THE AMERICAN MUSEUM OF NATURAL HISTORY
PUBLICATIONS IN ANTHROPOLOGY

In 1906 the present series of Anthropological Papers was authorized by the Trustees of the Museum to record the results of research conducted by the Department of Anthropology. The series comprises octavo volumes of about 350 pages each, issued in parts at irregular intervals. Previous to 1906 articles devoted to anthropological subjects appeared as occasional papers in the Bulletin and also in the Memoir series of the Museum. Of the Anthropological Papers 32 volumes have been completed and 1 volume has been issued in part. A complete list of these publications with prices will be furnished when requested. All communications should be addressed to the Librarian of the Museum.

The current volume is:—

VOLUME XXXIV

- I. Navajo Texts. By Pliny Earle Goddard. Pp. 1-179. 1933. Price $1.75.
- II. (In press.)

INTRODUCTION

Posthumous works are always unfair, unfair to author and unfair to editor. When writing the author always makes mental reservations about the finished product which no editor can supply. The editor realizes his deficiencies and the best he can do is to choose between two interpretations. He fears that the one he selects may not have been the author's final choice, but has no alternative. He can rarely fill in gaps left by queries. This is particularly true of the work presented in the following pages. The Navajo texts were collected in 1923 and 1924 by Doctor Pliny Earle Goddard who died July 12, 1928. Doctor Goddard had recorded the texts at the dictation of Sandoval, a Navajo, learned in his lore, but not a medicineman. Since the untimely death of Doctor Goddard, Sandoval has also died. There is therefore no immediate means of checking over the text as it is written. It had been typed, carefully translated, and worked over several times. But, as is always the case in matters of this kind, queries were noted with the hope that on a subsequent trip the author would be able to get more accurate translations or explanations.

Doctor Goddard had devoted practically a lifetime to the study of the Athapascan languages. He therefore omitted much in his notes which cannot now be filled in, for he kept common words and phrases in his head. Fortunately in this paper the full text had been transcribed. It is here presented with a keen appreciation of the editor's shortcomings. I realize thoroughly its deficiencies due to lack of detailed knowledge of the Navajo language and of Doctor Goddard's specific intentions.

It seems expedient to print these texts which are practically the first to be published in standardized orthography. We have some texts of Matthews which, however, do not give a true picture of the language, as his purpose was to describe the chants and not primarily to study the language. There is at the present time a movement afoot, led by Doctor Edward Sapir of Yale University, to collect a large body of text and grammatical material of the Navajo. This material will differ from Doctor Goddard's when published, in that special care is being taken to record pitch accent and length.

From the literary standpoint it is almost impossible to have too much Navajo material. The texts here presented illustrate well the beauty of Navajo narrative. "He made his mind forked," that is, "He made him think two ways so he could not concentrate on what he was doing," is only one example of the unusual type of Navajo thought.

The texts are also abundantly illustrative of the Navajo use of direction, color, natural beauty, abstract and all-inclusive beauty, four-fold repetition, etc. It is deeply to be regretted that we may not have Doctor Goddard's own interpretation of Navajo literary style of which he was unusually appreciative and with which he had closely identified himself.

Besides being the first accurately recorded texts, this body of myth has also the distinction of not belonging to a definite chant. Sandoval, who lived at Shiprock, New Mexico, laid no claim to being a chanter. His power (for good) was however recognized by all in his own neighborhood and elsewhere. "No, he knows no chants, but his story is the best for it accounts for the Navajo much farther down¹ than any of the others." These were remarks frequently made of the origin tale (pp. 9-57, 127-147). Sandoval learned the stories from his maternal grandfather *ba'ilinkoje*².

Besides, this version contains much that was heretofore not known of the Navajo as, for example, the orderly account of the months, the constellations which usher them in, the "soft feathers" belonging to them, and the activities which go on in those months. There are, of course, many incidents which are recorded by Matthews³ and the Franciscan Fathers,⁴ but the text not only gives an entirely different impression of the thought and style, but furnishes details, the omission of which by Matthews was very annoying, especially since his references indicate that he knew details of the girls' puberty rite, for example, and other ceremonies which are of great importance to the Navajo student, even though tedious to record.

All of these texts were recorded in summer, at a time when the rattlesnakes were out. It is not "good" to tell them at this time and the fact accounts for the omissions. In one case, Sandoval would not tell a portion of the story which was highly significant, but the next day he announced that he had "made medicine" to make himself immune from any evil effects which might ensue, and proceeded to fill in the gaps in the narrative. In other cases it was necessary to wait for the winter months when the ground was frozen. Certain songs (p. 168 e.g.) were too sacred and precious ever to be given up.

There are a few pages (158-160) for which there were literal translations, but for which I can find no free translation. I was consequently forced to make it myself and I apologize for any misinterpretations and inadequacies, assuming at the same time full responsibility for them. The two stories included in pages 76–85, 158–160 are stories of witchcraft and, as such, of extreme potency. The notebook records a remark of Sandoval's, "If people knew I knew this story they would call me a wizard."

Nothing could be more unfortunate for an individual.¹ He is suspected, avoided, feared, but respected. The respect accorded him is not the same as that enjoyed by the learned Navajo, but rather honor induced by coercion based on fear and suspicion, respect of form for one's own defense rather than of admiration for intellect and personal success (hojoni). Sandoval was always honored in the "good" way. He never practised witchcraft, but he stated that even his knowledge of one who had practised it would lay him open to suspicion were it known.

The apparently innocent pages which record the stories of witchcraft are an excellent example of things which to us are trivial, but which to the native, are most highly significant.

"The Creation of the Horse" is a tiny bit illustrative of Navajo literary charm in a nutshell. It is comparable with a similar tale of the Mescalero Apache,² but has a very different twist, particularly at the end.

The last tale describes the origin and scattering of the people and sheds additional light on the possession of pets by the Navajo. Such possession has been interpreted as totemism by Matthews³ and Kroeber.⁴ The interpretation has been refuted by the Franciscan Fathers⁵ and by myself.⁶ This tale seems to me to corroborate our interpretation. The pets, bear, panther, and snake, were protectors and saviors but were attached to indefinite groups before the scattering of the clans and there is no evidence of a specific kinship as of descent or of vision experience for them. They are more distinctly Navajo protectors than clan totems.

I hope some day to extract the enormous mass of ethnological material contained in these texts as well as in mythological material already published in English. Before that time I expect to have the opportunity of becoming acquainted with that ethnology as it is still being lived. Until that has been done (by myself or some one else) I must be content to point out the vast possibilities for additional knowledge contained in these texts of Doctor Goddard.

Times were not good. Those which ate people were everywhere. tc'oli on its top cloud dark | resting became they say. The next day middle toward it there was rain. The third day middle | beyond cloud dark it reached. Four days cloud dark base of mountain water | standing became they say. Now dzuitno'odili from its top he ran they say. "What has happened, old woman | tc'oli on its top four days since on its top cloud dark rested. Now all | is cloud-covered. I will look what it is." "There is danger. Devouring ones there are many. What you go for?" | she said they say, First Woman. "Nothing will go wrong," he said they say, First Man then | he started running they say. So far when he had run this (?) he began to sing they say:— |

I come to it, I come close to it,
 With him dawn I being, First Man I am
 Now Mountain tc'oli I am approaching.
 Cloud dark with where it is black I come close.
 Lightning where it lies I come close,
 Rainbow where it lies I come close,
 Water its rebounding where it is I come close
 Old age good fortune I being I come close to it,
 Before me with good fortune,
 Behind me with good fortune,
 Under me with good fortune, I come to it
 Above me with good fortune I come to it
 All around me with good fortune I come to it,
 My speech with good fortune I come to it.

Repetition of above song but instead of "I come to it, I come close" substitute the following:—

- 2nd: I start up
- 3d: I start back
- 4th: I go along back
- 5th: I arrive back
- 6th: I sit down again

Here on top when he came up here baby he heard cry they say. Lightning | was striking everywhere they say. He did not know. Water its rebounding lay they say with one could not see. There | he found it lying they say. Toward the west its head he found they say. Toward the east its feet he found they say. Rainbow's | short under it he found two lay they say. Rays of the rising sun its chest he found lay across they say. Another the soles of its feet | he found they say. Above its face rainbow he found it was they say. Dark cloud, blue cloud, |

Six were all alike dawn songs called.

Four days passed they say. "Something from me flows again, mother," she told her they say. "That | kindzisdá' is named," she said they say woman. The same way it is done they say. From each side | at daylight holy people. "Now we will never see again," he said they say. From both sides they depart they say. | Talking God spoke they say. "After this Talking God he saw when he says wartime he will be killed on account of it | I say." Sun spoke they say. "Not so they see me. It is not right (bad luck) on account of it | they see me." On account of that they dismissed the gathering they say.

Then one day was they say. "Something from me flows again," she said they say. "That tedji'na' | is called." Four when days pass it ceases they say because of that women menses have. Four days it ceases | they say. One having menses was lustful they say. Sun water drips on top spreading her legs | her crotch shining Sun toward when it rose toward each other. | Sun in the center (name of a place in the sky) when he reached there where he feeds his horse when he reached water dripping place | under she spread her legs again in her crotch water sprinkled. They found she did that they say. After she did that | then they two started away they say. South toward they went down they say. Rush grass they two came to | they say. Not all (from each other) threshed they two started back they say. Some | lying in a heap. Nearly noon quickly they two arrived back they say. "That lying there I will run for." | "Do not do it. No, my daughter," she said they say. "Quickly I will run back." "There | it is dangerous those who eat people many run about," she said they say woman. "No, mother, quickly the threshed seeds | I run for. I too, I am not ignorant, I will be wary." "All right, go on, my daughter," she said they say. Woman | said it they say. She did that. Those seeds all when she had threshed when she was arranging | (her load) with surprise here horse white stood they say. Bridle was white they say. His moccasins were white they say.

At the center of the sky there I come up at ts'ahatzisgi | when I arrive place of dripping water you spread your legs. Water your crotch drips will accomplish nothing | you are. East your father let him make a brush house. We will see what will happen," he said they say. That one (surprise) Sun | she found it was they say. Away here while she looked he was gone they say. She walked back they say. When she got | back, "Something I saw, mother," she said they say. "All over white horse white entirely white. | Nothing will happen you are. There when I rise toward me you spread your legs. Middle of sky | when I arrive at the feeding place at water dripping you spread your legs' he said to me," she said they say. "Thus | truly you did?" she asked they say First Woman. "Truly I did." First Man came back they say. | "Something your daughter saw it seems," she said they say. "All over white it seems she saw. Right up here (gesture) | horse stood above the ground. Not on the ground he stood, she said, your daughter. 'Nothing will happen you do. There when I come up | toward me you spread your legs. There middle of the sky when I arrive where water drips you spread your legs.' 'That | truly I do,' she said, your daughter. 'Toward the east your father let him build a brush shelter across hogan let him rake the ground. | Chips too pile up in a pile. Rush grass seed that boiled place in a vessel.'" "Your daughter | said with they went away Holy People. 'They wont see us again,' they said, | all the Holy Ones." "Yu! for something you say that." The man built a brush shelter over there. He built brush shelter. | Before door he swept, chips too they piled up they say. The sun set they say. | It became dark they say. White blanket he spread down. Fabric she put down. Cooked food he put one side. | On the right side on it too she sat they say. On the left side First Man sat they say. | The cooked food stood there they say. Quite when it was dark, First Man went away. White Shell | Girl being named there passed the night they say. When it was light in doorway on the right side one side only | was a track. The cooked food one was gone they say. He came back they say. "How it is my daughter? | You lied I said," he said they say First Man. "My father, in the doorway just one was footprint. On the right side | cooked food too just one was gone toward east." When it was night again they sat there again. Quite | it was dark they say. He came back they say. "How is it, my daughter?" He didn't come. You lied I said. |

was living alone. He came to her they say. "Why did they kill all my people grandmother?" he said they say. Woman | "Something will happen my grandson witchcraft his way witchcraft that man | bear track who knows turn into coyote who knows how to talk. | His brother's wife that they kill." "What is its medicine?" "I have medicine for it. There is what is its medicine. | Its medicine gall bladder lizard blue while alive girl its belly let her cut open its gall let her take out. | That lizard when it dies the girl too. Lizard long one while alive its belly let cut let it die its gall let take out man too let die quick. | Then hawk its gall that quadruped that its gall brush tree mistletoe become its flower | break to pieces this with frozen then ask to help you two let them plant corn. All bring cooking vessels | will have hard time. Her eyes none. Her teeth none too. I have hard time." "All right grandmother. | That way you tell me." He ground corn for her. He fed her. She ate. Beads he took off. Earrings | in her ears he put. "Now the way I am dressed just that way you will be dressed you will go. Now | I hit you all right my grandson." Then (?) behind her head he hit her they say. Then he started away they say. The singers | they came home every one he killed they say. They saw him. He chased him. He ran. They did not know where. | Then that she taught him he prepared, how many years. Pueblo girl | it seems he captured they say. Pueblo boy it seems he captured they say. Blue lizard he caught for her. "Its belly you cut."

Lizard he caught. That boy he died. Its gall what she taught him | all he did they say. He dressed himself. Man spoke, "What you do. We are sorry for you. | Come back to us. Be our chief you be." All right I will do that. Something big I ask | just think you will do little children your pots your water baskets all carrying them along." | Then they did that they say. ? pots they put. Then for him planting this way pots | were placed in a line. Stick six feet long he took up they say. These in vessels he put this way saying he went around (dancing) | they say. Then salt I put in saying he danced around they say. Now to the people he made a speech they say | ladjobaigo, "One I myself your boss you be you told me." To them when he spoke, "Now you eat," | he said to them they say. Then they began to eat. After a while they began to itch. One backward fell. | ? they say. Then they ran back their homes to. They were bad people | they say, warlike they were. All he killed they say. Then they couldn't find him again they say. Then | junction of Las Animas and San Juan they tracked him they say. WIZARD STORY

Yellow (man's name) was thinking about something. White (man's name) with him being two exactly he killed people there | more than beyond he did. There was a hard time. At hojon four places he shot arrows one when he shot | white corn will be. One when he shot again, "So much blue will be," he said they say. One he shot again there | yellow will be. One he shot again. "Brown spotted corn just all kinds will be planted," he said they say. Now | garden place they arrived all. They planted. One bow shot blue they planted. There this | Yellow he had not put they say. There garden they were standing. Yellow corn is not, yellow is not. Lu (prolonged) the yellow | is not. Yellow he being named he was sad about it they say. | One where he had shot brown corn there too all they planted. Not speaking he walked around they say. | "Very bad I have been called. Yellow is dead they said about me. Now grieving to death I am. That property, | beads who will possess it I am thinking. Now I am grieving to death I am." This way (so thinking) they say. | "Property beads all, yes all I divided among you. Those your people live here all come together | I will give you all of it maybe. What do you say about it?" All, "Yes, yes," they said. So much he led them off | so far this way they lined up. From them he selected some. Here they went up. He walked a little way then | stick curved oak. Stone lay there under it so deep when he prized it he dug under it they say. That stone | under he prized. Hoop it was. He took out yucca rope like on it he tied | they say. Oak made into circles soapweed through the center made a line so large (five inches). Now over there | you go. There stones were in a circle (?) they say. Where there was a low place | that he had fastened around (the stone) down over the rim he threw it. It reached the ground. Here there he sat down then he said a prayer. Back he turned. | This one here stepping in the rings he came down. He arrived at the bottom that curved rock there stones lay | they say. There he came they say. Then he prayed they heard they say. Then large he put on a mask | they say. The ones who follow in a pair Talking God the one like. This way his head | he had put in it they say.

