More than $140,000 in scholarship aid for the academic year 1956-57 has been granted to 226 Bowdoin undergraduates. In all, better than 27% of the total undergraduate body of approximately 825 is receiving such aid.

Included among the scholarship recipients are 166 upperclassmen, 48 members of the entering freshman class, and twelve Bowdoin Plan students.

Bowdoin is also providing for its students during the current year more than $100,000 in the form of loans and undergraduate employment on the campus.

The forty-eight freshmen include eight valedictorians and three salutatorians as well as captains of preparatory school teams in swimming, basketball, track, football, riflery, wrestling, baseball, and cross country. Half of the men were class officers.

Commenting recently on the scholarship aid program, President James S. Coles stressed "the fine and dignified manner in which assistance is given and received at Bowdoin. It is given by the College as part of its obligation to maintain the basic American concept of equality of opportunity for all, and the continuance of the freedom of our land deriving from education for all. It is accepted by Bowdoin students as an opportunity for them to achieve for themselves the full reward of their own effort, and thus go on to a life of freedom, courage, and service."

Publication of lists like these is a constant reminder that the love of Bowdoin by her friends in the past and present is helping materially in Bowdoin's training of men for good citizenship in the future.

The list of scholarship recipients in the Class of 1960 is given below.

Alumni of Bowdoin —

Time and time again we hear said that the Bowdoin Alumni constitute one of the College's greatest assets. That this is true is more than amply proved, through the lives led by Bowdoin men demonstrating their responsibility as citizens, through their interest in and work for the College, and by their continuing support through the Alumni Fund of the current operating budget of the College.

Last year the Alumni Fund paid in excess of $77,000.00 of Bowdoin's current operating expenses. This amount was more than half of all gifts received by the College during the year for current purposes, and at the rate of return received on the College Endowment, more than two million dollars would have to be invested at current market values to yield equivalent income. At a time when Bowdoin's endowment is less than that of the small men's colleges with which she is so closely competitive, the significance of this strong support of current operations is very great indeed.

During the next decade, educators anticipate a "break-through" in higher education, and the obligations of American citizenship and international responsibilities of college graduates, comparable in its connotations to those associated with the break-through of the sound barrier by the jet airplane. As the College enters this critical period, she can be thankful for the support she will find in her alumni, as she is thankful today for the inestimable benefits enjoyed from the support of Alumni in the past, and the enduring support of each of you, as Alumni of the present.

Faithfully yours,

THE COVER

This scene will be familiar to many Bowdoin men, particularly to older alumni. The picture was taken, we think, around 1890 or 1895. It shows the old Delta, where many a Bowdoin man used to play hockey, baseball, or football, and where Sills Hall and Cleaveland Hall are now located. At the time of the picture, Adams Hall, behind the stand, housed the Maine Medical School.

THE BOWDOIN ALUMNUS is no longer a quarterly. With this first issue of Volume 31, our magazine becomes a bi-monthly. Bowdoin men will receive a college message six times a year instead of four. The Alumni Council, which voted the change, hopes that the more frequent word from the campus will be welcomed and that it will contribute to our greater service to Bowdoin.

Perley Smith Turner

Perley Smith Turner, Professor of Education at Bowdoin, where he had been a member of the faculty since 1946, passed on at the Brunswick Community Hospital on Sunday, September 2, at the age of 60. He had been ill since February.

Born February 16, 1896, in Montville, Professor Turner was the son of George McClellan and Mae Smith Turner. He was graduated in 1915 from Cony High School in Augusta, then entered Bowdoin, where he was a member of the varsity track and football teams, and was elected president of the sophomore class. He was also president of Zeta Psi fraternity and was the first recipient, in 1921, of the Lucien Howe Award, given "to that member of the Senior Class who, during his college course, by example and influence has shown the highest qualities of conduct and character."

He was graduated from Bowdoin in 1921 as a member of the Class of 1919 and served as marshal for the seniors. During World War I he served for eighteen months as a first lieutenant in the Army and was in command of Battery D of the 351st Field Artillery, American Expeditionary Forces. Following the War he attended the Colorado School of Mines for a year before returning to complete work for his Bowdoin degree. At Colorado he acquired a life-long interest in geology.

In 1920 Professor Turner was selected to the All-Maine Football Team as a full-back. As a sophomore he had played left tackle. Never of rugged build, he delighted in the rough play of that day. On the track team he was a star quarter and half miler for Coach Jack Magee. At one time he held the 440 yard run indoor record at Bowdoin.

Following graduation Professor Turner taught at Edward Little High School, where he was submaster and director of athletics. In 1924 he became principal at Skowhegan High School, where he remained for ten years. He left Skowhegan in 1934 to become principal at Cape Elizabeth High School, then two years later returned to Edward Little as principal.

In 1941 Professor Turner was named superintendent of schools in Sanford, where he remained until 1946, when he was appointed Associate Professor of Education at Bowdoin. He was promoted to the rank of full professor in June of 1952.

He attended summer sessions at Columbia University for several years and in 1940 was awarded a master of arts degree. He later did additional graduate work at Boston University and Harvard. In 1927-28 he was president of the Maine

State Principals' Association. A member of the Maine Teachers' Association for thirty-five years, he served on many of its committees. Since 1936 he had been a member of the October Conference on Educational Opinion, held each year at Crawford Notch, N. H. This group includes New England educators on the secondary, college, and state levels.

An active Rotarian for many years, Professor Turner was in 1944-45 Governor of the 193rd District of Rotary International. In Brunswick he was a member of the building committee of the First Parish Church and was president of its Men's Club as well as a member of the religious education committee. He was chairman of the house-to-house canvass of the Brunswick Community Chest in 1948-49.

Perley S. Turner, 1896-1956

Professor Turner was co-ordinator of the Maine Branch of the New England School Development Council from 1950 to 1954. In the spring of 1955 at the fourth annual Conference of Maine High School Principals and Headmasters, held at Waterville, he was chairman of a group concerned with overemphasis on athletic competition at the expense of schools' intellectual offerings.

At Bowdoin he taught courses in the history of education, the principles of secondary education, educational psychology, the responsibilities of the New England high school principal, and the practice of teaching in secondary schools. He was a member of the faculty committees on athletics and preparatory schools and admissions. He was faculty advisor to Zeta Psi fraternity and the Bowdoin Christian Association for many years. A Director of the Bowdoin Alumni Fund from 1942 until 1945, he also served as a Class Agent in the Fund for some seven years.

In Sanford Professor Turner was head of the Town's salvage committee and was instrumental in the collection of tons of salvage during the war years, when rubber, iron, paper, and rags were desperately needed. He was a director of the Postwar Planning Committee, a director of the YMCA, and Secretary of the Board of Trustees and a member of the Executive Board of the Henrietta D. Goodall Hospital.

