SHADE TREE SOURCE LIST

The need for a comprehensive evaluation of new introductions of shade and ornamental trees for use in the North Central United States has long been recognized by horticulturists, landscape architects, utility companies, and others interested in high quality trees and the landscape environment. Two leaders in the street tree field, Mr. M. W. Staples, retired vice-president of the Davey Tree Expert Company, and Dr. L. C. Chadwick, professor emeritus of horticulture, The Ohio State University and Ohio Agricultural Research and Development Center (OARDC), developed a proposal by the Ohio Chapter, International Shade Tree Conference (I.S.T.C.), for a 10-year comprehensive evaluation of street trees in urban and suburban areas. The OARDC, in cooperation with a committee of the Ohio Chapter, I.S.T.C., and Ohio Electric Utilities Institute, established a research program entitled: Characteristics and Adaptability of Species and Cultivars of Shade and Ornamental Trees on Street and Highway Landscape Use.

This list is offered as a resource to assist homeowners, landscape architects, arborists, urban foresters, nurserymen and other interested parties in locating a source of superior shade trees. Nothing else is inferred or implied. It is certainly not presumed to be a complete list as more growers will certainly be added to this listing in the near future. The sequence in which the source locations are listed was compiled completely arbitrarily and does not intend to list the nurseries in any order as to preference or quality. The list contains both the botanical and common names for the various tree species. Listed below each species are various superior cultivars which have been tested at our evaluation plots at OARDC. Detailed information concerning these shade tree evaluation studies is available through Research Bulletin #1074, March 1975, "Shade Tree Evaluation Studies at the Ohio Agricultural Research and Development Center" by Raymond R. Chapin and Philip C. Kozel. Copies can be obtained by writing the Mailing Room, OARDC, Wooster, Ohio 44691.
