Family leave bill not issue at SIUC

By Christy Gutowski
Administration Writer

A bill that would grant workers up to 12 weeks of unpaid leave for family emergencies will have a minimal effect on the University, SIUC officials said.

Senate and House members passed measures which require large companies to grant workers up to 12 weeks of unpaid leave for childbirth, arrival of an adopted child, or serious illness of employees or their child, spouse or parent.

Although President George Bush vetoed the bill, the Senate voted last week to override the President, marking the first time Senate members have defeated Bush in a veto fight.

The House will vote on the leave issue Sept. 30.

William Capie, SIUC assistant vice president for administration, said the family leave bill would not have much of an effect on the University because most people cannot afford to take 12 weeks off work without pay.

"The reality is that most people can't afford to take (the 12 weeks guaranteed in) the legislation," he said. "From the practical perspective, we already have provisions in place that cover situations when an employee requests additional personal leave."

The University already allows employees six weeks for medical leave in cases such as pregnancy. Whether workers receive payment while on leave depends on the amount of time they have available for sick leave and vacation.

Ruth Bernhardt, records manager for SIUC's personnel office, said most employees have enough time remaining from vacation or sick days to receive payment during those six weeks.

Capie said the additional amount of time given for leave does not cost the University money because the bill grants an employee time off without pay.

But the individual departments will lose the product the employee on leave would be producing and would have to pay for hiring temporary help and training, he said.

Engineering cutbacks

Officials: IBHE used old data to make decision

By Chris Davies
Administration Writer

College of Engineering officials will defend the need for the doctorate program in engineering science, which has been targeted for elimination by the Illinois Board of Higher Education.

The IBHE has used old data to analyze the engineering science program, said Juh Wah Chen, dean of the College of Engineering.

"The program is only five years old," Chen said.

"The old data does not reflect the progress that the program has made since it began accepting students," he said.

The IBHE cites the program for a number of flaws, listed in a report of recommendations for University-wide improvement that recommends cutting 24 degrees overall.

IBHE reported such flaws as low enrollment of American students, a graduation rate of only one student a year, and high program costs as reasons for elimination.

Chen said many of the flaws cited in the report already have been remedied or are being turned around.

"We have already taken measures to correct the low American student enrollment," he said. "But it is difficult to keep students in school when they can get high paying jobs after completing the bachelor program."

James Evers, associate dean of the college and coordinator of the engineering science program, said the program performs quality research that proves valuable to doctoral students as well as Illinois coal mines.

"The program researches ways of cleaning mining coal and high-sulfur coal," he said. "This research is done at a doctoral level so it is a higher quality than at a master's or bachelor's level."

"Students who perform the research gain the experience of working closely with faculty, and the result is a student capable of producing high quality research."

The engineering science program is the only one in the state and is nationally recognized, Chen said.

Drug enforcement officials arrest 150 in six countries

Federal drug enforcement officials said Monday they have disrupted the money laundering wing of the leading Colombian cocaine cartel by arresting more than 150 people in six countries and seizing nearly $42 million

Perot still up in air about election

Zapnews

DALLAS - After auditioning the economic plans of President Bush and Gov. Bill Clinton Monday, Ross Perot was still singing the same tune on whether he will re-enter the presidential race.

With only five weeks to go before the Nov. 3 election, Perot promised an announcement by day's end Thursday. "We think we can have it buttoned up Thursday," he said. "We are going to move heaven and earth to do it."

But he insisted Monday that whether he runs is not his decision but that of his supporters.

Earlier this year, he promised he would abide by his supporters' wishes on whether to enter the race. Then, on July 16, without first telling anybody, Perot abruptly said he would not run.

Lasorda's future with LA uncertain

Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Peter O'Malley, Los Angeles Dodgers president, further clouded Tom Lasorda's future as Dodger manager Sunday when he refused to confirm that he wants Lasorda to return for the final year of his contract.

When asked if he wanted Lasorda to manage the Dodgers next season, O'Malley said, "I'll answer that question after I talk to

O'Malley refuses to confirm his return

Tommy, after the season ends."

Speaking on the morning after his team clinched last place for the first time in 87 years, O'Malley was asked if he was satisfied with Lasorda's performance.

"It's been a very difficult year for the manager, players, coaches, people in the front office," he said. "Until I talk to everyone, get all the pieces of the puzzle, I am just not going to comment on anyone's individual performance."

O'Malley was told this sounded far different from comments he made earlier this summer when he said he "absolutely" wanted Lasorda, 65, to return for his 17th season as manager.

"The ballclub hasn't finished in last place since 1905," O'Malley said. "And at the end of the season we'll be reviewing everything from A to Z. I am not prepared to discuss with ... any members of the press today the individual job performance of anybody in the organization."

"I am reviewing everything. Everything should be reviewed when the team comes in

Giants once again captive in stadium with plans to move

Newsday

SAN FRANCISCO — The winds of fate swirl in full circles. They send storm warnings, with gusts that can topple an All-Star reliever from the pitching rubber. They are coming around again, with enough force to reverse the tides on Horace Greeley's advice and Horace Stoneham's migration.

Those winds are raising a fuss in the Bay Area about a baseball club that might be headed back east and back in time. Three thousand miles and 35 years removed from New York's Manhattan, the Giants are right back where they started from: captive to their own stadium and planning to move across the country.

A decision is expected in the next two weeks that will determine whether the Giants' home game Sunday, a 3-2 loss to the Reds before 45,630, was the last one they will ever play in San Francisco. Baseball's ownership committee will recommend either a planned shift to St. Petersburg or a counterproposal to keep the franchise where it has been since the last big move.

It's a story as familiar as Sunday's weather. A generation after they fled the ramshackle Polo Grounds, the Giants are seeking shelter in Florida from the chilling breezes of Candlestick Park.