On June 27, 1922, Professor Turner was married to Miss Helen Enemark of Portland, who survives him, as does their daughter, Patricia Anne, now Mrs. Thomas E. Myers of East Vassalboro. Other survivors include a sister, Mrs. James W. Curry of Portland; and three half-brothers, Lester Turner of East Eddington, Russell Turner of Hartford, Conn., and Elmer Steeves of Wakefield, Mass. A son, David Erskine Turner, passed on in 1930.

Pick Turner was always willing to take on another assignment for his College, Rotary, his town, or his church. He was constantly performing unsung committee service and frequently attended educational conferences throughout the East representing Bowdoin.

His was a life dedicated and devoted to the cause of education, particularly education on a secondary school level in Maine. Not only did he serve for years in the ranks as teacher, submaster, coach, athletic director, principal, and superintendent of schools, but he also continued during the past decade at Bowdoin to steer good men into a career of teaching whenever he felt it would be the best thing for everybody involved — the student, the school, and the children.

Friends, associates, and former students will remember Pick Turner best for his wry humor combined with an infectious laugh; for his love of Bowdoin, his summer home at East Parsonsfield, old wood and old furniture, his Brunswick home on Stanwood Street; and, best of all, for his always good and kindly companionship.

My three children will remember him best for the time he and his wife, Helen, came upstairs to say good night to them. Pick burst into the room with his hat pulled down over his eyes and sent them into gales of laughter. This was typical of the man — everywhere he went he brought happiness and warmth and friendship. When Pete, who is six, heard the sad news that Sunday afternoon a few weeks ago, he said, "Oh, gee, that's too bad. He's the man who put his hat on funny last winter in the bedroom and made us all laugh. He was a good man."

He was a good man.

Bowdoin's 155th Gets Under Way

On Monday morning, September 17, 208 freshmen, members of the Class of 1960, started registering as Bowdoin began its 155th academic year. The tone of the year to come was set by the address given at the opening Chapel service two days later by President James S. Coles. He said upon that occasion, "As Bowdoin students, and as educated men, although you are urged to learn and to read, the full fruition of Bowdoin's effort and yours will come as you take advantage of your study and your training, and thus justify the faith we have placed in you."

"Members of the Bowdoin faculty," Dr. Coles declared, "are cherished for their interest in students and their ability to help each of them as an individual, as well as for their intellectual and scholarly attainments. Bowdoin is unique in many ways, but one of the ways in which it is most unique is in the intimate relation between the faculty and students and the individual attention which can be given these students by the faculty."

It looks like a vigorous, healthy year. Total registration was expected to exceed 825 when the last stragglers arrived in Brunswick. By the time first classes got under way on September 20, 820 men were in residence. The total was swelled to this number, the highest in recent years, by returning servicemen.

Included in the freshman class are men from nineteen states, the District of Columbia, and Canada. Massachusetts leads with 65, while Maine has 55. Other states represented are Connecticut with 19, New York 18, Pennsylvania 10, Rhode Island 8, New Jersey 7, New Hampshire 6. There are two freshmen each from Delaware, Maryland, Michigan, Ohio, Virginia, Wisconsin, and Canada, and one man each from Arkansas, Colorado, the District of Columbia, Florida, Illinois, and Vermont.

In addition to the members of the Class of 1960, twelve foreign students are in residence this year under the now famous Bowdoin Plan, by which their expenses are shared by the College and the undergraduate fraternity chapters. The men include Junghi Ahn and In Sup Yuin of Seoul, Korea; Peter Blattner of Basel, Switzerland; Alain Chevalier of Tours, France; Ulrich Fanger of Braunschweig, Germany; Harry Hedenstedt of Nykoping, Sweden; Emile Jurgens of Nijmegen, the Netherlands; Johannes Kjørven of Oslo, Norway; George Kotsonis of Pyrgos, Greece; Wolfgang Netolitzky of Bludenz, Austria; Bernardo Ortiz de Montellano of San Luis Potosi, Mexico; and Horst Widersich of Wittlingen, Germany.

Since the Bowdoin Plan was inaugurated in the spring of 1947, eighty-six different foreign students have benefited from its provisions, some for one year, some for as many as four. Students have come from twenty-six different countries.

Each new academic year brings inevitable changes in the faculty ranks at Bowdoin. New young instructors take over from teachers of many years of service who have retired. Others replace men who have gone on to positions at Harvard or Yale or other large schools. This year was no exception, with eleven new members of the faculty in the receiving line at 85 Federal Street with President and Mrs. Coles on the evening of September 21 for the traditional President's Reception.

Charles Mitchell of London, England, is Visiting Professor of the History of Art on the Tallman Foundation for the fall semester, the twenty-fourth in that distinguished series. Since 1945 he has been Lecturer at the Warburg Institute of the University of London.

Dr. Paul G. Darling of Pittsburgh, Pa., has been appointed Associate Professor of Economics. A native of Pleasantville, N. Y., he graduated from Yale in 1937 and has a doctor of philosophy degree from Columbia.

Lt. Col. Louis P. McCuller of Gainesville, Fla., has joined the staff of the Reserve Officers Training Corps unit at Bowdoin as Assistant Professor of Military Science and Tactics. A graduate of the University of Florida, he has been in the Army since 1941.

Giulio Pontecorvo, Assistant Professor of Economics, graduated from Dartmouth in 1946 and holds a master of commercial science degree, granted in 1947 by the Amos Tuck School. He has taught at the University of California and the University of Colorado School of Business.

Assistant Professor of Biology Marc W. Bodine jr. of Williamsport, Pa., is the first man to teach that subject at Bowdoin in more than fifteen years. A graduate of Princeton in 1951, he has a Ph.D. degree from Columbia.

Peter H. Batchelder of Marlow, N. H., is serving as Instructor in German. He is a graduate of Dartmouth in 1948, with advanced work at Harvard and the Universities of Heidelberg and Freiburg in Germany.

Peter Hoff of Portsmouth, N. H., is Instructor in Spanish. A native of Germany, he came to the United States in 1937 at the age of 15. He is a graduate of Middlebury, with a master of arts degree from Harvard.

Peter Amann of Chicago, Ill., Instructor in History, is a native of Austria. He graduated in 1947 from Oberlin and received a master of arts degree from the University of Chicago in 1953.

John H. Sloan of Beckley, West Va., has been appointed Instructor in Speech in the Department of English. He is a 1954 graduate of Marietta and in June received a master of arts degree at the University of Alabama.

