Cataloguing Modern Fenian Folklore: A Brief History

Issues with cataloguing abound in the Fenian corpus, and the task has understandably not often been attempted. The sheer magnitude of the corpus and the geographic dispersal of the material are obvious hurdles. The nature of the material itself also adds to the complexity of the project, since these native tales rarely conform to ‘types’ within the international Aarne-Thompson-Uther (ATU) folklore classification system. This means that often only the most common tales and lays in a given archive will be identified more specifically than a generic ‘Fenian’ or ‘Ossianic’ classification, and crosses with other Fenian tales are only haphazardly recorded. Luckily, the corpus has been given some close attention over the years, and there are other resources to turn to than the archive catalogues for a more detailed record of what has been collected.

The lays were the initial aspect of Fenian folklore to receive academic attention as a result of the Ossianic controversy (see Chapter 2). The first publication containing a substantial number of orally collected lays was John Gillies’s Collection of Ancient and Modern Gaelic Poems and Songs Transmitted from Gentlemen in the Highlands of Scotland to the Editor, printed in 1786. Gillies included several Fenian lays, but he made no attempt to isolate or categorically describe the Fenian material. Nonetheless, his publication was to be used heavily as a reference by John Francis Campbell decades later. J. F. Campbell included a significant number of orally-collected Fenian tales and lays in his four-volume collection, Popular Tales of the West Highlands (1860-1862).¹ He was clearly beginning to take interest in Fenian matters at this time and there is some thematic organization of the included items. Although the material in this series falls far short of a systematic study of Fenian folklore, it can be seen as a pioneering venture, particularly with regard to oral prose. J. F. Campbell’s Leabhar na Féinne, published in 1872, represents the first concentrated attention given to Fenian folklore. Not only was this an entire book dedicated to (ostensibly, in a minority of cases) orally collected Fenian lays, the included lays are categorically grouped and each grouping is given a descriptive summary.² It was a tour de force in Gaelic Fenian verse, which unfortunately was not marketable enough for the intended second volume of translations and commentary to be produced, but which represents a great boon to scholars of the Fenian lays today. Nearly two decades later, in 1891, the next and last concentrated study of early Scottish Fenian folklore was published by John Gregorson Campbell. His collection, titled The Fians and included in the Duke of Argyll’s Waifs and Strays of Celtic Tradition series, was intended to continue “the work so well begun by J. F. Campbell” (vii). Its arrangement begins in a loosely characterological fashion, then moves on to lays, and finishes with a selection of tales. Neither of these final two publications provides definitive tale or lay categorizations, but both are clearly moving in a categorical direction.

The earliest sustained effort to describe the Irish Fenian tradition from a (somewhat) folkloric perspective can be found in Patrick Kennedy’s section, “Ossianic and Other Early Legends” in his 1866 book, Legendary Fictions of the Irish Celts. Kennedy conflates the early medieval scribe with the modern storyteller in his introduction to the section, but includes retouched versions of orally collected tales.³ His work should be recognized as an antecedent to later scholars’ efforts to understand the modern Fenian oral tradition. The first systematic attempt to categorically describe Fenian folklore was undertaken by Irish Folklore Commission archivist, Seán Ó Súilleabháin in 1942. Ó Súilleabháin published a resource for folklore collectors titled A Handbook of Irish Folklore, in which he described thirty-six Fenian tales, and listed topics of character and place lore that he knew could and had been found in oral circulation in Ireland. Ó Súilleabháin’s Handbook was followed in 1953 by Gerard Murphy’s discussion of oral Fenian tales in his introduction to Duanaire Finn 3 (Duanaire Finn being a seventeenth-century Irish manuscript collection of Fenian lays). Murphy also discussed oral version of lays in his commentary, adding to the nineteenth-century work of J. F. Campbell and the later work of Reidar Th. Christiansen in The Vikings and the Viking Wars in Irish and Gaelic Tradition (1931), which included considerable analysis of the Fenian cycle and references to oral versions of the tales and lays. Notably, Christiansen and Murphy treat material from both Ireland and Scotland, though the consideration of these two scholars is generally confined to print resources.

² It will also be noted that the arrangement is chronological. John Francis Campbell’s commitment to establishing a Fenian chronology is discussed in Chapter 3.

