WORD-FREQUENCY LISTS OF THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS OF THE HAITIAN-LANGUAGE BIBLE (OFFICIAL SPELLING SYSTEM)

This is the twenty-second in a series of studies concerning Haiti, its history, culture, and language, to be made available on a non-profit basis through the University of Kansas Institute of Haitian Studies. Contained here are two complementary Word-Frequency Lists: the first with each term found in the official-spelling 1999 Haitian-language Bible (Old and New Testaments) arranged in alphabetical order with its number of occurrences; and the second with the same terms, but arranged in descending order of frequency. The first List is valuable especially for indicating preferred usage, and the second especially for identifying essential themes. As the Haitian language—which finally began to find its written form only some 60 years ago—is now coming of age, it is important that more and more basic material be prepared in order better to ascertain its true parameters. To date the largest single body of literature published in the language is this 1,607-page Bib la: Pawòl Bondye an Ayisyen (Port-au-Prince: Société Biblique Haïtienne, 1999). It is a reworking using the official orthography of the 1985 version which was in the now-outmoded Pressoir-Faublas spelling system.

The Haitian-language Bible was created over the course of sixteen years principally by a Port-au-Prince team of four Haitian scholars, translating the Hebraic Bible for the Old Testament, and the Greek text for the New Testament. The group was led by Father Roger Désir, a Protestant Episcopal priest who for a number of years has served as tutor concerning the fine points of the language for many Haitians writing in their true language. Father Désir also served as final authority for many a contentious entry for Dr. Jowel Laguerre and myself while preparing our Haitian-English Dictionary. Pauris Jean-Baptiste is a Protestant minister renowned as the author of no less than nine novels in Haitian, especially Sogo nan Kwazman Granchimin, Peyi Zoulout, Deblo, and above all for his prize-winning Nan Lonbray Inosans; as well as of several collections of poetry such as Chouichoui Granchimin and Lavi an Miyèt. Edner Jeanty is also a Protestant minister, author of Man Lé, Sa ou di pou sa?; a bilingual Haitian dictionary, a method book for learning the language, and especially his and Carl Brown's classic Paròl Granmoun: 999 Haitian Proverbs in Creole and English. Last but certainly not least of the four-man team was Carrié Paultre (1924-1999), an agronomist by training who was enlisted by the legendary H. Ormonde McConnell in 1963 to edit a monthly Haitian-language journal to provide useful as well as interesting material intended especially for adults who had recently learned to read. Thus from 1964 until 1992 appeared the monthly Boukan, with the great majority of the writing done by its editor. Most notable were the installments, chapter by chapter, of Carrié Paultre's fifteen novels, among the most outstanding being Amarant, Kote Wout la ye?, Mànwela, Wòch nan Solèy, and above all, Tonton Liben.

It would be difficult to assemble a more knowledgeable team not only of Haitians natif-natal, but ones more thoroughly versed in the intricacies of the Haitian language. Therein lies an essential importance of the present documents. Compared to French and English, Haitian as a written language is still in its infancy, and even many common words have multiple forms. But which is the preferred form? What criteria exist up until now, other than purely impressionistic ones? The present Frequency Lists can go far in serving as a path-breaking initial guide. The four Haitian scholars described above, while setting forth a masterful translation of the Bible, have at the same time set forth the forms of their native language which they collectively deem to be most appropriate, the ones most readily used and understood by the majority of their monolingual readers and listeners. They have thus created not only a religious monument, but a linguistic one as well.