White corn perfectly kernelled they say. Yellow corn perfectly kernelled image (?) | they say. "Those goods I will issue you think," he told them. On it there some thing great he would do he told them they say. | This one follows the other one word when he said this way he would do he had they say. | That was why he put it on they say. Then this way he stood. His partner lined up people in middle | he stood they say. "White" he was named. Ears of corn toward him he held up. People stood once more see this | eight will be. In middle one standing he spoke to White. Twelve I guess it is. | That mask he had on from the top down he ran. This eight will be. Eight | years will be that he meant they say. This spoke twelve I guess it is twelve | years will be he meant they say. They planted, nearly it was ripe, all was frozen. | They planted again this corn kernel became burned out they say. Here they planted again. Grasshopper | all eat up. Here they planted again. It didn't come up they say. Four times in vain they planted. | Rain was not. Vegetation was none. Their food was none. Eight years from that year | children their young they stole from each other they ate them. Twelve from that year a little better | it became. Twelve summers (?) that year that he meant they say. This he mentioned. They ate (?) each other. | Then it rained it happened again. Vegetation its seeds | they planted again at Navajo country it happened. That one their leader people all moved away to the mountain | a good place they planted corn he rain (?) mountain lies from it water runs down. | We will plant saying all to the mountains they moved. This Yellow he thought this | that's all.

GAME STORY

Hoop with dice seven with his house very good it was all he lost. His niece her beads all he lost. | Because of that they were going to kill him they say. Necklace of mixed beads | was called they say. In center of the house they were hanging they say. His niece her uncle she told him, "This you will lose," | she said, "my uncle." "All right, my niece." Those white shell beads those turquoise, abalone, coral, | jet, five he took one by one they say. Iron ore they say. Pollen blue, they say. | Pollen water reed its pollen then he walked on they say. Corn pits corn full | of mixed colors five from he took they say. That all he patted together. "Well, | kill me they talk about. My niece we see each other again it may be. My small mother goodbye." Then tree | with himself he put in water they say. It floated with him they say. Colorado river toward it ocean where it flows he got out | they say. He walked along the beach lonesome they say. Corn one hill where he planted cross (?) | he put one by one they say. On either side | its ear projects they say. Twelve of them on either side ears are they say.

I hear large corn twelve on either side being ears I hear. Mountain black | on it on either side its ears I hear. Flowers on either side being ears I hear. | Deer male I kill, he will like me I hear. There four years after he returned home. | Unknown number days passed early morning he returned they say. tc'inask'it where it is called | he arrived home they say. Early when he arrived corn its pits (he looked) but one | does not lie there. Corn four inside he put. Four times he blew then his niece he came to. | His niece he found sitting there they say. Famine had become. "My food prepare, my niece," he said they say. "Is none. | You went away. Then four days were corn I don't know," girl said to him they say. | She cried she sat there they say. "Not you food I cook, my uncle," she said they say. "You look, some bring." | "Do not say that," she said they say. "None, none, my uncle." Toward each side four times they said to each other. | It was then when she walked away. It was full she found. "My uncle thanks," being joyful | corn she brought they say. Girl ran "My uncle has come back. Corn too, I find is full." | Then his brothers came in. Greetings saying around his neck they put their arms | saying, "You only you are my younger brother in the future we will not say bad things. | The game animals in vain after we hunt." Something happened. "What is to be done." "He thinks they say. | In vain while he hunted many days passed they say. tc'inesgit its top when he walked | the deer stood they say. That my cliff this way he ran around. He had crept up | to it when deer that was it was gone. In vain he looked not earth was disturbed. Next day |

Sun | he found his door post they say. xactc'elti xactc'ejinne with facing each other he found they sat they say. | "Begin, my grandson."

Here right side he stepped, four times when he blew footprints (?) became they say xactc'elti | he found he had a pet they say. He had taken them inside he found they say. He heard a noise they say. Way inside "Ho, earth | people I smell." Polite man he brings guests. Now earth people with he brings. Not say | that. All he has he said. Behind the fire deer male feathered arrow | his arrow being red back end to lay on him they say. Recently for him he had pulled it out. | In the center he sat down they say. White Shell he put down they say. Turquoise he put down they say. | Red stone abalone too, jet too, iron ore too, pollen, blue pollen, water reed pollen | over them he spread a blanket. Four times over them when he stepped so much a pile it became they say. Sorrowful | he felt. "I do not think, my grandson in return for it we will give you enough." Surprise | four days being he found it was they say. Game animals their house inside it was he found they say. Jewels he distributed. | Fifteen apiece, he distributed, thirteen became nine, seven, five, three, now this all | he had distributed. xactc'elti, xactc'edjinne all they distributed. "This way it will be skinned," | he told him. "Here (wrist joint) break it apart its sinew let hold it. Its nose (lips) leave skin on. | Under its eyes carefully pull them out. Do not cut through. Its bladder do not cut through. | Toward the rear its hide will lie on. So, game kill all the time. Its head toward the center | its nose, cook roast, its eyes do not burn. Its teeth too do not burn. And not ashes | putting around it you cook it. Do not throw away the game animals my grandson. There it | lies sickness. That this his teeth if were burned they will hurt him. You earth people tell about it. They make well, my grandson," | he said to him they say. All he made well (?). There all he fixed again. There east side paunch in songs are. He pointed to them they say. "All right, my grandson those | you came for," he said they say.

I came up, xactc'elti, I being, I came up to the abode of the deer

I came for darkness where are the door posts.

I came for dawn, where are the door posts

I came for moon, where are the door posts.

I came for sun, where are the door posts

I came for xactc'elti xactc'edjin with facing each other where they two sat ?

I came for bow black, feathered arrows his shaft being red with crossing each other they lie.

Over there deer male his mouth blood red with across each other they lie.

Over there I kill it he likes me.

Deer just one he sang (?) (were four of them). "Here is where they are. In vain I hunted them," he thought they say. This | with brush shooting he told him. Here they are.

Now xactc'elti I being. Black mountain its top trail up from flowers | among from its trail deer male there are. Herbs its pollen its mouth put in. Herbs | its dew he washes in, deer male I kill he likes me? they are. Brush | he shot in arrow with deer rolls deer brush he shoots in fawn arrow | with it rolls over. Brush he shoots in yearling arrow with it rolls over. Brush | he shoots in yearling arrow with he rolls over.

Here something big I did when he thought he ran back. All he killed | they say. That because they get away when they get well (?) very many songs there are. | Game songs if one doesn't know he doesn't hunt. We are afraid that way. xactc'elti his pets those | because we are afraid. All finished.

THE CREATION OF THE HORSE

On them it was spread they say. It moved became alive, they say. He whinnied, they say. Of one sort the songs are. | Two first and last these you write. Horse moved they say. It whinnied | they say. She began to sing, they say. This she hears.

esdzanadle I am, I hear

My house in the center behind fire I hear

Jewels spread wide on it sitting on I hear

Jet basket, jet house there in it now with it it lies.

Vegetation its dew there in it with it lies.

Over there come ? more.

It increases the house now with it it lies, inside it lies,

Mirage his feet are made they say.

That because its feet have stripes they say.

Rainbow his gait was made.

Sun strings its bridle is made and red stone its heart is made they say. Water all kinds its intestines | is made and rain black its tail was made. Cloud with little rain its mane is made. Distant lightning | its ears are made. Big star spreading twinkling its eyes are made just that with its face white striped is made. Its lower legs | white are made. At night with in front of it it gives light. Because of that vegetation its face was made. Large beads | its lips were made. White shell its teeth are made those not wear out quickly they said they say. Horse trumpet | (flute) black was put in. Dawn its belly was made, one side white one side black. Half white | it is named. White shell basket stands they say. Water of afterbirth from mare it is called is in it they say. | Turquoise basket stands they say. Afterbirth water stands abalone basket eggs different places stand in it | they say. Jet basket eggs from different places stand they say. This many white shell basket, turquoise | basket these two quadrupeds with it stands for they say. Abalone basket, jet basket | eggs from many places stand in it these birds all it stands for.

So now she began to sing they say. Here taste once some twice tasted that | because horse sometimes two will give birth to they say. Here one ran back they say not tasting | he ran back. He went again they say. He stopped he ran back they say. He came again they say. | He ran back they say. Once again he came they say. "Sh!" he said they say. | He walked back they say. "She won't give birth. Long ears you will be called," she said they say. Here | eggs from many places that stood in baskets many times he tasted they say. Feathered people that because (?) | abalone jet basket in they taste that because some are black.

Two when he had sung so he stood up they say. Putting his hand up backward he threw himself then | he ran off. Arrow People had circled around they found out they say they were going to kill them. Bear four times he ran around. The hill stands up so far he chased them. ba'ni' spoke they say. "My pet, come, my pet, come," | he said they say. He came back they say. The Arrow People spoke they say. "Being sorry for you we were after you we were coming we were," he said they say. Arrow person to ba'ni' said it they say. "No, no, | you would have killed us my pet (?) They are sorry for us. Why in the night they come. | Day time it would be. You go back before you are torn up. I will go after you, some time | I will come to you," he said, they say. "Arrow men well daytime you come then we know," | he said they say ba'ni'. That is why they picked him up they say bear.

They started off they say. How many days were that I do not know. So far little ways they passed the night. | Lunch they carried all was gone. Famine was killing them. They built a brush house they say. | Their loads were lying down they say. On them panther was lying they say. "Something you do, my pet. Here | is nothing to eat." He stepped down, they say. He stretched himself they say. He yawned they say. His tongue curled up | white. He went up. He passed them they say. He came back before long they say. THE EMERGENCE

It was named "water everywhere," "black world," "one word," and "trees standing." It was also called "white-shell waves moving," "turquoise waves moving," "white shell stands vertical," and "turquoise stands vertical."

Here where the sun would rise in the future, blackness rose up and whiteness rose up. There where blackness and whiteness rose together First Man came into being. With him was a white ear of corn of white shell which was kernalled completely over its end.

Here (in the west) blueness and yellowness rose up. Where they rose up together, First Woman came into being. A yellow ear of corn of abalone shell, completely covered at the end with kernels, came into being with her.

The man started walking. When blackness rose up, he saw a fire in the distance, but when whiteness came up he couldn't find it. When this had happened three times, he put up a stick so that it pointed to the fire. When blackness went away and whiteness came again he sighted along the stick and located smoke near a hill. He walked around the hill saying to himself, "Whose house is this that I have come to in vain? Who lives here? Why doesn't the person come to me?" The fire was rock crystal. He went back.

When blackness came up she discovered a fire. When whiteness came up again she started to travel. She came to a gap in a ridge and set up a stick pointing toward the fire. When she sighted along this she found the fire she had seen was by the side of a hill where there was smoke. The fire was of turquoise. "Someone is living in a house I cannot see," she said to herself.

"Are you walking about? Did you come here?" the man asked. "Why should it be thus? Your fire is rock crystal; mine is turquoise. Why should we be separated. Let us live here together." "All right, let it be my house," the woman said. Then they lived together.

Someone came there. It was "Water Coyote" who runs on the water and knows everything about the water. From this direction came Coyote wearing a coyote skin blanket. He knows everything on the land. Others came there, whose bodies were short and their legs so long. They were yellow-jackets who have stings with which they witch people.

Four others came there, who were short bodied and wore black shirts. They were tarantulas. Four more came, black ones, black ants that had stings with which they witched people. Three others came there, they were also black, but they had nothing with which to sting. They were named xoledjinnε. They wanted to live there but they were not wanted. These began stinging and killing each other by witchcraft. "There is no use trying to live with them," First Man said, and went up through the sky to the world above. The others moved up after him.

That was the blue world which was lying there and all those living on it were blue. They were birds, blue birds, jays, small jays, chapparal jays, and blue jays. The world was small and became crowded. They did the same way again; they began to witch each other. Then First Man, First Woman, Water Coyote, and Coyote, went up again to another world which was yellow. They found it was like this. To the east stood a mountain called sisnadjinnε (Pelado Peak), to the south was tsodzil (Mount Taylor), to the west was dogostit (San Francisco Peaks) and to the north was debentsa (La Plata Mountains). In the center was dzilna'odite and on the east side of it tc'olij.

There were living there yellow ant people, red ant people, and black ants with red heads. On the east side of Pelado Peak Turquoise-boy lived with twelve male companions. They had large male reeds. Mirage people lived with him. Toward the west where the sun will set in the future lived White-shell Woman with twelve female companions. They had large female reeds. Female shimmering heat people lived with her. Here at a place called, brown mountain, turkey lived. He had brown corn.

Now it was becoming crowded. First Man spoke. "Let them live as married people," he said. They made five chiefs; large snake, bear, wolf, panther, and otter. These five held a council and established clans. "If you marry one of your own clan you will go crazy and go into the fire." That is why they are afraid to marry into their own clans. "Now go home and let those who like each other get married. There will be hermaphrodites who will know women's work and who will live like women. They will know the ways of both men and women," First Man said.

First Man planted the white corn which was created with him, and First Woman her yellow corn, and Turquoise-boy his blue corn. "Now you who live at Brown Mountain, it is your turn," First Man said. Then Turkey danced four times back and forth saying "da da da da." First he dropped brown corn, then watermelon seeds, musk melon seeds, and last spotted beans. Much got ripe and they harvested the corn.

The wife of First Man was untrue to him. Mirage Man went to First Man and talked to him until blackness arose. They continued while blackness arose four times. The people didn't hear any one. They listened in vain for the second chief. After that blackness came up again. The next chief talked but they didn't hear him. The next talked and they didn't hear him. Finally, Otter spoke. "What is the matter that we do not hear? You who are the leader, tell us why you do not talk." "Very well," said First Man, "tell yonder hermaphrodite to come here." When he arrived, First Man asked who made the pot for him. "I made it for myself," he replied. "Who made the little gourd cup?" "I planted it," he said. "Who made the metate for you?" "I did," he replied. "Who made the hairbrush?" "I made it," he said. "Who made the stirring sticks?" "I made them," he replied. "Who made the water-basket?" "I made it," he said.

First Man had not eaten or drunk for four days. "Get some water for me. I want to eat. Prepare some food. I am hungry. She scolded me badly. I am like this because she was false to me," he said.

"Make a raft," he said. "We will find out who is the stronger. All of us men and boys will go across on the raft which they are making." They made a raft so large and all the men arrived on the other side of the river on it. The women lived on one side and the men on the other, and a large stream ran between them. The men made new farms. The women went about singing, while they planted the old farms to their full extent. They raised a crop of corn. The next year the men planted more land to corn, but the women did not plant all of the farmland. The next year the men planted still more and the women again fell short of the year preceding. The fourth year, the men extended their fields still further, but the woman's fields had all reverted and were gone. The men had plenty, but the women had no crops and famine was killing them. They were especially hungry for meat.

"Bring the raft across," they called, but the men did not hear. One woman called and ran into the water and drowned. Another did the same, and a third and fourth. The second chief came across with the raft. When he had returned to the men, he reported the women to be poor and starving. "What is to happen?" he asked. "There can be no increase living this way." In the same manner the third and fourth chiefs spoke. "They have learned their lesson by now. Are they not punished enough?" asked the last chief. "All right," replied First Man. "They are poor. Tell them never as long as they live to do such things again. Bring them across."

They brought them across. First Man told all the men to bathe and dry themselves with white cornmeal and then to apply pollen to their bodies from head to foot. The women were also told to bathe and to dry themselves with the yellow cornmeal and to apply the pollen in the same manner. They were requested to refrain from intercourse for four days, after which they were allowed to come together.