Paul R. Applegate jr. of Morristown, N. J., Instructor in English, is a graduate of Princeton, with advanced work at Drew University and the Bread Loaf School of English at Middlebury, from which he holds a master of arts degree.

Thomas R. Forsythe has been named Instructor in German and Russian. He is a 1952 graduate of Haverford and has done advanced work at Columbia, from which earlier this year he received a master of arts degree.

In addition to these new faculty members, three teaching fellows and five fellows in foreign languages are teaching this year.

Two of the teaching fellows are members of the Department of Biology. They are John D. Davis '53 of Freeport and Alfred R. Haller jr. '53 of Stafford Springs, Conn. Maurice R. Chamberland '56 of Brunswick is teaching chemistry.

The fellows in foreign languages are Dominique Auzenat and Pierre P. M. Bouquier of France, Dietmar K. R. Klein and Manfred Zoller of Germany, and Francisco Z. Solorzano of Costa Rica.

The fellows in foreign languages program implements one of the recommendations made by the Self Study Committee of the Bowdoin faculty after a year and a half of deliberation and discussion under a grant from the Fund for the Advancement of Education. Each week two hours of aural and oral drill is being added to the present three-hour elementary courses in French, German, and Spanish. One hour of such drill is also being added to the intermediate courses in these languages.

The campus is a beautiful green, although Indian Summer has yet to come to Brunswick and it has been cold and damp during most of September. The College promises a warm welcome to all alumni and friends returning this fall for football games, for lectures, for concerts, for fraternity initiations, for the dedication of the hockey rink on Alumni Day, November 10, and for just plain visiting because they love Bowdoin and all it represents!

And all of you may rest assured that in its 155th academic year the College remains in good hands and is steering a true course.

A Report From Horace Hildreth '25, United States Ambassador To Pakistan

NOW TO REPORT the kheda or elephant roundup. In the first place it was about a twenty mile jeep ride right into the jungle to get there. Several times some of the soldiers and bearers (the soldiers for security, the bearers for help) got stuck, but we finally got through. The elephants had already been captured in the stockade and consisted of fourteen animals, including one baby elephant about three weeks old and standing about three feet tall. There were also two other baby elephants or at least young elephants who stood no higher than a man's shoulder. Then there was one young tusker and one tuskless male who was the biggest of them all.

After returning to Chittagong, which took all day by jeep, we flew to Jessore the next morning and then jeeped to Khulna on the Ganges River. Here we boarded a fine two-storied houseboat that would sleep thirteen people in staterooms. Because the Governor General had been forced to return to Karachi, I was able to invite six of the American staff and colony to join us on the river trip down to the famous Sunderbans delta forest land. This is very wild jungle land which abounds in game, including tigers, deer, and crocodile. For four months of the year it is completely under water and the deer stand waist high in water night and day. Then the waters recede and fall into their channels. During the rainy season snakes are very abundant also.

Fifty-five varsity football candidates were invited back for early practice by Coach Adam Walsh, who faces an admittedly difficult job of welding together a winning team after two losing seasons, with but one victory in fourteen games.

The men began reporting the weekend before Labor Day. By the time the annual Press Day luncheon was held on Friday, September 14, the squad numbered about forty-five, including sixteen lettermen. The Walshmen appeared stronger in the backfield than in recent years, although still definitely lacking a Jack Cosgrove and a Mel Totman.

In the line there apparently is the makings of a good, sound first team, with some reserves. Injuries will raise havoc with the entire squad, however. As a matter of fact, before the first game with Tufts, injuries had already claimed one of the two leading centers and two of the starting backs in Art Perry, John Papacosma, and Roger Coe.

It is probably a building year for the Polar Bears. When Adam Walsh listed his first two teams tentatively on Press Day, they included only six seniors. There were eleven juniors and five sophomores. His conclusion was this: the team has more all-around speed and is better, overall, than the 1954 and 1955 aggregations. Beyond that, who can tell? Certainly the schedule contains no "breathers" — not with Tufts, Trinity, Amherst, Williams, Colby, Bates, and Maine in that order!

Whatever happens, Bowdoin men can be proud of their team, as they have been proud of every Walsh-coached team.

The Polar Bears went down to defeat in their first two games, losing to Tufts 23 to 0 on September 29 in Brunswick and to Trinity 40 to 13 on October 6 in Hartford.

Alumni Clubs

CLEVELAND

Secretary Pete Barnard '50 wrote on August 3, "On Friday, June 1, the Bowdoin Club of Cleveland met at the Mentor Harbor Yacht Club (just to the east of the city, on the shores of Lake Erie — the closest thing we could find to resemble Casco Bay!) for the first of what we hope will become annual lobster picnics. The meeting was a great success, we felt, because over thirty alumni, wives, and so forth were in attendance, and everyone seemed to enjoy himself greatly.

"The meeting was especially eventful for us because we had President Coles as our guest of honor. We were all very glad to see him again and to get to talk with him. Of particular interest to the group as a whole were his after-dinner remarks in which he told us something about recent happenings at the College and discussed such problems as admissions and the size of the College. All of us are looking forward to the President's return to Cleveland for another visit in what we hope is the not-too-distant future!

"Plans are now going forward for our fall meetings and activities. We understand that Professor Herbert Brown will be in Cleveland sometime this coming fall, and we are planning to coincide our big fall meeting with his visit."

ESSEX COUNTY

The Essex County Bowdoin Club held an organizational meeting at the Hotel Hawthorne in Salem, Mass., on the evening of August 15. About 45 were present out of a potential of about 150 — a remarkably high percentage. Included were many men from the younger classes.

President James S. Coles was the guest of honor at this first meeting and was much impressed with the group. Judge George B. Sears '90 was presented a plaque as an "out-standing alumnus."

Officers elected at the meeting were as follows: President, Harry Simon '24; Vice Presidents, Charles Shulman '37 and Howard Ryan '28; Secretary, Richard Roundy '47; Treasurer, Cab Easton '48; Council Member, Dick Thayer '28; and Directors, Dick Benjamin '44, Dean Cushing '45, Dick Winer '49, Sheldon Caras '48, and Irving Gordon '50.

SOMERSET COUNTY

The Bowdoin Club of Somerset County held an unusual meeting on Tuesday, August 28, at Lakewood, with about 45 alumni and wives in attendance. Members of both the Franklin and Kennebec County Clubs were also invited. The program included golf in the afternoon at the Lakewood Country Club, followed by dinner at the Lakewood Inn.

At the business meeting it was voted that the Club join and be merged with the Kennebec Bowdoin Club, subject to the latter's concurrence at its next meeting. With only about sixty scattered alumni, it has been difficult for the Somerset group to get out a worthwhile attendance.

