OT 619 The Books of Samuel
<TENTATIVE>
<May be revised prior to classes in Sept, 2001>

Instructor: Bill T. Arnold

Prerequisites: IBS-1/OT501/OT520

1. Course description

This course explores selected exegetical issues in the Books of Samuel, and provides students with opportunities to apply original-language tools to the book's strategic passages. The focus will be on developing appropriate interpretive skills for the pastoral ministry.

2. Course objectives

Students in this course will:

2.1. confirm and refine by recourse to the Hebrew text of 1-2 Samuel literary analysis of longer units previously studied in translation,

2.2 analyze the significance of the grammar and sentence structure of brief pericopes using primarily the Hebrew text,

2.3. present the significance of key terms in a given passage by using basic original language word-study tools and techniques,

2.4. identify the function of a given, brief passage of 1-2 Samuel in the framework of its immediate context, its function in the literary flow of the book and in the section of the canon within which it appears,

2.5. situate the thematic emphases of specific passages of 1-2 Samuel in the context of the Old Testament's unfolding message and in the context of the Bible as a whole,

2.6. demonstrate the impact of representative exegetical methods on the study of 1-2 Samuel, employing relevant scholarly literature, and situating one's own interpretation in the ongoing discussion of biblical interpretation,

2.7. illustrate the contribution of exegetical study of the Hebrew text to biblical exposition, instruction, theological reflection, and spiritual formation in order to construct an appropriation of the passage that is integrative and coherent.

3. Course procedures and requirements

3.1. Class presentations will hope to model direct study of 1-2 Samuel, relying primarily on interpretive skills introduced in OT 501 and IBS-1. After an introduction overviewing the contents of the books as wholes, class sessions will walk systematically through the units of 1-2 Samuel, highlighting specific passages that make notable contributions to the meaning of each unit. Grammatical and linguistic details of selected passages will be highlighted in order to illustrate the chosen pericope's contribution to the message of the larger unit. Students will be required to read selected sections of 1-2 Samuel in preparation for each class period.

3.2. Students will write four exegetical papers on assigned texts from 1-2 Samuel, utilizing the skills acquired in OT 501 and IBS-1. These papers should be single-spaced, typed, and no more than three pages (i.e., approximately 1200-1300 words) in length. No secondary resources are to be consulted for these papers, since the student will be encouraged to rely on his or her own reading of the text. The paper should present the student's observations of the text's components, including causal and temporal particles, connotations of the verbal derived stems and aspects, significance of word order, and where appropriate, implications of a specific word's usage elsewhere in the Old Testament. Also where appropriate to the specific pericope, students should show sensitivity to sociohistorical, canonical, and theological issues arising from the text itself. The four passages assigned will be 1 Samuel 7:2-4; 12:20-25; 2 Samuel 7:12-16; 12:7-10.

3.3. Students will write a final paper on a pericope to be chosen from the list below using the methods and skills acquired in the course. Secondary sources may be consulted, beginning with the preliminary bibliography provided in 4.3 below. The paper should also conclude in a brief sermon outline or lesson plan based on the specific observations raised in the paper. These papers should be double-spaced, typed, and no more than ten pages (i.e., approximately 2200 words) in length. Students will be allowed to select a text from the following options: 1 Samuel 2:6-10; 10:9-11; 12:13-15; 16:6-7; 16:11-13; 17:45-47; 18:12-16; 2 Samuel 7:8-11; 11:2-5; 12:1-6; 22:1-4; 23:5-7.