To the leadership of First Man they attributed the misfortune of the women, the deaths from famine and drowning.

When there was blackness, Coyote came wearing his blanket. First Woman instructed and provided him with a rainbow. The two children of toholtso were swimming where the water flows out in four directions. Coyote caught them with the rainbow and drew them out. Whiteness arose here and here. The weather became cold. From the east white ones flew, from the south blue ones flew, from the west yellow ones flew, and from the north black ones flew. First Man sent black hawk toward the east to investigate. When he returned he reported that it was water. He sent hummingbird toward the south. He returned, bringing the same report that it was water. This way he sent the chief of the water, egret, who can walk on it who confirmed the report. "What shall we do about it?" he asked. "My children," said First Man, "we will go to the top of Pelado Peak." They all moved there and everyone living on the earth joined them. The First Man took up some of the soil in turn from Pelado Peak, Mount Taylor, San Francisco Peaks, La Plata Mountain, dzitna'oditi and tc'ol'i. The people came after him, Turquoise Boy with black bow wood and the large male reeds. After him came the twelve men who lived with him and after them the male Mirage people. Here from the west of Pelado Peak came White-shell girl and the female large reeds with mulberry bows. After her came the twelve women and the Quivering Heat people. "Why didn't you tell me," said Turkey who came from Brown Mountain.

The water had reached the middle of Pelado Peak when First Man said, "Where is my medicine? I shall have to die some time. I am going back for it." "No, I will go back after it for you," said Blue Heron. He flew up and then went down hard to the bottom of the water. He came out with the medicine, but his legs were long. That is the way he got his name.

The water came to the top of Pelado Peak. He erected a large reed and blew against it so that it grew up until it reached the sky. Nodes were formed inside the reed. All of them entered the reed and started to climb up, but as Turkey was last his tail protruded into the water so that the ends of the feathers were washed white. When they reached the sky, Turkey said, "Let the water stop here." They couldn't break through the sky. "Well, sir, try it," First Man said. Then Woodpecker started pecking. The place became thin and finally gave way. The people moved up until they came to the sky hole, then tohottsodi appeared with his horns, the ends of which are blue, and asked for his children.

Coyote had his blanket girded around him. "Look in that," someone suggested. Then they filled an abalone shell basket with hard jewels, water mineral powder, blue pollen, and cattail pollen. They put the filled basket between tohottsodi's horns.

Then Coyote spoke. "No, I will give you only one of the children. With the white fabric of the other I will cause male and female rains and make the black clouds. I will cause flowers to grow on the mountain tops and vegetation to spring up. With the moisture we will be able to live." To this tohottsodi gave his assent. The girl was returned to him and the water stopped rising.

Cicada made himself a headband and fastened two feathered arrows crossing each other in front and two arrows feathered with yellow tail feathers behind. Where the hole had been drilled through to the upper world water was lying they say. Cicada made a pile of mud on which to stand.

Then a grebe came to him from the east plowing out the water, so that Cicada was splashed with it. The grebe had crossed feathered arrows in his headband in front. He stared at Cicada and then took off a pair of arrows and passed them through his alimentary canal from above and below so that they passed each other and were drawn out in opposite directions again. "Do this if you want to live here," he said to the Cicada. "Oh, that has already been done to me," said Cicada, who then took off a pair of his arrows and thrust them through his chest from side to side drawing them out so that they passed each other. "Do this if you want to live here," he said to the grebe who, without speaking, went away again, plowing up the water which flowed away after him toward the east.

Then a blue grebe came from the south, stared at Cicada, and splashed water on him. He too took yellow feathered arrows from his headband and passed them through his alimentary canal. "Do this if you wish to live here," he said to Cicada. "It is already done, but you do this," Cicada replied and passed two arrows through his chest. The blue grebe without a word turned and plowed through the water toward the south, taking the water with him.

Next came a yellow grebe from the west, throwing water on the Cicada, and staring at him. "People do not live here," he said and proceeded to pass the arrows through his digestive tracts. "Do that," he said, "if you would live here." "Oh, that has already been done, but you do this," Cicada replied, and taking a pair of arrows passed them through his chest. The yellow grebe, without speaking, turned back toward the west, plowing out the water which followed him.

Last of all, came a black grebe from the north, plowing out the water and staring at the Cicada. He, too, took a pair of arrows from his forehead and passed them through his alimentary canal in opposite directions. "Do that and you may live here," he said. "Well, that has already been done, but try this," Cicada replied, and passed a pair of arrows through his chest in opposite directions. The black grebe said nothing, but went back toward the north, plowing the water and taking it with him.

Now all the water which had been there was gone; it had flowed together to form the ocean. Cicada returned and reported that there had been water above, but that by a hard series of contests with four grebes he had secured its removal and that now there was nothing but mud.

Then they secured turquoise, white-shell, abalone, red shell, jet, and powdered iron ore; also powdered blue flowers, pollen, and tree pollen. These hard substances and pollen they sent by Small Wind as a fee for those living above, that they should dry up the mud. Then the winds blew for four days and four nights and the earth was dried up.

Badger was sent up to investigate conditions. When he returned, his legs so high up were black from the mud. "It is dried up a little," he reported. "Go up," he told them. "Wait," said First Man. Then they decorated panther and wolf. They adorned wolf with eagle tails and panther with variegated corn.

The first to come up was "Water Coyote," then First Man, and next First Woman, and finally First Warrior. After them came the people generally. They had now arrived on the white earth.

They heard singing below and Panther with Wolf was climbing up. "Pull Panther out!" First Man told them. One side (Navajo) trotted there, but they missed him, pulling up Wolf instead of Panther. "This one will be ours," they said. The ancient Pueblo people who built the straight walled houses pulled up Panther. The Pueblo people have houses and they like corn the same as we. From the black earth, from the blue earth, from the yellow earth, from the white earth; some of the people are from the black earth, some from the blue earth, some from the yellow earth, some from the white earth.

"Now that all have moved up, there will be a hogan," First Man said. On the east side he put up a male reed, and on the west, opposite it, a female reed. On the south side he leaned an oak timber, and opposite, on the north, a mulberry log. "I will put cornmeal on these four timbers," he said.

Over there, the ancient Pueblo peoples had built straight-walled houses with clay. "We have built a round house. We are tired from our travels," said First Man, "let us rest, my children." "You make a sweathouse," he told Beaver. "Bring up some stones." He brought them up and they found Beaver had made a good round sweathouse which he had plastered with mud. He had also made a fire and had put the four stones in it where they became white hot. He made a good door and on the north side a place to crawl out. He put the four stones inside. Then he hung a white coyote blanket over the door and above that a white blanket, over that a black fabric, and over that figured calico. When the four were hung he shouted out, "Ooohwu, come into the sweathouse." Many came in. "It is crowded," said First Man to Beaver. "Phu, phu, phu, phu," he said as he blew and the sweathouse became larger and the others came in. "Weh, old man," he said and Beaver began to sing.

"Those who came on top built it.
Sticks women with he built it.
Black stones with he built it.
Earth with he built it.
Living old age in safety with he built it."

Those who had been tired had now sweated and were rested. The Pueblo people who have houses do not have sweathouses. Those led by First Man, who have the round hogans, are accustomed to go into sweathouses.

First Man, First Woman, First Boy, and First Girl went into the hogan which had been made. First Man lay this way and First Woman nearer the door with First Man's medicine between them. Lying thus (with their heads pillowed on their arms) they began to talk, speaking softly. First Boy and First Girl, lying on the other side of the fire, were unable to hear and listened in vain until morning. Dawn came without their having slept. During the following day it was the same; the talk went on so softly the children could not distinguish the words. If they approached nearer, so they might hear, the talking stopped entirely. The next night was also spent by the elders in talking so softly that the children could not hear what was said, although they stayed awake all night listening. Day dawned but the talking continued. First Boy stood listening until night. The parents lay huddled up that night also talking until morning.

Four nights and four days had passed without their sleeping making eight altogether. Then First Boy addressed them. "Why don't you talk before us? We cannot sleep and we are suffering from sleepiness." When he spoke thus language was originated.

First Man replied that they were discussing what should be in the world. They wanted to know how to live until old age. They had also discussed the sun, the mountains, the months, the trees, and what should be upon the earth.

He stationed guards in a circle around the hogan before he began his plans, but Coyote stepped in without being seen. "What are you doing?" he inquired. First Man covered the diagram drawn on the floor and replied that nothing was being discussed. Coyote went back.

The next day, guards were stationed in two circles around the hogan and the work resumed. When the plan was drawn Coyote again stepped in without being seen by the guards. First Man spread something over his drawing. "What are you talking about?" Coyote inquired. "We are not discussing anything," First Man replied. "So you are not planning anything," Coyote said, and returned. It was morning again and he placed guards in three circles around the hogan before resuming his work. Just as he was finishing his plan Coyote appeared, having again passed the guards without being detected. First Man covered his work again. "Cousin, what are you planning?" Coyote asked. "We are not talking about anything," First Man replied, and Coyote went away again.

It was day for the fourth time. Guards were placed in four circles around the hogan. "Go to tsedadin and invite the venerable Black God who resides there. We want his fire to make the sun hot." They made the sun glowing hot with it. The moon they made just a little warm with rock crystal. That is why it does not give out heat. "It will give a little light," he said.

Then with a diagram on the ground he named the months.

This month will be called nalac, "spider." The traveling of animals will be its soft feather. In this month the mountain-sheep will run together. The heart of the month was made of shimmering heat.

This month will be called niltc'its'osi, "slender wind." hastin ak'ai, "old man standing with his feet apart," will be its soft feather. In this month antelope will mate. Its heart is made of slender heat.

This will be named niltc'itso, "large wind," tse'etso, "first large," will be its soft feather. Its heart is made of cold. In this month deer will run with each other.

This will be called zasnilt'es, "snow cooked." Its heart will be tin, "ice." Its soft feather will be ik'aisadai, "morningstar."

This one will be called atsabiyaj, "young eagles." The eagles will warm their nests. Its soft feather will be gaxat'ε, "rabbit track." Its heart is made of round hail. During this month rabbits will mate.

This will be called xoztcint, "horns lost." Its soft feather will be dibeni, "Say's phoebe," Its heart is made of small hail. At the end of this month mountain-sheep will give birth to their lambs.

Now winter has passed and summer begins.

This will be called hi'atcil, "little vegetation." Its soft feather is det, "crane." Cranes will migrate in that month. Its heart is made of tc'il, "vegetation."

This one will be called at'atso, "leaves large." Its soft feathers are made of natta', "rain" and its heart of niyol "wind." In this month the antelope have their young.

This month will be called ya'icdjactcille. Its soft feathers will be djadeyac, "Young antelope." Vegetation will begin to ripen its fruit. Its heart will be xadots'osi, "slim heat."

This one will be called ya'icdjatso, "seeds large." Its soft feather is made of ndjijoc, "little strings of rain" and its heart of xado' "heat." In this month deer have their fawns. The Pleiades come up in this month and they will lie on the backs of the fawns.

This month will be called ni'a ts'osi, "slender ripe." Its soft feather will be niltsa' bikqi, "male rain." Its heart is made of nd'ats'osi, "slender ripe."

This will be called ni'atso, "large ripe." At the end of it all vegetation will be mature. That will be its heart. Its soft feather will be nilt's'a ba'at, "rain female."

He had now placed all six (of the summer months).

Then he asked Turquoise Boy who was to step inside (the sun), where he was from. "I am from the east side of Pelado Peak," replied Turquoise Boy. "Step inside," he told him. "Put the flute made of large reed with twelve holes under your shirt. Let the Mirage People step in with you. By means of them you will pass by unseen." "All right," he replied. "but whenever I pass by I shall be paid by a person's death. Not only your people here, but wherever they move they must pay it. I have 102 roads and that number of people will die."

Then he asked White-shell Boy where he was from. "I belong on the west side of Pelado Peak. I am White-shell Boy," he replied. "You step into the moon," he told him. "Hereafter if something happens you two will trade places."

Although there were four lines of guards, Coyote came without being seen. First Man covered up the drawing from Coyote. Small Wind warned him that Coyote was about to say something unfortunate. He had gone to see Black God where he had fire, "Why didn't they tell us about it?" he said. Over there he had made a picture of the sun, but what kind is not known. He handed it to Black God who got angry, said "gaaa," and tore it up. Coyote ran off because Black God was the one person he feared.

He had made a drawing on a background, white above and yellow below. He had drawn lines across it with turquoise, abalone, jet, white shell, and rock crystal, five lines in all. He had this under his blanket fold.

"Why did you hide this matter from me? Tell what is on this. You wouldn't tell me because you said I would make everything crooked. It is true I did that, but not on my own initiative. With you, First Woman, as my leader, I did it. Your leadership was altogether unfortunate. You told me you wanted to win. By your direction I took the young of toholtso. I did a little better than that however." Saying this, he put the stick with which he had made the drawing down in the center.

Then Young Wind told First Man that he must guess what the drawing meant or it would be established. He told him in detail what was intended by each mark. First Man began to explain the design. "You drew this with turquoise to represent the green vegetation. You mean that the vegetation has fallen off by the line drawn with abalone. The line of jet means that the leaves are all off and that there are black horizontal stripes on the mountains. The line drawn with white shell is for the mountain tops covered with snow. The rock crystal line is for ice to which all the water has turned. You have put down six on the other side. What will the names be? What more are you to do?"

"We will get all mixed. You finish it," Coyote said and went home.

He put them in the sun. When they were making the sun, they sang this way.

His face will be blue.

His eye marks will be black.

His mouth mark will be black.

A horizontal yellow mark will be across his cheek.

His horns will be blue.

He placed it in the sky with a mirage.

Saying this, First Man chewed a medicine called adzill'ijiso and blowing it out of his mouth sprinkled the sun in four places. He then put the sun in the sky and it began to move. "I will go to this place called dzaxadzis, "low place," or "reservoir" and there I will eat lunch. The blue horse that I ride will eat there also. . . ."

He traveled. By the time he went down, the people were nearly roasted. "You nearly burned them," he said. The next time he passed over higher up. This made twice he had crossed over. It was very warm and the people nearly boiled. He went over the third time and it was hot. Again he raised it up and when the sun went over the fourth time the temperature was just right.

Then they made a model of the world, so large. Pelado Peak was adorned with White-shell, Mount Taylor was decorated with turquoise, San Francisco Peaks with abalone, La Plata Mountain with jet, dzitna-xodilte with mirage. They made the heart of the earth, named tc'ol'i, of jewels. It was made round. "This will be called yoditdzil (Bule Mountain) and this nittsadzil (Rain Mountains). Then he made a mountain ridge and placed it north and south. noxoziti was its skull. They covered it with bec, "iron" or "obsidian" and stuck arrowheads up around it. They became the black peaks that stand up. Way over on the west side they made its breast. Water flows out of the ground there. "Here it will be called prairie," he said. Here where water will flow are the pericardis and diaphragm. The stream at its base will be called atnasdli "flowing across each other."

"Let those having seed plant them on Pelado Peak," he said. Gray Pine Squirrel planted pines and Black Squirrel, spruce, Blue-jays planted piñons, and Small Squirrel, cedar. After that, all the people each planted the seed of the vegetation on which he lives. They still grow on the earth.

First Man then took the soil he brought from the third world and put down Pelado Peak, Mount Taylor, San Francisco Peaks, La Plata Mountains, four of them. He put ground-up mirage stone on dzitnaodite and precious hard stones on tc'ol'i. "Who brought up the stone?" he asked. "I did," replied Cañon Wren. He took that stone, pounded it up, and sowed the pieces back and forth. They became the rocks which stand in a line.

