

BECAUSE WE NEED THEM...

German-Dutch relations after the occupation: economic inevitability and political acceptance, 1945-1957

Martijn Lak

BECAUSE WE NEED THEM...

German-Dutch relations after the occupation: economic inevitability and political acceptance, 1945-1957

Omdat we ze nodig hebben...

Duits-Nederlandse betrekkingen na de bezetting: economische onvermijdelijkheid en politieke acceptatie, 1945-1957

PROEFSCHRIFT

ter verkrijging van de graad van doctor aan de Erasmus Universiteit Rotterdam

op gezag van de rector magnificus

Prof.dr. H.G. Schmidt en volgens besluit van het College voor Promoties.

De openbare verdediging zal plaatsvinden op donderdag 8 december 2011 om 09.30 uur door

Martijn Lak

geboren te Amersfoort

Promotiecommissie:

Promotor:

Prof.dr. H.A.M. Klemann

Overige leden:

Prof.dr. A. de Jong

Prof.dr. F. Wielenga

Prof.dr. C.W.A.M. van Paridon 4

Contents

Acknowledgements	6
Chapter 1 Introduction, historiography and composition of the study	8
1.1 International relations theory	8
1.2 Dutch-German relations 1945-1957: historiography	16
1.3 Central research question and subquestions.....	21
1.4 Composition of the study	24
Chapter 2 Dutch-German relations 1945-1949: a troublesome era	26
2.1 Introduction	26
2.2 Dutch wartime views of Germany	28
2.3 The Netherlands in May 1945	40
2.4 Germany in May 1945.....	44
2.5 Dutch demands	50
2.6 Annexation of Germany territory	53
2.7 Dutch-German economic relations intersected	58
2.8 The Memorandum of 14 January 1947	68
2.10 A decisive policy shift	72
2.11 Conclusions	75
Chapter 3 Financial problems, 1945-1957	77
3.1 Introduction	77
3.2 Dutch investments in Germany before and during World War II	79
3.3 The Allies and their policy.....	84
3.4 Consequences of the Allied policy to the Netherlands	88
3.5 Conclusions	103
Chapter 4 Dutch-German trade relations, 1945-1957	105
4.1 Introduction	105
4.2 Dutch-German trade relations until 1945	106
4.3 Post-war reorientation of Dutch trade?	110
4.4 The Ruhr area at a standstill	112
4.5 Dutch-German trade	115
4.6 A Dutch credit for Germany?	120
4.7 Trust Company	124
4.8 Liberalisation of German imports	134
4.9 EPU-problems between the Netherlands and Germany	141
4.10 Conclusions	153
Chapter 5 Rotterdam, Rhine, and the German hinterland, 1945-1957.....	156
5.1 Introduction	156
5.2 The Rhine and Germany in ruins	158
5.3 The Allies discriminate against Dutch sea ports	163
5.4 Rotterdam ruled out as port for the German hinterland	165
5.5 Dutch Rhine shipping barred from Germany	169
5.7 The hinterland and the German partition	172
5.8 Bonn continues Allied policy	174
5.9 Freedom on the internal German waterways?	175
5.10 Traffic plummets	180
5.11 Pragmatic policy gains the upper hand	185

5.12 Conclusions	188 5
-------------------------------	--------------

Chapter 6 Dutch-German political relations, 1949-1957	191
6.1 Introduction	191
6.2 Du Mont sensitive of Dutch anti-German feelings	192
6.3 World War II and Dutch-German political relations.....	195
6.4 Dutch-German political ties on a low level	196
6.5 Du Mont: the first consular German representative in the Netherlands	200
6.6 The Cold War	203
6.7 Tensions endure in Dutch-German political relations.....	207
6.8 Bonn hardly responsive?	211
6.9 The Hague, West German rearmament and European integration	217
6.10 Conclusions	221
Chapter 7 Conclusions: political consequences of Dutch-German economic interwovenness, 1945-1957	224
Primary sources	232
Bibliography	236
Summary in Dutch	261
Curriculum Vitae	269 6

Acknowledgements

Writing a PhD-thesis is considered by many to be a lonesome, arduous, frustrating, irritating, but, most importantly, rewarding personal and intellectual process. In retrospect, I can fully agree with the last two observations, but I do not subscribe to the less attractive sides of writing, although I can not speak for others. I consider writing this PhD as one of the most rewarding and interesting periods of my life. In October 2006 I started my research under the supervision of Hein Klemann, who kept me on track all the time, saved me from many pitfalls and mistakes, gave invaluable comments and advice on earlier versions of this thesis and was always positive.