Outgoing owner Bob Lurie, who bought the franchise from Stoneham in 1976 and has since failed to generate support for a downtown stadium, believes he has no choice. Except for a "c" his rationale might be exactly the same as Stoneham's: "The park is cold, and it's damn near impossible to finance one in that area."

If this is a "Gone With the Wind" sequel, then it was the voters who virtually said—four times—they don't give a damn. Twice in San Francisco and once each in San Jose

Men's tennis uses fall season to develop

By Andy Graham
Sports Writer

The fall exhibition season is giving the SIUC men's tennis team a chance to develop its talents for its regular season in the spring.

The Salukis played in the Iowa State Invitational last weekend. The eight-team event was an opportunity for the team to get experience playing against good competition, coach Dick LeFevre said.

"Because of NCAA rules, no team scores were kept, only individual singles and doubles scores," he said.

The Salukis won all of their first-round doubles matches. The singles matches were all real close, resulting in defeat sophomore Altaf Merchant said.

"This was a good tournament, because no one really got blown away," he said. "We only lost close matches."

In doubles play, the No. 1 team Jay Merchant and Tim Derouin won their 1st round match 8-5 against Northwest Missouri State, but the duo lost their next two matches to Southwest Missouri State and Southwest Baptist.

The No. 2 doubles team of Andre Goransson and Bojan Vukovic won their first round match against Southwest Baptist 8-5, lost their second round to Iowa State and had to forfeit their third match to another doubles team from Iowa State because Goransson tore a muscle in his leg.

The No. 3 team of Altaf Merchant and Juan Garcia won their first round to

About two-thirds of the passengers on a list released by Nepalese authorities appeared to be from Western countries, but nationalities were initially not disclosed.

DRUG BUST NABS 201 — In an unprecedented operation, drug enforcement officials in North America and Western Europe have arrested 201 Medellin cocaine cartel and Sicilian Mafia couriers and money launderers, a top Italian official announced Monday. Authorities in the United States, Canada, Britain, France, Spain and Italy also confiscated large amounts of money "the value of which so far can only be determined in cubic metres," said Italian Interior Minister Nicola Mancino. Concerted raids by the U.S. Drug Enforcement Agency and Italian drug agents were carried out after months of preparation by officials from all countries concerned. The operation was targeted against a giant operation which funneled laundered money from the United States and Europe back to Colombia via Colombian intelligence agents. The operation began Sept. 25 when two leading members of the Colombian cartel were arrested in Rome. The pair, identified as Jose Duran and Felipe Villaquiran, allegedly met with a Dutch woman named Bettein Martens.

Voter registration continues

Nearly 1,000 students prepared for November general election

By Jeremy Finley
City Writer

More than 840 students have registered in an attempt to increase student voter registration at SIUC for the November general election.

Susan Hall, president of the Graduate and Professional Student Council, said 840 people have registered as of Monday.

More students are expected to register before registration ends Oct. 5.

Hall said there is not a certain number of people GPSC is hoping to register, but it is hoping for as many students as possible.

Students can register at the Hall of Fame area at the Student Center from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. until Friday and from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. on Oct. 5.

Registration booths will also be set up at Grinnell Hall today, Trueblood Hall on Wednesday and Lentz Hall on Thursday. Students can register at the halls from 4 to 6:30 p.m.

Brad Cole, president of the Undergraduate Student Government, said 12 members of USG were deputized to help with the registration.

Cole said USG has handled voter registration for the last two years, but GPSC is organizing the event this year because it has a larger number of people.

Hall said the League of Women Voters and the SIUC Democratic and Republican organizations are helping as deputy registrars.

A deputy from Williamson County will register students for that region from 10 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. today and 11:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. on Wednesday, she said.

WIDB, SIUC's campus radio station, will be playing music and telling about the registration from 11 to 3 today, Hall said.

The station has also provided public service announcements about the event.

Annual Newman Lecture Series stresses new look toward past

By Lynelle Marquardt
General Assignment Writer

Two prominent members of Pax Christi, an international Catholic peace organization, said because 1992 is an election year and the 500th anniversary of Columbus coming to America, it is important to look to the future as well as the past.

Janice Vanderhaar, a member of the Pax Christi Council, said election time 1992 seems like a good time to celebrate the past, but also look to the future.

"I think it's a springboard year," she said. "This is a year we want to make plans for the future."

Gerard Vanderhaar, a Pax Christi ambassador for peace, said the 500th anniversary of Columbus coming to America is being proclaimed by many in a celebratory mood, but many others, including indigenous people and those whose ancestors came in slavery, will have a different perspective on this.

"Janice and I would suggest that the perspective with which people view the 500th anniversary of Columbus depends in great measure on the way they view life in the Western hemisphere today," he said.

For people who see the last 500 years as positive, with many cultural advances and prosperity, Oct. 12 will be an important day to celebrate, Vanderhaar said.

But for those whose ancestors were in North and South America when the Europeans came or later arrived in chains, or for those who are familiar with poverty, for those who see the injustices of the current economic system—these people will tend to look on the 500th anniversary with disgust, he said.

Everyone needs to take a new look at the past, Vanderhaar said.

"None of us want to be condemned to repeat the mistakes of the past," he said.

Vanderhaar suggested three elements of a response to the quincentennial.

"The first element of the response is to listen carefully to the voices of the powerless," he said. "It's easy to hear the voices of the powerful...but it's hard to

Murphy Brown may want fatherly advice

THE QUOTE THAT STARTED it all: "Bearing babies irresponsibly is wrong. Failing to support children one has fathered is wrong. It doesn't help matters when prime-time TV has Murphy Brown—a character who supposedly epitomizes today's intelligent, highly paid, professional woman—mocking the importance of fathers by bearing a child alone and calling it just another 'lifestyle choice.'"

