Multi-million dollar UAS Student Housing repair project could start as early as June

By TONY POPE
UAS Whalesong

The first phase of a multi-million dollar repair project at University of Alaska Southeast student housing could begin in mid-June, according to Dick Forrest, UAS director of Facilities Planning and Construction.

"Right now we are reviewing the designs for general electrical and mechanical repairs to see that our consultants got everything into the plan that we want," said Forrest. "We expect the bid to go out in two weeks."

The bid has to be advertised for 30 days.

The first priority will be repair and replacement of the entire fire alarm system in the housing complex. It's inadequate, according to Forrest.

Then the first of what will probably be two or more construction projects will begin at Building "G."

"We're going to completely re-do Building "G" if funds allow," said Forrest. "We expect to learn as we go - we have a pretty good idea of what's wrong with "G" but by taking it apart we can confirm it."

Two years ago the university withheld payment of $963,000. from the contractor, Morrison-Knudsen, Inc., for failure to perform with original design-building requirements. Currently the university and M-K are in court - - the university is suing M-K for several million dollars and M-K has countersued.

So far no trial date has been set.

Pro-Act leadership attacked by USUAS out-going president

By WHALESONG STAFF

The out-going president of the University of Alaska Southeast's student government council this week attacked the leadership of the school's ad hoc student group, Promotional Activities, known as Pro-Act, charging the group showed little fiscal responsibility during its 10-month existence.

Sonia Varga, whose term ends today as president of the United Students of the University of Alaska Southeast, said Wednesday that she is fearful that the USUAS budget could be liable for nearly $1,900 in debts that were the responsibility of Pro-Act.

Pro-Act, formed last July to promote student activities and increase relationships between the university and the community, contained between eight and 10 students. It was dissolved earlier this month by the university's administration after the group didn't satisfy regulations that it write by-laws and a constitution and

Approval of certificate program highlighted the UA Board of Regents April 21-22 meeting

By MICHAEL JAENICKE
UAS Whalesong

People no longer need to go out-of-state to earn a certificate or degree in tourism industry management.

At the UA Board of Regents meeting during April 21-22 in Juneau, the board approved a Certificate of Completion and an Associate of Applied Science degree for the Visitor Industry Program at the Ketchikan campus of the University of Alaska-Southeast.

The VIP currently has two departments-Travel Industry Management and Hospitality Industry Management. Both departments now offer either a one-year certificate or two-year associate degrees.

Even before the Board of Regents approval, the VIP courses have been part of the business administration curriculum offered at the Ketchikan campus.

The VIP was initiated back in 1984, following a survey of tourism industry businesses: resorts, hotels and charter boats. The survey indicated a desire by the tourism industry for Alaskan-trained personnel.

Carroll Fader, director of the UAS regional vocational/technical school, and Judith Doyon, coordinator for VIP, have been the two main people who developed the program since 1984.

Up until now, recruitment for people graduating from travel industry management programs has been occurring at colleges and universities in the lower 48, such as High Line Community College in Seattle.

Fader said the tourism industry in SE Alaska is "interested in interviewing and employing our students."

The travel industry management department has courses dealing with tourism-related fields in SE Alaska, such as tour groups, airline and cruise ship operations and computer reservations.

The hospitality industry management department teaches the students three main disciplines: hotel and motel management, food and beverage management and innkeepers law.

The Associate of Applied Science degree requires the student complete both the core and general education requirements. The Certificate of Completion requires that the student only complete the core requirements.

In the last nine months, the University of Alaska Southeast made it through its first academic year as a regional, three-campus university. The adjustment was not without growing pains, but we seem to have survived.

We have a new mission statement that emerged from a long series of meetings. Representatives from the entire area joined together to draft a statement that would address special needs of all the participating campuses. A cooperative approach to merging in Southeast was countered by divisiveness among community college and university factions in Anchorage and Fairbanks.

All the work that went into building a new institution could have been reversed if the factions had succeeded in bringing to a vote of the people a move to separate the community colleges from the university system. If successful, the total university budget would have been split between two separate systems, leaving each weaker and less efficient than the whole.

