Preface

MANY persons contributed to the making of this edition of the General Catalogue of Bowdoin College and deserve to be acknowledged and thanked.

First are the more than 7,000 alumni and 2,000 survivors of alumni who responded to our requests for information. A 75 percent response from alumni to a detailed, four-page questionnaire is amazing — proving once again the great loyalty of Bowdoin's sons and daughters.

Herbert Ross Brown's delightful essay "Bowdoin at 175" is but another of his many generous contributions to Bowdoin.

The content and scope of this edition are the result of many discussions with my colleagues in the Development Office. I especially wish to thank Vice President C. Warren Ring, who gave generously of his time and insight as we confronted problems of organization; Frederick S. Bartlett '55, for sharing his wide knowledge of data processing; and Dorothy E. Weeks, who conscientiously accepted the responsibility for preparing mailings to the alumni.

The Computing Center, under the direction of Myron W. Curtis '58, also deserves thanks. The sorting, editing, and preparation of magnetic tapes for typesetting was done at Bowdoin at a savings of thousands of dollars.

The staff deserves special acknowledgment, especially Juliette P. Hodgkins, the senior member in terms of service, whose loyalty and devotion to the project were exemplary. At one time or another, the following served as editorial assistants: Janet E. Adams, Carol Back, Susan Gaudreau Bergeron, Donna Dionne, Sibyl W. Haley, Carol B. Hansen, Elizabeth C. Hanson '75, Beatrice Higgins, Robin T. Johnson, Lucy L. Martin, Leigh W. Turner, and Susan Beroz Van Bennekom '75. Maureen Schoolman served a brief term as managing editor during an important time in the project's development. The work of Arnette J. Nelson, assistant to the college editor, and Rachel D. Dutch, her successor, should also be acknowledged.

This is the sixth edition in English (there were twenty-three in Latin) of the General Catalogue. It is the first to list only twentieth-century alumni and officers, and it is the first to carry such detailed biographical sketches. The reader will quickly note a disparity between the biographical sketches of those who responded to the questionnaire and those who did not. For those who did, we have included information about career history, community involvement, awards, publications, and service to Bowdoin — categories not found or as fully developed in past editions. There are some 16,000 entries — about the same as found in the 1950 edition, which covered a period nearly twice the length of the seventy-six years covered in this edition.

It is inevitable that errors are bound to occur in a volume as comprehensive as this one. For them we beg the reader's indulgence.

There is properly no history, only biography.

— RALPH WALDO EMERSON

WHEN Edward Born, editor of this monumental 175th anniversary edition of the General Catalogue, honored me by his invitation to write a prefatory essay, he gave me a wide license. Poignantly aware that a catalogue should be more than an austere repository of precise information about 16,000 Bowdoin men and women, he suggested that by reading between the lines describing their achievements, I might be able to indicate that Bowdoin is an intensely human institution into whose living fabric are woven the careers of all those who have come under her benign influence. In such an impossible task, he urged me to draw upon reminiscences — historical and personal — occasional reflections, and even campus myths and folklore. As the late President Kenneth Sills might have said, "In the main, by-and-large, and on the whole, this massive book is the biography of a college."

Mindful of this broad mandate, it is only fair to warn readers that my remarks are likely to be shamelessly impressionistic, incurably prejudiced, unencumbered by solemn footnotes, and frankly personal. And, if my observations may seem like an ardent love letter rather than an objective appraisal, I plead in extenuation of my sins that it was love at first sight, beginning in the autumn of 1925, and increasing across the incredibly crowded years for more than half a century. Yet I cherish the hope that Huck Finn's tribute to Mark Twain may also apply to what I have written: "... he told the truth mainly. There was things which he stretched, but mainly he told the truth."

Regrettably, however, the present volume containing more than a million words, embodies only a part of the record of a college whose history is nearly coextensive with that of the United States. Since there are no known living alumni who were graduated in classes prior to 1900, even this massive book is limited to the careers of those associated with the College — alumni and officers of government, administration, and instruction — in the first three-quarters of the twentieth century. It is startling evidence of the growth of the College to realize that more than half of Bowdoin's 10,500 living alumni were graduated since the publication of the General Catalogue in 1950. Although their names are conscientiously listed in the alumni directories issued every four years, this book is the first full record of their accomplishments. Both Philip Wilder '23, editor of the indispensable General Catalogue in 1950, and Edward Born '57, his successor, wish that exigencies of space had not prevented them from writing in the graceful narrative form which distinguished the earlier catalogue compiled by Nehemiah Cleaveland, Alpheus Spring Packard, and Henry Leland Chapman. Yet this 175th anniversary edition is heavily freighted with illuminating details of the lives of those who have been influenced by what Bowdoin has taught them and how they have put their education to work by enlisting in the endless quest of what President Joseph McKeen in his inaugural address in 1802 described as "The Common Good." And, as President Sills remarked in 1950, the achievements of Bowdoin alumni are symbols, not only of Bowdoin's influence, but even more by what Bowdoin continues to stand for.