Dan Quayle was not criticizing single parents; he was criticizing one choosing to be a single parent when the option of marriage was possible. But that is not a good reason to get married. The father may not be the best dad. Out of wedlock, the mother can still choose her partner for rearing the child.

However, children of fatherless families are more likely to drop out of school, face physical and mental illness, and grow up in a life of poverty. It isn't wrong to be a single parent, but a child's future may be dreary.

Quayle's point was that the writers made the wrong choice for Murphy Brown, an "intelligent" character, and that the choice of whether to be married or single should not be for her good, but the child's.

THE TELEVISION SHOW RESPONDED to the vice president through the characters in the season premiere show. Murphy Brown, portrayed by actress Candice Bergen, spent most of the show holed up in her home avoiding the press and tending to the baby. But at one point in the sitcom she appeared for editorial comment on the fictional news show "FYI," stating that defining a family as mother, father and child is "painfully unfair."

It is true that a high divorce rate, single parents, and taking a spouse already with child may cause the nuclear family to become a minority, but Hollywood does have a strong influence on society.

With advertisers heavy in the persuasion business willing to sponsor the show at $300,000 plus for a 30-second spot, imagine the impact the half-hour show must have.

Outside of the editorial piece by Murphy Brown, the characters spent many of their lines on Quayle the character. From assuming that people in Latin America spoke Latin to misspelling potato, Quayle has had numerous comedians and TV shows develop their own image of the VP with cracks and one-liners.

By this image, very little of his comments are taken seriously, regardless of the qualifications that made him a senator before being chosen by Bush as a running mate. His comments may be politically influenced—they do run along the Republican's family values emphasis—but children with fathers are statistically in better shape than others.

IF THE WRITERS are going to keep in line with the title character's image, it would be "prudent" to have Murphy Brown in search of a dad.

Quayle sounds ready to twist the character's arm all the way to the altar with Murphy Brown fighting tooth and nail. For the good of the child and not because it is bad to be a single mother, the single parent might look for a spouse, but look for one who can handle the responsibility.

'Indian' names for commercial usage confuse identity of indigenous people

In the letter to the editor I wrote on 9-21-92, the sentence with my central argument was, for the most part, omitted. Therefore I would like to make my points again.

The problem with using names like "Indians" and "Redskins" is that they take the diverse peoples indigenous to this continent and lump them in to a stereotype originally created to justify the inhuman way in which Native Americans were treated by Europeans migrating onto Native lands.

What has been at stake for Native Americans since Columbus (accidentally) arrived here is their identity.

Columbus was the first to start this war on their identity by naming them "Indians."

The attack on their identity has been so strong that people associate scapwing with "Indians" despite the fact that scalping was introduced by Europeans when it became too cumbersome to turn in the heads of Native men, women, and children for a bounty.

"Squaw" is a term the "settlers" used for all Native women, however "squaw" is an Algonquin word meaning vagina.

Today Native Americans still cling to their cultural and spiritual heritage, but European-Americans continue to wage war against that identity by using "Indian" names for sports teams, automobiles, and food products.

It is racism to reduce the diverse indigenous Peoples of this continent to a stereotype which takes them out of the present and puts them into the past.

It is ignorance to ignore the great variety of Native cultures still living in America today.

Let us quit giving the peoples of this land an identity and acknowledge and respect the fact that they already have an identity which is, as it should be, their own. — Robert W. Johnston, graduate student, philosophy

Schools should not promote books with offensive morals

In the article "Banned Books Week challenges title censoring" (DE, Sept. 25, 1992), parents' challenges to the appropriateness of certain books for classrooms or libraries of public schools is equated with opposition to First Amendment rights of free speech.

I strongly object to this fallacious argument. Was the removal of the "Dick and Jane" series from the classroom because of gender stereotyping an affront to the First Amendment?

Those who protested the Herrin school library circulating Judy Blume's book "Forever" did not argue that it should be illegal to publish and offer it for sale, they just said the values in it were not appropriate to be promoted by a public school.

When a book is required reading, and to a lesser extent, when it is made easily accessible in the school library, there is some implicit approval by the school of the values it contains. The parent's right to object to books with inappropriate content is not in conflict with First Amendment rights to free speech. Free speech has been strongly restricted in the public schools when it comes to religious topics and literature, with the argument that the school, as part of the establishment, should not promote religion.

Let's be fair and agree that the school should not promote moral values offensive to the religious views of a substantial segment of the population. Will those who support "Banned Book Week" fight to restore the right of a teacher to have his classroom bookshelf contain a Bible and other Christian literature — a right recently denied by the Supreme Court? Is this not book banning, too?

If those protesting "book banning" won't support the rights of those with values different from their own, their protests will stand out as an exercise in promoting libertarian values, rather than in protecting First Amendment rights. — Paul T. Gibson, assistant professor, plant and soil science

Death penalty applied racially

Since both presidential candidates support the death penalty, I feel the issue needs to be examined more closely.

Most American support the death penalty but do not take into account the racial bias of it.

Given similar circumstances, people of color are much more likely to be sentenced to death than white people.

The case of Mumia Abu-Jamal is an excellent example of how the death penalty can be misused, taking the life of a person whose only crime was standing up for his rights.

I hope people will give the issue critical thought and that even those who do not oppose the death penalty will look at the racist underpinnings of how it is applied. — Britt Parrott, graduate student, history

A spokesman for United We Stand, Perot's grass-roots organization, said about eight or nine out of every 10 supporters still want Perot to run. As Perot once again took center stage in presidential politics, he helped draw attention to the issue of the federal deficit.

But Perot, coy as ever, gave few hints of his own intentions during a surreal, 15-hour media spectacle that began on NBC's "Today," included four televised news conferences and was scheduled to end with another go-around on Cable News Network's "Larry King Live."

