“A meeting in April 2015 explored the potential withdrawal of valuable collections of microfilm held by the University of Maryland, College Park Libraries. This resulted in a project to identify OCLC record numbers (OCN) for addition to OCLC’s Chadwyck-Healey Early English Books Online \(EEBO\) KBART file.”

Background Information – Cooperative Cataloging

Cooperative Cataloging of Microform Sets

Martin D. Joachim

SUMMARY. The ARL Microform Project, the ARL Survey on Microform Sets, the establishment of an ALA Committee on Bibliographic Control of Microforms, OCLC's Major Microforms Project, profile-matching, and programs and conferences on microforms are developments and activities during the 1980s that have resulted in major successes in the bibliographic control of microforms. Cooperative cataloging projects have been responsible for the additions of thousands of titles to the nation's databases. Three such projects discussed in this article are Early English Books, 1641-1700 (Wing STC), Goldsmiths'-Kress Library of Economic Literature, and Wright American Fiction.

Using OCLC's Connexion cataloging client as our tool, we identify electronic version catalog records comparable in quality to the corresponding microfilm version records.

We judge that comparable e-version records, having metadata matching our microfilm version record metadata, will ensure comparable resource discoverability.

Recommendations: Summary

- A cooperative effort among the 200 institutions with EEBO holdings to produce e-version records based on ProQuest's microfilm version records could provide timely and cost effective production of qualitative e-version records.
- OCLC should index the MARC 510 field metadata to improve e-resource discoverability. Beyond providing WorldCat search and retrieval functionality to metadata in citation notes for the print, electronic, and microform version resources, OCLC could support provision of more and more accurate direct links to e-resources via KBART file OCN.
- If OCLC were to leverage the MARC 510 field, a resulting data set could be used to compare microfilm and e-version record metadata to identify e-version OCN in need of record enhancements. A cooperative effort among the 200 institutions with EEBO holdings to do this work could provide timely and cost effective, quantitative and qualitative improvements to e-resource metadata and discoverability. This possibly should be further explored.
- ProQuest should include the access points for the institutions holding the filmed and digitized copies of the resources in the microfilm version records contributed to OCLC.
