira, and G. & J. Soustelle. Chief producers of bi-lingual texts have been Augusta, Lenz, Manquilef, and Moesbach.

Music, dances, and games usually have received only incidental treatment. E. Pereira Salas (who is working on a history of music in Chile), C. Isamitt, J. Urrutia Blondel, and W. Giese are among the leaders in this field. K. G. Izikowitz, E. M. Hornbostel (†), C. Lavin, and F. C. Lange are library and museum workers who have contributed from foreign lands.

In the great field of economics there have been many papers but most of the contributions are rather scanty. Latham is an honorable exception. Among those treating on ethno-biology and agriculture are R. E. Latham, K. Reiche, E. W. Moesbach, A. Cañas Pinochet, R. A. Philippi, M. Gusinde, W. Knoche, A. Oyarzún, O. Reszczynski, and F. A. Fonck. The discussion of arts and crafts has centered upon textiles, ceramics, and metalwork. Latham has made the most complete treatment of pottery. Writers on textiles include A. Oyarzún, R. E.

Latcham, S. K. Lothrop (A. H. Verrill in 1924, and Lothrop in 1929 and 1930 collected textiles for the Museum of the American Indian, Heye Foundation), G. Looser, R. E. Claude Joseph, and M. D. Millán. R. E. Claude Joseph and A. Fontecilla Larraín have written specifically on silverwork.

There follows a list of works, other than those already mentioned under history and language, which contain ethnographic material. The list is arranged chronologically for the period 1824-1891, and alphabetically by authors 1892-1940. It contains the more significant works and a selection of others to represent varied content and authorship. The more important works are marked with an asterisk.

PHYSICAL ANTHROPOLOGY

History, linguistics, and ethnography have been given far more attention than physical anthropology and archaeology. Various naturalists and ship's surgeons during the past 200 years have contributed scattered measurements and observations, and a few small series of Araucanian skeletal material are present in Chile, Argentina, France, Germany, Great Britain, Spain, Scandinavia, Italy, and the United States. However, no museum has an adequate collection, and not even one anthropometric index, ratio, or simple measurement has been made over an adequate number of specimens. Stature and certain cranial measurements and indices provide the bulk of content in the literature to date.

Among resident Chileans, R. E. Latcham was one of the first to devote some attention to the physical anthropology of the Araucanians (1903). Local physicians from time to time have published brief notes; and such general historians as J. T. Medina and T. Guevara have devoted some space to physical anthropology. The most auspicious recent development is the work at the Universidad de Concepción (under the leadership of Dr. Karl Otto Henckel and Dr. Alexander Lipschütz). A number of papers are appearing in two series (Contribuciones a la Patología Geográfica de Chile, and Contribuciones al Estudio de la Antropología Chilena) published in the Boletín de la Sociedad de Biología de Concepción. Among these papers is a report on bloodtyping. G. Rahm in 1931 (Berlin and Madrid) published two papers on blood types among the Mapuche and Fuegians. Some of the earlier works include:

- Alcide D. d'ORBIGNY: L'homme américain. 2 vols., Paris, 1839.
- Léonce Pierre MANOUVRIER: "Sur les Araucans du Jardin d'Acclimatation," Bulletin de la Société d'Anthropologie, Paris, Ser. 3, VI, 727-32, 1883. [France 1850-1927 Paris.]

ARCHAEOLOGY

The archaeology of Araucanía, as such, has not been done. There are no imposing ruins in central Chile and no scientific excavation has been done in this area. Consequently, with the lack of stratigraphic data, little can be done toward identifying material as Araucanian except from association with European artifacts, or through the frequently dubious channels of style design, and general typology. The sequence of peoples and cultures, the provenience of the Araucanians and their antiquity in central Chile, and the amount of Tiahuanaco, Chinca, Inca and other influences, are still moot matters—although many writers have solved all of these problems to their own satisfaction. From the Río Maule to Chiloé Island the chief archaeological items are pictographs and petroglyphs, stone projectile points and bolas and other weapons, stone rings (weights for digging sticks, or mace heads), mealing stones, polishing stones, hammerstones, celts, adzes, hoes, gravers, burenas, "hominy" holes, spindle whorls, stone and pottery pipes, toquis, and pottery. The chief archaeological sites are boulder patches, caves, coastal kitchen middens, small habitation, refuse and burial mounds (ancoviña is term used for some), potsherd areas, and ruka sites. The area between the Maule and Bío-Bío rivers is much richer than the wetter forested country to the south.

The men at present most active in the archaeology of Araucanía are Mr. Dillman S. Bullock, of El Vergel, Angol (Bullock lived some 10 years farther south in Araucanía, ca. 1907-1917, before coming to Angol in 1923), and Dr. Carlos Oliver Schneider, of the Universidad de Concepción. Latham, Oyarzún, Looser, and others have worked in the area from time to time. Mr. Bullock (Methodist missionary, agricultural expert, and ornithologist, as well as archaeologist) has a small but excellent museum at El Vergel. Other museums containing material from Araucanía are in Temuco, Concepción, Santiago, and Valparaíso. The Museum of the American Indian-Heye Foundation in New York has the best collection of Araucanian material in the United States.

AUTHOR'S NOTE: Any corrections of errors of commission and omission will be greatly appreciated. It was impossible to compare many titles with the originals, and errors in pagination, volume, date of actual publication, capitalization, punctuation, and accentuation must occur. A common practice in Chile is the reprinting of separates from serials and periodicals with a different date, different pagination, often without mentioning the medium of original publication, and sometimes with a different title. In the case of many writers of the 16th, 17th, and 18th centuries, dates of birth and death are given variously by different authorities. The author has attempted to give these dates for all individuals concerning whom information was readily available. In the case of many individuals born in the middle third of the 19th century, it has not been possible to determine if they are still alive. [Date-?] means probably or definitely dead, but date not known. [Date- ] means probably or definitely alive as of 1941. The names of the writers of non-Spanish origin often appear both in original form and in hispanized form. An attempt has been made to give (with the first citation) the complete baptismal form, wherever known, even though the name does not so appear on the work in question. Chileans are even more prone than most Latin Americans to use the complete form including surnames of both father and mother. [Cf. Luis Thayer Ojeda (1877- ) : "Oríjen de los Apellidos en Chile." Proceedings Second Pan American Scientific Congress, Vol. I, pp. 61-112, 1917.]