Then the four people who stand under the earth began to sing, and, moving away from each other they stretched out the earth. The mountains grew large.

They say they have them in Mesa Verde. Now it was complete.

He put the Pleiades in place, and then atsets'oz, hastin sakk'ai, atsetso yikaisdai, gaxat'e, naxokos bika, naxokos bi'ade, and here put bekon.¹ He placed Coyote's star also. Then Coyote said, "These will be my stars," as he pulled out hairs from his head and blew them up. They appeared as red stars. Then Coyote gathered up all the other stars and, blowing four times, sent them to the sky in unplanned clusters. First Man was going to arrange them all, but Coyote did this. "They look nice that way," he said, and went back home.

Over here they made a representation of the sun on a rock, and it is there to this day. (By means of it they know the days [?])

It was day again. A person died. When she had been dead four days they talked about it. "Where has she gone?" they asked. Two persons went east and returned without results. Two went south. Two went west. Then two went north. "She isn't in any of these places," they reported. Then the two who carry the corpse, one in front and one behind, put on masks and went to the place where the people had come up from the lower world. When they looked down, they saw the woman who had died sitting below combing her hair. The two men became nervous and that is why those who see a ghost become nervous. When they returned, they reported that the dead person was sitting below. First Man said, "They will not die for all time. Women will not have menstrual periods. They will not give birth to babies." He took up a stick over which skins are draped for dressing. It was painted black. Throwing this into the water which stood there he said, "If this floats up people will not finally die." Coyote picked up an ax and throwing it in the water said, "If this floats up people will not die." The ax sank, but the stick floated. Because it floated, a person's soul comes to life again. Because the ax sank people die.

A sapsucker came there. "Menses have become," she said. "A person's hair will not turn gray. It will remain black," he said. Soon a western robin came there. "Children," she said, "my head has become completely gray."

"The men shall work hard. They shall plant and bring the wood. The women too shall work. They shall prepare the food. The women may marry. The men may marry," he said. Coyote came there and said, "Cousin, I am married." That is why men marry.

First Woman thought about it and resolved to be the leader in these matters. She concluded that she would not be the only one to commit adultery, but that women in general would do that. She planned that it would be hard for men and women, once attached, to separate again. She decided that both men and women should have medicine to attract each other. Then she made a penis of turquoise. She rubbed loose cuticle from the man's breast. This she mixed with yucca fruit. She made a clitoris of red shell and put it inside the vagina. She rubbed loose cuticle from a woman's breast and mixed it with yucca fruit. She put that inside the turquoise penis. She combined herbs with waters of various kinds which should be for producing pregnancy. She placed the vagina on the ground and beside it the penis. Then she blew medicine from her mouth on them. That is why when people marry nowadays the woman sits on the left side.

"Now you think," she said to the penis. It did so and its mind extended across Mesa Verde. When the woman's organ thought its mind went nearly half way across and returned to her hips. That is why her longing does not extend to a great distance.

"Let them shout," she said. The penis shouted very loud, but the vagina had a weak voice. "Let them have intercourse and try shouting again," she said. When they tried again penis could not shout loud, but vagina had a good voice. The penis had lost its voice. As the organs were being put in place between the legs Coyote came. He pulled some of his beard out, blew on it, and placed it between the legs of both the man and woman. "It looks nice that way," he said.

While First Woman was doing this Great Snake, second chief, had been biting the people and killing them. Bear, who was the next chief in rank, had torn people. For these reasons both Great Snake and Bear were discharged from being chiefs. Panther and Otter didn't do anything and because of that their skins have value. To this day, if a chief does something bad he is discharged from office. "There will be chiefs," they said. "Now go wherever you like," he said. "I am studying about something else. There will be people."

It happened they were traveling in Mesa Verde with a ground dipper. They were traveling with a cat. They were bewitching the people who died as a consequence. Many people died.

There was a well behaved girl who had her hair covered with images of coyote, bluebird, and other birds made of turquoise. She had, besides, a disc of turquoise so large that a man standing could (just) put his hands on top of it. There were twelve white tails (eagles) and twelve red tails (hawk) fastened to its border.

The tribe moved away with her, going to dzi'nadjinne (Ute Mountain) and then to kittsilbito', "Kittsil its spring." They were doing the same thing at both places. The people were dying and they were suspicious of each other. They moved away from the others and settled at xats'abito'yi (Dolores). At that place there was witching again. The people would not listen to advice and they moved to a place below dzilic- dlai. Then the chief said they would go to xadjinai. They all consented to this. Finally, they came back and settled at kintel (the Aztec Ruin). Then fighting began, for the holy people wanted to kill the girl to get her treasures. Some of the people remained at Aztec and others moved to kindol'ije (House Blue). They came there to fight also and they moved again to Mesa Verde. After that some of them went to explore Chaco Cañon. They found a good place for farms, much wild fruit, and plentiful game including deer, antelope, and mountain sheep. They decided to move there.

Then the sun had intercourse in a magical way with a woman named naxodidai, "She picks up little things." This woman found herself pregnant and in nine days gave birth to a boy. Because of that the normal gestation period is nine months. Fifteen days after this boy was born he was grown up. For that reason a man matures in fifteen years. He ran a footrace around Mount Taylor. He had a bow and arrows and began killing pack-rats.

Large-fly came to him and said "Grandson, what are you doing? You should go to your father. Sun is your father. If you wish to go to him step on this," indicating a rainbow. He stepped on the rainbow and was carried to the summit of Mount Taylor and then to Pelado Peak and the sand dunes and was finally landed in front of Sun's door at a place called i'a'itse'na', "Magpie's tail."

"No one goes around here with us. What do you come for?" the sun asked. Being instructed by small wind he replied, "I have a hard time and come to you for help."

(Omission of tests.)

"You are certainly my son," the sun assured him. When four days had passed, they two came to the middle of the sky. The sun put his hand in his blanket fold and drew forth a golden plate. He put water in this and mixed in some pollen and made mush. "Eat it with your five fingers," he bade his son. He tried, in vain, to eat all of the mush. When he couldn't do this he returned the plate with the remnants which the sun disposed of with four motions, dried the plate, and returned it to his blanket fold. The sun then gave his child a small wind which should ride on his ear and tell him what he should know. He gave him also turquoise earrings which would prevent him from losing when he gambled.

When he had returned, the people began to talk about the very valuable earrings which naxodidai's son was wearing. They inquired in vain where he could have gotten them, saying that there were none like them in their pueblo. They tried to trade for them, but without success. They offered him paper bread and finally the chief offered him a girl to be his wife. He refused to trade, but agreed to stake them in play. The other side wagered paper bread which filled a basket two feet high. The gambling was to be with seven wooden staves thrown as dice. It was agreed that the bet should be decided by one throw of the dice. The chief claimed the first throw, but the young man insisted that since the dice were his he should throw first. They came down white and he won the bread which he put away. Continuing to bet the turquoise he won all their goods and then their houses. He then offered to bet all his winnings against a woman. Then he won all the people.

When the gambling was done, he made slaves of the people and set them to work, feeding them with the bread which he had won. He had them build him a house, the round one that stands there, and then had them make a race track around it. The people came from the east and the west. Some of them (those from the west) lined up with him and the others were opposed.

He instituted the contest of pushing over a post set in the ground. He also made a najoci pole. On this he put eagle claws and panther claws, the claws of all those which scratch. Those who knew how, put ten of these on the border of the pole. Its name was lightning or measuring worm. He made a ball, too, which should be thrown through a hole in the walls of one of the houses. If the ball went through, the other side would win the young man, but if they missed the hole they would lose.

The people of kintel (Aztec Ruin), kindotij, and tsedes'a were all talking about the gambler and what he was doing. They found he had guards watching for him in four places. When they had come, they bet their wives and the gambler won them. Then he bet the two women, all the assembled people and himself. He won a second time. Next he bet himself and his slaves against the land of the others. He won again. The visitors had only the large turquoise left. The gambler offered to bet all his winnings and himself against the turquoise. The contest was to be a footrace on the track which had been made and the contestants were required at the finish of the race to push over the posts which had been set in the ground. He had put one of the posts deep into the ground, but the one he was to push over was put down only a little way.

When they started on the race around the house the gambler let his opponent run in the lead. He then began bewitching him by shooting magical objects into his body. He shot him first in the muscles of the lower legs, then in the thighs, between the shoulders, and at the base of his head. The bewitched man staggered as he ran and the gambler passed him. Wailing went up from the partisans of the defeated man and shouts from the followers of the gambler.

The gambler pushed his post over with ease, but the other ran in slowly and worked at his post in vain. The sun came there saying he was after turquoise so large that one standing by it could just reach the top with his hands. His son replied, "Gamble me for it," and began to sing, "Come down all white." The sun, disappointed and angry, turned back, saying to himself, "I thought it was mine." nohwilbin, the gambler, secured the girl for his wife.

The sun had intercourse in a magical way with estsqditcijε. She discovered she was pregnant and in nine days she gave birth to a boy. Because of that, gestation now lasts nine months. In fifteen days the child was grown up. "Where does the man live who is father of estsqditcijε's son?" they were asking. Various men claimed him, saying, "He is my son."

Large-fly came to the boy calling him, grandson, and telling him his father wanted him. The boy did not know who was his father. "The sun is your father," the fly told him. White stripes appeared upon which the boy was asked to step. They were sunbeams which transported him to ts'et'a. An old corrugated man lived there who was caterpillar or tobacco worm. "Your father is dangerous. He kills people with tobacco." The old man vomited and gave the boy what he had thrown up. He then was transported to the door of Sun's house.

"It is hard for nohwilbin has won everything from us. That is why I have come to you. He picked out a turquoise pipe and filled it and smoked it all. He cleaned the pipe and refilled it. The boy smoked it all, but began to feel dizzy. The sun cleaned and refilled it. The boy put in his mouth some of the vomited matter his grandfather had given him. He then smoked the pipe. Again, it was cleaned and filled and he smoked it again. Nothing happened to him.

"You are truly my son," the sun said and called to his daughter who came and washed him first in a turquoise basket, then in a white-shell one, in an abalone one, and finally in a jet one. Then the sun stretched his hair until it was like nohwilbin's. He put a black medicine in the water and stroked his hair with it and then his leg muscles. "The turquoise which you win in the last bet will be mine," he said.

The son agreed to that. They two went to the center of the sky where the sun prepared a smoke and blew smoke downwards four times. "Go to hact'eoyan and you will get the things you will use in betting with nohwilbin. He brushed around in a circle, saying he was looking for his pay which would be (?) abalone shell. He gave his son a small wind which would sit on his ear and keep him informed. He called him "son" and they two arrived on the earth at the top of tsesgit. hact'eoγan already knew about it and small wind went as a messenger and summoned all the holy ones to a council. They met at the hogan called "yellow shining." There they made wooden staves to be used as dice. One side was left white and the other was blackened. They gave bat a small yellow skin as his pay and told him to go up into the roof of the house in which the gambling would take place. He was told to take these dice with him and when the other dice were thrown up in the play to make substitutions and throw them down so the young man might win. They arranged with large snake that he should go into the loop used in najonci. Red-shell which he was told to wear on his forehead was given him for pay. Woodpecker was asked to go into a mudball and white-shell was given him for pay. Rat was hired to go into another ball and abalone shell was given him as his pay. Measuring Worm was asked to go into the stick which when thrown would stand up as a wicket in another game and hard substances were his pay. Whirlwind was directed to screw one of the trees deep into the ground and hard substances were his pay. Wood Worm was hired to gnaw off the roots of the other tree and he was paid with jet.

In the morning they dressed the young man up and were starting off when hact'eoγan inquired about his fee and was promised (?). "Do not go today, my grandchildren," he said. "Stay another day, there are many on watch. What are you going to do to confuse nohwilbin's mind?" It was morning. In the middle of the day they made his fee. He put hard substances in an abalone basket, circling around with a brush (?).

When it was dark the songs started and they continued until morning. With these songs nohwilbin's mind was made forked so that it would be divided. The young man then went where nohwilbin's wife was getting water. He asked her for a drink and what was left in the cup he put on his head. He then went over where she was and played with her. When he had finished, he returned to his party and reported that he had played with his opponent's wife.

The woman returned and was greeted by her husband with the remark, "Are you back so soon? You played with someone who resembled me." "Oh, I have been false to my husband," she said to herself; and to her husband she replied that it was someone who, walking in the distance, looked like him. "Well, we shall find out during the day," he replied. When it was fully light, white-shell, abalone shell, jet, and hard substances, five altogether, were given whirlwind that he should raise a sandstorm, making it dark and blowing dust in the eyes of the guards. He asked the small wind on his ear to make nohwilbin's mind dwell on the fact that his wife had been tampered with. When he approached, the woman who sat with her face turned nearly away, laughed and turned around. "That one was my husband," she thought the wind told him.

"Well, my friend, I have come for something," he said. "Gamble with me," he said and took up the dice and began to swing them back and forth, singing a gambling song. "We will bet our wives. Just as many on each side and wager them on one throw of the dice." He consented to this, but told his opponent if he hoped to win he must not look up and must throw the dice against the roof beams. nohwilbin began making motions and singing, "White, white, white, white." He threw the dice and put the basket on the ground. Bat, sitting on the timbers, caught the dice with his wings and threw down the others in place of them. nohwilbin jumped toward the basket saying, "You lost." "No," said the young man, "you lost, it is my play." nohwilbin swore, for he was still thinking about what had happened to his wife. "Now I will skin you," the young man said and threw the dice. Bat caught them and substituted those of nohwilbin which he had caught in the play before. "I win from you," the young man said to nohwilbin who jumped toward the dice and threw them to one side, swearing.

"Well, outside this time. You bet all those you won and your own wife. I will bet as many and my wife," nohwilbin proposed. They went outside to play najonc. "I will roll my hoop," nohwilbin said. "No, I have my own hoop, I won." Large snake made himself into a hoop saying, "Throw your pole and when it falls near me I will get up and lie on it. When he throws his pole he will slam it down hard on me and bust my belly." He rolled his hoop and threw his pole with it. It had "claws" tied under it. It fell close to the hoop which rolled to it and fell over on it. nohwilbin ran to it and pulled the "claws" to one side. "What are you doing to my hoop? I win from you."

"Well, inside next. We will play measuring worm. If this arched stick falls curved you win from me. You bet all you have won against an equal number." The young man consented to this. When nohwilbin was picking up an arched stick the young man objected, saying he had one of his own. "Now I will beat you. You will cry. The young man threw it and it stood up nicely arched. It was a real measuring worm. nohwilbin tried to throw it down, but the young man stopped him, saying he had won.

"Well," he said, "You have won all you bet. We will play football outside. If it drops this side I will win these from you, but if it falls on the other side you win from me." "All right," he said. They began kicking. He kicked it about so far (two feet) and Woodpecker flew beside it so that it fell on the other side. "I win," the young man said. "Yes," nohwilbin said, "we will bet ? at one time." The young man consented. They were to guess what was in a row of water baskets. Small wind assisted him. "What is that?" he was asked. "A water basket with a black cloud inside." "What is the one beside the white one?" was the next question. "A water basket containing female rain," was the reply. "What is that which stands by the image of a boy?" he was asked next. "It is an image of a girl and beside it a bird comes up singing." He had poison and was witching people. I have won from you," the young man said. "All right," nohwilbin replied.

