

Agricultural trade liberalization under bilateralism: an international network perspective

Daniel E. May

Received: 11 August 2010 / Accepted: 13 January 2011 / Published online: 26 January 2011
© Springer-Verlag 2011

Abstract Global negotiations in agricultural trade have been considered unsuccessful. Given this fact, the paper studies whether bilateral agreements, rather than global agreements, can lead to Agricultural Global Free Trade by means of decoupled and compensatory payments. For this purpose, the new advances of the international trade network literature have been adopted.

Keywords Agricultural trade liberalization • Decoupled payments • Compensatory payments

JEL Classification F12 • Q17 • Q18

D. E. May
Department of Rural Affairs/Environment, Harper Adams University College, Shrewsbury Road, Newport, Shropshire TF10 8NB, UK
e-mail: dmay@harper-adams.ac.uk