The university still hasn't recovered fully from the drastic, sudden funding reductions of two years ago. Rather than pull back in staffing and programming, we have found ways to do more with less, and to acquire funding from new sources. Tuxedo Junction '87 far surpassed its $10,000 goal in raising scholarship monies. Passport '88 is well on its way to bringing in an additional $250,000. The William Egan Endowed Chair in Public Policy fundraising drive is starting up with a goal of bringing in another $1.5 million. All of this new income directly benefits students.

And students have kept their support coming in return. Enrollment continued to rise rather than shrink in reaction to restructuring. A new student group, the Student Forum, emerged as a sort of watchdog organization keeping an eye on student issues and paying attention to what their student government is up to.

One hundred twenty five students will receive diplomas from the University of Alaska Southeast Juneau campus next week. We congratulate them on their persistence and hard work, for realizing one goal that will prove an important step on the road to meeting other goals. And we congratulate the university for dedicating itself to giving these and future UAS graduates the best education possible, no matter what the circumstances that threaten that dedication.

Election confusion: Students should stop by the office and read the current student government constitution

By SONIA VARGA
For the UAS Whalesong

Now that the elections are over does not mean all is well. Confusion about the second half of the ballot has stirred up some student concern. Maybe it is time you stopped by the student government office (located on the first floor of the Mourant building near the Whaler food service) and took 5-10 minutes to read the current student government constitution. You have student rights! Find out what your student government members are responsible for and how you can ensure they spend your money the way you feel it should be spent! If you can't spare the time due to finals, that's o.k. The student government constitution will still be around in the summer and fall (even longer) for you to pick up and READ.

For example, did you know: the chairman of the Entertainment Committee (Vice-President) must give the student body 48 hours notice of any Entertainment Committee meeting; the President only votes in the case of a tie; the Treasurer is to perform an annual internal audit in the fall semester; and the list goes on!

If you take the time to see what each student government member can and should do for you, each member will truly feel compelled to serve the student body. I hope I have left you with many questions anxiously awaiting to be answered. Have a great summer!

LETTERS

New LAC thanks students for their support

Dear Students,

The election results are in and the dust has settled. Now a new fervor of cramming for finals and finishing term projects engulfs me and the rest of the campus. The semester is almost over!

But before you all leave to parts unknown for the summer, I would like to thank you for your support in electing me Legislative Affairs Coordinator. I'm very excited about this opportunity to be involved in student government. My job as LAC is to keep the students informed about legislation that affects UAS. In turn, I need to know what concerns you have in these areas.

I believe in order to be successful, the student council must work together with the student body. I encourage your ideas and input about anything concerning the students at UAS. The last student government meeting of the semester is Friday, April 29 at 3:30 p.m. in the Mourant Building.

I hope to see you there. Good luck on your finals and have a great summer!!

Sincerely,
Barb Seatter

"Our Lady of the Tortilla" playwright a success at Perseverance Theater

By CHARLI COLLINS
For the UAS Whalesong

Perseverance Theatre wrapped its 1987/88 season with a comedy that spoke on religious, moral, racial and cultural values. Playwright Luis Santeiro is successful in making light of entirely serious subjects in "Our Lady of the Tortilla." The play could easily have become sacrilegious, but Director Gregg Brevoort cast Santeiro's message without stepping on toes. The audience laughed a muffled laughter throughout the play, not at the beliefs and values but with the believers and value holders.

The talented cast did a wonderful job of building their humorous characters. Annie Stokes-Hutchinson is hilarious as Dahlia, a middle aged mother whose only worry is recapturing her husband. Dahlia is delightful not at what she does, but rather how she goes about it. With the help of a creative costume designer, Dahlia takes 20 years off her birth certificate, but only in her own eyes.

Ed Christian plays Dahlia's slick but charming older son "Eddy" who carries a world of troubles on his shoulders, most of which are financial. He sees the world only after it has been filtered through his dollar sign eyeballs. Eddy introduces much of the play's adult language, not a character one would want their influential child to meet.