³ Like J. F. Campbell, Kennedy also took a chronological approach. He had, in fact, expressed his desire that such an approach should be taken in the publication of Fenian material some years prior, in a book review published in 1859 (Fictions of Our Forefathers 12).

The first large-scale endeavour to list and classify both Irish and Scottish Gaelic versions of Fenian tales was undertaken by School of Scottish Studies archivist and fieldworker, Alan Bruford for his 1969 study, Gaelic Folk-Tales and Mediaeval Romances. Bruford's study adds considerably to all earlier work on Fenian tales. Through comparison with literary sources, Bruford was able to more accurately delineate Fenian tales in the oral material—some of which Ó Súilleabháin had conflated.⁴ In his bibliography, Bruford takes account of both archival and print sources to produce a sizable list of literary and modern oral versions of a significant selection of Fenian and hero tales. His inventory of these tales is not complete, the likelihood of which he admits, citing incomplete cataloguing and indexing in the contemporary Irish Folklore Commission and School of Scottish Studies archives (iii-iv; 63).⁵ Nor is his inventory comprehensive; it is limited to the topic of his study, which concerns the relationship between literary romances and modern heroic folktales. Thus, Bruford generally devotes little attention to those aspects of the Fenian oral tradition that do not well conform to the heroic prose genre or the extant records of which are largely or wholly oral.⁶ Bruford's inventory also falls short of the level of detail expected in an effective catalogue; he provides no metadata whatsoever—not even the name of the storyteller or the approximate date collected—listing only the manuscript and print references for each tale. Despite these shortcomings, however, Bruford's list represents a considerable leap forward in the cataloguing of the Fenian corpus, not least because of the abbreviation system he devised: each tale is given a one- to three-letter title abbreviation which serves as a sort of Fenian 'type', similar to the ATU numbers used for international folktales.

The next bout of major cataloguing work was undertaken by Mícheál Briody, who was employed as a cataloguer in the Irish National Folklore Collection at University College, Dublin (formerly the Irish Folklore Commission), where he focussed specifically on Fenian and heroic material. Briody commenced his project in the summer of 1978 and worked sporadically on the creation of a catalogue until the autumn of 1990, without,

⁴ Given that Ó Súilleabháin had only catalogued a fraction of the folklore material that the Irish Folklore Commission then possessed, and that his descriptions were intended as guidelines for collectors, rather than a definitive typology, and also that the topical matter of the Fenian corpus is widely varied, any uncertainty Ó Súilleabháin had about individual tales can certainly be excused.

⁵ Further material was also collected after the 1960s, when Bruford was writing.

however, bringing it to completion.⁷ His unfinished and unpublished collection of reference lists and index cards builds considerably on Bruford's work, and helps to resolve some of the issues of completeness, comprehensiveness and detail in the record for the Irish Fenian oral corpus. Briody adopted Bruford's tale abbreviations and devised several more for tales and lays not considered by Bruford. He was able to include further versions of tales collected after Bruford's research had been completed, and he uncovered a number of versions overlooked by Bruford. He also documented crucial metadata, including storytellers' and collectors' names, as well as dates and locations of collection, and the storyteller's age (if known).⁸ Briody's work was limited to the Irish corpus, of course, and his list of published sources is incomplete. However, few other limitations could be mentioned, and I am incredibly grateful for his generosity in sharing his notes and notecards with me. Indeed, it would not be too much to say that compiling the Irish portion of this catalogue would not have been possible in the time allotted without the assistance of Mícheál Briody.

⁷ Briody worked on his Fenian/heroic catalogue during the summers of 1978–80, 1982, 1985–86, and 1988–90 (Email communication, 18 Oct. 2014). His recent work has focused on the Irish Folklore Commission and its collectors.

⁸ In verifying this metadata, I have added further categories to my catalogue.

