PREFACE

This compilation of research resources on the Russo-Japanese frontier region is the fifth in the series of bibliographies funded mainly by the Japan-United States Friendship Commission. Earlier works covered Korea, Japanese performing arts, Ryukyu and Nan'yo (South Seas). The University of Hawaii is indebted to and most grateful for the Commission's sustained and generous financial grants. The compilers also wish to express their deepest appreciation to the Center for Asian and Pacific Studies for publication support and to the UH Japan Studies Endowment Committee for its timely assistance in library endeavors.

As with previous works, this bibliography represents the Japanese holdings of the Thomas Hale Hamilton Library, University of Hawaii at Manoa. This collection on Japan's northern frontier has been built up over the years. It was notably reinforced when it was still deposited in the East West Center Library by the acquisition of manuscript titles in microfilm forms from the Hakodate Municipal Library. Originally, the collection was described in the bibliography: Research Resources on Hokkaido, Sakhalin and the Kuriles at the East West Center Library, Masato Matsui and Katsumi Shimanaka, East West Center Library, 1967. This work is intended to update and enlarge the previous edition. An additional feature is the inclusion of periodical and newspaper articles covering the northern territories problem, an issue of current international concern.

A Japanese source consulted for bibliographic information was: Hoppo ryodo o kangaeru, Hiroshi Kimura, Sapporo: Hokkaido Shimbunsha, 1981. English sources used were: Sakhalin, a History, John J. Stephan, Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1971; and The Kurile Islands: Russo-Japanese Frontier in the Pacific, John J. Stephan, Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1974.

Part I, Russo-Japanese Frontier Region, consists mainly of monographs and reproduced manuscripts, the latter identified by accession numbers, H0-500 - H0-702. Part II, Northern Territories

Problem, is a listing of articles with accession numbers, HO-1 - HO-320.

The entries and indexes are arranged alphabetically following the usual Japanese system which is letter-by-letter instead of word-by-word. The combination of romanized words and new-style kanji characters conforms to present-day common usage in Japan. Each entry is numbered to facilitate identification and cross-referencing. The English translations of titles were intended to give a general indication of the work's content. Thus, in some instances, particularly with the manuscripts, translations are explanatory rather than literal. Renditions of place names in Sakhalin and Kuriles are based on the glossaries appended to aforementioned books by Professor Stephan.

The compilers would like to give a special acknowledgment to Professor John J. Stephan for contributing the introductory essay, serving as the UH representative to the Japan-U.S. Friendship Commission and providing technical advice in the compilation of this work. The compilers also wish to express deepest gratitude to Professor Shinkichi Eto of Tokyo University and Professor Hiroshi Kimura of Hokkaido University for their guidance and encouragement to this project. Specially valued is the scholarly support of area and linguistic knowledge provided by Mr. Toshiyuki Akizuki of the Northern Territories Collection, Hokkaido University Library, and Mrs. Takako Akizuki of the Slavic Research Center, Hokkaido University. The compilers are also indebted to Professor Stephen Uhalley, Director of the Center for Asian and Pacific Studies, for publication assistance; University Librarian Mr. John R. Haak, for continued library support, and Mrs. Minako I. Song for her technical expertise and valuable suggestions in compilation.

Compilers assume full responsibility for any errors committed in this work and will appreciate such errors being brought to their attention.

INTRODUCTORY ESSAY

Professor of History
University of Hawaii

Scattered across the earth are regions which geography and history have placed at the interstices of states. Such areas (Alsace-Lorraine, Galicia, Macedonia, Kashmir, and Antofagasta to name but a few) have been the meeting grounds of diverse peoples, languages, and sometimes of cultures. They have also contributed to, and served as the scenes of, international rivalries. Following the rhythm of wars and treaties, state frontiers have moved back and forth across these regions. Frontier mobility has produced patriotic celebrations among those who gain, and irredentist claims among those who lose, territory.

Sakhalin, the Kurile Islands, and to some extent Hokkaido make up such an area. Lying at the northern edge of Japan's naichi (inner land) and at the eastern edge of Siberia, the area has for centuries been subject to continental and maritime influences. The area's pre-history unfolded in the crosscurrents of Siberian, Japanese, and North American Neolithic cultures. Discovery and exploration was a cosmopolitan affair, involving Chinese, Japanese, Russians, Spanish, Dutch, French, and the British.