In 2006 and 2007 the Posthumus Institute PhD course and its European counterpart, the ESTER network, was of great importance for streamlining my research, formulating research questions, finding additional sources and broadening my scope. I am grateful to all who attended these sessions, but especially to Oscar Gelderblom, Friso Wielenga, Margrit Müller, Jeroen Touwen, Ben Gales and Herman de Jong, whose comments were very helpful and stimulating. I also learned a lot at two conferences of the European Business History Association, and at a workshop of the German History Institute in Washington D.C. The conference Deutsch-niederländische Wirtschaftsbeziehungen im 20. Jahrhundert in Münster offered me the first occasion to present some preliminary results of my research. I have warm memories of this 2008-meeting.

Many people and institutions helped me along the way. I'd like to name a number of them in person, although I'm sure to have forgotten someone. On multiple occasions, parts of this study were critically and fundamentally assessed by Ben Wubs and Jeroen Euwe. Ben learned me a lot about the four large Dutch multinationals in Germany, whereas Jeroen was invaluable in helping processing all my data and figures. I'm much indebted to them. Of course, responsibility for the text and the calculations is totally mine. Most of the time, however, the progress of my thesis was discussed by Hein in the comfort of his own house. It were long days of hard work, but I've found them to be extremely helpful and rewarding, not to mention the great lunches and dinners Hein served on these occasions. There was also more than enough time to discuss other things that are important in life. I felt very much at home.

Many thanks go to the staff of the National Archives in The Hague, the Netherlands Institute for War Documentation in Amsterdam, the Nordrhein-Westfälisches Hauptstaatsarchiv in Düsseldorf and the Bundesarchiv in Berlin and Koblenz. They were of great help in finding the correct and interesting documents and files. Hilde Dotting of TNS-NIPO gave me access to its small, cosy archive. My research in Berlin and Koblenz was partly made possible by a grant of the Deutscher Akademischer Austausch Dienst, for which I'm very grateful. Ellen Spielmann was so kind to rent me a room in her beautiful apartment in Berlin. 7

Writing a PhD-thesis is also partially a matter of logistics. Mark de Jong has been of invaluable help when troubles with my computer arose and drove me to madness. Like a wizard, he was in no-time able to solve all these problems. Theresa Oostvogels was of great assistance with all the paperwork which has to be completed when finishing your PhD-thesis. Liz van Weezendonk edited the English. She did a great job and her emails were a joy to read. Over numerous cups of tea and tosti's, Suzanne Lommers and I discussed our research and progress, and, even more importantly, other aspects of life. These get-togethers were a great breakaway from work and PhD-troubles.

I thank all my friends for hearing my stories on the post-war Dutch relations and their interest in my work. Maarten Huikeshoven, although a true bèta, showed much interest and asked many provocative and stimulating questions, most of the time with the comfort of a nice fire, and music – the Rolling Stones! – playing in the background.

Finally, there are some people I want to thank specifically. Jacqueline and Irene Kool were always enthusiastic and curious about my progress. Their emails and talks over a cup of tea were of great support. My great indebtedness and love go to my parents, Jaap and Margo, who always encouraged me to follow my own path and taught me to be critical and full of trust. My warmest love and thanks go to my wife, Willemien, my joy of life and future mother of our child. During the writing of my thesis, she was of great support, supplying me with drinks, drop, warmth and love, giving me the space to do my thing and reminding me in time that there is more to life than writing a thesis.

On 3 July 2010, René Dammen, my former high school History teacher, passed away. As he intoxicated me with the history virus, he had a great influence on my path of life and the choices I made. I consider him to be my father of history. Therefore, I dedicate this thesis to him.