It is hoped that the present sons, and since 1970, the daughters of their College will be tempted to consult earlier editions of the Catalogue to learn of the goodly heritage bequeathed them by Bowdoin in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. Even a casual reading will reveal Bowdoin's deep roots in the history of the young Republic. Its Charter, signed by Samuel Adams in 1794, includes the names of patriots like Elijah Kellogg who was a drummer boy at Bunker Hill and later suffered with General Washington's ragged regiment at Valley Forge. A trustee, Drummer Sewall, commanded a company in Cambridge in 1775. Another, John Chandler, aided in the capture of General Burgoyne. And the College proudly bears the name of a Governor of Massachusetts, and his son, James Bowdoin, friend of Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin, a princely figure and munificent benefactor whose library and art collections remain as tangible evidence of his cultivation and learning as founder and president of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences.

Bowdoin was born out of a realistic relationship between religion and the frontier. The Founders, who petitioned the General Court of Massachusetts for a Charter to establish "a nursery of piety and virtue," foresaw the need of a trained ministry. Their prayer was that Bowdoin might not only train men to be ministers, but that it might train ministers to be men. They also recognized that the survival of political independence must be safeguarded by intellectual independence. Practical men as well as idealists, they knew that to send a boy from the District of Maine to Harvard was an expensive undertaking. The mud was deep and the costs high. If a boy from a humble family could not afford to go to a distant college, the college must come to him. Some measure of Bowdoin's service to its own constituency may be seen in the fact that fifty years after the graduation of the first class, of the 1,626 students who attended Bowdoin, only thirty-three came from beyond the borders of New England. President William DeWitt Hyde was later to declare, "The most sturdy and valuable element of the college community is the poor boy from a humble home in Maine who works his own way." Countless names in Bowdoin's catalogues confirm the truth of his assertion.

Elijah Kellogg, of the Class of 1840, the Harpswell minister and seamen's pastor, whose novels were eagerly read by generations of American boys, exulted, "Poor students are the salvation of the College." And Thomas Brackett Reed, of the Class of 1860, destined to be Speaker of the House of Representatives, testified that his total expenses in his freshman year were only one hundred and eighty-five dollars. "A young man," he said, "who returned to college after a vacation spent in hard work . . . was determined to get the worth of his money." Such a young man, among many others, was Fred Albee who came to Bowdoin in 1895 from the small village of Alna, Maine. In his autobiography, A Surgeon's Fight to Rebuild Men, he recalled in 1943, "Bowdoin was not a rich man's college, but rather typified the struggles of Maine pioneers who built her with indomitable perseverance."

IT WAS no single stamp that Bowdoin gave its graduates. Nathaniel Hawthorne, the greatest of nineteenth-century American novelists; Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, the most popular of our poets; and Franklin Pierce, fourteenth President of the United States, had come from it almost at a single birth in the mid-1820s. Bowdoin men never tire of recounting how many public servants were graduated in the short space of twenty-five years from a college which had less, and seldom more, than a hundred students at a time: a President, seven United States Senators, and fifteen members of the House of Representatives; a Secretary of the Treasury; four Governors, including one from the State of Michigan; a Governor of Liberia in Africa; forty-eight members of the Maine Legislature, two of whom were Speakers of the House; twenty-six members of the State Senate of whom five were elected presidents of that body; twenty-three legislators in other states; eight judges of the superior and supreme courts of New England; twenty-nine college professors; three presidents of sister colleges, including one who headed Dartmouth for thirty-five years, the longest presidential tenure in that institution's long history; a Dean of the Harvard Medical School; and a Commodore of the United States Navy.