All this data would be difficult if not impossible to analyze, however, without a methodical cataloguing of the terms used. Thus Jim Ross, an American scholar of the Haitian language as well as a computer expert, has created a 1,584-page concordance of both the Old and New Testaments of the 1999 Bible in Haitian. A native-born Kansan, he first went to Haiti in 1990, fell in love with the country and its people like so many of us, and then after graduation from Kansas' Sterling College in 1993, returned to Haiti where in Pasbwadòm, in the Department of the South, he directed for six years a well-digging program called Dlo pou Lavi an Ayiti, as well as conducting a school. Convinced that much more published material in the Haitian language was needed, he returned to Kansas and is now collaborating with the University of Kansas Institute of Haitian Studies. His massive concordance of the Bible in Haitian, using the official spelling system, consists of four thick volumes printed in small characters, with three columns per page, which will eventually be published as funding becomes available, with at present only a separate concordance of the New Testament being published. Meanwhile, as a by-product of the main concordance proper, he has prepared the present Frequency Lists of the total vocabulary of both the Old and New Testaments, which can obviously be of interest to Biblical scholars, but also to linguists studying not only the relative importance of a given term as judged by its frequency, but the preferred form of the word as defined by four of the main experts of the language. For example, which is preferable: anvan or avan; chorje or sonje; keksyon, kestyon, kesyon or kèsyon; kòmanse, konmanse or koumanse; monte or moute? For a language to stabilize, a norm must be established for at least its most commonly used terms. The present document is a great step forward in this direction.

In the concordance to the entire Bible in Haitian, as well as in the one to the New Testament alone, certain ultra-common terms (e.g., a, ak, an, ap) were not concorded in order to save space and thus expense; in the two present Word-Frequency Lists, however, all terms appear with their frequency.

In 1989 Professor Pierre Vernet and I published a Dictionnaire Préliminaire des Fréquences de la Langue Créole Haïtienne (Port-au-Prince: Centre de Linguistique Appliquée de l'Université d'Etat d'Haïti, pp. 134) where 50 illiterates, 25 secondary-school students, and 5 Haitian graduate students in linguistics were asked to classify a basic corpus of Haitian words into just four categories: very commonly used terms, less commonly used terms, terms rarely encountered, and words entirely unknown to the majority of the respondents. This listing, though of interest, is in no way as precise as the data contained in the present Frequency Lists.

As noted at the end of the alphabetical Frequency List (page 51) and again at the end of the Frequency List by descending order (page 100), of the total number of 907,952 words used in the Haitian-language Bible, there are supposedly only a total of 7,156 different words which make up its vocabulary. Of these, 2,326 are nonce words, i.e., words occurring only once in an entire text. These consist to a great extent of proper names contained in the often rather detailed lineages common especially to the Old Testament, and which when transliterated from the original Hebrew could be expressed in more than one way. Taking examples from only the first letter of the alphabet, we find: Abigayel and Abigayèl; Abimelèk and Abimèlèk; Achabna, Achabneja, Achabnya and Achabya; Amiyel and Amiyèl; Amiyou, Amiyoub and Amiyoud; Amram and Amran; Anab and Anad; Ananeèl and Ananeyèl; Apachab and Apachad; Apolòs and Apòlòs; Atagzesès and Atagzèsès; Azareèl, Azareyèl and Azariyèl; Azeka and Azèka; Azriyèl and Azryèl. Thus what would normally result in a real count of only fourteen words, is counted for a total of thirty-two different words. Similarly there are a few other irregularities or misprints which become apparent with the aid of a concordance or frequency list, such as amplwaye (2 occurrences) and anplwaye (11 occurrences), ankadreman (52 occurrences) and ankadrèman (1 occurrence), apre (1,963 occurrences) and aprè (10 occurrences), jodi (1 occurrence) and jòdi (375 occurrences), konmanse (238 occurrences) and koumanse (1 occurrence), montre (3 occurrences) and moutre (516 occurrences), remèt (1 occurrence) and renmèt (191 occurrences), veso (79 occurrences) and vèso (1 occurrence). Obviously the team of four translators did not have at their disposal a concordance or frequency list, and it is hoped that in the next edition of Bib la these inconsistencies can now be resolved.

On the whole, however, these small problems in no way lessen from a linguistic point of view the value of the present study, since—except in the case of certain rare proper names—the frequencies bear eloquent testimony to the preferred form, e.g., konmanse (238 occurrences) vs. koumanse (1 occurrence). For the common proper names, the only consistent irregularity which we have noted is Danyèl rather than Dànyèl—since the first syllable is not intended to be pronounced as a nasal vowel.

A surprising element which becomes apparent here is the words in Bib la which do not occur—information which only a concordance/frequency list could reliably furnish. To take only the first page of the alphabetical List, one notes at least ten rather common words which are absent: abandon, abandonnen, abat, abite, abize, abòde, abondans, abouti, absan, adapte. What other terms are absent? What Biblical and linguistic observations can be gleaned here?