"Now you bet all you have won and your wife too on one play." He agreed to this and they went outside where stood the house with a hole through the wall. "You kick four times and if you miss putting the ball through you lose, but if it goes through you win." There was a rat inside the ball. He pretended to hit it and the rat ran with the ball. They ran after the ball which went through the hole. "I won from you," the young man said. "Well, I will bet you male rain, female rain, all the houses and farms and myself, too. If you win you may kill me," nohwilbin proposed. The young man consented. "We will run a footrace around this track." They started running side by side, but the young man, taunting nohwilbin, ran ahead of him. After they had passed each other several times and the young man was in the lead, Wind told him that nohwilbin was about to shoot him with witchcraft in his leg muscle and that he must dodge the shot by jumping up. When nohwilbin shot him the young man jumped up and caught up the missile. Next, he was warned the shot would be at his hip and that he must throw himself to one side. He did this and again caught the missile. The warning the next time was that he would be shot between the shoulders and that he should dodge downward. This he did and again caught the missile. The last time the shot was at the base of his neck, which he escaped in the same way, again securing the missile.

Then nohwilbin ran along beside him taunting him. "I will skin you. Poor fellow take your time." When nohwilbin was ahead of him, the young man, using the missiles he had picked up, shot him in the leg muscles, in the thigh, between his shoulders, and at the base of his head. Then he overtook him. "Let him run a long distance behind you,"

Wind advised the young man. Then as the young man ran by, he said, "Now I will run away from you, nohwilbin. Poor man. Take it easy." The young man ran on nohwilbin's side of the trail and the onlookers were deceived. nohwilbin's partisans were shouting with joy and the young man's friends were crying. Then when he came over the hill the matter was reversed. The friends of the young man began to shout and nohwilbin's friends cried.

When the young man came to his tree he grabbed it and ran along with it. nohwilbin came in slowly and tried in vain to pull his tree out. He trod the ground down as he fought with it. The young man came up to him, said, "You take too long at it," and pulled the tree up. Then nohwilbin said he was out of breath and, passing him an ax, asked to be killed with it. Wind warned the young man, however, that with this ax, the one who wielded it killed himself. "No," the young man said, "shut your eyes." He was going to strike him with his own ax when the sun came and said, "Wait, my son, he is not boss of anything. Let him be boss of something. You shoot him up with your black bow." They two went there and the young man said, "Step on this," indicating his bow. He shot him up into the sky. He stopped halfway up. "For a long time my thoughts have been at the earth's heart," he said. Again he stopped. "Always my thoughts will come back to the center of the earth," he said again. He stopped the third time and said, "My thought will come back to the center of the world, it may be for good, it may be for evil." When he stopped the fourth time he said, "Adios."

When this had happened those who had been with nohwilbin began to cry. "Why do you cry, slaves of nohwilbin, I shall not treat you that way. Go wherever you please and take back your houses and farms," the young man told them. "Thanks," they all said and embraced each other. That is the way it is told. The people went off in various directions. "It will be so always, my son," the sun said. He breathed out four times. "The one who stays inside will be mine you are thinking," he said.

The people scattered out, some staying there at Pueblo Bonito and others investigated about Jemez where they found wide fields. "This will be our country," they said. "All right," the others replied.

Some of the people returned to tsedes'a and from there to Salt Cañon. I do not know how many years they lived there. Then they moved to tsedegoneneg'e' where they lived five years.

Then First Man and First Woman went to the top of dzitnaodile where the Navajo people were to be made. There they studied about it and decided that Navajo would be made where the round heart of the earth is at tc'oli'. They made an image of a man of the ear of white shell corn, rounded at the end, with which First Man came into existence. Then they made an image of a woman of the yellow ear of corn made of abalone shell, rounded at the end, with which First Woman came into existence. Then there, Turquoise Boy, and on this he made more so that they would have beads which covered them up and he who lives in Pelado Peak stepped over them. He who was made in Mount Taylor arrived and stepped over them. He who was made in San Francisco Peaks arrived there and stepped over them. He who was made in La Plata Mountains arrived there and stepped over them. Then he began to sing and in the morning they began to move and breathe. The newly created pair couldn't get up, however. They invited the holy ones in vain. Finally, they sent messengers to the sky with hard substances as a fee. Then smoke came and blowing through the new pair, passed each other and came out. This made the body hairs and air came out (the pores of the skin). Six women and six men, twelve all together stood up. Thus Navajo were made.

ORIGIN OF SOME NAVAJO CUSTOMS¹

Times were hard in the world. Everywhere there were beings who were eating people. One day a dark rain cloud was seen resting on the top of tc'ol'i.² The next day the rain was seen to be falling nearly to the middle of the mountain. The third day it reached well beyond the middle and the fourth day the rain enveloped the entire mountain and was falling at its base.

First Man, observing this from the top of dzitna'oditi, addressing First Woman said, "Old woman, four days ago there was a dark rain cloud on the top of tc'ol'i and now the entire mountain is covered with rain. Something unusual has happened. I am going to see what it is." "There are things to be feared there. The devouring ones are many. Why do you go?" First Woman replied. "Nothing untoward will happen," First Man said and started away on a run. When he had run some distance he began to sing:—

"I am approaching, close I am approaching.
I being associated with the dawn, First Man I am.
Now the mountain Tc'ol'i I am approaching.
Where it is black with rain clouds I am approaching.
Where the zigzag lightning lies above I am approaching.
Where the rainbow lies above I am approaching.
Where it is murky with the rebounding water I am approaching.
Possessed of long life and good fortune I am approaching.
With good fortune before me,
With good fortune behind me,
With good fortune under me I come to it.
With good fortune above me I come to it.
With good fortune all around me I come to it.
With good fortune proceeding from my mouth I come to it.

Having arrived at the base of the mountain with this song he climbed the mountain with a similar one, but with the refrain, "I am climbing." When he was ready to return the song had for a refrain, "I start home." On the way back he sang a similar song saying, "I am traveling home." This was followed by one with the refrain, "I have returned." The final song has for a refrain, "I sit down again."³

When First Man came to the top of the mountain he heard a baby crying. The lightning striking all about and murk caused by the hard rain ¹First Man and First Woman were living on the mountain which the Navajo call dzitna'oditi. It has been identified with Huerfano Mountain in San Juan County, New Mexico, but verification should be made.

²A mountain peak about twenty miles east of dzitna'oditi. The relative positions were shown by a drawing on the sand.

³There are no doubt eight songs, the first being, "I set out." When songs of this character, that is of magical power, are given incidentally, sometimes one song is withheld preventing the transfer of the power.

made it difficult to see anything. He discovered the baby lying there with its head toward the west and its feet toward the east. Its cradle consisted of two short rainbows which lay longitudinally under it. Crosswise, at its chest and feet, lay red rays of the rising sun. Arched over its face was a rainbow. The baby was wrapped in four blankets; dark cloud, blue cloud, yellow cloud, and white cloud. Along either side was a row of loops made of lightning and through these a sunbeam was laced back and forth.

First Man, not knowing how to undo the fastenings, took up the baby, cradle and all, and started home with the songs mentioned above. When he arrived he called out. "Old woman, it is a baby, I found it there where it is black night with rain clouds."¹ "Ee," First Woman exclaimed. They heard immediately xawu', xawu', xawu', the call of Mirage xactc'exti. This was followed by xuuuxu Xuuuxu Xuuuxu wuwuoo, the cry of his companion Mirage xactc'εoran. The two gods came in with xactc'exti in the lead who clapped his hand over his mouth and then struck them together, crying, "Something great has happened, my grandchildren. This is the one we have been talking about. Hereafter her mind will be the ruling power." He put the baby on the ground back of the fire, pulled the string, and the lacing came free in both directions.

"The cradle shall be like this. Thin pieces of wood shall be placed underneath. There will be a row of loops on either side made of string. The bark of the cliff rose, shredded and rubbed fine will be used under the child for a bed."² It was a girl.

"Ee," said First Woman, "citc'ε (my daughter, woman speaking) she shall be." First Man said, "She will be sitsi" (my daughter, man speaking).

A day was the same as a year. The second day the baby sat up and when two days had passed she looked around. She was then dressed.

Well, White Shell woman gazed about.

With moccasins of white shell, their borders embroidered with black she gazed about.

Her shoe laces of white shell she gazed about.

Her leggings of white shell she gazed about.

Her legging pendants of white shell she gazed about.

Her skirt of white shell she gazed about.

Her belt of white shell she gazed about.

Her shirt of white shell she gazed about.

¹Matthews recorded a version in which First Woman made the journey and found the baby, Legends, p. 230.

²It was explained that zackc'elti took the supernatural cradle away.

Her face of white shell she gazed about.

Her mind of white shell she gazed about.

Her soft feather¹ of white shell she gazed about.

Having on the crown of her head a bluebird with a white stripe across its mouth and a nice voice.

Having long life and good fortune she gazed about.

Good fortune ahead of her.

Good fortune behind her she gazed about.

Good fortune below her she gazed about.

Good fortune all around her she gazed about.

Good fortune proceeding from her mouth she gazed about.

When she was two days old she walked and when three days had passed she danced. Four days after she was found she ran some distance. When the fifth and sixth days had passed First Woman walked with her, calling her daughter. The seventh, eighth, and ninth days passed and on the tenth at dawn she was named yolkai esdza "White Shell Woman." Eleven days passed and on the thirteenth day, when the sun reached the exact place in the sky where it was when the girl was found, she was discovered to be menstruating.

"Mother, something is passing from me," she said. "That, my daughter, is called tsidesdla.² A girl will reach puberty at thirteen years of age." When all had passed she washed in a white shell basket, in a turquoise basket, in an abalone shell basket, and finally in a jet basket.

Then he dressed his child.

Now First Man dressed white shell girl.

Back from the center of his house I dress her.

Her moccasins being of white shell he dressed her.

Her white shell moccasins having a black border he dressed her.

Their strings being of white shell he dressed her.

Her leggings being of white shell he dressed her.

Their pendants being of white shell he dressed her.

Her skirt being of white shell he dressed her.

Her belt being of white shell he dressed her.

Her shirt being of white shell he dressed her.

Her face being of white shell he dressed her.

Her mind being of white shell he dressed her.

Her soft feather being of white shell he dressed her.

All kinds of clothing going to her I dress them.

All kinds of quadrupeds going to her I dress them.

All kinds of plants going to her I dress them.

Male ram going to her I dress him

Female ram going to her I dress her.

Bluebirds calling in front of her I dress them

¹Tied to the crown of her head.

²Seems to refer to the foottrace which is a feature of the first menstruation.

Being a girl of long life and good fortune I dress her.
 Good fortune being in front of her I dress her.
 Good fortune being behind her I dress her.
 Good fortune being below her I dress her.
 Good fortune above her I dress her.
 Good fortune being all around her I dress her.
 Her speech being fortunate I dress her.

She was dressed and then a bed was spread for her with a white buckskin at the bottom, and on it a blanket of white cotton, third, an embroidered black one, and fourth, a white coyote skin blanket. The girl lay face down on this bed stretched out.¹

"From here one runs in a sunwise circuit and then one should jump over to the place behind the fire. There you have finished running. With soft goods you finish running, my daughter. With white shell you finish running, my daughter." First Woman said. "When three days have passed." "Let all the holy ones come where we are living," said First Man. "You are appointed the leaders, Mirage xactc'elti and Mirage xactc'eoyan."

He drew twelve lines one after the other on dzitna'oditi. "There," he said, "will be house spread out, house iridescent." When the sun set they come together at the house called spread out and iridescent. First, came the Mirage xactc'elti who formed a line at the back and then Mirage xactc'eoyan made the second line. Third were xactc'elti people and fourth xactc'eoyan; fifth were the holy people who live in mountains; sixth were the hunchback people, seventh were xactc'elti people, eighth grasshopper people.

"Now it will be," he said. Then it happened; the curtain was raised and someone said, "Why were we not notified?" "Your fee will be provided," he replied. "They will make a long line," he said. White shells came in, one after the other, in pairs. Turquoise came in one after the other, in pairs. Rings of haliotis came in one after the other, in pairs. Woven beads came in one after the other, in pairs. Then red shells were, and braided beads, white coyote blankets, black fabrics, figured fabric. These formed twelve lines one behind the other.

"Now we will begin xojondji," he said and drew out a sack of pollen. "Paint the house with it," he directed. Then in a sunwise circuit four timbers, one after the other, were made yellow with pollen. He called, "wεε," to Mirage xactc'elti, being in the last row. Then their leader began to sing. He intoned as follows:—

¹While she lies in this position she is kneaded and stretched into a beautiful shape.

Here hogans stand, good hogans. At the east good hogans, the hogans of xactc'elti stand.

Dawn their hogans made of stand,
 White corn made of their hogans stand.
 Soft goods of all kinds made of their hogans stand.
 Water from all sources made of their hogans stand.
 Good hogans.
 At the west their hogans stand.
 Good hogans.
 The hogans of xactc'eyan stand.
 Good hogans.
 Hogans made of yellow horizontal light stand.
 Good hogans.
 Hogans made of yellow corn.
 Good hogans.
 Hogans made of hard materials of all kinds stand.
 Hogans made of water's child stand.
 Good hogans.

When these two songs had been sung the one over whom they were singing said: "Why do you sing thus. Two men are lacking." The men in the twelve lines said they did not know who were lacking. "There is something you do not know about. With what shall I live forever? With what shall I have good fortune?"

"Very well," he replied. They added these two, long life and good fortune to the others. Then they began to sing. They sang twelve and then put two songs on top, making fourteen. By that time, day was breaking and grasshoppers began to sing. A woman's song was heard and when it was finished someone put a head in and said, "Why didn't you invite us?" "Your fee will provided," First Man replied. They found it was Dawn who had done this. Then they began to sing.

They are in line.
xactc'elti they are in line.
 All dressed in white moccasins they are in line.
 All dressed in white leggings they are in line.
 All dressed in white buckskins they are in line.
 All dressed in white eagle feathers they are in line.
 All dressed in bluebirds they are in line.
 Singing with their mouth with pleasing voices they are in line.
 Possessed of long life and good fortune they are in line.
 With good fortune in front of them they are in line.
 With good fortune behind them they are in line.

There were six songs all alike which are called dawn songs.

When four days had passed the girl said to her mother, "Something is flowing from me again, mother." "That is called kindzisa" her mother replied. They did the same way again. The holy people came from both sides. "We shall never be seen after this," xactc'elti said. They departed in all directions. xactc'eyan spoke: "If anyone says 'I saw xactc'eyatti I say he shall be killed.'" Sun spoke. "They shall not see me, because it would be bad luck if they saw me." On account of this the assemblage was dismissed. When one day had passed she said, "Something flows from me again." "That is called tedji'na'. It ceases after four days have passed. Because of that the flowing of a menstruating woman will cease in four days. She, menstruating, was lustful. She went to the top of a hill called *tondilkons*¹ and spread her thighs toward the rising sun so that the rays might enter her. Later in the day when the Sun reached the center of the sky where he feeds his horse at noon she went where the dripping water falls, and again, spread her thighs to let the water drop into her crotch. She did this repeatedly. Afterward she and her mother went down the mountain toward the south to a place where a grass (Sporobolus cryptandrus) was growing. Before they had finished preparing the seed they started back, leaving some still in a heap. It was nearly noon when they hastily returned.

"I will run back for that remaining in the pile," the girl said. "No, do not do that, my daughter." First Woman replied. "I will run and be back quickly," the girl said. "There are dangers there, many of those who eat people run about," her mother warned her. "No, mother, I will come back quickly with the threshed seeds. I also am not entirely ignorant.² I will be wary," the girl said. "All right then, go on, daughter," her mother replied.