To this number from the first twenty-five classes should be added one hundred and twenty teachers in New England schools, twenty-eight principals of schools and academies, and nine school superintendents. Dry statistics these, but not if one remembers that it was a member of the Class of 1861 who prepared William DeWitt Hyde for Exeter, where another Bowdoin teacher, Gideon Soule, had taught for fifty years and served as its principal for thirty-four. Bowdoin's influence on the future President did not end with secondary school. It was Egbert Coffin Smyth, Class of 1848, a professor at the Andover Theological School, impressed by his promising student, who proposed Hyde for the presidency to which he was to devote his life.

These alumni who gladly learned and gladly taught were inspired by the example of Professor William Smyth, the Class of 1822, who used whatever time he could spare from teaching mathematics at Bowdoin to persuading Brunswick citizens to establish a system of graded schools. When he was chided by the Governing Boards for neglecting his classes, he replied bluntly by insisting, "I have felt it of great importance that the College's interests should be identified with those of the common schools of the State." His zeal was shared by Professor Parker Cleaveland, who extended the walls of his narrow Bowdoin classroom to encompass every section of Maine in public lectures on chemistry and mineralogy. His textbook on the latter subject in 1816, the first American mineralogical treatise, ran through sixty editions, was reprinted in England, and was hailed by Goethe in Europe. It is hardly an occasion for surprise that Maine's first Superintendent of Public Instruction was a Bowdoin alumnus or that another became the first President of the University at Orono.

No one who contemplates the work of these teachers can believe that Bowdoin's curriculum in the arts and sciences bred a lack of sympathy with the work-a-day world. Commitment to the Common Good led Cyrus Hamlin, Class of 1834, to found a college in Constantinople, supervise the construction of its building, and later to bake bread for the Crimean Army and wash clothes in army hospitals. Returning to New England, he became President of Middlebury College. Nor was there any softening of the spirit in Admiral Peary's vow "to find a way or make one" in his epic struggles against grinding ice and blinding snow in his efforts to reach the North Pole. Bowdoin earned a right to its polar bear mascot the hard way.

One is tempted to linger over the shining names and crystal moments in this litany of Bowdoin greatness. Such a moment occurred in May 1868 during the impeachment proceedings against Andrew Johnson, when Senator William Pitt Fessenden, a graduate of the College in 1823, braved the savage rage of an overwhelming majority of his Maine constituents by refusing to vote for the resolution. His courage and integrity were matched thirty years later by Thomas Brackett Reed, Class of 1860, Speaker of the House of Representatives, who risked his political future by opposing the popular cry for war with Spain and annexation of the Philippines. Another such defiance of pressure was shown by a third alumnus, Edwin Upton Curtis, of the Class of 1882, during the Boston Police Strike in September, 1919. While Governor Calvin Coolidge wavered in the crisis, it was Curtis, the police commissioner who stood steadfast, thus helping Coolidge on his way to the White House.

IF THERE are any doubts about the value of a liberal education as a prelude to public service, one need only remember the years between 1895 and 1900 the Chief Justice of the United States, Melville Weston Fuller, Class of 1853; William Pierce Frye, Class of 1850, President pro tem of the Senate; and Thomas Reed, Class of 1860, Speaker of the House of Representatives, presided over these branches of government at the same time. Impressive as is such eminence, it constitutes only one justification for the high repute of a college. The Common Good continues to be served by Bowdoin men and women in less-frequented paths and on quiet streets far from the glare of public acclaim.

Almost every Maine village had its family physician like Elijah Daggett, of the Class of 1833 in Waldoboro, or Theodore Jewett, Class of 1834, in South Berwick, the subject of his daughter Sarah's novel, A Country Doctor. These country physicians represent only a small fragment of the 3,600 doctors of medicine who received all or a large part of their training in Adams Hall. Few parishes were without sainted ministers like John Fisk, of the Class of 1837, of Bath; or John Bulfinch, Class of 1850, of Freeport. Godly men, pastors rather than ecclesiastics, no less concerned with their young parishioners' minds than with their moral worth, and as eagle-eyed to speed promising lads on their way to college as were the village school masters.

These sons of the College realized the function of the College as set forth by the first President and reaffirmed by President Hyde in 1885. "Don't forget," he said, "that character is more than learning, conduct more than science, righteousness more than information." Generations of alumni heeded their President's injunction "to make the particular places they occupied, the precise things they did, the outcome and expression of a liberal education in so far it applies to the case in hand."