Methodology, Resources, and Limitations

Locating Fenian Folklore

This catalogue includes listings for the vast majority of orally collected Fenian folklore in Irish, Scottish, Manx, and North American archival and digital collections, as well as a limited selection of published folklore items. The reference source is given for each entry in the catalogue.⁹ I consulted as many sources as possible within my limited timeframe in order to assemble a preliminary list of references to published and unpublished Fenian folklore items. At each archive, I gathered references from card catalogues and any other cataloguing system available.¹⁰ The limited efficacy of current archival cataloguing systems for identifying and classifying Fenian folklore necessitated my consulting numerous extra-archival resources, even with regard to archival holdings. In addition to Briody, Bruford, Murphy, and J. F. Campbell's work, I went through lists available in publications, such as the short list of versions of MGF (Macghníomhartha Fhinn) in Joseph Nagy's The Wisdom of the Outlaw (222-223), the expanded MGF list in Mícheál Briody's M.A. thesis (48-61), and Rosemary Power's list of versions of TC (Teach Cuanna, the modern folkloric account of which is called 'An Óige, an Saol, agus an Bás') in her comparative article on the tale in Béaloides 53 (286-294).¹¹

I also examined versions of Fenian tales indexed under international tale types in Seán Ó Súilleabháin and Reidar Th. Christiansen's The Types of the Irish Folktale.¹² A number of the Fenian tales in the catalogue incorporate episodes that align with ATU types. There are also a few Fenian tale 'types' that correspond to ATU patterns. These can be seen as specific, native subtypes within the broader, international types, and are catalogued primarily by their Fenian type, but with the relevant ATU number in brackets. See, for example, "Oisín i dTír na

⁹ See the column headed "Reference Source." A horizontal line (--) in this column indicates that I came across the material providentially while browsing within the associated book, manuscript, etc.

¹⁰ In archives with online platforms, such as Tobar an Dualchais and the Carmichael Watson Project, my range was considerably extended by the search capacities of the websites. These also enabled me to include some material from collections that I was not able to visit, such as the National Trust for Scotland's Canna Collection.

¹¹ These are the primary topical lists available. I also gathered references from other publications and websites. See the "Reference Source" column of the catalogue.

n-Óg", which is invariably catalogued as "OTO (ATU 470B)", indicating that OTO is a native subtype of the international tale, ATU 470B (The Hero Visits the Land of the Immortals).¹³ In most instances when an international type overlaps with a native type, the Ó Súilleabháin and Christiansen index is deficient, as will be clear from a perusal of the catalogue. I have added ATU listings to entries when appropriate, even if not included in Ó Súilleabháin and Christiansen's index. I hasten to add, however, that since my area of concentration is native, rather than international, the opposite of Ó Súilleabháin and Christiansen's deficiency will be found in this catalogue: ATU listings are undoubtedly incomplete.¹⁴

Each reference to a Fenian folklore item on my list had to be verified and all the requisite metadata for each item had to be located (if possible) and keyed into the catalogue.¹⁵ In verifying the material, however, I did not read or listen to the end of every item. (The magnitude of the corpus disallows such attention to detail in a time-limited study.) For the most complete and the most trustworthy sources (e.g. much of Briody's material), a quick scan of an item could be enough to affirm the tale type(s). Other items needed considerably more attention, particularly those for which little or no metadata had previously been recorded. Even though considerable care has been taken to present an accurate record of modern Fenian folklore, the possibility of minor faults in tale identification must be admitted. It is also conceivable that not all Fenian folklore held in the collections I consulted is included in this catalogue, despite my considerable sleuthing efforts. Moreover, because my study principally concerns long tales and (to a lesser degree) lays, short seanchas items (i.e. 'lore': background information about places, characters, etc.) that do not readily fit into these categories received the least attention. I was not able to verify the vast majority of seanchas references, and I therefore only include a select few that overlap with tale or lay material in this catalogue. It is possible that when all of the seanchas references are verified in a future project, further items that belong elsewhere in the catalogue will be discovered.¹⁶

¹³ Other such tales include LAS (ATU 513A), FCFT (ATU 766); AC (ATU 873); TO (ATU 873); CA (ATU 1376A*); FC (ATU 1149). With regard to ATU 470B/ ÓSC 470*, ATU/ÓSC 1376A*, and ATU/ÓSC 1149, I consulted every manuscript version listed to verify whether or not the tale also belongs in the Fenian subset. Additionally, I checked all listed versions of ATU/ÓSC 673, which frequently forms a part of MGF, and ÓSC 2412D, which can enter into CMM. Time did not permit me to examine every version listed by Ó Súilleabháin and Christiansen for any other tale type.

