

Mariano-Florentino Cuéllar, Stanley Morrison Professor of Law and Co-Director of the Center for International Security and Cooperation at Stanford University, speaks at the Mershon Center on March 28, 2013.

In his presentation, "Governing Security," Cuéllar took up a complex and timely question at the intersection of law and society.

Before working at the White House, Professor Mariano-Florentino Cuéllar co-chaired the Obama-Biden Transition's Immigration Policy Working Group. During the second term of the Clinton administration, he worked at the U.S. Department of the Treasury as senior advisor to the undersecretary for enforcement, where he focused on countering financial crime, improving border coordination, and enhancing anti-corruption measures.