Their careers, presented here in greater detail than have ever been published in earlier Bowdoin catalogues, reflect profound economic, political, and social changes in the modern world. Indeed, one of these changes is the sophisticated PDP-10 computer which not only helped to make this compilation practicable, but also to preserve for the college archives thousands of items which would have doubled the size of this book. Amid these changes, however, Bowdoin constants remain. The College continues to prepare students for law, medicine, teaching, and theology. Greek, Latin, and mathematics, once the core of the curriculum are taught vigorously, but the courses now offered prepare for government service, business, the creative visual arts, music, biochemistry, the economics of natural resources and environmental quality, the social responsibility and control of industrial organization, strategies for the development of "poor" countries, Afro-American problems, and the sociology of health, race, and ethnicity.

Such subjects — computer programming and micro- and macro-economics are examples — may seem strange, if not bizarre, to pre-World War graduates. As always, the College strives to give its students a knowledge of the civilization of the western world, but now the culture of the eastern world is an important concern. Calvin Stowe, of the Class of 1824, Bowdoin's first professor of natural and revealed religion, would doubtless have been surprised at current courses in Zen Buddhism, Hinduism, mysticism, and the primitive religions of Africans and American Indians. Professor Parker Cleveland, who took all science for his province in the first half of the nineteenth century, would have rubbed his eyes in amazement at the present offerings in biochemistry, biophysics, atomic physics, and solid state electronics. And Longfellow, Bowdoin's pioneering professor of modern languages in 1829, could hardly have foreseen that students in the 1970s would be instructed in Chinese, Portugese, and Russian languages. The old-fashioned professorial chair of rhetoric and oratory soon became a veritable bench, wide enough to accommodate the history, theory, and criticism of film, playwriting, acting, directing, stage design, and all of the arts of the theater.

In contemplating the careers of twentieth-century alumni, one is as deeply impressed by their infinite variety as by the difficulty of doing them full justice in a brief prefatory essay. Many of them entered Bowdoin a few years before and during the Spanish-American War: virtually all of them lived through the Great Depression, two World Wars, and the trauma of conflicts Hot and Cold. Others knew at firsthand the delights and delirium of the Nineteen-twenties and later looked back upon what social historians have labeled as the Apathetic and Rebellious undergraduate generations. In one poignant sense, the overwhelming majority are the heirs of a common memory. Their diplomas, from 1885 to 1952, carry the signatures of only two Bowdoin presidents, Hyde and Sills. And, between 1910 and 1947, they were gently advised and wittily cajoled by only two deans. Few college graduates anywhere have been blessed with so intimate, informal, and inspiring a relationship. Even in the rambunctious 1960s, neither President James Stacy Coles nor Dean Nathaniel Kendrick was compelled to leave his office by way of a fire-escape or to force his passage through a picket line or a group of sit-ins.

An unlicked cub of an instructor, who came to Bowdoin in 1925 from the outer darkness south of the New England line, soon learned that his adopted College wore her distinction with a difference. "Other colleges have certain sameness," wrote George Roy Elliott, a distinguished scholar who adorned the faculties of Amherst and Bowdoin, "but Bowdoin is all herself. She has a place of her own. Only by teaching elsewhere . . . as I have done, can one fully appreciate Bowdoin's special quality."

One precious ingredient in this "difference" is the high quality of the Officers of Government and Instruction. With few exceptions, the members of the Boards of Trustees and Overseers earned their degrees at Bowdoin. They hold their semi-annual meetings on the campus where they frequently drop in on classes. There is no absentee landlordism in college governance. Those serving on the Committee on Educational Policy have included — to cite a few examples — a celebrated medieval historian; the author of authoritative books on Beowulf, Chaucer, and Shakespeare; the presidents of several sister colleges; professors of such diverse subjects as nuclear physics, business administration, biblical literature, and international relations. Among their fellow officers of the Boards during the last half century were a Justice of the United States Supreme Court, the editor of the New York Sun, the chairman of both the Atomic Energy and Security Exchange Commissions, a member of the House of Assembly of the Bahamas, the Commissioner of the American Red Cross in England in the First World War and of all Europe in the second, United States Senators from Maine and Ohio, a dean of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Mayor LaGuardia's Commissioner of Correction in New York, the Moderator of the American Unitarian Association, and senior partners of eminent law firms in New York, Washington, Boston, Cleveland, Portland, and Minneapolis.

The wise governance of such Trustees and Overseers may explain why the Bowdoin faculty has rarely, if ever, thought of itself in an "adversary relationship" with its "employers," or worried about the concept of "permanent tenure." It is significant that such a concept, always implied and respected, but not formally adopted, was not made statutory until 1950, yet the national president of the American Association of University Professors taught happily at Bowdoin from 1930 until his retirement in 1959.

