Ernest Earl Lockhart's Antarctic Journal, 25 December 1940 to 16 January 1941

Introduction

I am now a firm believer that one trained so completely in theoretical matters as I have been in the past should go away on an expedition for a year or two.

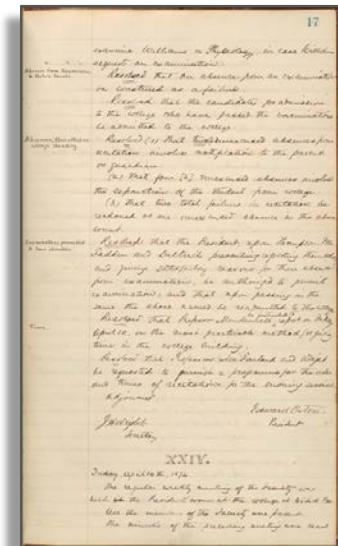

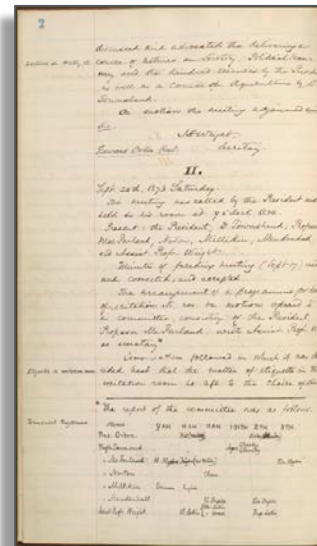

—Earl Lockhart, 1 January 1941

Ernest Earl Lockhart (1912-2006) earned a PhD in biochemistry from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in 1938 and joined the 1939-1941 United States Antarctic Service Expedition (USASE) the following year, serving as a physiologist stationed at the West Base near the Bay of Whales, an inlet of the Ross Sea on the Ross Ice Shelf. Lockhart kept personal journals throughout his service in Antarctica, four volumes of which are held in the Ernest Earl Lockhart Collection of the Byrd Polar Research Center Archival Program at The Ohio State University, along with personal correspondence, newspaper and magazine clippings, reports and publications, photographs and film, and several artifacts ("Ernest Earl Lockhart Collection"). This edition presents Lockhart's manuscript journal for the period 25 December 1940 through 16 January 1941, as well as twenty-five radiograms sent or received by Lockhart during roughly the same period (the radiograms are tucked, loose, inside the journal).

Pay it Forward Presentation and Discussion

Ethical Publishing Roadshow

How the roadshow came about

- Scholarly communications roadshow development
- “The Write Stuff” workshop in March
- Predatory publishing panel in April
- Collaboration with the Office of Research

How it will work

- List of 15-minute modules with learning outcomes, audience levels, pairings
- Standard set of topics or a la carte
- Promoted through the Research Commons and the Office of Research
- Launching this fall

Roadshow Module Presentation

Roadshow Discussion

- What do you think of the roadshow idea?
- What topics do you think it should cover?
- What suggestions do you have for promoting it on campus?

Thank you!