Following the business meeting President James S. Coles, who with Mrs. Coles was a special guest, spoke to the gathering. The evening concluded with about half of the group attending a performance of "The Seven Year Itch" at the Lakewood Theatre.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Taylor Cole '45, Secretary of the Southern California Bowdoin Club, wrote on July 29,

"Last evening a small but enthusiastic group of Bowdoin men met with their wives at the home of Terry Dunning '49 in Pasadena. Those present at Polly and Terry's were the Jim Hedges '44, Bob and Marion Skinner '43, the Charles Stuarts '37, the William Spinneys '13, the Duke Danes '31, Anna and Sterge Demetriades '50, the Dave Smiths '46, and myself. My wife had to remain at home because of unforeseen sitter problems.

"We enjoyed swimming in the Dunning's lovely pool. Terry wields a mean barbecue fork, and the steaks were delicious. Dave Smith had some colored slides that he took while he was attending the 1956 Commencement and his tenth reunion.

"All in all, the gathering was most successful. We hope that other members of the Southern California Bowdoin Club will do the same thing."

WASHINGTON

The Washington Bowdoin Club is continuing its informal monthly luncheons on the first Tuesday of each month at 12 noon at the Lotus Restaurant at 727 14th Street, N.W. No reservations needed — come when you can.

On The Campus

Professor of Dramatics George H. Quinby '23 has been appointed Visiting Professor of American Drama for 1956-57 at the University of Teheran in Iran, where he will teach three courses and, in addition, will instruct high school teachers and have some duties at the Bi-National Center in the city of Teheran. He succeeded Dr. Frank Davidson, Professor of Drama at City College of New York, who set up the program in American drama at Teheran last spring.

The appointment was made possible under the Smith-Mundt Act, by the terms of which grants are offered for lecturers in certain countries not participating in the program of Fulbright grants. At the request of the United States State Department in August, Professor Quinby made himself available for the position.

Thus once again Pat Quinby will not be around to enjoy the Pickard Theater in Memorial Hall. A. Raymond Rutan IV '51, who served as Acting Director of Drama during Pat's absence on sabbatical leave last year, is taking his place once again.

The first production of the Masque and Gown season is Arthur Miller's Death of a Salesman, scheduled for November 15 and 16. Tryouts were held on October 1 and 2. The play will be directed by Norman Levy '57 of New York City.

The winter houseparty show will probably be a student-written revue.

C. C. H.

As many alumni know, Bowdoin is the headquarters for the Maine Citizenship Clearing House, a program designed to encourage the state's young college students and graduates to participate actively in political affairs. Arthur T. Vanderbilt H'50, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of New Jersey, is chairman of the national program, and Dr. Clement E. Vose directs the Maine program. Dr.

Vose is Associate Professor of Government and Director of the Bureau for Research in Municipal Government at Bowdoin.

The Maine Citizenship Clearing House had a successful year in 1955-56. Each of the colleges in the state conducted a series of political events on its campus. At the University of Maine two major events were arranged. One was a debate between the two party chairmen in the state; the other was a banquet to introduce the graduating seniors to politics as a career.

At Colby there was a series of coffees during the year at which local politicians or students debated and discussed public affairs from the standpoint of party.

At Bates the program was tied in with that school's Citizenship Laboratory. Most of the major contenders for public office in the state this year spoke to the group.

At Bowdoin the four leading aspirants for the Governorship were on the campus during the year. Also putting in appearances were the Republican State Chairman, John Weston, and the national chairman of the Democratic Party, Paul Butler. On each occasion there was a luncheon preceding the public address.

The major cooperative venture of the four colleges in the Maine Citizenship Clearing House came in March and April when about thirty-five students worked at the two party conventions. Arrangements were made through the state chairman and his assistants to make sure that the students would be accredited to work inside rather than outside of the machinery. As a result they not only attended the various formal meetings and dinners but also, acting as secretaries of the sixteen caucuses of the counties and as clerks for the platform committees, really got involved in the conflicts within the two conventions.

Music

The first college concert of the year will be given on October 25 by harpsichordist Fernando Valenti. The first student recital comes on November 18, to be followed on December 9 by a presentation of Schutz's "Christmas Story" and unusual carols. This program will be given by the Bowdoin Music Club, the Pembroke College Glee Club, the Brunswick Choral Society, and the Bowdoin Chapel Vesper Choir.

On January 7 violinist Zlatko Balokovic will be heard in a concert. The Bowdoin Music Club will appear again on January 16; on February 16 it will give a performance jointly with Westbrook Junior College. A second student recital comes on February 24.

Bradford Junior College will join forces with the Bowdoin Glee Club in the annual Campus Chest Concert on Bowdoin's new skating and hockey rink nears completion. It will be dedicated at 7:00 on the evening of Alumni Day, November 10, following the football game with the University of Maine. The day will conclude with the Alumni Day dance in the Sargent Gymnasium.

March 16. The Curtis String Quartet makes another appearance with Professor Frederic Tillotson on April 15, and the Interfraternity Sing will be coming around again in April. On May 11 the Music Club and the Masque and Gown will present "The Beggar's Opera."

Bowdoin Night at the Boston Pops will be on May 9. The Glee Club makes its first appearance of the year on November 30 at Framingham, Mass., and appears the following day at Waban, Mass. The annual spring tour begins on March 22 at Worcester.

All in all, it looks like another busy year musically.

Sills Volume

Dr. Herbert R. Brown, Chairman of the Department of English at Bowdoin, is preparing a memorial volume for the late Kenneth C. M. Sills '01, who served as Bowdoin's ninth President with the greatest distinction from 1918 until his retirement in 1952.

The volume will consist of an account of President Sills' life and achievements, with selections from his addresses and papers. It will be suitably illustrated.

A joint committee of the Governing Boards and Faculty has general oversight over the preparation of the book. It includes Professor William W. Lawrence '98 and Harold L. Berry '01, both of Portland, from the Board of Trustees; the President of the Board of Overseers, who is Philip G. Clifford '03 of Portland, and Mr. Clement F. Robinson '03 of Brunswick, from the Board of Overseers; and Professor Albert Abrahamson '26 from the Faculty.

Hawthorne Prize

The memory of Nathaniel Hawthorne, nineteenth century novelist and short story writer, will be perpetuated at Bowdoin by four of his direct descendants. Each year the author of the best undergraduate short story will receive a prize of $40, to be given by four cousins, all graduates of the College.

Donors of the prize are Julian C. Smyth '31 of Clinton Corners, N. Y., Hawthorne L. Smyth '31 of Ossining, N. Y., Manning Hawthorne '30 of Arlington, Va., and Charles Hawthorne Deming '51 of Darien, Conn.

