Intensive Care

It's time to say good-bye to him, says my sister again and again, the day she becomes a widow.

She says it to her husband's father on speakerphone. Son, comes the voice, enfeebled by distance. The air thrums with insistence of impotent machines. Do you want to say you love him? my sister urges, relentless. She holds the phone to her husband's eyes which have closed against it.

Of course I do, says his father and then his father says nothing.
