

New and Dangerous Ideas

Volume 1

Article 19

5-2018

A Guy Named Harry

Jon Hope

Roger Williams University

Follow this and additional works at: <https://docs.rwu.edu/nadi>

 Part of the Bilingual, Multilingual, and Multicultural Education Commons, Civic and Community Engagement Commons, Gender and Sexuality Commons, Higher Education Commons, Race and Ethnicity Commons, and the Sociology of Culture Commons

Recommended Citation

Hope, Jon (2018) "A Guy Named Harry," New and Dangerous Ideas: Vol. 1 , Article 19.

Available at: <https://docs.rwu.edu/nadi/vol1/iss1/19>

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the Journals at DOCS@RWU. It has been accepted for inclusion in New and Dangerous Ideas by an authorized editor of DOCS@RWU. For more information, please contact mwu@rwu.edu.

A Guy Named Harry

My intent was to create something that spoke directly to the people in my community. I think many times, artists who come from obscure places try to follow trends of other major cities and that doesn't necessarily yield the best results. I decided to create a record that included our own language, spirit and culture. It was one of the few times that the outcome matched my intent and that is very challenging for a songwriter.

Social justice is a loaded term. Unfortunately, it's often reduced to hashtags or performative allies just wanting to appear woke. I think my record, A Guy Named Harry, speaks to creating value in a section of Providence that is often over looked or forgotten. The messaging in my record plants the seed of unity and looking past proximity violent and self-defeating behavior. If they can get this message coated in dope beats and rhymes, I think it'll resonate.

Higher Education is a bastion for elitism and I pride myself on being a sort of outlier. Despite my educational credentials and experiences, I don't really posture as an expert but simply as someone who likes to share. Therefore, if I see an outlet in which I can make a valuable contribution, I enter and explore. This is how I approach my classroom as a faculty instructor at Roger Williams University School of Continuing Studies where I teach Hip Hop from a critical lens. The classroom is a space for relational and intellectual reciprocity: I learn from my students as much as they learn from me.