"Watch my lips," Perot told skeptical reporters.

"I will never be able to get it over to you characters... that this decision will be made by millions of Americans. They are going to decide what we do, and they are going to just decide it on one criteria, and that's what's good for the country."

That's the same reason Perot cited when he abruptly dropped out of the race in July, saying he could not win and did not want to throw the race into the House of Representatives and leave the country without leadership.

After the meetings, Perot would not even venture his own opinion about which campaign's economic program came closer to his own prescriptions for fixing the economy.

"This is driven from the bottom up," he insisted. "I just think it's terrific that we're of personalities and onto issues." A smiling Perot, who "repeatedly said he wished the entire meeting "could be on television," said, "This is democracy at its finest."

Perot himself was vague about how he would consult his people, saying he would use "different methods in different places," including meetings, phone calls and faxes.

Perot said the volunteers would mull over what they've heard, talk it over, return home and somehow in two days communicate what they've heard and take the pulse of tens of thousands of Perot supporters in each state--and then report their findings back to Dallas and Perot.

"There's no great clarion call from the electorate for Ross Perot to re-enter this race," said William Schneider, a political analyst for CNN.

"I don't know who he's listening to. My feeling is that the voices he's hearing are coming from inside his head."

Even among Perot boosters, there were divisions.

"Is this a con? Why are we wasting our time listening to these presentations from the Republicans and Democrats?" said Perot booster Rick Pamkin of Southern California.

"It wouldn't cost us money out of our pockets but we would lose control over staffing," he said.

Pamela Brandt, executive director of the personnel office, said if the family leave bill goes into effect, University departments would have to approve the 12 weeks of leave because it is legally mandated.

At present, employees must receive departmental approval before they are granted leave, she said.

Larger departments would not be as affected by the family leave bill as would smaller units that do not have as many workers, she said.

The College of Liberal Arts has 14 departments and employs more than 300 workers.

John Jackson, dean of COLA, said the family leave bill would not cost his college any additional expenses because the bill provides leave without pay.

"The bill wouldn't cost us anything under those rules," he said. "We frequently hire temporary help so (the family leave bill) wouldn't change our lives that much."

Brandt said because of the financially weak condition of the state, most University departments do not have the flexibility they once had to hire temporary help while an employee takes the 12 weeks off.

Muriel Narve, president of the Civil Service Council, said the University's policy works for its employees as it stands. Any more time off allotted for personal reasons would cost SIUC additional expenses to replace workers on leave, she said.

"The family leave bill) would be costly to the University in terms of labor hours, during these times of monetary difficulties," she said.

Narve said the University has good benefits but employees have to wait too long before the state reimburses them for medical expenses.

Administrative and professional staff members receive 25 to 28 vacation days a year. Civil service employees get 12 to 28 days, depending on their position and seniority.

Faculty and administrative professionals receive 45 days a year for sick leave, depending on their contract. Civil service employees receive 12 days a year.

Brandt said the University has a good sick leave package that is "more generous than many other employers."

Civil service employees also are eligible for 150 hours in extended sick leave for cases of major accidents or illnesses, Bernhard said.

Faculty and administrative professionals receive 7.2 days at the end of each fiscal year for payable, earned time, depending on their type of contract.

the first time authorities uncovered enough evidence to link the Colombian Cali drug cartel to the Sicilian Mafia.

Among those charged were seven top money managers for the Cali cartel, now Columbia's most powerful cocaine-trafficking organization, according to the DEA. Tom Clifford, a DEA supervisor in San Diego who coordinated the investigation, estimated that the cartel still employs dozens of other top money managers. But a DEA spokesman said, "we have taken a real bite out of their hide with these seven guys."

In Rome, a top-ranking Italian police official said the arrests would damage the alliance between the Colombian cartel and the Sicilian Mafia. "We have carried out many operations with the Americans but this is the biggest and most significant," said police official Achille Serra.

After Attorney General William P. Barr authorized the investigation in September 1989, Clifford said, DEA agents established a phony investment consulting firm named Trans Americas Ventures Associates.

Undercover agents relied on informants to introduce the "firm" to the Cali cartel as an efficient collector of drug profits.

"Our whole purpose was to arranged the collection of funds," said Clifford. "We told them we had the capability to collect anywhere in the world. We told them we had representatives in other countries."

At the suggestion of cartel operatives, he said, undercover agents set up fake leather goods businesses, leasing warehouses in Houston, Fort Lauderdale, Miami, Chicago and New York. The cartel members shipped a token amount of merchandise but pretended to export much more. That generated false paperwork they could use to justify their Colombian bank deposits of illegal drug profits, Clifford said.

Organist to play at Shryock

Internationally acclaimed performer to offer concert at SIUC

By Melissa Willis
Entertainment Writer

Two SIUC professors have given the University an opportunity to expand its musical culture through the vibrant tones of the organ.

Last year, Marianne Webb, a University organist and professor of music, and her husband David N. Bateman, a professor of management in the College of Business, established an endowment fund of $50,000 to bring a nationally known concert organist to SIUC once a year during the recital series.

"We wanted to give an enduring gift of culture and beauty to SIUC," Bateman said. "As long term faculty members this is our way of giving something back to the college."

The couple will see the series become a reality Friday night.

The first recital features international organist Gerre Hancock performing at Shryock Auditorium.

Hancock, organist and master of the choristers at St. Thomas Church in New York, will perform an improvised work of several movements based on a theme that will be presented to him at the concert. "Gerre Hancock is one of the most magnificent, foremost artists in the world today," Webb said. "His talent for improvisation is outstanding."

Bateman and Webb met at SIUC in 1969 and married the following year. The endowment is their way of returning to the University all it has offered them, Bateman said.

