Spring 2002

January 7-18; 8.30 am - 12.15 pm

DESCRIPTION

Whatever else it is, the New Testament is a collection of books which reflect and express a developing theology or understanding of the nature and acts of God in relation to the world which he has created and redeemed. It is, therefore, true to the intention of the New Testament writers to attempt a systematic investigation of their theology.

This (very) intensive two-week course will aim to provide a rapid survey of the New Testament writings. Attention will be concentrated on their individual contributions to the growth of Christian theology, but we shall briefly try to see whether and how these expressions of their writers' theology fit together to provide a synthesis of the developing and multiform entity that we can call 'New Testament theology'.

OBJECTIVES

To outline the theological arguments of the various New Testament books, to highlight the distinctive theological issues raised in each, and to ascertain their contribution to our understanding of New Testament theology.

To equip students with a basis for their own further study of the theological contributions of the New Testament authors with the aim of discovering whether they reflect a unified and coherent theology.

To gain some acquaintance with current scholarly discussions of the subject.

PREREQUISITES

OT520, NT520, and NT(IBS)510 or 511

COURSE REQUIREMENTS

1. Preparation, attendance and participation

Students should come to each class session prepared by having read the New Testament texts assigned for the class and the relevant articles in NDBT and EDBT. (15%)

2. Critical book review: Students are required to write a critical book review (1500 words) of any one of the books in the series New Testament Theology (edited by J. D. G. Dunn. Cambridge University Press, 1991*). (25%). This work must be handed in by Monday, 14th January.

3. Examination: Students will be required to sit a take-home examination, to be handed in to the office by Friday, 25th January. The paper will be based on the work done in the class; students are allowed two hours to complete it and are recommended to use a computer and print-out their script; the examination must be done under normal examination conditions as far as possible; the use of an unmarked Bible and Greek New Testament is permitted, but no other aids of any kind (books, notes, computer software, etc) are permitted; envelopes containing exam questions must not be opened before the examination period and neither the questions nor your answers to them should be discussed with anybody else. Students must sign a declaration at the end of their scripts stating that they have fulfilled these conditions. (60%)