The distinction of the faculty, amply confirmed by their attainments recorded in this Catalogue, suggests why a tradition of great teaching and sound scholarship has always been regarded by the sons of the College as Bowdoin's chief glory. Among the teachers in the twentieth century, many of long tenure who died before the printing of this record, only a few may be cited, but grateful alumni will readily add to the list: the scholarly poet, Henry Johnson, translator of The Divine Comedy; the urbane Henry Leland Chapman in English literature; the sturdy William Albion Moody in mathematics; the omni-competent physicist, Charles Clifford Hutchins; the stalwart Franklin Clement Robinson in chemistry; the eloquent Wilmot Brookings Mitchell in rhetoric and oratory; the alert Roscoe Billings Ham in German; the sensitive critic and Shakespearean scholar, George Roy Elliott; the classicists Paul Nixon, editor of Plautus, and Stanley Barney Smith in Latin; Orren Chalmer Hormell, in government; Stanley Perkins Chase, translator of The Pearl, in English literature; Frederic E.T. Tillotson in music; Alfred Otto Gross, ornithologist; Charles Harold Livingston, in French language and literature; the historians, Thomas Curtis Van Cleve and Edward Chase Kirkland, widely acclaimed for their authoritative books on the Middle Ages and on American economic life; Robert Peter Tristram Coffin, Pulitzer Prize poet, essayist and novelist; and Athern Park Daggett, in government, the acting president of the College in 1967-68.

Their successors in the active faculty today, many of whom owe their appointments to the discernment of those listed in the preceding paragraph, are notable for their devotion, not only to their respective disciplines, but also to the students in their classes and to the College they serve. The primacy of the scholar-teacher is the oldest and most viable of Bowdoin traditions. Although the present faculty includes specialists whose books receive national recognition and whose texts are widely adopted at other institutions, Bowdoin professors are not committed to undue specialization; their dedication to the spirit of learning saves undergraduates from the folly of affecting to be scholars before they have learned how to be students.

A BRAVER man than the writer of this skimble-skamble sketch would do well to hesitate before singling out for particular mention the accomplishments of Bowdoin alumni since the turn of the twentieth century. Their numbers are legion. Yet no one who has watched fifty-two academic processions wend their lordly way at commencement can be unaware of their achievements personally or heard them celebrated in song and story.

Readers of the biographical summaries in this volume will encounter the names of twenty Rhodes Scholars, one of whom came to Bowdoin from the small fishing village of Machiasport. Another, the tenth President of Bowdoin, is one of the few Americans to teach British history at Oxford University. This gallant band of scholars also includes members of Congress, a General Counsel for the United States Department of Defense, a brilliant law clerk to United States Supreme Court Justices, and a renowned Maine poet who made the nation familiar with the scent of bayberry and the scream of seagulls.

The College which sent into service in the Civil War a greater number of men in proportion to its size than any other college in the nation, including a Congressional Medalist of Honor, was no less responsive to national crises in the twentieth century. Among those responding to their country's call in 1941 was a member of the Class of 1913 who, at the age of fifty, resigned his professorship at the University of Chicago to enlist as a private in the Marine Corps, was seriously wounded on Okinawa, and later elected to the United States Senate where he served with extraordinary distinction for eighteen years. And a member of the Class of 1941, currently President of the Board of Overseers, won the Congressional Medal of Honor for gallantry in the South Pacific. Patriotism no less ardent led a member of the Class of 1935 to enlist in the French Army in 1939, winning the Croix de Guerre, and later to join the British Ambulance Corps in Africa before serving his own country on important missions in Europe, India and Madagascar.

This General Catalogue, as its Editor has observed, offers an admirable opportunity for Bowdoin alumni of different college generations to become acquainted with each other. If the biographical data are read with a harvesting eye, those who scan the pages will be rewarded in unexpected ways. Such a scrutiny may tempt a reader to wonder whether the cum laude graduate in the Class of 1934, a pawky individualist whose Emersonian contempt for badges compelled him to resign from Phi Beta Kappa, may have influenced a contemporary who chose to live and die as a hermit in the Vermont hills. One may also speculate pleasantly whether the graduate who worked for a street railway as a conductor in 1903-05, and another who managed a trolley car company in Skowhegan, 1902-28, ever discussed transportation problems at reunion dinners with the member of the Class of 1914 who was President of the European and North American Railway. Problems of another kind doubtless served as conversation pieces when two contemporaries, who studied municipal government at Bowdoin from 1909 to 1912 discussed their careers as mayors of Cleveland, Ohio, and of Old Town, Maine.