"We are indebted to the University and to the people of Southern Illinois something for providing a rewarding place to live and work," Bateman said.

Hancock will perform Friday on the Reuter pipe organ designed by Webb.

In 1969 officials decided to refurbish Shryock Auditorium, and Webb sought to have a new pipe organ installed. Her plan was accepted and she designed the Reuter instrument, which now has an estimated value of more than $500,000, Webb said.

"With this instrument, you not only hear the music but see it as well," Bateman said.

Marvin D. Kleinau, committee member of the new recital series, said Hancock's performance will give the audience an opportunity to hear a great performer as well as a great instrument.

"This will be an event the audience will not soon forget because of the expertise involved in the performance," Kleinau said. "It is also something I think students will enjoy."

The Marianne Webb and David N. Bateman Distinguished Organ Recital Series is administered through the SIUC Foundation.

Gola Waters, executive director of the foundation, said Webb and Bateman's endowment is a rare gesture on the part of the foundation.

"We are used to receiving money basically for scholarships," Waters said.

The performance is Friday at 8 p.m. in Shryock. Admission is free.

Marketing students to put ideas to work for contest

By Vincent S. Boyd
Business Writer

Students in the field of marketing now have the opportunity to apply theories learned in the classroom into practice, an administrator in the College of Business and Administration said.

Michael Haywood, director of minority programming, said the Leonard J. Raymond Collegiate ECHO Competition gives students the opportunities to develop a direct marketing campaign for a major corporation.

Sponsored by the American Express Travel Related Services Co., Inc., the ECHO Competition is designed to allow students to develop a direct marketing campaign for the American Express Card.

Elizabeth Cohen, vice president of student marketing at AETRS, said she looks forward to seeing the submissions from this year's participants.

The format of the contest requires that student teams create a comprehensive direct marketing campaign targeted to college students for American Express.

Cohen said students will need to develop a creative program, choose appropriate media channels, manage a budget of $5 million and determine a contact strategy to span one year. Haywood said the program format is an opportunity for students to gain hands-on experience while being able to present their work to professionals in the field.

"Classroom learning is good, but being able to apply what you've learned in class in excellent," Haywood said.

The purpose of the challenge is to acquire new student cardmembers by developing a compelling message that is relevant to students needs and fits in with the company's positioning in the marketplace, Cohen said.

Keisha Smith, a senior in marketing from Belleville, said she is looking forward to the challenge of the ECHO Competition.

"I see it as my chance to see where I stand with my peers," Smith said. "The best students in the country are going to be in this competition, and I want to see where I stand with the best."

Submissions will be judged by a panel of direct marketing professionals on the basis of the team's understanding of direct response techniques, as well as creative and marketing strategies, media planning, budget efficiency and professionalism of the presentation manual.

Law professor's lecture focuses on constitutionality of right to die

By Julie Birkmann
General Assignment Writer

An Oxford University law professor said he does not believe the right to die should be constitutional.

John M. Finnis was invited by SIUC law professor Patrick Kelley to present a lecture as part of the Hiram H. Lesar distinguished lecture series. In his lecture, Finnis said people have the right to refuse medical attention, but not to withdraw from life support.

"Suicide can result from action as well as inaction," Finnis said.

Finnis also spoke of the views of his colleague, Ronald Dworkin, a law professor at New York University.

Dworkin believes in the theory of dualism.

"Dualism supports that people shouldn't use their body longer than it is habitable. It says that human life must be of high quality to be worth living," Finnis said.

Finnis said he did not agree with Dworkin's beliefs.

"To kill people by removing them from life support is to harm them. To harm a person is inconsistent with respect for human life," Finnis said.

Tom Moyer, a SIUC law student, didn't agree with Finnis' viewpoint.

"His viewpoint isn't very practical. Who's going to pay for the health care?" Moyer said.

"The Health Care Surrogate Act that was passed last year allows family members to decide whether to maintain life support. It seems to be the way people are going these days. Intensive care costs are getting very high," Moyer said.

Finnis cited the Supreme Court case Cruzan vs. State of Missouri, Department of Health as an example of a decision made concerning the right to die.

In this case, Missouri had to prove clear and convincing evidence that life support should be withdrawn on car crash victim Nancy Cruzan and that the patient no longer wanted medical treatment, Finnis said.

When the case reached the U. S. Supreme Court, the majority of justices were against the withdrawal of life support.

The question of whether people should be able to make choices involving their own autonomy was a major issue in the case, Finnis said.

Cruzan was in an automobile accident in 1983 when she was 24 years old. Her injuries caused lack of oxygen to her brain for 14 minutes and left her in a permanent vegetative state, according to an article by Dworkin.

She was unconscious and oblivious to the environment. She had reflexive responses to sound and perhaps to painful stimuli, the article said.

She was fed and hydrated through tubes implanted her stomach, and machines performed her other bodily functions.

Her parents asked the state hospital to remove the tubes and allow her to die at once. The hospital refused to do so without a court order.

Her parents petitioned a Missouri court. The court granted the order on the ground that it was in Cruzan's best interest to be permitted to die with dignity now rather than to live on in an unconscious state.

In a 5-4 vote, the U.S. Supreme Court denied that Cruzan had a constitutional right that could be exercised by her parents in these circumstances.

Cruzan's parents petitioned the lower court that had initially decided in their favor with what they called new evidence. Three more friends of Cruzan had come forward prepared to testify that she had told them she would not want to live as a vegetable, the article said.

This time, the state attorney did not oppose the parents' petition.

On Dec. 14, 1990, the lower court granted the parent's petition. Within a few days feeding and hydration were stopped.

Cruzan was given medication to prevent pain. She died on Dec. 26, 1990.