The girl went for the seed and when she had threshed it all and was arranging her load she was surprised to find a white horse standing there. The bridle of the horse was white. The moccasins of the rider and all his clothing were white. The horse was standing on the air some two feet above the ground. The rider addressed her saying, "You will not accomplish it. Over there, when I rise spread out your thighs toward me. When I come up to the summit of the sky and arrive at (?) spread your legs at tondilkons that the water may drop into your crotch. You will accomplish nothing by those means. Let your father make a brush house toward the east and see what will happen." She was surprised to find it was Sun who had done this. While her head was turned he vanished.

¹This is a place so named on the east side of dzuba'odli.

²Meaning of magical protection.

She walked back and when she had returned she said, "Mother, I saw something. He was entirely white and his horse was all white. 'You will accomplish nothing that way. You have been spreading your thighs toward me there where I rise. When I have reached the middle of the sky where I lurch you spread your legs under the dripping water,' he said to me," she said. "Have you really been doing that?" First Woman asked. "I really did that," she replied.

First Man came home. "It seems your daughter saw someone," First Woman said to him. "The one she saw was dressed entirely in white, sitting a horse standing right up here, not on the ground, so your daughter said. 'You will accomplish nothing the way you are doing. You have been spreading your thighs toward me here where I come up. When I come to the middle of the sky you spread your thighs under the dripping water,' he said to her. 'I really do that,' your daughter says. 'Let your father build a brush shelter to the east before the door of the hogan. Let him rake up the ground. Let him put the chips in a pile. Put some boiled rush grass seeds in a vessel.' This is what your daughter says." "The holy ones have all gone away. They said no one would see them again," he replied. "Oh you are saying that for some reason," she retorted. "Build a brush shelter there, Old Man."

He built a brush shelter and swept the ground in front of the hogan door. He also made a pile of the bits of wood which were lying about. The sun set and it grew dark. He spread down a white blanket and put down a vessel of boiled food on one side of it. The girl sat on the right side and First Man on the left. The cooked food stood there in a vessel. When it was quite dark¹ First Man went away, but yolgaialed passed the night there. When it was daylight footprints were seen from the doorway on the right side. One (vessel) of the cooked food was gone. First Man returned saying, "How is it, my daughter?" "Father, there is one footprint on the right side in the doorway. The one vessel of the cooked food is gone too." When it was getting dark toward the east they two sat there again until it was quite dark. First Man came back saying, "How is it, my daughter? Nobody came. I said you were lying." "Just as it was light I perceived someone touched me. There are two footprints by the doorway and one dish of the cooked food is gone."

It was dark the second time and the two of them sat there again. When it was daylight First Man came back again. "How is it, my daughter?" he said. "I told you no one would come. I said you were lying. Why should the holy ones come when we live so poorly." "Oh, ¹Ten o'clock was mentioned as the time.

do not say that," she said. "Now let us look," First Woman said. The food was gone from a dish on the east side. There were footprints. "Go look, father," she said. "I felt him go away on this side at daybreak."

When it was night again they two sat there. At midnight First Man went away. He came back in the morning. The food was gone from the north side and there were four footprints. At dawn someone left me, I didn't see him but I woke up my crotch being wet."

On account of this the Navajo do not touch a woman for four nights after they are married. On the fourth night they have intercourse.

Four days passed. "Mother, at dawn something here was pulsating," she said. "Oh, daughter, you are pregnant. It is the moving of a baby you mean. That is the result of your having intercourse," her mother said to her. It was at dawn on the fourth day that the baby moved. The days were equivalent to months and because of that the baby moves after four months. Nine days after they had had intercourse the children (twins) were born. Just one day after their birth they two sat up. For other children it will be a year. After two days the two walked about. It will be two years for ordinary children. Ten days after they were born First Man made arrows for them and they hunted birds. Fifteen days after they were born they went to the summit of dzina'oditi. When they were strolling about Large-fly came to them and said, "My son's sons, why are you walking here? You were not born for anything connected with this place." He knows everything about this wide world of ours and he told them about it. "You two should go to your father. That one, the sun who moves there, is your father. Ask your mother four times who your father is and then tell her you are going to see your father. Speak to her once."

They ran back and asked, "Who is our father?" "Oh you are everybody's kin," she replied. After a while they said again, "Who is our father?" "Barrel-cactus was your father.¹ That is why your heads are bushy." When some time had again passed they asked the same question again. "Sitting-cactus was your father." When some time had passed again they said, "What were you saying? You are everybody's kin. You had no father. Barrel-cactus was your father. He had no father. Sitting-cactus was your father. He had no father. Now we will start away to visit our father. Sun is our father. Mother, grandmother, grandfather, we will come back to you in four days." They started away. When they were a short distance in front of the door they discovered a white rainbow. They stepped on that and traveled with it. When they arrived their bodies were moulded, their faces made white. "Now they will be given names," he said. They invited Mirage xactc'elti, Mirage xactc'eoγan, xactc'elti, xactc'eoγan, and, from the place called black hole in the rock, they invited xactc'ecjinnε. Sun came down. The two who were to be named stood in front. The elder he addressed as naiye'-nezγani and the younger as tobadj'ictcini. "Now make names for them," he said to them.

"Now you give a name," he said to xactc'ecjinne. "What you do he doesn't know (?)," he said. "He killed all the monsters. The elder will be named naiye'nezγani, the second because of what his mother did will be named tobadj'ictcini. Where will you two go?" he asked them. With a coal of the dark sky he made him black. With white clay he drew signs of a bow on him. This will ward off danger. He made tobadj'ictcini red with red earth and put on wide hair frame signs with white clay. By means of these they will be protected. "They will go where the rivers join," Sun said. "They will live at the center of the earth where there is a meadow. First Man and First Woman will live here where I rise, beyond where it is called 'narrow water'. yolgaiesdzan will go over here where I sit. She will live there." Sun said this and added, "She will take everything with her and be accompanied by all the people. She will give her attention to her children and to providing their food. It will be that way. Everywhere I go over the earth she will have charge of female rain. I myself will control the male rain. She will be in control of vegetation everywhere for the benefit of the people of the earth."

Water Coyote ran about over there on the other side. He stepped out first. After him came First Man and then First Woman. After came First Warrior.¹ They started toward the east and First Woman began to speak, saying bad things. When I think of anything, something bad will happen. There will be coughs when I think of something. I will cause different things by thinking badly. Coyote will know about it." She always was saying bad things.

"First Woman, you shall not talk. You shall not live. We have decided upon that," said Mirage xactc'elti and Mirage xactc'eoγan. "You must not talk for we will know about it," xactc'elti said.

"Now get ready yolgaiesdzan." They decorated her and she started away, accompanied by her twelve attendants. In front, went the males and behind them the females. Ahead of her was male rain and behind her female rain; in front dark cloud and behind dark mist; before her yellow cloud and behind her yellow mist; before her white cloud and behind her white mist.

She was decorated with all kinds of herbage and flowers wherever they grow. She went away with a white shell basket, a turquoise basket, an abalone basket, and jet basket. She rose up with everything. She went with them to the place called black water and is living there now.

When she had arrived she thought horses should exist for people.

I am yotgaisdzan. I am thinking of clothing spread out on there. A white shell horse lies in a white shell basket. I am thinking about. They lie in the pollen of flowers. Those who come to me will increase. Those that will not die lie in it.

POT WOMAN TEACHES WITCHCRAFT

They went to a place called Mountain of Mud. They made clay pots in which banatinte hid beads. He hid also a white shell cane, a turquoise cane, an abalone and a jet cane. A large woman of ki'ya'ani clan had a hogan there on a rock. At that place they killed a deer. At first the woman said nothing. Then with her hand on her side she spoke. Then the ki'ya'ani from ki'ya'a moved back, taking the snake which was their pet. It was at the place where the streams unite at the south where the cañons come up near where the Ute live.

The Ute made war on the Navajo. "In some days we will come back to fight," they said. At the place where the rock stands high on top they placed stones in a circle and killed them. One was called tseke. The Mexican captives became the clan now called Mexican (nakaidine).

There were twelve men who were offended because their enemies had seduced their wives. The four offenders who were Mexican were killed by the Ute. Again they came to fight. Each time Mexicans were killed. Eleven were killed. Only one was left. He was called latc'obai. He had only one sister. She became ill. In vain he made medicine for her. She died. Her husband married again very soon. Then latc'obai came to gamble with his brother-in-law. He had his bow in his hand and as he walked toward the sun he made motions as if shooting as he pronounced magic words. He shot him between the shoulders. Then the people ran after him. As he ran with his bow he shot all his arrows. He had four arrows in his quiver which was hanging from his belt and he shot all of them. Just as they overtook him, he took down another quiver containing four arrows and shot them. This he did four times. When they were all gone he sang, "Now I shall die," as he ran toward the big peaks.

After four years he was seen again. "Come back to us and be our chief. What is the use of running away?" they said to him. He went toward them, but not very close. He heard there was a sing. He came up to an old woman pot who was living alone. "Why did they kill all my people, grandmother?" he said. The woman said, "Something will happen, grandson; witchcraft this way, witchcraft that way. That man knows how to turn a bear track into a coyote who knows how to talk. They killed his brother's wife." "What is its medicine?" "I have medicine for it. Let a girl cut open the gall bladder of a live blue lizard and take out the gall. When the lizard dies the girl will die also. Let a man cut the belly of a long lizard and take out its gall. Let him too die quickly. Then take the gall of a hawk and that of a quadruped, break with them the flower of the mistletoe and when it is frozen ask the two to let you help them plant corn. Let all bring cooking vessels. They will have a hard time." "All right, grandmother, I will do as you say."

He ground corn for her and fed her. She ate. He took off her beads and put earrings in her ears. "Now you will be dressed the way I am dressed when you go. Now I will hit you." "All right, my grandson."

Then he hit her behind the head and started away. The singers came home. He tried to kill them. They chased him. He ran, they knew not where. Then, for many years, he prepared what the old woman had taught him. He captured a Pueblo girl and a Pueblo boy. He caught a blue lizard and instructed the girl to cut its belly. He caught a long lizard for the boy and it died. He did all old Pot Woman had told him. He dressed himself. A man spoke. "Why do you do all those things. We are sorry for you. Come back to us. Be our chief." "All right, I will. I ask something great of you. Carry all your little pot children along with you."

Then they did that. The pots were placed in a line. He took up a six-foot stick. He put it into the vessels as he went about dancing. Then he made a speech to the people. "You said I should be your chief. Now you eat."

They ate. Then soon they began to itch. One fell backward. Then they ran back to their homes. They were bad warlike people. He killed them all. Again they lost him. They tracked him to the junction of the Las Animas and San Juan rivers. Then they walked to where Mancos Creek flows into the San Juan and tracked him again. It had rained on the tracks some days before. Then they slept. While they were watching the sun rose. Just at midday he climbed down beyond where a rock stands up. He went down Mancos Creek. They ran so far and lay down and watched. He came up. On the hill he turned around. They did not recognize him. His hair was cut on top. They could not tell where his face was. He had painted his face red and the back of his head looked the same. He started back. They thought he had gone in and they lay down to watch again. He came back again. Then he went downstream, digging for beaver. The soles of his feet were brown. They seized him by his feet. Two others held him at the head. "xa xaa," he said, "Today I must die. I will come up by myself." "Then let him do it. Never mind him," they said.

So they tied half of him with a rope. Four of them held him on each side by the arms. Six held him. They cut him in two by splitting. They cut off his head. His head fell off. Tears ran down his face. Then he fell over. Then they started off having left pounded soapweed where he had climbed.

WIZARD STORY

Yellow was thinking about something. White was with him. He killed people there. There was a hard time. At hojoñ he shot arrows in four directions. When he shot the first time there was white corn, the second time, blue corn, the third, yellow, and the fourth, brown spotted corn of all kinds. They came to a place for a garden. They planted. They planted the blue corn that had been shot. It grew. Yellow had not put the yellow corn there, so there was no yellow corn. Yellow was sad about it. They planted the brown corn there. Silently Yellow walked around, thinking sadly, "They say very bad things of me. They even say I am dead. I am grieving to death. Who will possess my property after I am gone?"

He thought, "I will say, 'I will divide all my property among you. Let all the people who live here come together. Maybe I will give you my things. What do you say?'" "Yes, yes," they said. He led them off and lined them up. He selected some of the people. He walked a little way and took a curved oak stick. He pried deep under a rock. He took out a yucca rope and tied it on the rock. He laid hoops of oak on the rock and drew a line with the yucca about five inches long in the center. "Now go over there," he ordered. The stones lay in a circle. Then he threw the rope which had been fastened to the ledge rock down to a very great depth. When it reached the ground he said a prayer. He turned back. He stepped in the circles and arrived at the bottom of the curved rock where the stones lay in a circle. Then the people heard him pray. He put on a large mask of Talking God. He took an ear of perfectly kernalled white corn and one of yellow. "You think I am going to give you these goods," he said to them. He told them he would do something wonderful. He had put on the mask so as to do something terrible. His companion, who was called "White" lined up the people so that Yellow stood in the middle. He held ears of corn up toward him. The people stood there. "Once more look. There will be eight. I guess it is twelve," he said as he ran down from above wearing the mask.¹ Every time he said eight he meant eight years and when he said twelve he meant twelve years. The people planted, but just before the corn was ripe, it froze. A second time the crop was burned. A third time it did not sprout. They planted four times in vain. There was no rain, no vegetation, no food. Eight years from that time they stole children from each other and ate them. But in twelve years it became a little better. Then it rained again and vegetation and corn grew. Thus the man named Yellow had revenged himself.

¹The man died because he spoke while he was wearing the mask, but whatever he said would come true.

GAME STORY

There was a man who, while playing the hoop game and the game of seven wooden dice, lost all his property, including a very good house. He also lost the beads that belonged to his niece. Because of this his brothers resolved to kill him. A necklace of mixed beads was hanging in the center of the house. The niece told her uncle he might wager that also. "All right, niece," he replied, and took the white shell, the turquoise, the abalone, the coral, the jet; he took five of them off one by one. He also provided himself with specular iron ore, pollen of larkspur and of cat-tails. With these he walked away to the corn pits which were full. From these he took one ear each of the five colors. He patted these together until they were small. "Well, little mother," he said to his niece, "they speak of killing me. It may be you and I will see each other again. Goodbye."

Then he put a tree into the water with himself (inside of it). He floated in the tree down where the stream enters the Colorado River. He got out of the tree there and walked along the shore. He felt lonesome there. He planted the corn he had brought with him in the form of a cross, putting the seed in one by one. Each stalk had two ears projecting opposite each other. There were twelve stalks with two ears each.

I hear there were twelve stalks with ears opposite each other. I hear on Black Mountain there were ears projecting on either side. I hear the male deer I kill will like me.

He stayed there four years and then started to return to his home. After many days he got back, arriving early in the morning at his home which was called te'ineisk'it. He went to the corn storage pits, but they were entirely empty. He put four ears in them and blew on them four times. After that he went where his niece was sitting. They were having a famine. "Prepare food for me, my little mother," he said to her. "There is none," she replied. "Four days after you left the corn was all gone. I do not know how it happened." She sat there crying. "I cannot cook food for you, my uncle." "Go and get something," he said again. "Do not say that, uncle, there is none, none." When they had spoken to each other four times she went to the pits.

When she got there the pits were full. "Thanks, uncle," she called as she ran back with the corn. The girl then ran to the men and told them her uncle had come and that the corn pits were full again.