Curious juxtapositions abound. Of a trio of classmates in 1896, one became a professional baseball player, another the chief executive of the cosmopolitan city of Shanghai, and the third a gold prospector knighted by George VI. It is not unlikely that the graduate in 1930, a Division Chief in the Library of Congress, was unaware that a classmate, the first black man to live in the White House, was serving nearby as administrative aide to President Eisenhower on racial problems. And it is a certainty that both these members of the Class of 1930 admired the high expertise of a third member of the same class who headed the African Unit in the Secretariat of the United Nations. Moreover, there is not a shred of doubt that an early love of the sea and ships, shared by two college contemporaries born in Thomaston, Maine, led them eventually to become leading admiralty lawyers in Boston and New York. The sea also united Bowdoin men in tragic and untimely death: one alumnus lost his life on the ill-fated S.S. Portland off the Massachusetts coast in 1898; another went down with the Titanic in 1911; and a third, the winner of the General Pershing Sword as first man in his West Point class, died on a Japanese prison ship in 1945.

IF THERE were such a strange volume as an academic version of the Guinness Book of Records, Bowdoin alumni might ask what other college can boast of two Phi Beta Kappa graduates in the same undergraduate generation who had the temerity to oppose each other in a presidential election? And the same mythical book of curiosities might include the careers of two members of a class of sixty-six men, both of whom were graduates summa cum laude in 1909, ran successfully for the United States Senate from Maine and Ohio in 1941, and only a few years later were able to welcome to the Capitol a fellow alumnus, a Senator from Illinois. This Catalogue is studied with titillating items. Not the least of these is the possibility that a famous member of the Class of 1916, noted for two pioneering studies of the sex habits of his fellow Americans, may have been dreaming of things to come when he contributed an undergraduate essay to The Quill on love life among the flowers.

Readers seeking further evidence of Bowdoin's "special quality" will not need to turn many pages to find it. The presence of three members of Phi Beta Kappa in the starting line-up of the state championship football team in 1935 may not be attributed to a happy accident. Nor is the election of two Rhodes Scholars in the same year the College had a championship hockey team, unassisted by Canadians. There are other examples galore. One should not be surprised to learn that a Civil War veteran returned to Bowdoin to complete his work for the degree in 1912, or that students in 1975 were living in a residence named in memory of a sturdy Mere Point farmer who, among other gifts to the College, contributed a fat pig to the Sesquicentennial Fund in 1952.

Although each biographical entry has an intense human interest of its own, only a few may be mentioned here. One of these, a member of the Class of 1910, whose promising career as a teacher ended in a hero's death at Chateau Thierry an hour before the Armistice in 1918. Another soldier, a Phi Beta Kappa graduate in 1917 and poet of unfulfilled renown, died in action in Belleau Woods, carrying a mud-stained copy of the Oxford Book of English Verse in his pocket. Bowdoin men have heroes' graves in Pearl Harbor and on Peleliu Island in the South Pacific. Service of another kind is found in the career of a member of the Class of 1901, then Bowdoin's dean, who accepted Woodrow Wilson's invitation to run for the United States Senate in 1916 as a Democrat from Maine where devotion to that political party was regarded as a mild form of insanity. Certainly a college cannot be accused of holding at arm's length public service when it counts among its sons a member of the Class of 1962 whose integrity and nonpartisanship during the deliberations of the House Judiciary Committee in 1973 commanded the respect of the nation.

Although not many beneficiaries of a liberal education have been able to accept President Hyde's invitation to be at home in all lands and all ages, quite a few of them came close. Admiral Peary carried his country's flag to the North Pole, and members of the Classes of 1923 and 1931 made themselves at home in Antarctica, while a 1907 graduate taught Eskimos and Indians in Alaska where he served under the quaint title of "Superintendent of Schools and Reindeer." Another alumnus, Class of 1898, the intrepid commander of the schooner Bowdoin, not only enriched the Peary-MacMillan Museum by his gifts of Eskimo art, but founded a Moravian school in Labrador. Bowdoin's interest in the polar regions goes back to 1869, when Paul Chadbourne, professor of natural history, captained a band of students on a voyage following the route taken by the Norsemen as far north as Godhaab.