Southern Illinois University at Carbondale

Program offers students at SIUC chance to study in other countries

By Angela L. Hyland
International Writer

When Heather Moxon, a senior in history, signed up for the study abroad program, she planned to return to Carbondale after one semester. She ended up staying in Europe the entire year and now is making plans to return for graduate study.

By the end of the first semester abroad, students have just started getting comfortable with the language, Moxon said. Students have gotten used to the people and the system, and they want to be able to travel and really get the full effect of the program.

International Programs and Services offers opportunities to study in countries around the world. Students may enroll in the programs for a semester or a year.

A new program began this year that will enable students to take college classes in Austria. The Austrian program is unique because it is one of only two foreign countries where an SIUC campus is located. This is the first year the program has been offered.

Thomas Saville, coordinator of the study abroad program, said the program has many benefits.

Employers look favorably upon students who study abroad, he said. They recognize the fact that students were on their own during this time, and see it as a sign of responsibility.

Studying abroad can be beneficial for other reasons as well, Saville said. In recent years, nations have become more tightly integrated.

"People need to be able to function more effectively in a multi-cultural world," he said. "The world isn't dominated by just one country."

Learning the language can be an integral part of gaining an understanding of the people and the culture, Saville said. For many students, however, this can also be one of the most difficult aspects.

Moxon said it took her a while to learn the language when she was in Hungary, but necessity forced her to catch on.

"I picked it up a lot faster because I lived there and needed the language to get around," she said.

Saville said that is common among students studying abroad.

"You can always learn by taking courses, but the most enjoyable way - really, the best way - is to experience it by actually being there," he said. "When you're over here trying to learn the language by taking classes, it's very abstract. Over there, you can take every lesson home with you and use it, so you retain more."

When students are immersed in the language, they receive immediate pay-offs for their study of the language, he said. They are able to see improvements on a regular basis.

While living in the native country, students often develop an interest in the language, Saville said. As a result, even students who had difficulty learning the language in the United States often see an improvement in their grades, he said.

The study abroad program is open to all majors. It is popular among sophomores who want to get the basics out of the way in a different environment, and among seniors who just need the hours, Saville said.

"The program is ideal for students who are essentially done, but who still have eligibility left for financial aid," he said.

Students need not have any prior experience in German to be eligible for the Austrian program, but they are required to take a course of intensive study in the language while they are there. This class enables students to effectively interact within the culture.

Classes are often much more specific in Europe, Moxon said, but they also can be more informal than in the United States.

"There was a lot less pressure," she said. "The classes were smaller, and you could develop a good relationship with instructors."

This made it much easier to learn and ask questions, Moxon said.

"If you're in a big lecture hall, you usually don't want to stop and ask questions, and you can't always talk to the instructor after class," she said.

Not everything that she learned took place in school, Moxon said. Living in a foreign country affected not only the way she viewed that area, but also the way she thought of the United States.

"The United States has always just been the place where I lived," Moxon said. "I never really thought much about it. Over there, I was able to see the U.S. the way Eastern Europeans perceive it. They pointed out a lot of things I always took for granted."

Campfire wipes out homes, neighborhood left charred

Los Angeles Times

A campfire that jumped out of control wiped out 20 houses and 12 apartment units in an affluent hillside neighborhood in Wenatchee, Wash., over the weekend.

Strong winds of up to 60 mph fanned the flames Saturday as they also charred 3,500 acres of grass and sagebrush.

But the winds died down on Sunday and the blaze was contained by noon. No deaths or serious injuries were reported in the community of 22,000 people, about 100 miles east of Seattle.

Some 500 firefighters battled the blaze, which apparently started when three boys built an illegal campfire on a hillside in the Casterlock area of western Wenatchee, said Greg Thayer, a spokesman for the Fire Control Center.

He said the wind quickly blew the flames down the hill to the Rocklin Place subdivision.

The boys were interviewed by authorities and released to their parents.

Scott Lowers, a spokesman for the Chelan County Department of Emergency Management, said the fire scene "looks like a war zone. In some areas there is absolutely nothing left."

Externship program offered

Students spend week with alumni sponsors in chosen field

By Michael T. Kuciak
General Assignment Writer

The SIUC extern program is taking applications for the School of Social Work for the first time Thursday at the Student Alumni Council offices.

Mary Davidson, director of the School of Social Work, said the school has been active with the alumni council for two years as a constituency society and wanted to take part in the extern program.

"We feel it is a worthwhile effort and an opportunity to give social work students a feel for the professional world," Davidson said.

The extern program allows students to spend the week of spring break with SIUC alumni sponsors working in the same field.

Dave Dolakowski, 21, a senior in biological science, said the extern program gives alumni sponsors a chance to share their professional experiences.

"Externs can show the sponsors' careers to find out what it is really like to work in their field," Dolakowski said. "The opportunity allows for students to clarify career objectives."

He said sponsors and students contact each other by letter or phone before spring break to discuss what the externs will do during the week, objectives and whether the sponsor can provide room and board accommodations.

The 1992 program includes sponsors belonging to Fortunes 500 companies and federal and state government agencies, Dolakowski said. Davidson said the School of Social Work has students placed in 122 agencies across the nation.

"We are trying to get sponsors in congressional offices," Davidson said. "We have already contacted 25 possible extern sights."

Externships are offered for the colleges of Agriculture, Business and Administration, Communications and Fine Arts, Engineering, Liberal Arts and Science.

Dolakowski said the Student Alumni Council, the student component of SIUC Alumni Association that administers the extern program, hopes to see a 25 percent increase over last year's 169 applications for extern positions.

hear the voices of the powerless, we have to look for them.

"The second element in a response that we would suggest is that we look again at our own history...discover our own roots," he said.

