A BRIEF INTRODUCTION TO THE UWA LAW SCHOOL

PERTH, THE CAPITAL OF WESTERN AUSTRALIA

With a population of over 2 million, Perth is the largest city in the state of Western Australia. It was founded in 1829 and is centred on the meandering Swan River, which flows out to the Indian Ocean.

Sights in the city centre include the new Elizabeth Quay, the Bell Tower, Government House, the Supreme Court and the Perth Mint. There is also plenty of shopping to be done, with parts of the city recently undergoing revitalisation.

For some fresh air, head up to Kings Park, which affords spectacular views across the city and river and attracts over 6 million visitors a year.

More tourist information is available at www.experienceperth.com.

THE HOST UNIVERSITY

The University of Western Australia (UWA) is one of Australia's leading universities and has an international reputation for excellence in teaching, learning and research.

The UWA Law School is the oldest in Western Australia and the fifth oldest in Australia, founded in 1927. From the very beginning the Law School developed a reputation for academic excellence and has continuously offered law degrees leading to qualification to practice since then. The degree has altered over time in response to changes within legal education and differing student and graduate needs. Most recently, in 2013 the Bachelor of Laws was replaced with the Juris Doctor to better prepare graduates for the challenges of contemporary practice.

A hallmark of the School's success has been the consistently high rates of employment of UWA Law School graduates, as well as the number of alumni that have gone on to distinguish themselves in a variety of fields. Among the School's alumni are not only judges, QCs and SCs, barristers, solicitors and academic lawyers, but also Rhodes and Fulbright Scholars, a prime minister, ministers, public servants, writers, journalists, conservationists and social commentators.

More information is available at www.uwa.edu.au.

ABSTRACT:

The Impacts of the China-Australia Free Trade Agreement on Education Services

The China-Australia Free Trade Agreement entered into force on 20th December 2015, promising "significant opportunities for Australia in China". This presentation examines ChAFTA's goals in relation to education services and evaluates its effectiveness against an ever-changing international education landscape. After all, trade in education services is Australia's leading service sector and contributed AU$19.65 billion to the economy last year. Given the current downturn in the resource sector, will ChAFTA help to boost the economy and save the day?

It will be shown that whilst ChAFTA offers opportunities for improved market access, its effects are limited. ChAFTA does not oblige China to supply Australia with students. The Chinese government is both a lawmaker and market creator, and Australia's success will be guided by bigger reform agendas in Beijing. We will look at what China's key drivers are, what Australia's competitors are doing, and propose new ideas for successful engagement with China.

ABSTRACT:

The Implications of Globalization on Legal Services and the Responses from Legal Education: A Perspective from ChAFTA

The proposed presentation first examines the challenges brought by globalization to legal services with specific reference to the Chinese market. Then, it talks about the responses from legal education to the ever-increasing globalized legal services. To equip lawyers with the needed skills to practice law in a globalized world will require changes in the traditional legal education. The cooperation between law schools among different jurisdictions serves as a key part in the context of globalization.

The third part of the presentation focuses on the legal services liberalization in the ChAFTA which is unique in securing China's first-ever treaty commitments on commercial association between law firms. In addition to guaranteeing existing access for Australian law firms in China, it also ensures that Australian law firms are able to establish commercial associations with Chinese law firms in the Shanghai Free Trade Zone (SFTZ). It argues that albeit limited, Chinese legal services market has been gradually open to the outside world in an era of globalization. The presentation finally maintains that Chinese and Australian law schools should enhance their cooperation in due response to the practical needs.

PROFESSOR WILLIAM MACNEIL

DEAN AND HEAD OF SCHOOL, SCHOOL OF LAW AND JUSTICE, SOUTHERN CROSS UNIVERSITY

Professor William MacNeil is a cultural legal scholar and jurispude. He is The Honourable John Dowd Chair in Law, as well as Dean and Head of the School of Law and Justice, Southern Cross University, Australia.