Jane Lowry Waid, Dahlia's sister Dolores, opens the first act in a flour covered kitchen of tortillas she is making for a catering job. Tortillas that are rolled, thrown, hidden and worshiped in the duration of the play. Dolores, much unlike her sibling, has never known a man intimately and devotes most of her life to religious endeavors.

Nelson, the younger son is a college student who finds his family's ethnicity just a wee bit embarrassing. He tries to hide all evidence of their ways when he brings his girlfriend home to meet the family. Nelson's girlfriend, a chubby, chronic eater is funny in a disgusting kind of way as she struts her stuff in a bathing suit for most of the play.

Eddy's girlfriend Val, played by Sharon Gaipman, never appears on stage, but her vocal performance was ever present.

The setting is in Dahlia's New Jersey home. Stage Designer Brendan Wallace did an appropriately tacky job of decorating with everything from statues of the Virgin Mary to brightly striped stuffed parrots.

As Santeiro's plot thickens the household becomes quite a ruckus. The uproar begins when Dolores sees an image of the Virgin Mary in one of her tortillas. The entire Catholic population of New Jersey comes to see, along with news crews, non believers and dogs. Nelson's efforts to hide the reality of his background are to no avail, as his girlfriend takes an interest in the tortilla as well, or rather her taste buds do.

Phil Falkowski completes the Latin atmosphere with cleverly chosen sound effects. P. Dudley Riggs, lighting designer, is effective in thrilling the audience with the same excitement that the characters are feeling.

The message? The play revolves around Dolores' desire to have one big happy family. She finds that her miracle is indeed a miracle in that it brings her family back together. The world may or may not believe that Dolores had a vision, but she does. Just as the world may not believe that miracles come true, but Dolores does.

The play makes a serious point in the end. With a culture heading in so many different directions, how can one focus be clear? Theoretically a culture without direction could eventually die.

City & Borough of Juneau approves lease of University of Alaska Southeast property

By TOM THOMPSON
UAS Whalesong

Engineers for the City and Borough of Juneau are putting final touches on plans for the first phase of development of University of Alaska Southeast property.

After more than a year of controversy and uncertainty, the way finally has been cleared for the lease of parts of the university's Marine Technology Center.

Last week the Juneau City-Borough Assembly gave its final approval to the plan, under which the municipality will pay the university $500,000 for a 33-year lease on parts of the property between Harris and Aurora Basin boat harbors. The city plans to develop the site as a commercial fish terminal and pleasure boating facility.

The agreement includes an option of renewal for an additional 33-year term.

The $500,000 lease fee is earmarked by UAS to augment the construction budget for its new library.

The agreement was first proposed in early 1987 by Mayor Ernie Polley and university officials.

But ensuing months saw the plan subjected to close scrutiny by assembly members and other Juneau residents. Some complained that the site did not suit the needs of the city, while others questioned whether the $500,000 fee was reasonable.

Assembly members McKie Campbell, Rich Poor and Clarke Young voted against approval of the lease. Campbell said city funds would be better spent at another location if the purpose was to aid the local commercial fishing industry.

UAS officials say the arrangement is consistent with the university priorities in that it will enhance the marine technology program and not compromise the school's needs at the site.

"It will be compatible with the marine technology programs and provide an excellent opportunity for our students," said UAS Chancellor Marshall Lind.

"Plus the community, both commercial and recreational boaters, will be able to utilize some of the expensive investments already in place, such as the travel lift," Lind added.

Scholastic performance high for 1988-89 Lady Whales

By CECILE ELLIOTT
UAS Whalesong

Sandy Morgan is not only looking at athletic ability but academic excellence.

"Academic achievement is just as important as athletic success," says Morgan.

Chancellor Marshall Lind is in support of the adoption of the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics regulations, recognizing the importance of good scholarship. "The direction we'd like to take is emphasis on good scholarship along with athletic achievement," says Lind.

