CONTRIBUTORS

Theodore Berland, author of sixteen books, hundreds of articles, and occasional short stories, is on the faculty of the School of Communications.

Ronald Dwelle, Assistant Professor of English, has been a member of the department since 1969.

Richard Joanisse has been teaching sociology at Grand Valley State since 1971. His essay with Professor Johnson is one of a series offering a critical interpretation of teaching.

Jacqueline Johnson, Associate Professor of Sociology, is working with Professor Joanisse on a series of essays offering a critical interpretation of teaching.

Sheldon J. Kopperl, Professor of Health Sciences and Coordinator of the History of Science Program, came to Grand Valley State in 1970. His teaching and research interests include art history and the interaction between science and art, especially during the Renaissance and Baroque periods. His dream at GVSU is to see the divisional barriers to truly interdisciplinary teaching removed.

Arend D. Lubbers has been president at Grand Valley State since 1969, during which time he has given active support to a wide range of academic programs, including International Studies, Honors, and the Grand Valley Review. In his nineteen years of leadership, Grand Valley State has grown from a commuter college to a regional University with a growing residential campus.

Rodney Mulder, Professor of Sociology and Social Work, has been at Grand Valley State since 1966. He is presently coordinator of the undergraduate Social Work Program.

Dominique Olree is a Visiting Professor of English, where he teaches developmental and reading methods classes.

Donald Paszek, Assistant Professor of Psychology, who has taught at Grand Valley State since 1984, dedicates his essay "to my children, Amanda and Carly, who will some day be embarrassed and most likely seek revenge for all the stories I have told about them."

Michael Rydman is an adjunct instructor in the English Department.

Roberta Simone, Professor and Chair of the English Department, is willing to do you in a clerihow.

Barbara Spring has been an adjunct instructor in the English Department for several years.

Allan Ten Eyck, Professor of Education, joined the Grand Valley faculty in 1972. While modest about most things, and while holding perhaps penultimate position, he lusts after the title "Grand Valley's Renaissance Constant."
