

This is a peer-reviewed, post-print (final draft post-refereeing) version of the following published document:

Roberts, William M (2013) I Predict a Riot: Governance of Citizens through the Politics of Crime and Sport. In: Political Studies Association (Sport Special Interest Group): Sport, Policy & Politics Conference 2013, 1-2 February, Crystal Place, London.

Official URL: <http://www.sportpolitics.net/uploads/1/7/9/8/17981629/psa2012draftschedulejan9.pdf>

EPrint URI: <http://eprints.glos.ac.uk/id/eprint/5042>

Disclaimer

The University of Gloucestershire has obtained warranties from all depositors as to their title in the material deposited and as to their right to deposit such material.

The University of Gloucestershire makes no representation or warranties of commercial utility, title, or fitness for a particular purpose or any other warranty, express or implied in respect of any material deposited.

The University of Gloucestershire makes no representation that the use of the materials will not infringe any patent, copyright, trademark or other property or proprietary rights.

The University of Gloucestershire accepts no liability for any infringement of intellectual property rights in any material deposited but will remove such material from public view pending investigation in the event of an allegation of any such infringement.

PLEASE SCROLL DOWN FOR TEXT.

I Predict A Riot: Governance of Citizens through the Politics of Crime and Sport
Mr William Roberts

Political Studies Association (PSA) Sport & Politics Interest Group Annual Conference
University of Bath: 2nd February 2013

Abstract Submitted: December 14th 2012

I Predict a Riot: Governance of Citizens through the Politics of Crime and Sport

William Roberts
Department of Education
Faculty of Humanities and Social Sciences, University of Bath

Abstract

Within this paper I seek to explore notions of governance of citizenry through the politics of crime and sport. Sport is often presented as a panacea to combat a range of risks to advancing liberal democracies such as ill-health, lack of education and attainment, morality, drug (mis)use and crime. The seemingly redeeming and transformative powers of sport have manifested in the emergence of a plethora of policy initiatives designed to combat the social problems aforementioned. Much has been espoused about the power of sport and this has been accepted, largely anecdotally, as we have witnessed a number of policy shifts focussing on 'elite', 'competitive', 'healthy', 'inclusive' and 'educational' elements of sport and physical activity. In order to offer insight into the experiences of such sporting interventions aimed at tackling these social problems, this paper explores narrative experiences of the 'Street Elite' project which provides the context to offer critical commentary regarding policy, governance and the conforming citizen. This paper will attempt to explore the complexity of governance and control through the eyes of those involved in programmes that are deemed transformative in nature. It will consider the ways in which regimes of control are derived, implemented and received whilst challenging the accepted notion that sport is a vehicle for positive change that can significantly impact upon those 'disengaged' young people. Considering arguments aligned to governmentality and control; this paper will seek to argue that sports initiatives aimed at tackling crime, health and educational issues are instead arresting the concern with government of moral order by producing the conforming citizen.

Key Words: Governance, Citizen, Conformity, Crime, Sports-Based-Initiatives