All five of the new recruits have an accumulative grade point averages of 3.0 or higher.

Morgan, UAS women's basketball coach, has successfully recruited five new athletes while maintaining five of last years players.

Caroline McGilvary maintains a 3.0 GPA. She is a 5-foot-11 center who will be transferring down from Fairbanks. She played on an all tourney team in 1985. In the same year she was offered a full scholarship by Regas College to play NCAA basketball. McGilvary returned to Alaska in 1986.

Her sister Kristin McGilvary is a three-year all star with a 3.4 grade point average. She was selected as one of the top five players in the state to play on First Team All State. She is presently student body president at Monroe High School in Fairbanks. A 5-foot-10 center she will be entering UAS as a freshmen next year.

UAS's Lee Paavola recognized as Community Educator of the Year by the Juneau Community Education Council

By WHALESONG STAFF

Lee Paavola, Director of Continuing Education at the University of Alaska Southeast, was recognized this week as Community Educator of the Year by the Juneau Community Education Council.

Paavola's work with the Juneau Community Schools program marked him as a valuable contributor to community education in the capital city. The Community Schools Program is a joint venture between the university and the Juneau School Districts.

Paavola said he looks forward to increased involvement by the City and Borough of Juneau's Parks and Recreation Department in the community program in its next year of operation.

The Council making the award is comprised of representatives from the school district, university, and community agencies. Paavola is the third annual recipient of the council's recognition. Initially, the group desired a way to show their appreciation to outstanding community educator Joe McGill, who has been unable to work in the field due to illness in recent years.

UAS student wins Archie Shiels Freshman Writing Contest

By JULIA SELF
For UAS Whalesong

For the third year in a row, a UAS student has won first place in the Archie Shiels Freshman Writing Contest. Landa Krossa-Holtan was awarded first prize of $100 for her research paper entitled "Caution: Mandatory Drug Testing Can Be Dangerous to Your Career."

Three other UAS students earned Honorable Mention awards in the contest this year: Aran Conheady, Jeff Jeffers and Kent Leland.

The Archie Shiels Contest is sponsored annually by the University of Alaska Fairbanks, and is designed to "encourage and reward excellence in Freshman Composition at the University of Alaska."

Students of all campuses of the university system are eligible to submit any essay they have written during a freshman writing course. Previous UAS first-place winners were Deborah Lielasus for 1986 and Julia Self for 1987. All UAS winners have been students of Dr. Joey Wauters, director of Composition.

Krossa-Holtan, a full-time student last fall and currently an administrative assistant for Rep. Bill Hudson, R-Juneau, says her success is due largely to the revision process and to asking several people to read different drafts of her paper.

The peer editing process that Dr. Wauters uses also was a great help, says Krossa-Holtan. Not only did she get constructive criticism on her writing, but in evaluating other students' writing, she developed a better sense of rhetorical effectiveness--what reaches an audience and why.

While Krossa-Holtan is delighted with her first place award and the strong showing of her classmates, she feels Dr. Wauters deserves some credit also. She describes her teacher as "marvelous." She cites Wauters' spirit of helpfulness, encouragement, and accessibility as qualities that really made a difference to her as a student. "She demands a lot from you, but she has great pride in her students," observes Krossa-Holtan.

Like many other veterans of Wauters' English 111 class, Krossa-Holtan now has a much greater appreciation of good writing and an understanding of the complex process involved in composing, revising, and polishing writing. Her advice to student writers is, "acknowledge that a good paper is not going to come off the top of your head; it's going to take a lot of work."

During the revision process, she suggests asking as many people as possible to read your papers, for they are in a position to be objective about your writing and your topic.

Despite the time and effort involved, Krossa-Holtan firmly believes that those extra revisions are definitely worth the effort. She says winning the writing contest has boosted her confidence in her ability to achieve her goals of earning a liberal arts degree at UAS and then attending law school.

Campus censors crack down on student play, magazine

COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE

Campus censorship problems continued to escalate last week. At San Jacinto College in Houston, Texas, Chancellor Tom Sewell stopped the campus literary magazine from publishing an award-winning play about a student's suicide, citing the characters' use of profanity.