"Welcome," they said, when they came in and they they embraced him. "You are the only one, younger brother. In the future we will not speak evil of you. Something has happened to the game animals. We hunt in vain."

Wondering what had happened the returned brother hunted for days in vain. One day when he was hunting he went to the top of te'inesgit. Below a cliff he saw a deer standing. He ran around and crept up where the deer had been, but it had vanished. He examined the ground, but the soil had not been disturbed. The next day he climbed the mountain again and there the deer stood again. This time he walked directly toward it trying to keep it in sight; but where it had been standing there was nothing but some deer dung. A little distance from where he stood there had been a spruce tree, but when he turned his head away and then looked in that direction again xactc'eyatti stood there. "What is it, grandchild?" he asked. "A deer which was standing right there has vanished," he replied. "Have you white shell, grandson?" "I have them all, grandfather." "My grandson has everything. We will do it," xactc'eyatti said.

He found the door fronts were darkness, daylight, the moon, and the sun. Inside xactc'eyatti and xactc'ejinne were sitting on either side, facing each other. "Well, go on, my grandson," xactc'eyatti said. He took steps on the right side of the house four times, blowing as he did so, and four footprints appeared. He discovered that xactc'eyatti had pets which he kept far in the interior. He heard from inside someone say, "Ho, I smell earth people. The polite master has brought in a human being." "Do not say that; he has everything," xactc'eyatti said. Back of the fire a male deer was lying. On him lay a feathered arrow with a red shaft. It had just been pulled out.

The man took a seat in the center. He put down one each of white shell, turquoise, coral, abalone, jet, specular iron ore, blue pollen, cat-tail pollen, and then covered them with a blanket. He stepped over these four times and they became a great heap.

xactc'eyatti was sorrowful and said, "I do not think we can give you a fair equivalent." He found out afterward that he stayed there in the house of the game animals four days. xactc'eyatti and xactc'ejinne distributed the precious objects. They gave each of those present fifteen pieces, then thirteen, then nine, then seven, then five, then three, and all had been given out.

This is the way deer should be skinned. Break the legs here at the wrist joint, but let them hang by the tendons. Leave the skin on the nose and lips. Draw the skin carefully from under the eyes. Do not cut through the bladder. Turn the hide back to the hips. If you do this way you will always kill game. "Put the head toward the center, but do not let the eyes burn or the teeth. You must not cook it by burying it in the ashes. Game animals must not be thrown away. Sickness will result if you do not observe these things. If the teeth are burned the hunter's teeth will hurt. You earth people will have a cure for it, grandson," he told him.

He had everything prepared. "What did you come for, grandson?" Small whirlwind told him that on that side were images of the game animals standing side by side. On the east side was the paunch of an animal in which were deer songs. The man pointed to these. xactc'eyalti looked down and said, "All right, grandson. It was for these you came."

Being xactc'eyalti I came up.

To the abode of the deer I came up.

To the door post of darkness I came up.

To the door post of daylight I came up.

To the door post of moon I came up.

To the door post of sun I came up.

To the place where xactc'eyalti with xactc'ejin sat facing each other, I came up.

To where the black bow and the feathered arrows with red shaft lie across each other, I came up.

Over there they lie across each other, red with the mouth blood of a male deer.

Over there the deer I killed likes me.

He sang only one deer song.

They were here when I was hunting them in vain he thought to himself. "Shoot them in the brush," he told him. This is where they are.

I being xactc'eyalti.

On the trail to the top of Black Mountain,

On the trail among the flowers,

Male deer are there,

The pollen of herbs I will put in its mouth,

The male deer steps along in the dew of the vegetation.

I kill him but he likes me.

One was there. He shot into the brush and a deer rolled over with the arrow in him. He shot into another kind of brush and a fawn rolled over with the arrow in him. He shot into another kind of brush and a yearling rolled over with the arrow.

"I have done something important," he thought to himself as he ran back. They found he had killed them all. That is why when they get away we track them.

There are very many game songs. If one does not know them he does not hunt. We are afraid about these things because they are pets of xactc'eyalti.

THE CREATION OF THE HORSE

Something was spread over it. It moved and became alive. It whimpered. Woman-who-changes began to sing:—

Changing Woman I am, I hear.
In the center of my house behind the fire, I hear.
Sitting on jewels spread wide, I hear.
In a jet basket, in a jet house, there now it lies.
Vegetation with its dew in it, it lies.
Over there,
It increases, not hurting the house now with it it lies,
inside it lies.

Its feet were made of mirage. They say that because a horse's feet have stripes. Its gait was a rainbow, its bridle of sun strings. Its heart was made of red stone. Its intestines were made of water of all kinds, its tail of black rain. Its mane was a cloud with a little rain. Distant lightning composed its ears. A big spreading twinkling star formed its eye and striped its face. Its lower legs were white. At night it gives light in front because its face was made of vegetation. Large beads formed its lips; white shell, its teeth, so they would not wear out quickly. A black flute was put into its mouth for a trumpet. Its belly was made of dawn, one side white, one side black. That is why it is called "half white."

A white-shell basket stood there. In it was the water of a mare's afterbirth. A turquoise basket stood there. It contained the water of the afterbirth. An abalone basket full of the eggs of various birds stood there. A jet basket with eggs stood there. The baskets stand for quadrupeds, the eggs for birds. Now as Changing-woman began to sing the animals came up to taste. The horse tasted twice; hence mares sometimes give birth to twins. One ran back without tasting. Four times, he ran up and back again. The last time he said, "Sh!" and did not taste. "She will not give birth. Long-ears (Mule) she will be called," said Changing-Woman. The others tasted the eggs from the different places. Hence there are many feathered people. Because they tasted the eggs in the abalone and jet baskets many are black.

WANDERINGS OF THE NAVAJO

yolgaiesdzan asked Mirage xact'e'lti and Mirage xact'e'oyan to go back toward the east and investigate. They started back and came in turn to White Shell Mountain, Turquoise Mountain, Abalone Mountain, and to Jet Mountain. When they came to the top xact'e'lti began to sing. As they came to the top of White Shell Mountain they called greetings to the distant mountains.

 Greetings far away sticks up.

They came with a rainbow to the summit of one mountain which was lying there. Next they came to the summit of Turquoise Mountain. A beautiful mountain stood there, it projected beautifully. Now it stood up beautifully. They came to Abalone Mountain. Now its head could be seen. Behold, it is that one. Very holy it sticks up. Now being holy with you it stands up.

Here they come. Jet mountain on its top they arrived. Look we are going to that one. That is the one.

I being xactc'elti I am going to it.
 I am going to sisnadjinne.
 I am going to White Shell Mountain.
 I am going to mountain peak.
 I am going to long life and good fortune,
 I am going to it.
 I being xactc'elti am going to it.
 I am going to Mount Taylor.
 I am going to mountain peak.
 I am going to long life and good fortune.
 I am going to it.
 I being xactc'elti I am going to it.
 I am going to San Francisco Peaks.
 I am going to Abalone Mountain
 I am going to mountain peak.
 I am going to long life and good fortune.
 I am going to it.
 I being xactc'elti I am going to it.
 I am going toward La Plata Mountain.
 I am going toward Jet Mountain.
 I am going toward mountain peak.
 I am going toward long life and good fortune.
 I am going toward it.
 I being xactc'elti I am going toward it.
 I go toward Huerfano Mountain.
 I go toward soft goods mountain.
 I go toward mountain peak.
 I go toward long life and good fortune.
 I go toward it.
 I being xactc'elti I am going toward it.
 I am going toward tc'ol'i.
 I am going to the mountain of jewels.
 I am going to the mountain peak.
 I am going to long life and good fortune.

I am going toward it.
 Good fortune before me.
 Good fortune behind me.
 Good fortune below me.
 Good fortune above me.
 Good fortune all around me.
 I go toward it with good fortune.
 My speech being fortunate I go toward it

They passed around the bases of these four mountains and as they passed under it (he sang):—

The mountain, I who came to it, sisnadjin.
 I arrive at its summit.
 The mountain, I who came to it, Mount Taylor
 I arrive at its summit.
 It is well with me.
 It is well with me.
 I arrive at the summit of San Francisco Peaks.
 Now, I who start back, I arrive.
 At the summit La Plata Mountain.
 Now I start back,
 Now I start back,
 I arrive at the summit of Huerfano.
 I arrive at the summit of tc'ol'i.
 I, the one returning, I arrive
 Now I am the one who sits down on the shores of White Shell Woman.

“How is it over there?” “It is beautiful.” “Now, it is beautiful, my children,” yotgaiesdzan said. “Flowers are spread everywhere. Strong springs of water flow up out of the earth. My children shall live by use of them.”

Here where the mountain lies, soft goods mountain, rain mountain, jewels mountain, pollen mountain, the one that is so named will lie. There will be many Navajo living on either side of it.

Now, this white shell mountain lies. Inside of it is spotted wind. In young eagle's mouth thunder will first sound. Vegetation will come to life. Spotted wind will move it with itself. The vegetation will be spotted toward it. Blue wind will make it move inside of Turquoise Mountain. Blue vegetation will appear.

Black wind is inside of Abalone Mountain. The vegetation will come to life. Black vegetation will appear.

Yellow wind is in the mountain of jet. It will stir with life. The flowers will wake up. Some of them will be red, some white, some blue. Flowers of all kinds will be seen. It will thunder there four times. First it will thunder as our bear will wake up. He travels with the aid of his belly. He will stretch himself. He will bring back the news that tc'act'ezε is springing up. "Now they are all coming," he will say. Then those that fly, blue bird, Say's phoebe, buzzard, dove, crane, all will come. She ground up white shell mixed with corn of all colors. She rubbed her breast in this manner. A piece so large (match stick) fell down. She rolled this up in a black cloud. She stepped over it four times (singing).¹

The two got up looking just like persons. "Go toward the south, grandchildren," she said. "I have some grandchildren living there." She was referring to the twelve persons. There, by the shore of the ocean was a hogan. Children who played on the seashore came to her there. They played with the shells which the waves left. yotgaisdzan sent word to the twelve persons and when they came she told them that she did not like to have the children play with these shells for they were her food. When the twelve returned they said: "Your grandmother sends word to you that she likes the white shells, that they are her food. She says you are not to pick them up. You will live over yonder by Black Mountain."

There they moved to a mountain named darkness. There according to their grandmother's plan they picked up a bear so large. It became their pet. At a mountain which will be named yellow mountain they found a panther. By the will of their grandmother the bear and panther grew up by magic. Both were males. They grew in four days, which became four years.

She summoned the twelve persons and told them that she had not made her grandchildren to live in that place. The messengers came back and said, "Your grandmother asks that the men named ba'ni, baitnikqse, banatint and gicdo should come to her." They went and then she said to them, "I did not make my grandchildren to live in this country. Go to the Navajo country. The Navajo country is where rain mountain lies. You go beyond where the mountain named White Shell Mountain lies, beyond where the mountain called Turquoise Mountain lies, beyond where the mountain called Abalone Mountain lies, beyond where the mountain called Jet Mountain lies. It will take you four days to go there. Then there will be a mountain sticking up in the distance. It is called White Face Mountain. You go on past that toward the north. When you have climbed one mountain just a little can be seen of a mountain there which is called crescent. Right under it you will cross a stream. Right across that lies a mountain which is called Black. At one end of this mountain is a flat and on it stands a mountain called balok'ai.

¹The narrator said to me. "Not this song, I live by means of it. I live with it."

You go across that. On the other side, in this direction, a mountain stands, below which you should go. Over this way will be a mountain called Brushy Mountain. You will pass on the south side of that. There some Navajo are living. You will live there by Rain Mountain." When she had said this she went back and picked up a string with four shells which she had lying in water. Then she went this way (south) into a room and came back in the same way with a string. Then she went west and brought back a string on which were four (beads). Next she went north and the same way brought back a string. She went again into a room at the east and came back with a cane of white shells. She went into a room to the south and brought out a turquoise cane. She went into the west room and brought a cane of abalone shell. She went next to the north room and came back with a cane of jet.

"When you are about to die of thirst set one of these in the ground and rotate it sunwise and water will flow out." She repeated these directions for each of the four canes, using the same words. Then she gave them the four bags in each of which was a string. "You are not to open these until after four days when you will have passed beyond the four mountains and then you may untie them," she said. (You shall not hear the songs with which they were to be opened.)

They started out and spent the night just beyond the mountain of white shell. Beyond the mountain of turquoise they slept the second night. The bags they were carrying became heavy, but they went on. They slept the third night beyond the mountain of abalone. Those beads became very heavy. They went on beyond the mountain of jet. The bags which they were carrying on their backs were very heavy. They camped there. The chief named ba'ni said, "Now, you may open the bags." They opened them and the beads had increased and there were very many of them. He distributed them among the people and then the load each carried was very light.

When it was day, they did not know which way to go. They sat down on a hill and discussed the matter. "That mountain sticking up there may be White Face Mountain. We should go that way." They started away toward the north. They saw where someone had walked along. "My pet, it seems someone has been walking here," the chief said to the bear. The bear looked at the place and stretched himself. "We will see who it is, my pet," he said and they stopped where there was a cliff. The sun was setting. "What shall we drink?" baitnikqse asked. ba'ni replied, "You shall use this when thirst overcomes you," she told us." He took up the white shell cane and turned it sunwise. Water sprang up, they drank, and spent the night there.

ba'ni' the chief said, "We may see someone today. There are tracks here." As they were going down they saw there was much corn growing in the cañon bottom. The corn was in tassel. They camped there. One of the men looked about. There was no one to be seen, but a hogan stood there. Two persons went inside and then stood in the doorway. Behind them two others came, one was a man and one was a woman. The hogan was full. They discovered that Arrow People lived there and they greeted them as relatives. "Where are you from?" they asked the travelers. "We are from our grandmother's shore. We are going to the Navajo country," they replied. "Stay here and we will get acquainted with each other," the Arrow People said. "You may eat the food which has ripened here." Two of the messengers came back. "Camp here," they said to us, "and eat what has ripened." "All right," he replied. Some of them went among them and came back with corn. It grew dark and the single men and single women found partners and lay with them. The people of that place gave corn and the travelers gave beads as marriage gifts.

They remained there exchanging hospitality. They joined in rabbit hunts by surrounding them. They also hunted mountain sheep. They removed the hair from the skins which they softened and made into sacks. Others made shirts for themselves.

Their pet panther lay on the piled up loads eating like a cat. The bear sat in a low place where he was fed. "We shall soon move on, my pet," ba'ni' said to the bear. When it was dark ba'ni' made a speech, "Tomorrow you will get ready to go on. Grind the corn they have given you and prepare provisions for the journey."

The Arrow people built a fire in their sweathouse. "Come to the sweathouse, come to the sweathouse, come to the sweathouse," they called. The four chiefs, ba'ni', baitnikqse, banatint, and gicdo went there and went into the sweathouse. The curtain was lowered. "Yes," said ba'ni', "My sons-in-law and my daughters-in-law seem to like each other. We are starting off. We are going where Rain Mountain lies, as we were told to do by our grandmother. We shall go in two days. Tomorrow we shall spend preparing the corn you gave us." The Arrow People said nothing. They said to each other. "Our sons-in-law, our daughters-in-law did not become friends for just one day." The Arrow People went out of the sweathouse, put dust on themselves, dressed, and went home. The others too went home. Nothing was heard from the hogan for two days. Afterwards they found out the Arrow People had said, "They are traveling with good women and many beads. We will kill all the men and the women will be ours." Then the travelers started on leaving behind the men who had married their women and also the women who had married their men. They camped and passed the night. When it was dark the second night the bear went toward the south, pulled up young spruce trees and put them across each other. He sat down on top of them. ba'ni' said, "n n n sos sos sos. I guess my pet is giving us a message about things which are happening behind us that we do not know about. After a little while the bear began singing bear songs.