¹⁴ ATU types (additional to those listed above) referenced in the catalogue include: 178A, 300, 302, 303, 326, 409a*, 425*, 650, 1137.

¹⁶ I know of ~975 references to Fenian seanchas items that have not been included in this catalogue, most of which I have not yet been able to verify.

Complete accuracy in a Fenian catalogue cannot be ensured until a) every Fenian item in every archive has been clearly identified in archive listings; b) all remaining published and archival sources have been checked (see below); and c) each Fenian ‘type’ and the items within that type are subjected to careful examination and verification, far beyond what I have been able to do in a limited time period. The present catalogue will enable scholars to begin to undertake such projects.

Folklore Archives and Other Fenian Haunts

I consulted as many collections, and verified and gathered metadata for as many references, as time and my research budget allowed. I consulted all major digital collections of which I was aware, including the Irish National Folklore Collection’s online repository, Dúchas.ie¹⁷; the Doegan Records Web Project, containing material housed at the Royal Irish Academy that was recorded in 1928, 1930, and 1931 on behalf of the Irish Department of Education for the purpose of dialect study (<http://doegen.ie/>); the online repository for the University of Edinburgh School of Scottish Studies, BBC Scotland, and the National Trust for Scotland’s Canna Collection (John Lorne Campbell’s material, held at Canna House), Tobar an Dualchais (<http://www.tobarandualchais.co.uk>); the Calum Maclean Project, containing material collected by Maclean in Scotland and housed in the Irish National Folklore Collection and the School of Scottish Studies (<http://www.calum-maclean-project.celtscot.ed.ac.uk>); the Carmichael Watson Project, containing material collected by Alexander Carmichael and housed primarily in Edinburgh University Library (<http://www.carmichaelwatson.lib.ed.ac.uk/cwatson>);¹⁸ The Highland Council’s online repository, Am Baile (<http://www.ambaile.org.uk>); the online repository of St. Francis Xavier University’s Cape Breton Folklore Collection, Gael Stream (gaelstream.stfx.ca); the Alan Lomax material on the Association for Cultural Equity online database (<http://research.culturalequity.org>); and Harvard’s Charles William Dunn Collection (http://www.celtic.fas.harvard.edu/hcFolklore_Dunn.shtml). Access to all of these resources is unrestricted except the Calum Maclean Project, for which potential users outside of the University of Edinburgh must be vetted and assigned a username and password. I have included a web address in the “Available Online” column for every item I consulted online, provided that the material is publicly available.¹⁹

I visited as many archives as possible to check references for and record new data about orally collected Fenian folklore. In the Milman Parry Collection of Oral Literature at Harvard, I accessed the Donegal Fieldwork Collection, thought to have been collected by Roslyn Blyn-LaDrew in the 1970s. In August, 2013 I visited my alma mater, St. Francis Xavier University in Nova Scotia, to consult items in the Cape Breton Folklore Collection not available on Gael Stream. The Cape Breton Folklore Collection is an audio collection recorded by John Shaw from 1977–1982 for the St. Francis Xavier University Celtic Studies Department. I also consulted the Celtic department’s private resources, which primarily consist of copies of material held in other collections, including part of the John Shaw Collection (private) and items collected by John Lorne Campbell (presumably held at Canna House).²⁰ From September 2013 to April 2014, I entered data from the material in the Irish National Folklore Collection’s Main and Schools’ Manuscripts Collections. The Main Manuscript Collection consists primarily of transcribed folklore, orally collected by full- and part-time collectors for the Irish Folklore Institute (est. 1930), later the Irish Folklore Commission (est. 1935), later the Folklore Department at University College, Dublin (from 1971).²¹ The Schools Manuscript Collection is the result of a 1937–1938 project in which primary school children collected folklore at home and in their communities.²² In May and June of 2014, I documented Fenian folklore in the John Francis Campbell Collection at the Scottish National Library and in the School of Scottish Studies at the University of Edinburgh. The relevant collections at the School of Scottish Studies include sound recordings made since 1951 by the School’s own collectors, Gaelic Linguistic Survey material, the Calum Maclean Notebooks (all of which have been digitized), the Donald John MacDonald Manuscripts, as well as the following donated collections: the Kenneth Jackson Collection, the Lady Evelyn Stewart Murray Collection made in nineteenth-century Perthshire (all of which has been published), and the MacLagan Manuscripts (compiled for the nineteenth-century “Folklore

¹⁹ Website listings are complete and accurate as of August 2014.