"It's an excellent play," Sewell conceded to local reporters, "but I had a real problem with the harsh language."

The play, called "Just a Phase," was preformed on campus in 1987, won good reviews and, in December, an Excellence in Play Writing Award for author Robert Earl Milstid, 24, from the American College Theater Festival.

Sewell added he would have barred the play from being produced had he known of its profanity in advance.

In late March, administrators at Chapman College in Orange County, Cal., did stop a performance of "The Coloring Box," a student-authored play.

By WHALESONG STAFF

ANCSA.

A scholarship fund named for the late Roger Lang was recently initiated by Sealaska Corp. with the presentation of a $20,000 check to the University of Alaska Southeast. Applications for scholarship awards of $750 per semester will be accepted through April 29 at 5 p.m. at the UAS Financial Aid Office.

Lang was a prominent Native leader, serving as Director Emeritus of the Sealaska Board of Directors and as president of both the Alaska Federation of Natives and the Alaska Native Foundation. His efforts were instrumental in the passage of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act (ANCSA) through the United States Congress in 1971, and more recently, he played an active role in shaping the proposed 1991 legislation that marks the 20th anniversary of Lang died in July 1987, after a long illness. With their recognition of his considerable contributions to Native concerns, Sealaska will enable Native students to pursue higher education at the University of Alaska Southeast's campuses in Juneau, Ketchikan or Sitka.

The recipient of the award must be a Native Alaskan resident who is a high school graduate or equivalent and must be a full-time student at UAS during the semesters in which the scholarship award is effective. Preference will be given to applicants demonstrating financial need.

Applications for the Roger Lang Memorial Scholarship are available at the UAS Financial Aid Office on the Auke Lake campus, at the Bill Ray Center, high school counseling offices throughout Southeast, or at Sealaska Corporation headquarters. Call 789-4463 for more information.

Pro-Act...

get both approved by the university. That is a requirement for the group to be formally recognized as a student organization.

Pro-Act officers argue they drafted both a constitution and by-laws last October, but had never been told they needed to submit them to the university for approval.

"They meant well, but they never were very wise in how they handled their finances. They played very fast and loose with revenues and expenditures. They didn't have a good feel for how to handle public money," said Varga.

She said student government is concerned it may have to reimburse a fisherman nearly $1,000 to cover the cost of a rope borrowed by Pro-Act's Executive Director for Finance Clay Myers. The rope was used for a tug-of-war during last fall's kick-off student picnic at Sandy Beach, sponsored by Pro-Act and the Alumni Association.

The rope later was stolen from the back of Myers' truck. The rope's owner, Robert Cláuder, has told university officials he will appear at today's student government meeting to present a bill for $989 to replace the 2-inch, 100-foot-long rope.

Varga said she is also concerned about two other expenditures, a $91 bill for the cowbells that Pro-Act passed out at Whales home basketball games this season and a potential $800 bill pending against the organization for half of the cost of purchasing the university's new blue cloth whale mascot, Spike.

Tish Griffin, acting director of student activities and housing, confirms university records show that Pro-Act didn't pay either of the bills before it was disbanded.

She said the university's student activities office would attempt to recover the $800 from Pro-Act, if the organization had any money left. "Since they don't, I'll likely eat the cost rather than go after student government," said Griffin.

Student government may be responsible for the Pro-Act debts since Pro-Act's budget authority, some $11,500, was granted partially as a subset of the student government budget. Technically, Pro-Act had no budget, being permitted to spend only funds that the group raised.

Myers and Pro-Act Executive Director for Operations Frank Wilson, Wednesday discounted the charges, saying Pro-Act acted responsibly with the funds it raised. Myers said it would have fully repaid the university for its share of the expense of buying the mascot costume, if not for "a lack of communication" prior to the organization's dissolution.

"We would have paid the bills if we would have been given a chance. But we didn't even know they had taken away our budget authority until after a student government meeting.