My hogan,
I being a whirlwind,
My hogan,
I being a gray bear,
Lightning strikes from my hogan,
There is danger from my hogan,
All are afraid of my hogan.
I am of long life of whom they are afraid.
hahinyi hi'
I blow my breath out.

Singing thus, his songs were made. He sang ten songs there. Just as it was becoming light a little they again heard some songs:—

They are afraid of my black face.
I am a whirlwind.
They are afraid of me.
I am a gray bear.
They are afraid of my black face.
It lightens from my black face.
They are afraid of the danger issuing from my black face.
I am long life, they are afraid.

When he had sung two songs like this he got up, putting up his hand, he threw himself over backward and ran away.

They found Arrow People had circled around them in order to kill them. The bear had run around them four times and had chased them to a hill which stood there. ba'ni' spoke, saying, "My pet come here." One of the Arrow People spoke, saying, "We were sorry and were coming after you." "No, no," ba'ni' replied. "You would have killed us if my pet had not run around you four times. If you were sorry for us why did you come at night. Why didn't you come in the daytime? You had better go back before you get torn up." "Well, some time I will come after you," the Arrow men said. "Well, come in the daytime so we will recognize you," ba'ni' said. It was for this reason they had taken the bear.

They started off and traveled, I do not know how many days.

After a short day's travel they camped for the night. The provisions they had been carrying were all gone. Hunger was killing them. They built a brush shelter and piled up the loads they had carried. Panther was lying on top of them. "Do something for us, my pet. There is nothing here for us to eat." Panther stepped down, stretched, gaped, curled up his tongue, and started away. He went away and soon came back and lay down again on the loads. He licked his feet and then his lips were red. "My pet has killed something," he said. They followed his tracks back and found a young antelope lying dead. He had been gashed open along his side. He brought this meat back. They ate it and were saved. They then started on. Then panther went off by himself. He soon came back and his front paw was bloody. Two men followed his tracks back and found he had killed two antelopes. They prepared food for themselves and traveled on. They camped again and the panther got up by himself. He soon returned and his jaw was bloody. A party of men followed his tracks back and found he had killed three antelope. They prepared a meal and went on again. When the sun was about here (nearly down), they stopped for the day and made camp. The panther went off and soon came back. When they followed back on his tracks they found four large antelope lying dead. The panther had eaten the intestines of each. The men came back bringing much meat. Ba'ni' directed them to roast the meat and make it into pemmican, so that it would not be so heavy. It was for this reason they had taken the panther. They were carrying out the intention of Yotgaisdzan. When they had made the pemmican, they started off carrying it. They came to Navajo Mountain. "This is the mountain she told us not to climb, but to cross the ford at its base." When they came there they found a bank or hill and water beyond flowing here and there. "That is the place," they said and they crossed the ford.

"We will stop here and eat, my children," ba'ni' said. They built a fire there. They saw something black over there where they had come down. "Those married men have come after us," ba'ni' said. One man went down to the river bank and told them the way to cross. "We were sorry and came after you," they were saying as they embraced each other. (At that time we didn't shake hands.) Those who came they found were not the husbands who had remained behind.

"Well, if you are sorry about being separated from us we will be kinsmen from henceforth." Just as they were starting to eat there was something black over there. One man went back and shouted to them telling them where to cross. They found they had come right from the shore of yolgaiesdzan. "She told us to follow your tracks." They were carrying a large snake on their backs. They had it to kill animals for them. They carried pollen for its food. "Your pets are the bear and panther. Ours is the snake. We will be all one clan." "All right," the others said. "Now being all one clan we will travel in front." They came to a place called Much Wool where they stayed for a year. During the year they stayed there they lived on mountain sheep. They piled up the wool from these sheep about the hogan and in that way the place took its name.

"When it is spring and the ground is yellow she told us to go up on this mountain called Black Mountain." The bear began to work again. He went ahead of the people and dug out tc'act'ezε with his paws. He also dug out wild onions. These served the people as their food when they arrived. They camped there and wondered where they could get water. "You have a cane, bailnikqse," they said. He stuck the turquoise cane into the ground and twisted it twice. The water flowed out and they ate their food with it. They slept there that night and when it was light, they went on, arriving at a place called Skunk Bush Spring. They went toward a place called Where-two-stars-lie, close by where they got lost, and came to the edge of Cañon de Chelly. They arrived where the rocks join and the water flows. There was much wide grass there and trees covered the top. They were following each other by this place. When someone called out "Wait," they stopped and said, "This woman has given out we will remain here. Go on." The kiya'ani, went on. The others remained at the place called tsint'oik'a. A strange man came there. They found he was a tatcini. The others slept at tseiidji'dε and early in the morning started on again. "Wait, a woman has given out." They found she had a husband. "Go on," ba'ni said. "Take care of my son-in-law and my daughter-in-law."

The pair went to the place called totso and the clan totsoni are descended from them. There are now many of the totsoni clan. The others went on. At a place called tsebasozolleige he stuck the abalone cane into the ground and twisted it. Abundant salt water sprang up. They drank the water and ate their meal. "Yes that mountain to which we have come is the one called Brushy Mountain. We do not go toward the South," ba'ni said. "No, this place does not look like the right place. The one we went by has a mountain projecting horizontally as she told us," ba'ni said. He put the white shell cane and the turquoise cane into the ground and water flowed up at both places. "Springs-opposite-each-other' this place will be called," he said. They ate a meal there and then started back toward the south. They went up over hard ground. There was the place they had set out from. They unloaded on the other side where there was a sharp point. Those points came to be called kinniobiji. The one they had come up was called basta.

There is a place called large "Cottonwood-tree-stands" beneath which water flows much spread out. The Navajo stopped here and planted corn. Red silk appeared on the corn and they recalled the directions they had received from yotgaiesdzan before they left her. She had told them to gather the ears low down on the stalks, husk them, and when they put them in the water to say, "Let there be frequent rains." "Put them in a small pot to cook. Do not fail to do this," their grandmother had told them.

Growing children went for the ears of corn and when they put them in the pot they said, "Let there be showers here." The next day four children, two boys and two girls, went for more corn. They did not come back at once. At midday just two of the children came back, saying they had been playing hide-and-peek, in pairs, in the corn. They failed to find the other pair and when they followed the footprints to a place where there was sand the tracks ceased. A boy and girl were missing. Some of the people went there to investigate and came back saying that what the children had reported was true. They wondered what had happened to the vanished pair and thought it possible they had gone to their grandmother's place in the west.

Four days later he (the chief) sent two children to get some young ears telling them to come back quickly. They came back very soon, saying the lost children had returned and were sitting in the field. "They told us to come back and tell you they had been to our grandmother's place. They told us to get some mountain mahogany from the east, some Mormon tea from the south, some cedar from the west, some piñon from the north, and put them up in this manner. Then, they said, you were to get some sand from the garden and spread it down and stand up some brush on it in four concentric circles. When this is arranged they said their grandmother had told them to bathe on it. That is what the two sitting there told us. They arranged this according to the directions and then the two came there and washed. The boy dried himself with white cornmeal and the girl with yellow cornmeal. After this they told their story.

"While we were hiding from each other two persons were standing there. They were xactc'elti and xactc'eoyan. 'Come' our grandmother yolgaiesdzan said to us. Something white came to be spread near us. We felt nothing, but it alighted with us on the summit of tc'ocgai and then the top of the mountain called tsibel'qi. There they washed us the way you have just done. Next we were taken to the summit of the jet mountain and then were conveyed to our grandmother's doorway. When we went in, our grandmother lay curled up, nearly killed by old age. She got up and walked with a cane of white shell to a room to the east. She came out again somewhat stronger. She then went into the south room, walking with a cane of turquoise. She came back walking by herself unaided.

"She went next without a cane into the room at the west. She came out a young woman. She went into the north room and came out a girl, so handsome, we were abashed. 'You came here within my view, my grandchildren,' she said to us. 'You went away without songs.' She began to sing and taught us the songs." When they had learned the songs they sang them. (I do not know those songs. I know the horse songs.) They found they had been there four days.

"Some of the songs I will not teach you. My grandchildren who live over there will teach you those. Do not forget those I have taught you. The day you forget them will be the last, there will be no other days.' This is what our grandmother told us. Then two of the twelve people who live there came and began to sing the horse songs. We learned them. We were brought back to the summit of the mountain of jet, to the top of tsibel'qi, to the summit of tc'ocgai, and then to the garden. We did not sleep last night. This grass on which we washed will be good. It will cause the people to increase, our grandmother told us."

Fall came and the Navajo camped across from kiya'a and lived there. During that time someone came up to the camp and reported the people on Red Mountain were being constantly defeated by their enemies. He said he was sent as a messenger to ask the loan of the bear which the people who came from their grandmother had for a pet. They wanted to have the bear to fight with. ba'ni' who was the caretaker of the bear, said, "All right, in five days we will come." When the fifth day came they started to war. When it was dark the party stopped. ba'ni' addressing his bear spoke as follows: "My pet, the people who live at Red Mountain are being beaten all the time by their enemies. We are going there to war." The bear went toward the south, pulled up some young spruce trees, and put them across each other. He sat on these and when it was very dark they heard songs:—

Consider me.
I am naiye'nezvani.
Consider me, my moccasins being of black obsidian.
Consider me, my leggings being of black obsidian.
Consider me, black obsidian hangs down from my sides at four places.
Lightning strokes shoot out from me four times.
Where they go very bad talk kills you.
Over there the heads are bound in death.
Long life, I am the one they are afraid of.
Consider me.

When it was light, the war party attacked. The scouts helped them to go across the prairie. Song:—

I have become the heat mirage.
Toward the east I have become the black mirage with points projecting upward.
(Eight songs similar to the above.)

They crossed the prairie without being seen, due to the darkness caused by heat mirage. They camped at sundown and when it was good and dark the bear sat as before. He put young spruces across each other and songs were heard again. The bear was singing:—

Big black bear.
My moccasins are black obsidian.
My leggings are black obsidian.
My shirt is black obsidian.
I am girded with a gray arrowsnake.
Black snakes project from my head.
With zigzag lightning projecting from the ends of my feet I step.
With zigzag lightning streaming out from my knees I step.
With zigzag lightning streaming out from the tips of my fingers I work my hands.
With zigzag lightning streaming out from the tip of my tongue I speak.
Now a disc of pollen rests on the crown of my head.
Gray arrow snakes and rattlesnakes eat it.
Black obsidian and zigzag lightning streams out from me in four ways.
Where they strike the earth, bad things bad talk does not like it.
It causes the missiles to spread out.
Long life, something frightful I am.
Now I am.

It was light and they got up. So far the bear had walked and then he began to sing:—

Now we are getting ready to fight,
I, where I walk is danger.
I am naiye'nezvani.
Where I walk is dangerous.
Where I walk with moccasins of black obsidian it is dangerous.
Where I walk with leggings of black obsidian it is dangerous.
Where I walk with a headdress of black obsidian it is dangerous.

Black obsidian with zigzag lightning spreads out from me in four directions.
 Where it strikes the earth bad things and bad talk.
 Long life being one that causes fear I walk.
 Where I walk is dangerous.

Then there were two songs, not long ones, and he ran up the mountain and ran around them four times and took their hearts out of them. All bloody, they lay side by side. They took the scalps. The bear himself had killed them all. They started back home and passed a hill that stands there.

The bear stood up like a man, in his right hand he held a piece of dzitdilgesi and tc'ejí with a red male arrowhead. In his left hand he held v'onastasi, toikal, and a red female arrowhead. Then he moved his hands across each other in four places. He made a curve four times. Speaking as if he were naiye'nezvani, he made four curves. Speaking like tobadjictini, he made four straight lines.

Speaking as if he were naiye'nezvani, he made four curved lines. Speaking like tobadjictini he made four straight lines. Then he moved his hands across each other in four places. He then stuck into the ground the branches of plants and the arrowhead he had in his hand. He did the same way with what he had in his left hand. He then moved over these things and began to sing.

I make a mark they won't cross it.
naiye'nezvani I am, they won't cross it
 Black obsidian my moccasins they won't cross it.
 Black obsidian my leggings they won't cross it
 Black obsidian my shirt they won't cross it
 Black obsidian four times my sides hang down
 Black obsidian my headdress.
 Black obsidian zigzag lightning darts four times from me stream out
 Where it goes dangerous missiles will be scattered
 I make a mark they won't cross
 I come back with lightning streaming out from me in four places.
 I come back, dangerous things and missiles being scattered.

There were six songs here. Then they came to a hill that stood there where he did exactly the same way. He made the lines again, sang six songs, and the party passed over the line again. When they had nearly returned he sang as follows:—

(?) they stand
naiye'nezvani
 With moccasins of black obsidian.
 With leggings of black obsidian.
 With shirt of black obsidian.
 With staffs of black obsidian hanging in four places.

With headdress of black obsidian.
 Black obsidian and lightning.
 Shooting out from me in four directions.
 Bad talk.
 Missiles fly away from me.
 Long life and one to be feared.
 Now I am.

He sang six songs and the party all passed ahead of him. Again they heard songs.

There is danger where I move my feet.
 I am whirlwind. There is danger when I move my feet.
 I am a gray bear.
 When I walk, where I step lightning flies from me.
 Where I walk, one to be feared.
 Where I walk long life.
 One to be feared I am.
 There is danger where I walk.

He did that because the wind told him to. There were eight songs. (There will be one more. I am tired.) When they came to the hogan from which they had seen (?) he began to sing.

It moved with me, the male rainbow
 It moved with me, old age.
 It moved with me, I am the one inspiring fear.

There were two songs with the refrain, "With me we two start back?" Then there were two alike with the words, "With me they two get home," then two, "With me they two sit." The party then were home again. Hereafter when there is cough and fever ? ? That is why he sang that. When they returned with the bear he got angry and started to run off. ba'ni caught him with a rope saying, "My pet, you were going to do something bad." He spread an unwounded buckskin and told his pet to sit on it. He put a string with five perforated white shell beads around his right wrist, and the same on his left wrist. He put similar strings of beads on each ankle and a string across his breast. Then between his ears he dusted specular iron ore, powdered turquoise, pollen from trees, and pollen from cat-tail rushes. He took turquoise from the bear's (?) mouth with his spit on it and pulled out his hair where it was twisted. The bear shook himself and the pollen fell off. "This will be called what was put in a bear's mouth. Hereafter when I live there will be danger from me. They will wish bad things to stay away." "My pet, I found you where it is the way of darkness. On this side is a mountain called black. Your relatives will be there. You will walk there."

He put some of the pollen which had been in his mouth on his head and sprinkled some of it before and behind him. He began to sing.

Now big bear black mountain ? he walks.

Black spruce being his door posts he walks.

Pollen on his tail he walks.

Pollen on the images of his foot he walks.

Pollen on the image of where he sat he walks.

Good fortune before him he walks.

Good fortune behind him he walks.

Good fortune below him he walks.

Good fortune above him he walks.

Good fortune all around him he walks.

Good fortune his speech he walks.

It ends here. The bear went away to the mountain called, Black Mountain. It is because of that bears are mean there. My maternal grandfather, ba'itnikqse told me so. They decorated panther in the same way. "I found you at the place called yellow mountain, my pet. You will walk where it is called yellow stone. Because of that panthers are numerous there."