²⁰ The St. Francis Xavier University Celtic Studies department has a card catalogue corresponding to its collection, and the Celtic Studies department and the Celtic Collection librarian at the Angus L. MacDonald Library have a number of content lists to various collections containing Scottish Gaelic material, copies of the material from some of which is held by the library or the department. These cards and lists were useful resources, and I was able to access all of the relevant references I gathered from these resources except a handful of items in the privately held John Shaw Collection, copies of which St. Francis Xavier University either no longer has, or has never had.

²² Some of the material in these manuscripts is dated outside of the official range.

of the West Highlands” project). I also visited the Edinburgh University Library Centre for Research Collections to consult a limited number of items in the Alexander Carmichael papers not available in the Carmichael Watson Project online database. I did not consult any Manx archival material; however, I am not aware of any Manx Fenian folklore material that remains unpublished.

The principal aim of this portion of the dissertation project was to create a catalogue of Fenian folklore preserved in archives. A limited selection of published resources was consulted in an effort to fill in temporal and representational gaps. I entered metadata for all publications of which I am aware that contain Nova Scotian and Manx Fenian material. With regard to Irish and Scottish material, I included all references from the School of Scottish Studies’ journal, Tocher, and the Folklore of Ireland Society’s journal, Béaloides, but I was not able to consider the entire contents of any other journal or periodical. I examined a small selection of book collections from the periods of organized collection in Ireland and Scotland, but directed my primary focus towards early book collections made prior to the beginning of organized collecting. The history of collection and publishing dictated that some periods would be better represented by one country than by the others. This could not be helped. The eighteenth and early to mid-nineteenth centuries are better represented by Scottish material due to the immediacy of the Ossianic Controversy, as well as John Francis Campbell’s collecting efforts. The late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries are better represented by Irish material due to the language revival efforts and political nationalist fervor at that time. Collecting in Nova Scotia unfortunately did not begin until the mid- to late twentieth century. What little Manx material we have was collected in the mid-eighteenth century and around the turn of the twentieth century. A list of publications that I consulted is provided below. Numerous references to published Fenian folklore remain to be consulted in a future, complementary project. Some of these may refer to published versions of archival tales already catalogued.

While I am confident that the vast majority of Fenian folklore in archival collections is accounted for in this catalogue, some material remains that I was unable to consult due to time constraints, including: Manx Fenian material in the Manx Museum and the British Library (all of which I believe is published); folklore recordings in the sound archive at the Irish National Folklore Collection; folklore collections held at the Irish National Library (including the Oireachtas manuscripts and the papers of early collectors such as Douglas Hyde and Seosamh Laoide)²³; any of the John Lorne Campbell material held at Canna House that is not also available on Tobar an Dualchais; items in the Alexander Carmichael papers not catalogued (as of June 2014) in the Carmichael Watson project online database; and eighteenth- and nineteenth-century collections of Fenian lays that were not printed in John Francis Campbell’s Leabhar na Féinne (e.g. the Rev. James McLagan Collection at the University of Glasgow). There may also be Fenian folklore held in other collections throughout Ireland, Scotland, the Isle of Mann, England, Canada, the United States, Australia, and New Zealand for which I have yet to encounter references.

²³ I have consulted the early Imtheachta an Oireachtais volumes, however, as well as Laoide’s and Hyde’s edited volumes. See the list of publications consulted below.

Organizational Principles and Abbreviations

In the following notes on the presentation and interpretation of the data, topics are considered in order of appearance in the columns of the catalogue.

Story/Lay Type

More than one ‘type’ separated by a semicolon in a listing indicates that these types have been combined in a single story/lay. International tale types and motifs are given in some listings. Abbreviations for these include ATU (‘Aarne-Thompson-Uther’) type and MI (Motif index number). If an item it is clearly related to a given ‘type’, but key details are missing, it is followed by ‘-cf.’, e.g. ‘BC-cf.’