His most recent book, Novel Judgements: Legal Theory as Fiction (Routledge, 2013), won the Penny Pether Prize for Scholarship in Law, Literature and the Humanities.

MacNeil is the editor of Edinburgh Critical Studies in Law, Literature and the Humanities and is, at present, working on a study of jurisprudence in science fiction, fantasy and horror.

ABSTRACT:

Interdisciplinarity and the Question of Method: Reading Jurisprudentially

With the explosion, over the last fifty years, of intellectual movements in law schools as diverse as law and economics, law in context, and sociological jurisprudence, not to mention the even more radical developments of critical legal studies, critical race theory, and critical legal feminism, it would seem that, today, we are all interdisciplinary legal scholars. My question is: why is this so? That is, what accounts for the tremendous triumph of interdisciplinarity in a field hitherto as closed off, indeed hermetically sealed as law? Some of interdisciplinarity's success can be attributed to the failure of legality's historically dominant theoretical paradigm, legal positivism. In the wake of legal positivism's decline in the last century, a critical consensus emerged—on both the right and left of the academy—that the law was deficient, lacking something, missing a vital 'X' factor.

Hence, the rush to raid other disciplines to supply that X, fill that lack, render the law sufficient by recourse, variously, to the discourses of utility, policy or politics. In this paper, I want to suspend, for the moment, what I take to be this all-too-hasty act of discursive appropriation and with it, a concomitant faux interdisciplinarity, asking instead the following: what would be the semiotic consequence if law was approached not as a problem for, but a solution to interdisciplinarity?

Specifically, what if law was seen as having answers for, rather than only questions to be posed to other fields, as much as itself? What might legality have to say to economics? Or sociology? Indeed, political science? Especially when deprived of those formalist props, case law and legislation. Is there something to 'thinking like a lawyer' that will yield a hermeneutic that is, essentially, transferable to disciplines outside of law, informing fresh readings of the social sciences, even the humanities? I will argue precisely for such a genuine interdisciplinary turn in legal studies, one that gives as much as takes, yielding innovative interpretations at the very moment it borrows (steals?) other disciplines' theories, practices and, above all, texts. Analysing in some detail, selected scenes from two cultural texts—one canonical (Pride and Prejudice), the other popular (Buffy the Vampire Slayer)—I want to enact an interdisciplinarity that, through the methodology of 'reading jurisprudentially', posits a site of representation that is neither and both 'cultural' and 'legal': namely, the cultural legal intertext.

He was awarded Chang Jiang Scholar by the Ministry of Education of China in 2014.

ABSTRACT:

Argumentation and Decision in Legal Studies

One Chinese scholar once said “people learn axiom in primary schools; learn truth in middle schools; learn reasons behind in universities”. Law school students learn the reasons in law field, which includes both existing reasons and reasons to be told soon. The process of reasoning is a process of making analyses and arguments. During this process and under our civil law tradition, as for the issues of fact judgments, value judgments, choice of interpretations, legislative techniques and judicial techniques, intellectual resources and discussing methods out the scope of law are of vital importance for legal argumentation. In legal studies, researchers should perform the obligation of argumentation, but bears no responsibility to make decisions. In contrast, in the process of legislation and judicial adjudication, legislators and judges should both perform the obligation of argumentation and take the responsibility to make decisions. Renmin Law School now adopts the inter-discipline training pattern in order to make our students better perform the duty of argumentation and take the responsibility of making decisions.

ABSTRACT:

The Road to Interdisciplinary Legal Talents: An example from the practice of Sun Yat-sen University School of Law

The traditional Chinese legal education is judiciary-centrism, without paying enough attention to the systems, policies, the decision-making and the like. Judiciary talents cultivated under the guidance of judicial centrism can hardly meet the need of the development and segmentation of the legal service market as well as coordination with China's strategy of ruling the country by law and building up a law-based government. Thus, it is necessary to transcend the boundaries of the judicial centrism and focus on the cultivation of interdisciplinary legal talents. Taking the practice of SYSU School of Law as an example, this paper gives a brief introduction to the complex and comprehensive science of legislation, and the selection of paths to train decision-making legislative talents with interdisciplinary knowledge. In addition, it not only analyzes the existing problems in the training practice, but also proposes several counter-measurements. This paper holds that more attention should be paid to the cultivation of legal talents in our legal education so as to cater the need of the pluralistic legal service market, state and social governance.