Actually the Hawthorne Prize is not a new one. It was established in 1903 by Nora Archibald Smith and Mrs. George C. Riggs (Kate Douglas Wiggin). Then for many years, until his death in January of 1955, Pulitzer Prize Poet Robert P. T. Coffin '15 of the Bowdoin faculty supplied funds for the award.

The Smyths and Hawthorne are all great grandsons of Nathaniel Hawthorne. They were in college together some twenty-five years ago. The Smyths are both teaching in New York, while Hawthorne is connected with the United States Treasury Department. Deming, a great-great-grandson of Hawthorne, is now an Air Force pilot, stationed at Great Falls, Mont.

Nathaniel Hawthorne graduated with the Class of 1825. His most distinguished classmate was Henry Wadsworth Longfellow. Another was Horatio Bridge, from 1838 to 1854 Paymaster for the United States Navy and later Chief of the Bureau of Provisions. Also in college with them were Franklin Pierce, fourteenth President of the United States, and Calvin E. Stowe, husband of Harriet Beecher Stowe of Uncle Tom's Cabin fame, both of the Class of 1824.

The Hawthorne Prize has had a distinguished history of more than fifty years. Winners have included Coffin, who was the recipient in both 1913 and 1915; Edward A. Duddy, Professor Emeritus of Marketing at the School of Business of the University of Chicago, the only three-time winner, in 1905, 1906, and 1907; Clement F. Robinson of Brunswick, former Attorney General of Maine, in 1903.

Other recipients have been Kenneth A. Robinson, Professor of English at Dartmouth, in 1912; H. Tobey Mooers, for thirty-five years with the Department of State and interned by the Japanese in World War II, in 1918; and John M. Cooper, newly named producer of News-film for the Columbia Broadcasting Company, in 1928.

Through the years many of the recipients of the Hawthorne Prize have continued on in literary work as well as teaching. John V. Schaffner of the Class of 1935 is a literary agent in New York City. Forrest C. Beal of Bangor, Victor S. Whitman of Santa Barbara, Calif., and Fred R. Kleibacker, Jr. of Nashville, Tenn., are all connected with the production of radio and television shows. Charles H. Mergendahl, Jr., of Glen Cove, N. Y., has combined advertising and novel writing. Lawrence P. Spingarn of North Hollywood, Calif., is a poet, a novelist, and a teacher of applied creative writing at the University of California.

Walter R. Whitney is now Associate Professor of English and chairman of the freshman English program at the University of Maine. Lawrence S. Hall, Associate Professor of English at Bowdoin, has returned following a year as an interne in general education at Columbia University, under a grant from the Carnegie Corporation. Fredric Klees teaches English at Swarthmore College in Pennsylvania.

So it is that the name of Nathaniel Hawthorne, one of Bowdoin's most illustrious graduates, will continue to be perpetuated through the generosity of his descendants. And it is particularly appropriate that he should be honored by a prize for outstanding short story writing.

Necrology

1893 JOHN HIGGINS PIERCE, for more than sixty years a lawyer in Portland, died in that city on August 20, 1956, following a long illness. Born March 17, 1870, in Portland, he prepared for Bowdoin at the local high school and following his graduation studied at Harvard Law School and was admitted to the Maine Bar. He was a deacon of the State Street Congregational Church, a member, secretary, and trustee of the Maine Charitable Mechanic Association, a past president and for twenty-seven years secretary of the Portland Club, and a Mason. Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Mildred Archibald Pierce, whom he married on September 2, 1914, in Portland; three daughters, Mrs. John L. Buckley of Goshen, Conn., Mrs. Robert B. Field of Brockton, Mass., and Mrs. Robert F. Brown of Gloucester, Mass., and ten grandchildren. John was a member of Delta Kappa Epsilon and Phi Beta Kappa.

1893 FREDERIC MILTON SHAW died in Hollis, Long Island, N. Y., on June 16, 1956. Born February 14, 1871, in Gorham, he prepared at the local high school and following his graduation from Bowdoin was a teacher in Gorham, Canton, and Poland. In 1895 he became a salesman for Carter, Dinsmore and Company in Boston. He later was in various lines of business, including commercial aviation, commercial paper, and the New Departure Trunk Company in Boston. His fraternity was Alpha Delta Phi.

1896 CHARLES ARNOLD KNIGHT, who was President of the Gardiner Savings Institution for nearly thirty years until he stepped down a few months ago, died at his home in Gardiner on September 25, 1956, at the age of 86. Born in Brunswick on January 13, 1870, he prepared for Bowdoin under a private tutor. Following his graduation in 1896, he worked in Pennsylvania and New Jersey for a year, then read law in the firm of Heath and Andrews in Augusta. He set up practice in Gardiner in 1899 and lived there the rest of his life.

Charles served two terms as mayor of Gardiner and was city solicitor for two years. He was counsel for the Maine Savings Bank Association, a past president of the Gardiner Rotary Club, and a member of the Gardiner Board of Trade and the Merchants Association. He served upon two different occasions as President of the Kennebec Bowdoin Club and was a member of the Committee on Bequests and Trusts of the College. Surviving are his daughter, Mrs. Katherine K. Fassett of Madison, Wis., and a sister, Mrs. Lydia Chandler of Newcastle. He was a member of Alpha Delta Phi and Phi Beta Kappa.

1897 NORMAN CLYDE SHORDON died in Houston, Texas, on May 13, 1956, after a long illness. Born February 28, 1873, in Buxton, he prepared for Bowdoin at the local high school and following his graduation became an electrician in Yonkers, N. Y. He was later a mechanical engineer in Polk, Pa., then moved to Houston, where he remained for the rest of his life. Surviving are three sisters, Mrs. Stephen Moulton and Mrs. H. E. Meserve, both of South Portland, and Mrs. Charles Brogdon of Beverly, Mass.; and a brother, O. B. Shordon of Gorham.

In his will Clyde left $1000 to Bowdoin to be used as the College wishes.

1898 CLARENCE FAIRBANKS KENDALL, M.D., Commissioner of Health for the State of Maine from 1921 until 1932 and later for ten years with the United States Department of Public Health, died in Biddeford on August 22, 1956. Born January 15, 1876, in Biddeford, he prepared for college at the local high school. At Bowdoin he was captain of the track team and played varsity football. Following his graduation he entered the Maine Medical School and received his M.D. in 1901. He served as an intern at the Maine General Hospital in Portland, practiced in Jonesport for two years, then in Biddeford from 1905 until 1917. He was commissioned a major in the Medical Corps and served in World War I as chief surgeon of the U.S. Coastal Defenses in Portland. During World War II he served for five years as a senior assistant surgeon, retiring in 1946.