"Thirdly, reach out in reconciliation to those with whom we differ," he said. "We live in a turbulent society in the United States—we have people who hate us because we have more and we have people who hate us because they think we have very little."

If everyone tries to respond this way, there will be cause to celebrate the Quincentennial, he said.

David Werlich, chairman of the SIUC History Department, responded to the lecture.

"In 1492, two worlds came into collision with profound results," he said. "A major area of consequence was demographics—between 1492 and now, population has increased ten-fold. There were, of course, major winners and losers of the demographic exchange."

In another response, Jane Adams, assistant professor of anthropology at SIUC, said although Europe is a small continent, its culture dominates the world.

"We need to watch with some care as people begin to put forth their own identities," she said. "We need to think of what it means to be Euro-American in relation to being African American or Native American."

The third panel member was William Garner, associate professor of political science at SIUC, said the present society is a reflection of the political socialization or learning of the past 500 years, but it is no excuse for the unfair behavior of present society.

"To excuse behavior, inequitable, unjust, greedy, wasteful, dysfunctional, sinful, whatever adjective you want to use, behavior in 1992, on the basis of it being a reflection of our own times, is just as foolish as excusing the behavior of 1492 because somehow Saint Mathew had not sunk in," he said.

The fourth panel response was given by Odilia Leal-McBride, assistant professor of foreign language and literature at SIUC.

She was able to give a slightly different perspective because she is from South America.

Sheffield faces pressures in pursuit of triple crown

Los Angeles Times

SAN DIEGO — Gary Sheffield sits in his living room, surrounded by barren walls, two suitcases, a storage trunk, a crumpled bag of potato chips and a baseball cap.

His two daughters and girlfriend have left town. The moving van has started hauling his two Mercedes-Benzes to Florida. The rental furniture will be retrieved Monday.

He's alone now, secluded in his home with the lights dimmed, a cellular phone his only means of communication with the outside world.

The cameras aren't flashing in his face here. Reporters aren't talking about Ducky Medwick or any other players in baseball history he's never heard of. Teammates aren't badgering him for autographs, trying to get last-minute souvenirs of their piece of history.

Sheffield lies back and tries to relax. He came to the San Diego Padre organization six months ago with the label of being a troubled malcontent from Milwaukee. He leaves town Monday as San Diego's greatest attraction since Sea World.

"I think I've shocked everyone," Sheffield said. "No one thought I could do this. No one dreamed I could put together a year like this."

"Really, I don't know what more they could want."

Sheffield abruptly stops and closes his eyes, and a tormented look stretches across his face.

Speaking almost in a whisper, Sheffield says: "Well, I do know there's one more thing they want. It's all anybody's talking about. Man, this triple crown stuff has got people crazy."

It wasn't until August that Sheffield was even apprised of the definition of a triple crown. He thought Ducky Medwick, the National League's last triple crown winner in 1937, was a cartoon character.

How was he supposed to know? Gary Antoine Sheffield is only 23 years old. The only baseball history he had ever concerned himself with was uncle Dwight's trading cards—the man known to the rest of the world as New York Mets pitcher Doc Gooden.

Now, after a grueling six weeks in which he has been hounded by reporters, dazed by TV lights and gotten hoarse from interviews, Sheffield is beginning to understand the significance of his pursuit.

Sheffield, the Padres' All-Star third baseman, still lurks in the hunt for baseball infamy with one week remaining in the season. After Sunday's games, he was batting a National League-leading .330 with 33 home runs and 99 RBI. He trails teammate Fred McGriff, league leader in home runs, by one, and Darren Daulton of the Philadelphia Phillies, league leader in RBI, by seven.

There have been only 19 players to finish in the top three in every triple-crown category, New York Yankee first baseman Don Mattingly is the only active player who has won the batting title and RBI title, and he did it in different years.

Sheffield tries to shrug off the stress that encompasses such an achievement, but it's impossible to escape. If reporters aren't reminding him, it's teammates. If not teammates, it's friends. If not friends, family.

While on the road, he has instructed hotel operators to block all calls. The distractions have been unbearable at times, and in Cincinnati last weekend he even resorted to swilling rooms with a friend so no one could find him.

"You try not to put too much stress on your mind," Sheffield said, "but you can't help it. I lay in bed at night thinking about it. It wears you down so much, I wonder how I'm standing."

"You walk to the plate, and it's like you're trying to do three different things at once. You're trying to hit a home run, drive in a run and get a hit all at once."

"To get the triple crown, one hit doesn't do me any good. One hit in a game means I'm struggling."

"I've got to get two hits every night, and one of them has got to drive in runs."

and Santa Clara, referendums to build a new stadium were rejected. So Lurie, having given up trying to sell baseball in a setting more inviting for ice boating, agreed to sell the team, to Tampa-St. Petersburg investors for $115 million.

It echoed Stoneham's moving announcement on Aug. 19, 1957 (despite one dissident on his nine-member board of directors, M. Donald Grant). "The kids? I feel sorry for the kids. But I haven't seen too many of their fathers at the Polo Grounds lately," Stoneham said at the time.

San Francisco, though, isn't about to open its Golden Gate as an exit. The city has staged a last-minute attempt to persuade baseball owners to reject the Florida shift. A group led by Charlotte Hornets owner George Shinn has offered to buy the team and keep it in San Francisco. Mayor Frank Jordan earlier this month presented that proposal to National League president Bill White, and White promised it would be considered on equal terms with the Florida group's plan. That gambit capped a vigorous campaign. It was the only baseball move in San Francisco this summer.

The city filed suit against Lurie, claiming he violated his lease by negotiating to move. Sports agent Leigh Steinberg lobbied prospective investors. A Save Our Giants 800 number was advertised.

on banners over the doors to City Hall. Sketches of a proposed new stadium surfaced in city offices. Weekday rallies were held regularly in public squares, although one reportedly drew only 250 people. The Chamber of Commerce took season ticket orders. Oakland-based Safeway and other corporations made six-figure pledges. Fans fired off thousands of postcards to then-commissioner Fay Vincent (as if he didn't have his own problems).