Professor James is the Director of the Bond University Centre for Professional Legal Education, Editor-in-Chief of the Legal Education Review and a member of the Executive Committee of the Australasian Law Teachers Association (ALTA).

ABSTRACT:

Development of the Legal Profession and Legal Education in Australia

In this presentation, Professor Nick James of Bond University examines the role of Australian law schools in preparing law students to become legal professionals, and the important relationship between legal education and the legal profession. After presenting the historical context of that relationship, and tracing the changing nature of the relationship over time, Professor James examines the practical implications of the biggest challenge presently confronting both legal education and the legal profession: digital disruption. He explains the nature of digital disruption, focusing upon technological innovation in the areas of communication, data analysis and artificial intelligence. He describes how digital disruption is transforming what lawyers do, how lawyers work and who lawyers serve. He then considers the digital disruption of legal education, and the changes that are occurring now or will be occurring soon to how law schools teach, what law schools teach, and who law schools teach.

ABSTRACT:

ADR and Legal Education

Alternative Dispute Resolution (ADR) in Australia has grown from a mere possibility to a pillar of today's legal system. Disputes arising across a wide range of areas are, at first instance, considered within an ADR framework. Increasingly, disputing parties are mandated to attempt to resolve disputes before approaching the court. Litigation is the last resort.

Mirroring the popularity of ADR in practice is the development of dispute resolution in the law curricula. Australian law schools have taken different approaches to teaching dispute resolution from compulsory stand-alone subjects to embedding ADR throughout courses. More recently, research-based changes to teaching dispute resolution have incorporated technology and student wellbeing.

This presentation briefly considers the development of ADR and legal education and concludes that these two entities share a close connection that is having a positive impact on law students, lawyers and their clients.

FORUM 5: ALTERNATIVE DISPUTE RESOLUTION AND LEGAL EDUCATION

Resolving Financial Disputes through ADRs: The Case of Shanghai

The increasing resolution of financial disputes through alternative dispute resolutions (ADRs) continues the current trend in China of diversifying and improving the efficiency of its dispute settlement mechanisms. However, when it comes to Shanghai, it has been disappointing to note the following: (i) the third party mediation mechanism has caused a considerable waste of resources due to the low utility of existing institutional facilities, (ii) judicial confirmation of the mediation agreement could distort some basic mediation norms such as voluntariness and party autonomy, (iii) judicial confirmation of the mediation agreement does not have a strong legal basis according to civil procedure law and arbitration law.

This article, based on empirical studies, makes the following proposals in order to correct these institutional failures. Firstly, we could enhance the efficiency of the existing ADR institutions by encouraging financial industrial players to take advantage of mediation and other existing ADRs. Secondly, various incentives can be offered to those users of ADRs. Finally, linking the mediation agreement and arbitral award may help correct those problems caused by the frequently used judicial confirmation.

PROFESSOR BRYAN HARRIGAN

DEAN, FACULTY OF LAW, MONASH UNIVERSITY

Professor Bryan Horrigan became Dean of the Faculty of Law at Monash University from January 2013, after almost 20 years as both an academic in various Australian law schools and a consultant to an international law firm. He was previously the Louis Waller Chair of Law and Associate Dean (Research) in the Faculty of Law from 2009 to 2012. In that role, he established the Faculty's Commercial Law Group, now part of the Centre for Commercial law and Regulatory Studies.

Professor Horrigan completed his undergraduate studies in law and arts at the University of Queensland, and holds a doctorate in law from Oxford University as a Rhodes Scholar. While studying at Oxford, he also operated the Centre Court scoreboard for the 1997 Wimbledon tennis championships. He has held academic and research leadership positions previously at a number of Australian universities.