Clarence was also surgeon in the 6th C.C.C. District in Montpelier, Vt., for two years. With the Public Health Service he was stationed in Washington, D. C., for five years and in Flushing, N. Y., from 1942 until his retirement. He was at one time Biddeford city physician and was a district health officer for the Maine State Department of Health.

Surviving are a son, Otis A. Kendall '27 of Wellesley, Mass.; a daughter, Mrs. Lucia K. Berry of St. Petersburg, Fla., and two granddaughters. Clarence was a member of Delta Upsilon fraternity.

Otis Kendall's wife, Ruth, wrote of her father-in-law, "His years at Bowdoin and any subsequent visits there, his classmates, reunions, and living over four years again through his son were the happiest memories in his life.

"His last visit at Bowdoin was last fall, when we attended a football game with him. His enthusiasm for the College was so great that my daughter said just the other day, 'You know, Mother, if I were a boy, I'd want to go to Bowdoin, too, just like Gramp and Dad.' And may I add that Dr. Kendall also had hopes that a grandson of his might someday enjoy all that Bowdoin has to offer. Perhaps some day a great-grandson may follow him. There are only granddaughters.

"May I add that his great love of Bowdoin and Maine and his pride in both have been transmitted to me, his Middle Western daughter-in-law, to such an extent that I feel the same glow he did when he spoke of them."

1899 CHARLES WALKER BONNEY, M.D., a teacher and surgeon at Jefferson Medical College in Philadelphia, Pa., died on July 21, 1956, in Germantown, Pa. Born in Buckfield on February 24, 1874, he attended Bowdoin as a special student for two years, then transferred to Dartmouth and received his degree there in 1899. Five years later he graduated from Jefferson Medical College, where he remained as a member of the faculty. Since 1914 he had been a practicing surgeon in urology and a staff member of the department of anatomy.

1899 PRESTON BANKS CHURCHILL, Treasurer of the Winthrop Savings Bank in Massachusetts since 1919, died at his home in Winthrop on September 22, 1956. Born April 21, 1876, in Freedom, N. H., he prepared for Bowdoin at Parsonsfield Seminary and following his graduation in 1899 lived the rest of his long and useful life in Winthrop. He was in the express business for five years, was a civil engineer and an accountant, and from 1911 until 1919 was a juvenile probation officer. In 1919 he joined the Winthrop Savings Bank, where he remained active until his death.

For eighteen years Preston was Winthrop's Town Clerk. He also was treasurer of the Winthrop Community Hospital for a quarter of a centure and was treasurer of the Winthrop Chapter of the American Red Cross from 1929 to 1944. He served as a member of the Winthrop Board of Selectmen for three years and was its chairman. Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Edythe Blaisdell Churchill, whom he married on October 3, 1900, in Brunswick, and a son, L. Crawford '24. His fraternity was Kappa Sigma.

1905 STUART OAKLEY SYMONDS, a bail commissioner in Cumberland County for 26 years, died on September 18, 1956. Born August 3, 1885, in Huntington, New York, he attended Harvard Law School for a year after his graduation from Bowdoin and also studied in the Portland law office of his father, Joseph W. Symonds '60. Before being appointed bail commissioner in 1930, he was a practicing attorney in Portland, where he was always a well known and well liked figure. His fraternity was Psi Upsilon.

1906 RALPH GRANT WEBBER, Maine representative for F. S. Moseley & Company, Boston investment firm, died in Augusta on August 4, 1956. Born in Vassalboro on October 25, 1882, he prepared for Bowdoin at Cony High School in Augusta and following his graduation from the College was associated for some years with the International Banking Corporation in London, Manila, and Hong Kong. Returning to Augusta in 1912 because of poor health, he became associated with the Depositors Trust Company and Guy Gannett Publications. He had been with F. S. Moseley for the past twelve years. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Louise Davies Webber; a son, David W. of Osterville, Mass., and a brother, Howard E. His fraternity was Beta Theta Pi.

1910 FRED HENRY LARRABEE, who during World War II was Chief of the Radio and Radar Division for the War Production Board in the 7th Region, died on July 27, 1956, in Kansas City, Mo. Born May 14, 1889, in Danforth, Fred prepared at Houlton High School and attended Bowdoin for one year. From 1909 until 1937 he was a wholesale salesman for Marshall Field & Company in Chicago, then went to Kansas City as a manufacturer's representative. During World War I he served in the Army for two years. He was a member of Alpha Delta Phi fraternity.

1914 WILLIAM HENRY CUNLIFFE died at his home in Fort Kent on September 10, 1956, following a long illness. Born in that town on March 30, 1890, he prepared for Bowdoin at Worcester Academy in Massachusetts and served in World War I for eighteen months as a second lieutenant in the Army Air Corps. For many years he was engaged in the lumbering business with his father. During World War II he was associated with the Van Buren and Madawaska Lumber Company and for the last nine years was a Civil Service employee at Loring Air Force Base at Limestone. He was at one time President of the Fort Kent Telephone Company and Secretary of the Madawaska Log Driving Corporation.

A member of the Masons and the American Legion, Bill is survived by his wife, Mrs. Winifred Bradbury Cunliffe, whom he married in Fort Kent on June 29, 1920; a son, William C. jr. of Andover, Mass.; a sister, Mrs. Frances D. McCaskill 1916 ALFRED CHARLES KINSEY, known the world over for his research and books on human sexual behavior, died in Bloomington, Ind., on August 25, 1956, of a heart ailment and pneumonia. He had been in ill health for about six months.

Born on June 23, 1894, in Hoboken, N. J., Al graduated from South Orange High School and studied for two years at Stevens Institute of Technology before transferring to Bowdoin as a junior in the fall of 1914. Following his graduation he studied at Harvard, where he was a Sheldon Traveling Fellow and received his doctor of science degree in 1920. Since that time he had been a member of the Indiana University faculty. In the early thirties he was in charge of biological exploration in Mexico and Central America as a Waterman Research Associate. Beginning in 1938, he was in charge of research on sexual behavior among human beings, supported jointly by Indiana University, the Rockefeller Foundation, and the National Research Council. The Rockefeller Institute discontinued its aid two years ago.

At the time of his death, Al was engaged in collecting material for new sex research projects — on men in prison, on Europeans, and on animals. He was the world's recognized authority on the gall wasp and a prolific author of textbooks in the field of biology, in addition to his volumes on "Sexual Behavior in the Human Male," which appeared in 1948, and "Sexual Behavior in the Human Female," which came out five years later.