As for the second Word-Frequency List presented here, with terms arranged in descending order of frequency, one of the chief maxims of the famous Swiss psychologist and psychiatrist Carl

Jung (1875-1961) is that an accurate key to understanding a patient consists of what he/she talks about most, regardless of what is said about the specific subject. In a similar vein is the often quoted saying by France's celebrated poet Charles Baudelaire (1821-1867): "Pour deviner l'âme d'un poète, ou du moins sa principale préoccupation, cherchons dans ses œuvres quel est le mot ou quels sont les mots qui s'y représentent avec le plus de fréquence. Le mot traduira l'obsession!" ("In order to unravel the soul of a poet, or at least his principal preoccupation, seek out which is the word or which are the words in his works which occur with the greatest frequency. The word will reveal the obsession!")

The five nouns which occur most frequently here are moun (16,422), Bondye (8,070), Senyè (7,369), peyi (5,647), and pitit (4,916). What does this tell us about the essentials of the Bible? The five most frequently used proper nouns, after Bondye, are Izrayèl (2,704), Jezi (2,173 - including Jezikri and Kris), David (1,092), Moyiz (971), and Jerizalèm (965).

As for pronouns, mwen (24,589 - including m, m'a, m'ap, mape and mapral) occurs quite frequently, more often than nou (22,629 - including n, n'a and n'ap) and ou (19,430 - including w'a, w'al, w'ap, w'ava and w'aval). Li (41,386 - including l, l'al, l'ale and l'ap) would combine with the verb meaning "to read," but is almost certainly the most frequent of the pronouns. Yo (54,573 - including y, y'a, y'al, y'ale and y'ap) is the most frequently used word form in the entire Bible, but its meaning here is inconclusive since it can of course also indicate the plural marker. To study these last two, one will have to await the publication of the full concordance. Similarly, the form for many verbs coincides with that of a noun (e.g., fè - 17,486, can also indicate "iron"; manje - 1,605, can be both "to eat" and "food"). Other verbal forms coincide with adjectival forms (e.g., ba - 1,746; di - 8,846). Obviously, given the number of homonyms in Haitian, frequency lists can serve only as an often useful adjunct to a concordance.

Nevertheless the descending-order frequency list can highlight certain features which would otherwise be difficult to notice. Lanmou (5 occurrences) is in the category of rare words, but is offset by renmen (1,019) - but which is far less frequent a term than touye (1,710). Kè (1,538) occurs more than kò (1,120) - and kò might on occasion be used as a reflexive pronoun. Gason (2,307) is far more frequent than fi (563). Bon (2,048) is far more frequent than move (775) or mechan (397). Why is charite (11 - including lacharite) so relatively rare a term? Why does pisans (as well as pwisans) never occur? Is it true that the Haitian language makes little use of adjectives? The uses of frequency lists, just as the uses of concordances, are limited only by the imagination of the user.

Other observations can be made from this second Frequency List by looking at its end rather than at its beginning. Of the total number of 7,156 different words, there are 2,326 terms which occur only once, 971 occurring twice, 477 occurring three times, 359 occurring four times, and 223 occurring five times. These low-frequency words come to a total of 4,356, and consist to a rather large extent of proper names, vagaries of spelling, and of numbers. Thus one is tempted to state that the effective vocabulary of the Bible in Haitian consists of a mere 2,800 words (7,156 minus

4,356). Taking as a comparative figure, the total vocabulary of the complete theater and poetry of Jean Racine is 4,088 terms (cf. Bryant Freeman and Alan Batson, Concordance du Théâtre et des Poésies de Jean Racine, Ithaca, N.Y.: Cornell University Press, 1968, volume II, page 1,451) and subtracting the number of terms occurring five times and less, one arrives at the figure of 2,221, thus an effective vocabulary for Racine of 1,867 words. A tenet of French literary criticism is that Racine used only an extremely basic vocabulary to create what is universally considered a masterpiece of French classicism. Similarly, the translators here have used almost as basic a word stock, - 2,800 terms - in their masterful rendering of the Bible into the Haitian language. Their aim obviously is clarity, in order that as many as possible can grasp the messages of Christianity.