"We're in the bottom of the ninth with two out and people are rallying," said Frank Jordan Jr., son of the mayor and director of a perhaps not-quite-grassroots organization called the Giants Alliance. "I feel the Giants are going to be here next year."

Where have we heard that before? Among the 11th-hour pitches from New York City officials in 1957 were proposals for a stadium on stilts above a West Side railroad yard or a curiously novel plan for a ballpark in Flushing Meadows in Queens.

Neither could prevent a poignant Polo Grounds farewell 35 years ago Tuesday, before a crowd of 11,606 that included three musicians who played one last chorus of the New York Giants' theme song. One of the last to leave was manager John McGraw's widow, who said, "I still can't believe it. This would have broken John's heart. New York will never be the same."

Pirates beat Cubs 10-3

Zapnews

Kevin Young and Tom Prince drove in two runs each in a four-run fourth inning and Gary Varsho added a three-run homer in the seventh to lift the National League Eastern Division champion Pittsburgh Pirates to a 10-3 rout of the Chicago Cubs Monday.

Young singled in Andy van Slyke and Orlando Merced to tie the game at 2-2 and Prince doubled home Albert Martin and Young. The Pirates continued the assault in the fifth as Orlando Merced singled in Carlos Garcia, Martin's sacrifice fly scored van Slyke and Young singled in Merced for a 7-2 lead. Varsho's fourth homer in the seventh scored John Wehner and Young for a 10-3 advantage.

Young drove in three runs and Merced went 3-for-4 to lead the Pirates' 13-hit attack. Rookie Tim Wakefield and two relievers combined on a five-hitter for Pittsburgh. Wakefield, who raised his record to 7-1, gave up two runs in the first on Ryne Sandberg's 26th homer and another run in the sixth on a sacrifice fly by Mark Grace.

Hall expects to leave NY

Newsday

NEW YORK — Mel Hall, unhappy that New York Yankees management has ignored his contract situation, paraded around the clubhouse before Sunday's home finale talking about how he expects and wants to leave. Hall, removing the nameplate from above his locker, shouted to anyone who would listen: "I'm collecting memorabilia to remember my time with the Yankees."

Hall took everything else out, too, and asked other teammates for more souvenirs. "When I get old, I went to be able to show people that I played for the Yankees," Hall said.

The Yankees are not saying whether they will offer Hall arbitration, but Hall is taking their refusal to negotiate during the season as a sign they won't negotiate after it. Hurt and bitter, Hall said he does not care if they offer him arbitration.

"They had two years to talk to me," Hall said before Sunday's rain-plagued 12-2 loss to the Toronto Blue Jays. "If they talk to me now, I'll tell them to trade me. I'll take less to go elsewhere. I haven't had any fun this year."

Hall did seem to be enjoying himself immensely Sunday, loudly touring the locker room. In a mock ceremony he awarded his nameplate to Danny Tartabull. Tartabull, feigning sadness, replaced Hall's nameplate above the locker. Hall then took a cap that said, "Not!" on it, and placed it over the nameplate.

Hall, the Yankees' MVP in 1991, is hitting .278 with 14 home runs and 76 RBI this year.

Bodine wins NASCAR after holding off Wallace

Zapnews

MARTINSVILLE, Va.— Geoff Bodine took the lead from his brother, Brett, over the final 100 laps and held off Rusty Wallace to win the rain-delayed Goody's 500 NASCAR stock car race Monday.

Bodine, driving a Ford Thunderbird, won for the first time this year and ended a 27-race winless streak. He had last won in October, 1991.

Wallace, in a Pontiac Grand Prix, led early before falling back. He made a late charge over the last 50 laps but was unable to overtake Bodine. Brett Bodine, who led with about 100 laps to go, held on for third and pole sitter Kyle Petty took fourth. Alan Kulwicki finished fifth.

The race was postponed because of rain Sunday.

Creighton 8-5, lost to Iowa State in the second round and then had to forfeit in the third round because Merchant became extremely fatigued. Merchant lost a three and a half hour match to a player from Southwest Missouri in the third round of singles play.

All in all, the Iowa State Invitational was a tough tournament, freshman Andre Goransson said.

"We should have done a lot better. I don't think we have enough confidence yet," he said, "I hope we do better this weekend."

The Salukis next play at the Husker Invitational in Lincoln, Neb. Oct. 2-3.

last place."

O'Malley said part of his discussions with Lasorda will concern Vince Piazza, Lasorda's longtime friend who is a leading member of a group attempting to purchase the San Francisco Giants and move them to St. Petersburg, Fla.

If Piazza's group gains the approval of baseball owners, and if Piazza is in control of the baseball operation, Lasorda would probably join him next season as the Giants' general manager and manager.

"There has been a lot of speculation about Tommy's longtime friend perhaps owning a team. We have not discussed it," O'Malley said. "We will discuss it after the season is over."

O'Malley, whose permission would be needed before Lasorda joins Piazza, did not appear inclined to stand in Lasorda's way.

"It doesn't make any sense to keep someone here who would prefer to be elsewhere," O'Malley said. "If anyone in the organization thinks that change is for the better ... I can't believe we would stand in anyone's way."

Lasorda did not seem concerned about O'Malley's comments.

"I'm sure with all the speculation that is out there, Peter just wants to know what is going on, and wants wrong with that?" Lasorda said. "He probably just wants to know what I want to do."

Lasorda emphasized that he wants no change in his status.

"Sure, I want to still manage here," Lasorda said. "I've got a contract."
