SELECTIVE BIBLIOGRAPHY ON SOCIOLOGY IN BRAZIL

This bibliography was organized as part of a larger effort to interpret contemporary Brazilian sociology. Because our primary concern in this larger effort is to familiarize non-Brazilians with it, we feel that it is necessary to premise any interpretation on a thorough understanding of the historical background of Brazilian social thought. Therefore, we give separate attention to this literature in the bibliography. Some of the literature deals with the broader category of social sciences. This is because the social sciences have resisted specialization until very recently and the evolution of sociology occurred within this more general theoretical and analytical framework. Yet a second subdivision of this bibliography deals with the diversity of theoretical orientations manifest in Brazilian sociology today. This section highlights the significant contributions to its development made by the American positivist school, the French macro-sociology school, and the English social anthropologists. The last two sections attempt to summarize on-going activities according to contemporary sociological research and the specialization areas that are emerging in sociology. Within the latter subdivision, special emphasis is given to rural sociology. Much early sociological production focused on rural populations and issues, and institutionalized sociology stresses the research and teaching of rural life.

A breakdown of articles by these major subdivisions follows. Some are cross-listed because of the heterogeneity of their context.
