ABSTRACT: Open source describes a methodology in software development that promote access to the source code. This model has resulted in a large and efficient ecosystem of software innovation, freely available to society. Its commanding impact pushes the creation of value to an advanced stage in the value chain. Open source software should be seen as a matter of social responsibility. The objective of our research is to identify indicators in software license social responsibility in open source development. Motivation that led us to carry out this analysis was the fact that, despite the many benefits attributed to open source development, no information about them was disclosed in annual reports. To reach our goal, we conducted a descriptive study. Several significant developments examined looking for success indicators.

ABSTRACT: In most Western societies are currently promoting social values aimed at achieving the inclusion of certain groups at risk of social exclusion. One group is composed of women prisoners, suffering multiple exclusion. In this article we have studied the situation, past and present, of this group in the Spanish territory, and, later, we have examined the Spanish prison system mechanisms aimed at achieving social inclusion of this group, concluding that despite the significant regulatory and social changes that have occurred, the most important part has not yet achieved: the actual implementation of the new legislation and action programs designed to achieve the inclusion of women prisoners and former prisoners.

KEY WORDS: social inclusion, women prisoners, the penal system, prison system, action programs

ABSTRACT: The European Welfare State, began to decline due to its characteristics expenses and difficulty in recovering from the financial crisis in 2009 that shook the United States. To the serious financial problems, others joined in, showing which structural weaknesses rethink the entire political system of welfare and social. What new paradigms are emerging to address the existing weaknesses? How the State can act to meet new challenges? These are questions that this paper seeks to answer illustrating the process of implementing a policy. To the emergence of social policies joins a new health policy and coordination of actors with different cultures and social responsibilities. This paper analyzes the theoretical discussion around the concept of governance, in particular the Governance as Network, reflecting analytically, a social and health public policy.

ABSTRACT: The aim of this paper is to study how financial institutions (EE.FF.) meet the ever-increasing information needs generated by the so-called “stakeholders.” Specifically, analyze and compare both, the disclosure practices of human resources (HR) and customers disclosure, by the EE.FF. Spanish, through the publication of social responsibility reports that follow the guidelines of the Global Reporting Initiative (GRI). The choice of these reports provided independently of traditional accounting documents and annual reports is based firstly on the ease of comparison provided by the GRI and secondly on the greater consideration of the use of a fitness expert paper on socio-environmental issues. For the study of the information disclosed is going to be used the content analysis method and the tool of Disclosure Index, which will be