During the 18th and early 19th centuries, Russians and Japanese met in this area without demarcating a mutually agreed upon national boundary. Since a boundary of sorts was established in the Treaty of Shimoda (1855), the Russo-Japanese frontier has changed three times in Sakhalin and two times in the Kurile Islands. Northern Hokkaido was nearly occupied by Soviet forces at the time of Japan's capitulation in August of 1945. Because of an impasse over the frontier in this area, Japan and the Soviet Union have yet to sign up a peace treaty, nearly four decades after the end of World War II. The involvement of China and the United States in the Soviet-Japanese territorial dispute reminds us that Sakhalin and the Kuriles are still laden with complex multilateral associations.

The strategic importance of Sakhalin, the Kurile Islands and Hokkaido has become a fact of life in the shifting correlation of forces in contemporary Northeast Asia. Japan concentrates approximately one third of its self-defense force on Hokkaido. Since 1978, the USSR has deployed major new forces on the southern Kuriles and has strengthened air and naval units stationed on Sakhalin. Scenario of a Soviet invasion of Hokkaido in the popular media in Japan during 1980-1981 reflected, if only whimsically, the area's growing strategic significance.

Economically the region has also grown in importance. Sakhalin oblast' (an administrative unit including Sakhalin and the Kurile Islands) has steadily increased its share of production in the Soviet fisheries industry. The declaration by the USSR of a 200-mile economic zone in 1977 reinforced the significance of the area to the Soviet economy. The completion in 1983 of a tunnel under the Tsugaru straits, establishing a direct rail link between Honshu and Hokkaido, promises to stimulate northern Japan's economic development. Soviet-Japanese exploration for petroleum deposits off the coast of Sakhalin, if successful, could open the path to more ambitious joint projects. Despite Washington's 1982 embargo on oil drilling equipment for this project, the United States has an interest in Sakhalin's energy resources dating from the 1870's (when entrepreneurs sought to develop the island's coal deposits) and including Sinclair Oil Company's Sakhalin concession (1922-1924) and the Gulf Oil Company's geological surveys of the island's offshore waters in the 1970's.

Sakhalin oblast' and Hokkaido society are also notable for the abundance of multilateral associations. The area is the homeland of the Ainu, who today are uprooted and concentrated on Hokkaido. Sakhalin's 43,000 Koreans have ties with the USSR, North and South Korea, and Japan. Immigration to Hokkaido from various Japanese prefectures and to Sakhalin oblast' from different Union Republics of the USSR has lent a heterogenous quality to their inhabitants. Climate and location have helped foster life-styles in both Sakhalin oblast' and Hokkaido that set them apart from the materik (as Sakhalin residents call the rest of the USSR, the expression meaning "continent") and naichi respectively.

Despite certain shared characteristics and physical proximity (Hokkaido is 40 kilometers from Sakhalin and less than 20 kilometers from the Kuriles)* these islands are remote from each other when it comes to human contacts. Of course there are exchanges of delegations, not to mention contacts between Japanese fishermen and Soviet border patrols. But there are no direct sea, air, or telecommunication links between Hokkaido and Sakhalin oblast'. A letter mailed from the city of Nemuro on Hokkaido to the settlement of Golovnino on the southern Kurile island of Kunashir (a distance of about 50 kilometers) is routed via Tokyo and Moscow, traversing Siberia two times and in the process covering a distance of approximately 20,000 kilometers.

Insularity constraining human contacts between Hokkaido and Sakhalin oblast' has its counterpart in Japanese and Soviet historical literature of the area. Two conditions have fragmented the historiography of Sakhalin and the Kurile Islands. First, the territorial problem between Japan and the USSR has conditioned Japanese and Soviet authors to view the region's history through a patriotic prism. Consequently, writers tend to stress their own country's ties to the area while consciously or unconsciously minimizing those of the other country. Secondly, linguistic barriers reinforce narrow national perspectives. Few Soviet historians of Sakhalin and the Kuriles can read Japanese. Most Japanese writing about their "northern territories" do not read Russian. Consequently, Soviet writers are not generally aware of Japanese historical scholarship about the region. For their part, Japanese authors, with a few notable exceptions,* have only a rudimentary knowledge of Soviet historical works on the area through translations of the works of Fainberg, Konstantinov, Kutakov, and Petrov. As a result of this insularity, there are two corpora of literature about Sakhalin and the Kuriles, each having little in common with the other.

European and American works on Sakhalin oblast' and Hokkaido form another category of literature. These works display no single historiographical approach and hence are not subject to generalization. It should be noted, however, that contemporary American authors tend to rely heavily upon Japanese sources about the northern territories problem. A general history of Hokkaido would make an important contribution to our understanding of Japan, and it is to be hoped that a Japanese or Western author will soon undertake the task and publish the results in English.