A few of the types listed could more appropriately be described as episodes than tales. These are shared by Fenian and non-Fenian hero tales. See e.g. CS; FFA; S; TA. (Other tales also sometimes function as episodes. Given the multiepisodic nature of long/heroic folktales, any tale that is sufficiently adaptable can, in theory, form an episode in another tale.)

Fenian

The types in the chart above include Fenian tales and lays, as well as some typically non-Fenian hero tales. This is because Fenian characters are sometime imported into typically non-Fenian tales, or the tales become intertwined. Only Fenian versions of typically non-Fenian tales are listed in the catalogue. Non-Fenian versions of typically Fenian tales are, however included. Fenian status is determined by the presence of Fenian characters, and indicated with Y or N ('yes' or 'no'). Sometimes there is a degree of uncertainty (e.g. the protagonist is said to be a member of the Fianna, but not named and not in a typically Fenian plot); in such situations, Y? or N? is used, depending on the level of uncertainty.

Form

Sometimes an item can be classified under more than one form abbreviation. When these are separate components of the tale, the abbreviations are separated by a semicolon. When one abbreviation describes or modifies another, they are separated by a hyphen (e.g. s-T 'small, topographical story').

I have tried to ensure that items in this catalogue truly were orally recorded, and I do not include anything obviously from a literary manuscript or printed literary source, even if the same collection also includes folklore material. (This concern is particularly pertinent to early print collections.) In instances when a folklore item appears to have been written or rewritten in literary language (either by the collector or a self-recording informant), I add a “Lit.” modification, e.g. “S-Lit.”²⁴ If the nature of the source of the item is unclear or if the source is purportedly oral, but the language has literary qualities, I include the item, but I indicate its uncertain oral status with a question mark: “Lit. (?)”

Collection

The following are abbreviations used for the collections in which the catalogued Fenian folklore resides. Sub-collection(s) within a primary institution or collection are included as indented list items below the abbreviation explanation. References are included for collections I consulted, as well as collections containing items I encountered in published or online sources, even if I was not able to consult the original collection.

All catalogue entries are grouped first by country, then alphabetically by collection. Printed material for which no archival location is known (Print) follows the archival listings.

Length

The length of each item I was able to consult is documented in the catalogue. The lengths of items in manuscripts and books are given as inclusive page numbers, and sound recordings are entered in hh:mm:ss format. Each length is inclusive of the entire item as told, regardless of whether the story/lay type noted is only present in a portion of that item. The rare exceptions are items inserted within much longer segments of non-story/lay material (generally local lore). With regard to handwritten material, page sizes can differ quite a bit, and some collectors' handwriting is more expansive or compact than that of others. Pagination is also occasionally inconsistent. These factors can make it difficult to estimate the precise length of an item. A word count would be a more accurate diagnostic; however, given the size of the corpus and the duration of the project, I was not able to calculate word counts.

Not all sources are abbreviated in the catalogue. This is not, therefore, an exhaustive list of sources used.

Location

Six categories of location data are available: (1) Village/Town (and any additional or general location information); (2) Parish; (3) Barony/District/Island; (4) County; (5) Province/Territorial Unit; and (6) Country. Terminology reflects land division practices of all included countries. Not all levels are applicable to every entry.

Title

The titles given are those found in the manuscripts or archival catalogues/lists (or publications, when no archival original could be consulted). If an item is not titled in these sources, I have left the title field blank. I have made no attempt to determine whether the titles provided are those of the informants or the collectors.

Language

Current ISO 639-1 language codes are used. The language of both the original item and any available translation or summary is given for each entry. If the original item is lost or unavailable and only a translation or summary can be consulted (i.e. no copy or publication exists of the now lost/unavailable original), the “Language” entry is marked with an asterisk (*).

Publications Consulted

Listed below are the publications from which catalogue entries are drawn. For ease of access, publications are grouped according to the country of origin of the catalogued material. When relevant material from more than one country is represented within a given publication, the publication only appears in the first applicable table in order to avoid duplicate records.