PROUD of her past, Bowdoin is not ruled by it. Yet her graduates in the twentieth century are maintaining the tradition in journalism begun by Seba Smith, of the Class of 1819, first of the Yankee humorists and cracker-box philosophers to captivate a nation of readers. A latter-day master of homespun wisdom, who began his career as a columnist in The Orient, since his graduation in 1931, has become the author of a dozen books blending nostalgia spiced with downeast wit and lingo. Bowdoin men's contribution to journalism did not stop with the fifty-year span of Edward Page Mitchell's brilliant editorship of the New York Sun. In 1946 the Pulitzer Prize was awarded to Hodding Carter, of the Class of 1927, for his fearless editorials against the intolerance of Governor Huey Long in Louisiana and Senator Bilbo in Mississippi. Southern by birth and heritage, Carter continued his fight for racial understanding during his editorship of Stars and Stripes and in his eloquent novel, The Winds of Fear.

Many of the biographical entries in this Catalogue indicate there is more than a casual relationship between a liberal education and serious participation in extracurricular activities to subsequent alumni careers. James Bassett, director of the editorial pages and managing editor of the Los Angeles Times, received his first training on The Orient in the early 1930s. Robley Wilson, currently the editor of The North American Review, edited The Quill. Among other alumni for whom campus activities were preludes to later renown are Charles Ireland, Class of 1942, the late president of CBS; John Rich, Class of 1939, the chief of NBC's News Bureau in Japan, and the late Kendall Niven, Class of 1948, astute political interviewer for the Public Broadcasting System.

The same strong link exists between undergraduate interest in dramatics and a score of alumni careers in the theater as actors, playwrights, and stage designers. The late Albert Ecker, Class of 1926, known professionally as Albert van Dekker, starred in a dozen Broadway productions, including The Death of a Salesman and A Man for All Seasons, before playing in cinema and television. A college contemporary, George Quinby, returned to Bowdoin as director of dramatics in 1934 after directing the Savannah Town Theater, and later stage-managing Grand Hotel and Double Door in New York. The present director of Pickard Theater, Ray Rutan, Class of 1951, brought to his position ripe experience as a stage designer in New York. The length of a long playbill would be necessary to list the many-sided careers of graduates whose first theatrical work was with Masque and Gown. Carlyle de Suze, Class of 1938, enchants a New England-wide audience daily with his inimitable broadcasts from WBZ in Boston. Others include Charles Mergendahl, Class of 1941, the writer-editor of a television series for Kraft Theater, and whose popular novel, The Bramble Bush, was adapted for the cinema starring Richard Burton; James Bassett, Class of 1934, author of Harm's Way and its motion-picture version; and Arthur Stratton, Class of 1935, novelist and author of One Man's India, The Great Red Island, and Sinan. The bond between literary interests and later careers is revealed in the editorial expertise of Burroughs Mitchell, Class of 1936, vice-president of Charles Scribner's Sons; Arthur Wang, Class of 1940, founder and publisher of Dramabooks; John Schaffner, Class of 1944, eminent literary agent; and Vance Bourjaily, Class of 1944, novelist and TV playwright, co-founder and editor of Discovery, and a member of the faculty of the Writer's Workshop at the University of Iowa.

Since Bowdoin is in her sons whose accomplishments are recorded in the following pages, it would be an impertinence for me to detain readers on the threshold of this Bowdoin book. Yet the teasing question remains: what are the qualities of their college education which contributed, at least in some measure, to their work in the larger world beyond the campus gates?

Some of these "special qualities" have already been cited in this essay. Others include a vital sense of community and an intimacy of size. Despite Bowdoin's growth from a small college of a few hundred students in the nineteenth century to its present enrollment of thirteen hundred and fifty men and women, the College prefers to weigh students rather than to count them. It is committed to preserving a place where neither the teacher nor the student will ever be a forgotten man or woman. Numbers are not, as President Sills remarked, the ultimate test. Administrative duties and problems have not prevented its president and deans from teaching. Undergraduates in 1977 are still privileged to know their administrative officers as teachers and scholars. A sense of "belonging" is intensified by student representation on faculty committees and at meetings of the Governing Boards. Administrators, faculty, and students approach academic problems together.