*Akizuki Toshiyuki, Kato Kyuzo, Kimura Hiroshi, Maruyama Shichiro, and Takano Akira.

Given historiographical fragmentation and the need to deal with several languages, the task of compiling a comprehensive bibliography of Sakhalin oblast' and Hokkaido is not an easy one.* Yet comprehensive bibliographical information is the first step toward bridging the historiographical gap, toward revealing the region in its full historical richness and diversity, and toward transcending our own intellectual frontiers.

The University of Hawaii is an eminently appropriate institution to sponsor the preparation and publication of a comprehensive bibliography of Sakhalin oblast' and Hokkaido. The Soviet Far East is Hawaii's closest neighbor in Asia, and Japan has played an important role in Hawaii's past and present. Since the 1930's, the University has had a strong interest in Japanese studies, manifested in the systematic acquisition of Japanese historical sources by the University Library for over four decades. Since 1937, the University has maintained one or more faculty members with a professional interest in Siberia and Russian-Asian relations. Under the guidance of professors Klaus Mehnert (1937-1941) and John Albert White (since 1947), the University Library has acquired an impressive collection of materials on Siberia and the Soviet Far East in Russian, Japanese, and Western languages.

*Even the monumental Northeastern Asia: A Selected Bibliography, two volumes (Berkeley: University of California Press, 1939), edited by Robert J. Kerner with the assistance of Yoshi Kuno, Andrew Malozemoff and others, contains only two items on the Kurile Islands.

Collection-building would have stumbled without the imagination, energy, and expertise of University librarians. In this area, a particular debt is owed to the director of the East Asia Collection, Dr. Masato Matsui and to the University's Russian Bibliographer, Patricia Polansky. Dr. Matsui is no stranger to bibliographical problems relating to Hokkaido, Sakhalin, and the Kurile Islands. In 1966-67, with the support of the late Professor Shunzo Sakamaki, Dr. Matsui (then working in the East-West Center Library) acquired on microfilm the extensive holdings of the Hakodate City Library. These formed the nucleus of a bibliography of Hokkaido, Sakhalin, and the Kurile Islands published in 1967.* Patricia Polansky joined the Library staff in 1969 and has played the leading role in the Library's recent acquisitions of material on Siberia, the Soviet Far East and Soviet-Asian relations.

Since the publication of Dr. Matsui's 1967 bibliography, a number of developments have enhanced bibliographical control over multi-lingual sources dealing with Hokkaido, Sakhalin, and the Kuriles. The East-West Center Library has been added to the University Library, putting Japanese and Russian-language sources under one roof. The expert assistance of Mr. Tomoyoshi Kurokawa, who has gained first-hand knowledge of Hokkaido and northern territories problem through U.S. government services in Japan, and Mr. Jun Nakamura, who came to this University in 1978 after nine years of service as a Japanese cataloger at Stanford's Hoover Institution, have enabled Dr. Matsui to collate and catalogue a wide range of new materials on the region. Institutional support from the University's Center for Asian and Pacific Studies has assured stability and continuity of research on the Soviet Far East. The generous assistance from the Japan-United States Friendship Commission has made possible the publication of this updated bibliography of the region.

The new edition of Dr. Matsui's bibliography clearly demonstrates how historical and ethnographical scholarship on Hokkaido has developed since the 1960's. The multi-volume history of Hokkaido published under the direction of the prefectural authorities (Hokkaido-cho) introduces major new primary material as well as new interpretations of the past. The recent works of established scholars such as Takakura Shin'ichiro are listed, and works by younger Hokkaido historians such as Kaiho Mineo enable the Western reader to become acquainted with the latest historiographical trends. Japanese scholarship on Sakhalin and the Kurile Islands has also not been inactive since 1967, and the new histories of Karafuto, memoirs, and ethnographic studies of the Sakhalin Ainu deserve attention. A growing tide of books on the "northern territories problem" indicates that irredentism over the southern Kuriles is far from dead in Japan today.

materials on the Russo-Japanese frontier region and the northern territories problem constitutes an important step towards making the University's strengths in maritime Northeast Asian studies more widely known and more accessible to scholars and students of all countries. It is to be hoped that this volume will soon be followed by an analogous bibliography of the University's Russian-language materials covering the same area. We shall then be significantly closer to bridging the historiographical gap that impedes international understanding.