Surviving are Al's wife, Mrs. Clara McMillan Kinsey, whom he married on June 2, 1921; a son, Bruce of Cleveland, Ohio; and two daughters, Mrs. Robert Reed of Columbus, Ind., and Mrs. Warren Corning of Winnetka, Ill. He was a member of Zeta Psi and Phi Beta Kappa.

1919 PERLEY SMITH TURNER, Professor of Education at Bowdoin, where he had been a member of the faculty since 1946, passed on at the Brunswick Community Hospital on September 2, 1956, at the age of 60. He had been ill since February. (See page 2.)

1921 MILTON JEWELL WING died on July 19, 1956, in Waterville. Born April 30, 1896, in Kingfield, he prepared at Hebron Academy and Brunswick High School and since his graduation in 1921 had been engaged in the lumbering business in Kingfield. He was a Mason and a veteran of World War I. Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Ruth Goss Wing, whom he married in October of 1921; a son, Eugene G.; his father, Herbert S. Wing; and a brother Earl '10, all of Kingfield. He was a member of Alpha Delta Phi.

1923 JOSEPH REGINALD CURRAN died in Augusta on July 10, 1956. Born January 20, 1900, in Old Town, he prepared at the local high school and attended Catholic University in Washington, D. C., for two years before transferring to Bowdoin as a junior. He remained at the College for one year and spent the rest of his life in Augusta and Old Town. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Flora Bowlen Curran, three brothers, and two sisters.

1924 ARCHIE CHURCH MASON, an income tax consultant for the past ten years in Newark, N. J., died on August 4, 1956, at his summer farm in Honesdale, Pa. Born on December 27, 1903, in Crompton, R. I., he prepared for college at Milford High School in New Hampshire. He attended Bowdoin for two years and then studied at the Bentley School of Accounting in Boston. For a number of years he was employed by the Bank of Canada in Toronto and in 1933 went to Newark as an intelligence agent with the United States Treasury Department. In 1941 he graduated from Rutgers University with a bachelor of science degree in business administration. Since 1946 he had conducted his own business as an accountant and income tax consultant.

Archie is survived by his wife, Mrs. Pauline Applebaum Mason; a son, Curtis C.; and a sister, Mrs. Pearl Ives Romer of Worcester, Mass. His fraternity was Kappa Sigma.

1924 RAYMOND JUSTIN SAUNDERS, a teacher at Rancocas Valley Regional High School in Mount Holly, N. J., died at his home in Mount Holly on August 1, 1956. Born October 18, 1900, in Waterford, he prepared at Bridgton Academy and graduated from Bowdoin cum laude. In 1946 he received a master of education degree from Temple University.

From 1924 until 1929 Ray was principal of the high school in Oxford, then taught French and Latin at New York Military Academy for a year. For the next seventeen years he was a master at the Meadowbrook School in Pennsylvania. From 1948 until 1952 he was headmaster of Pen Ryn Episcopal School in Andalusia, Pa. Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Katherine Stone Saunders, whom he married in Philadelphia on December 20, 1930; a brother, George Saunders of Norway; and two sisters, Mrs. Daniel J. Mattor of Bath and Miss Mabel Saunders of New York City. He was a member of Phi Beta Kappa and Chi Psi.

1928 WILLIAM MATHESON DUNBAR died on July 24, 1956, in Birmingham, Ala., where he was president and treasurer of W. M. Dunbar Company, Inc., a wholesale heating business. Born September 7, 1904, in Lynn, Mass., he prepared at Lynn Classical High School and attended Bates for a year before transferring to Bowdoin. For some years he was a sales engineer with Linde Air Products Company in Lynn and in Birmingham. During World War II he served for three years with the War Production Board in Washington, D. C.

Bill was a member of the Birmingham Chamber of Commerce and the Birmingham Country Club. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Marie Smith Dunbar, whom he married on May 6, 1939, in Birmingham; a son, William Q.; a daughter, Deborah C.; a sister, Miss Hortense Dunbar of Swampscott, Mass.; and a brother, Roger M. of Marblehead. His fraternity was Delta Upsilon.

1944 ALBERT STONEMAN LONG, JR., Secretary and General Solicitor for the Monon Railroad in Chicago, Ill., died of a heart attack in his office there on August 31, 1956. He had been associated with the railroad since 1947.

Al was born on May 4, 1921, in Evanston, Ill., and prepared for Bowdoin at New Trier Township High School. He graduated cum laude in June of 1944, after serving as president of Beta Theta Pi fraternity. His college career was interrupted by service with the Marines at the Dartmouth Naval Training School and at Parris Island, S. C. He was discharged in the winter of 1944 because of a bad foot.

In 1947 he received a doctor of jurisprudence degree from the University of Chicago Law School. He was a member of the Chicago and American Bar Associations and was active in the Northbrook Community Chest. He was also an officer of the Chicago Bowdoin Club for some years.

Al is survived by his wife, Mrs. Caroline Ericson Long, whom he married in Libertyville, Ill., on June 16, 1945; their three daughters, Caroline, Barbara, and Marian; his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Albert S. Long of Evanston; a sister, Mrs. Hugh A. Johnson; and a brother, Norman R. His fraternity was Beta Theta Pi.

1952 CAPTAIN GEORGE MIDDLETON ALLEN, U.S.M.C., died in a plane accident in Iwakuni, Japan, on July 13, 1956. Born in Boston, Mass., twenty-six years ago, he prepared

Where There's A Will . . .

There's A Way To Serve Bowdoin

The College has received notice of the following legacies:

From the estate of Mrs. Louella B. Albee the sum of $24,444.91 to establish a scholarship fund in memory of her husband, Dr. Fred H. Albee of the Class of 1899. Provisions of Mrs. Albee's will provide for additional bequests to the College at a later date.

From Dr. Arthur J. Stimpson of the Medical Class of 1894 the sum of one hundred dollars, which has been added to the Infirmary Fund.

From Mrs. John H. Matthews of Brunswick the sum of one thousand dollars, to be used for the purchase of books and to be known as the Mabel Niven Matthews Book Fund.

ed for college at Walpole High School and attended both Yale and Bowdoin before enlisting in the Marine Corps in 1951. After receiving his wings at Pensacola, Fla., in 1954, George was stationed at Cherry Point, N. C. He then went to Korea and was transferred to Japan just two weeks before the accident.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Lois Hertel Allen, whom he married on August 17, 1952; a daughter, Deborah, 2; a son David, 8 months; his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Walter C. Allen of Walpole; a sister, Mrs. Lillian Patterson of Buffalo, N. Y.; and three brothers, William, Walter, and John. He was a member of Psi Upsilon fraternity.