Bowdoin maintains its pride in being "all herself" and occupying "a place all her own" by its tradition of orderly change. Unafraid of "the vehemence of novelty," and ready to break with the past, the College continues to see its mission to meet the changing needs of the times. Heartening examples of such boldness led Bowdoin to abandon her excellent, century-old Medical School in 1920, and in 1881 its ten-year experiment with courses in civil engineering when its able professor was wooed away by the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. In both these instances, the Governing Boards and faculty believed that professional training in these areas could be achieved more effectively elsewhere, and that Bowdoin should concentrate her resources on the liberal arts and sciences. And in 1967, despite cogent arguments for expanding the curriculum to include graduate studies, inspired in part by the highly respected summer courses leading to the A.M. in mathematics, directed by the late Professor Dan Christie, Class of 1937, the College voted to return to its original function as an undergraduate institution. The same considered judgment persuaded all components of the College to break with its former "monastic" policy as an all-male institution by admitting women to the student body, a bold decision which would have been vigorously applauded by President Joshua Chamberlain who advocated such a startling "innovation" one hundred years earlier. Since 1970, old women no longer make beds in the dormitories; youthful coeds now "make" Phi Beta Kappa and add to the gaiety and urbanity of undergraduate life.

AT A time when Bowdoin is observing the 175th anniversary of the admission of its first class, those charged with the governance of the College are mindful of President Chamberlain's demand that the curriculum "should face outward towards action, as well as inward towards life." And they see nothing incompatible in this view with President Hyde's ideal for Bowdoin as "a place where small groups of students live together in mutual goodwill, and where great subjects are studied under broad teachers, in a liberty which is not license and in a leisure which is not idleness." President Roger Howell, the tenth in the succession of Bowdoin's leaders, rededicated his College to its historic mission in his inaugural address in 1969 by asserting "that the best way to preserve the continuity of valued things and systems is to provide the means for their continuing change."

The alumni whose careers are recorded in this book have witnessed their College strive to serve the Common Good amid the tensions between tradition and innovation, between continuity and change. They have lived in hope-haunted halls where the centuries meet. And their hearts will surely respond to the words uttered in 1855 by Nathan Lord, of the Class of 1809, when he defined the relationship of alumni to their Alma Mater: "You ask me to show cause why Bowdoin should continue to have favor of her sons. My answer is a short one, — because Bowdoin is in her sons. There is no Bowdoin without them. They have made her what she is, and they constitute good and sufficient reasons why she should be sustained."

Key to Biographical Entries

BIOGRAPHIES in this edition are arranged alphabetically by class if the subject is an alumnus of Bowdoin or the Medical School of Maine, alphabetically by year the degree was awarded if the subject holds an earned master's degree or honorary degree from Bowdoin, and alphabetically if the subject is an officer of government, administration or instruction.

With the exception of Presidents of the College, full information on each individual appears only once, with cross-references provided in appropriate cases. Thus, the name of one member of the Class of 1915 will also be found in the listings "Officers of Government," "Officers of Administration and Instruction," and "Honorary Degree Recipients" with the notation "A.B. 1915."

An asterisk (*) following a biographical sketch indicates that the information in the sketch was derived from a Personal Data Form completed and returned by the subject or, in the case of a deceased individual, the information was checked by one or more survivors. Individuals who completed and returned Personal Data Forms were given the opportunity to approve a draft of their biographical sketch before it was sent to the printers.

Biographical information (see example below) is arranged in the following sequence:

1. Bowdoin degree and academic honors; if non-graduate, years studied at Bowdoin.
2. Earned advanced degrees, institutions granting them, years awarded.
3. Honorary degrees, institutions granting them, years awarded.
4. Bowdoin social fraternity.
5. Service to Bowdoin as Class Agent, Alumni Council Member-at-Large, Overseer, Trustee, or major fund-raising campaign worker.
6. Nondegree awards received from Bowdoin (Distinguished Bowdoin Educator, Alumni Award for Faculty and Staff, Alumni Service Award, Bowdoin Prize).
7. Occupation.
8. Place and date of birth.
9. Other personal information: father's name and class (if a Bowdoin alumnus); name of spouse and class (if alumnus or alumna); date of marriage; first name of each child and class (if alumnus or alumna).
10. Career history (job title, name of firm, location of firm, inclusive dates of service).
11. Career-related, civic, and religious activities.
12. Elected and appointed public offices.
13. Military service and awards.
14. Important civilian awards.
15. Publications, edited or written (the term "contbr." is used to indicate the author of journal or magazine articles).
16. Residence or place and date of death.

Here is the biographical entry of a hypothetical alumnus. Numbers in circles refer to the categories of information listed above:
