In learning about education, education systems and student mobility in Brazil; I am constantly finding connections between the people, the language and the culture. What does it mean to be a mobile student in Brazil? How does culture and language shape the experiences of students who establish mobility in Brazil? With an official language that is not English, in what ways is the Brazilian education system facilitating the integration of international students as they establish a new home in Brazil? These are some of the questions I explore in my research. Between all my findings and those to come, one of the beautiful things about this particular research project is how it connects every aspect of the essence Brazil.