Professor Horrigan has both academic expertise and professional experience in public and corporate law and governance from Australian, transnational, and cross-disciplinary perspectives. Bryan has advised commercial lawyers and their corporate and governmental clients on issues ranging from contractual good faith, unconscionable business conduct, and corporate governance to corporate social responsibility, business and human rights, and governmental liability and immunity. He has given invitational addresses at Oxford University, Harvard University, Stanford University, the Wharton Business School, Minter Ellison (Hong Kong), and for London clients of a leading UK commercial set of barristers (Four New Square).

In 2009, Bryan was appointed by the Australian Government to an expert panel asked to investigate the regulation of unconscionable business conduct and problematic franchising behaviours. The Australian Government's acceptance of that expert panel's recommendations in 2010 resulted in changes to major pieces of national economic regulation in the form of the Competition and Consumer Act, Australian Securities and Investments Commission Act, and Franchising Code of Conduct. These regulatory changes affect many businesses and consumers in the trillion-dollar Australian economy.

His most recent book in the area of corporate responsibility and governance, Corporate Social Responsibility in the 21st Century: Debates, Models, and Practices Across Government, Law, and Business was published internationally by UK-based Edward Elgar Publishing in late 2010. Bryan was also a rapporteur at the Toronto meeting on the international 'Corporate Law Tools' project under Prof John Ruggie's UN mandate on business and human rights. Together with three Nobel Laureates, he was invited to contribute to a major International Bar Association report on the role of the global legal profession in addressing poverty, launched at the IBA conference in Boston in late 2013.

ABSTRACT:

Co-Cultivation of Legal Talent between China and Australia

The task of this talk is to share some – very subjective – thoughts about the development of legal talent in the context of legal education in our two countries. The talk first attempts to outline some measures that one might think of when addressing co-cultivation of legal talent. There is no shortage of ideas and the ones outlined are by no means exhaustive. Even some cursory thinking, however, reveals that even if one wanted to go down that path, there are serious obstacles. One of those is the question of whether we want to even look at the co-cultivation challenge from the perspective of peak-body collaboration or whether the question should be completely or largely left to the individual institutions to deal with as they see fit, or a mixture of both. Every peak-body involvement will have its challenges. Leaving those aside another question is what benefits flow from such co-cultivation collaboration, be it through our peak bodies or through our individual law schools and universities. A distinctly naive-educational view is taken to promote such collaboration, naive perhaps because in today's world of (alleged) utility and efficiency discussing notions of luxurious educational concepts might just be a bit "academic".

ABSTRACT:

The Construction of China-Australia Free Trade Zone and the Cultivation of China-Australia Legal Talents

China and Australia has a long time history of Culture and Economical exchange given the geographic advantages and culture inclusiveness. And this kind of collaboration comes to its peak from the time of the establishment of China -Australia Free Trade Zone in 2015.

The economic development relies on the optimization of the legal environment and high quality legal talents. This paper will examine the possible approaches to reach the aim of cultivating legal talents to meet the future challenges. One way to strengthen the China-Australia Legal Education Cooperation is to encourage Australian students to study Law in China. Studying in China will help Australian students to gain a firsthand experience understanding of Chinese Law and Business Environment. Right now Tsinghua Law School provides three English programs: LL.M. in Chinese Law, International Arbitration and Dispute Settlement Program, and International Intellectual Property Program. Another direction is bringing Chinese students to study Law in Australia. Tsinghua University just signing an agreement with Sydney University to provide a 3+2 LL.B. + J.D. program. Tsinghua students will be able study in two legal systems and obtained two degrees in five years. We also have a doctoral dual program with Melbourne Law School, in which Tsinghua Law School PhD students will be cultivated in two law schools and obtained two PhD degrees in their study session. Additionally, the establishment of Tsinghua Shenzhen International campus will also create platform to cultivate more legal talents to serve for the economic development of two countries.
