ABSTRACT

The decision to undertake the compilation of a lexicon to an ancient author needs little apology. When the author is Diodorus and the lexicon is the first, none whatsoever is needed and it is my modest hope that the present work will prove to be a useful instrument for both students of Diodorus' work as a whole, historians and linguists concerned with a particular facet of his sources, methods, and style, and those investigating Hellenistic prose style in general.

The text used as the basis for the lexicon has been that of Vogel-Fischer (Teubner, Leipzig, 1888 ff.) and all references depend on their division of the text into chapters and paragraphs. I have deliberately avoided treatment of the fragments, since it is not always clear whether the words are those of Diodorus or those of an author paraphrasing him, while one of the functions of the lexicon might be to submit the fragments to the test.

The work attempts, as far as is possible, to combine the advantages of both lexicon and index: each word is analyzed grammatically and semantically and each occurrence of almost every word is duly recorded. However, it has proved impossible to note all the various forms of the words used by Diodorus without allowing the lexicon to become unwieldy, when scholars seeking such information can without significant inconvenience use the references cited in the work to look up the relevant passages in order to satisfy their interest. Furthermore, I did not consider it profitable to cite every example of the definite article, some common particles (e.g. δέ, γάρ, καί, μέν, οὐν, τε), and some pronouns and demonstrative adjectives (e.g. αὐτός, ἐαυτόν, οὗτος), but instead concentrated on particular usages and combinations; in this way the size of the lexicon has been reduced by some six or seven hundred pages, while the scholar investigating other uses of these words might as easily read through the entire text as check out an endless sequence of references.

STATEMENT OF RESEARCH

I was admitted as a research student in the University of St. Andrews under Ordinance General No. 12 as from 1964 and subsequently enrolled for the degree of Ph.D. under Ordinance St. Andrews No. 88. This thesis embodies the results of the higher study undertaken by me on the topic approved by the Senatus Academicus of the University of St. Andrews.

CERTIFICATE

I hereby declare that the conditions of the Ordinance and Regulations for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy (Ph.D.) at the University of St. Andrews have been fulfilled by the candidate.

Introduction.

The decision to undertake the compilation of a lexicon to an ancient author needs little apology. When the author is Diodorus and the lexicon is the first, none whatsoever is needed and it is my modest hope that the present work will prove to be a useful instrument for both students of Diodorus' work as a whole, historians and linguists concerned with a particular facet of his sources, methods, and style, and those investigating Hellenistic prose style in general.

The text used as the basis for the lexicon has been that of Vogel-Fischer (Teubner, Leipzig, 1888 ff.) and all references depend on their division of the text into chapters and paragraphs. I have deliberately avoided treatment of the fragments, since it is not always clear whether the words are those of Diodorus or those of an author paraphrasing him, while one of the functions of the lexicon might be to submit the fragments to the test.

The work attempts, as far as is possible, to combine the advantages of both lexicon and index: each word is analyzed grammatically and semantically and each occurrence of almost every word is duly recorded. However, it has proved impossible to note all the various forms of the words used by Diodorus without allowing the lexicon to become unwieldy, when scholars seeking such information can without significant inconvenience use the references cited in the work to look up the relevant passages in order to satisfy their interest.

Furthermore, I did not consider it profitable to cite every example of the definite article, some common particles (e.g. δέ, γάρ, καί, μέν, οὐν, τε), and some pronouns and demonstrative adjectives (e.g. αὐτός, ἑαυτόν, οὗτος), but instead concentrated on particular usages and combinations; in this way the size of the lexicon has been reduced by some six or seven hundred pages, while the scholar investigating other uses of these words might as easily read through the entire text as check out an endless sequence of references.

Since this study was begun in 1964 and both method and matter have been revised on several occasions during the subsequent years, it has been difficult to maintain a uniform approach to each word. However, in that each word has its own individual character, some flexibility in treatment may appear, I hope, not only to be forgiven but even perversely to have some merit.

Tribute must be paid to all those friends and colleagues who have generously given me advice and encouragement during the long process of compilation. In particular I should like to thank my supervisor, Sir Kenneth Dover, whose patient, clear and logical scholarship provided me with a model which I could but inadequately follow, though one which has imparted a semblance of order to my work. My typist, Linda Gold, deserves my gratitude not only for struggling to decipher my manuscript but also for detecting and correcting countless errors in it, while the University of Winnipeg is to be thanked for awarding me a grant to defray the cost of having the text sorted by computer. Special and loving acknowledgement is due to my parents, who provided me with the opportunity to continue my studies, to my wife, Val, who gently encouraged me when spirits flagged and read out endless pages of references during the tedium of checking the typescript, and lastly to my children, who had a lexicographer for a father, whispered, and survived.