"We thought the mascot debt had been forgiven. No one had ever sent us a bill," said Myers.

He said concerning the mascot that former UAS Athletic Director Jim Dumont seemingly dismissed the debt. He and Wilson said Dumont had promised to fund sending the two leaders to a national student government conference.

They said when the funding was never forthcoming, they believed Dumont had forgiven the debt on the mascot in return for not funding the more expensive trips.

Dumont, now director of parks and recreation for the Juneau City-Borough, was unavailable for comment late Wednesday.

Concerning the rope, Myers, a UAS sophomore, said he owned a similar type and length of rope and is paying to have it sent to Juneau from his home. He said the rope should be here in "a few days" eliminating the need for USUAS to reimburse Cláuder for the rope.

Wilson charged that Pro-Act is being attacked late in the academic year by people who either feared Pro-Act as representing a threat to student government or by people forgetting the organization's significant accomplishments.

"Look at all it accomplished. It basically should be well respected," said Wilson, who said the organization helped initiate the campus' cheerleading program, provided student orientation tours, initiated the mascot, held four pancake breakfasts in conjunction with the Alumni Association and funded a statewide chamber of commerce crab feed this winter.

Varga agrees that the group accomplished a lot.

Regents...

"The VIP is a structured program of 15 credits per semester," according to Fader.

As time and funds permit, the VIP will be expanded to other campuses of the UAS system. The program is currently only offered in Ketchikan.

There are 55 students currently enrolled in the VIP in Ketchikan. Before the recent approval by the Board of Regents, students took the courses but received no degree or certificate. However, since the start of the program in 1984, students completing the courses have been hired by Westours and Alaskan Airlines.

In addition to the required course work, all students are required to take a practicum at a tourism-related business before earning the certificate or degree.

"The practical experience gained from the practicum is an important part of the program," according to Fader. The practicum "allows the students experience the actual operation of a tourism business, as well as learning the theory provided in the classrooms."

For more information on the certificate or degree programs offered in the VIP, contact Judith Doyon in Ketchikan at 225-6177.

Housing...

Liquidation damages were withheld from M-K for failure to complete on time.

"Although M-K is one of the biggest builders in the world," said Forrest, "they are made up of several divisions and the division that put up student housing is the Domicile Division - the division usually involved in building speculative houses, apartment buildings and military buildings," said Forrest in explaining the reason for the poor performance.

First phase corrective work will include addressing water problems - installing drain pipes inside the crawlspace and installing proper drain material, including a vapor barrier. "We have moisture problems - mould and rot develop and if it's not corrected, damage to the structure is almost certain," said Forrest.

According to Forrest another major defect is that there aren't enough baseboard radiators in living quarters. Also the boilers are undersized. During phase one more radiators and larger boilers will be installed.

Adding to heating problems are massive air infiltration and leakage around windows. All the windows and casings will be removed and re-caulked.

The contractor neglected to install vapor barriers so all the carpeting has to be taken up and barriers of visquine installed. In all the showers the contractor failed to use water resistant backing for the tiles. Forrest said in those showers the walls will be torn out and replaced.

To top it all off, the metal roofing wasn't installed in accordance with job requirements and has to be re-done. "Most of the construction problems were documented during the building phases," said Forrest.

The earth work part of the housing project started in September 1984. Scheduled completion date was Aug. 15, 1985. But it ended up being completed in stages beginning the first week of September to early February 1986.

You Won't Notice Any Difference, But Your Country Will.

Some young men are confused about Selective Service registration. They sometimes confuse registration with the draft or with enlisting for military service. The fact is, registration is not the same as either of those.

Registration is simply a way of maintaining a list of names which could save our country six vital weeks in responding to a national emergency. And registration is a requirement for federal student loans, job training benefits and most federal employment.

The five minutes you spend filling out a simple form at the post office won't change you. In fact, registration won't make you any different. But it will make a difference to your country.

When you turn 18, register with Selective Service.
It's quick. It's easy. And it's the law.