Born in Portland on April 15, 1889, Dr. Roberts was a physician for a year in Flagstaff, then went to New York City for two years. From 1917 until 1921 he was a lieutenant junior grade in the Navy. He was awarded a Legion of Merit. Since that time he had made his home in the Bridgeport area. He was a past president of the Bridgeport Medical Association, a member of the American Board of Otolaryngology and the American Laryngological, Rhinological, and Otological Society, and a Fellow of the American College of Surgeons. In addition, he was the author of a number of articles on otolaryngology.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Frances Merriman Roberts; a daughter, Mrs. Ronald A. Wilford of New York City; and a sister, Mrs. L. J. Dorr of St. Petersburg, Fla.

Medical School

1874 ROBERT EDWARD FORBES, M.D., for many years a doctor in Bonavista, Newfoundland, died some time ago, according to word received in the Alumni Office late in the summer. Born in Montrose, Scotland, on July 15, 1849, he practiced for a year in Fogo, Newfoundland, following his graduation from the Medical School in 1874, and then went to Bonavista. He was married on November 13, 1876, in St. John's, to Elizabeth Cowan, and they had ten children, four of whom died in infancy.

1894 ARTHUR JAMES STIMPSON, M.D., a physician for more than sixty years, died in Kennebunk on August 9, 1956, at the age of 85. Born in Brunswick on July 11, 1871, he prepared at the local high school and following his graduation from the Medical School went on to study at the New York Post-Graduate School of Medicine. He practiced in Boothbay Harbor from 1897 until 1902, then in Waterford until 1919, when he set up practice in Kennebunk. He was a veteran of World War I and a member of the American Legion, the Masons, and the Odd Fellows. Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Lillian Flagg Stimpson; a daughter, Mrs. Kenneth Stackpole of Pleasantville, N. Y.; a sister, Mrs. Benjamin Dunton of Greenwood, Mass.; and two granddaughters.

1913 EDWARD RUSSELL ROBERTS, M.D., a senior ear, nose and throat specialist at Bridgeport Hospital in Connecticut, died suddenly on August 26, 1956.

Former Faculty

HENRY BRONSON DEWING, Professor of Greek at Bowdoin from 1923 to 1928, died in Washington, D. C., on September 5, 1956. Born in Canterbury, Conn., on March 2, 1882, he graduated from the University of California in 1903 and received a master of arts degree there in 1905. In 1908 he received his doctorate from Yale. Before joining the Bowdoin faculty, he taught at Yale, Princeton, the University of Texas, and Robert College in Constantinople, where he was also dean. During World War I he was a major in the American Red Cross and won the Order of the Savior and the Order of Military Merit.

Professor Dewing left Bowdoin in 1928 to become the first president of Athens College in Greece, where he served until 1930. He later taught at Colorado College and the University of North Carolina. He was granted an honorary doctor of humane letters degree by Bowdoin in June of 1928, when President Sills said in his citation, ". . . a true Hellenist, he will carry to modern Greece the best ideals of American education on lines laid down by Cyrus Hamlin, Bowdoin 1834; a fitting ambassador of education and scholarship from the New World to the Old, going to a friendly country on a friendly mission in a friendly way."

Surviving are a daughter, Mrs. Elizabeth Secrest of Washington, and two sons, Stephen B. of Ringoes, N. J., and Charles E. '34 of Washington. Professor Dewing was a member of Phi Beta Kappa.

Children of deceased veterans may now attend school or college under the new "War Orphans" Education Law, P.L. 634. Those eligible for schooling are young men and women whose veteran-parent died of injuries or diseases resulting from military service during World War I, World War II, or the Korean Conflict. Students generally must be between 18 and 23 years old; however, they will be permitted to begin school before their 18th birthday and to finish after their 23rd in some instances.

More than 150,000 children of deceased veterans are expected to be eligible for government grants to further their education, under this new law recently signed by the President.

Government allowances of $110 a month are paid to students if attending full-time; $80 for three-quarter time, and $50 for half-time training. Students will be allowed up to 36 months of training.

In broad outline, the Veterans Administration points out, the children's scholarship program follows the structure of the Korean GI Bill for Korean veterans, except for the fact that no additional amounts are provided for the student's own dependents, if any.

For further information on this program, those interested should consult the nearest office of the VA.

The 1956-57 Alumni Fund

Chairman Louis B. McCarthy '19 Outlines Plans

First of all, I want to pay sincere tribute to the splendid results and particularly to the great amount of effort given to last year's Alumni Fund by its Chairman, Carleton S. Connor '36. His energetic leadership was in no small measure the reason why the Alumni Fund team presented the largest Alumni Fund gift on record. The detailed report of that achievement will be found in the center pages of this issue of the ALUMNUS.

In addition to this record gift, it should be remembered that alumni contributions to the new Skating Rink totaled more than $75,000 during the 1955-56 Alumni Fund year.

Unless you have served as an Alumni Fund Director, you have no idea of the tremendous amount of work and time which the Chairman must devote to this all-important task. Fully aware of what lies in store for me, I am willing and eager to tackle the job as my current bit of service to Bowdoin. Directors and Class Agents give unselfishly of their time and energies. Their only reward is the satisfaction gained from reaching the objectives set for them. That reward is possible for them only if alumni respond generously and whole-heartedly to their appeals. In my opinion, every alumnus should be happy to contribute to the Alumni Fund, happy to pay something not to be a Class Agent.

This year's Alumni Fund has two objectives: a gift to the College of $125,000 and a sharing in that gift by at least Sixty Percent of the Alumni. The dollar goal can be reached if every contributor of last year increases his contribution by ten percent. Since there is to be no general appeal for funds for the Skating Rink this year, that ten percent appears modest indeed and easily possible of attainment. It is perhaps understandable that we have failed to reach our Alumni Fund goals of the past two years. We surely can and will reach the 1956-57 objective of $125,000.

Every dollar of the $125,000 objective represents a known need of the College. By agreement between the Directors and the Visiting Committee of the Governing Boards, part of our gift will be used as follows: scholarships, $45,000; the Bowdoin ALUMNUS to all Bowdoin men, $12,000; staff travel to schools and Bowdoin Clubs, $1500. Our contributions serve to keep Bowdoin the strong, outstanding college we knew by making available ready money to maintain standards and to reduce the current operating deficit of the College. And it should be remembered that our Alumni Fund contributions, however used, release for needed purposes an equal number of overworked Bowdoin dollars.

The 1956-57 Alumni Fund will be set in motion at the annual on-campus conference on October 12 and 13. From then on your Directors and Agents will be diligently seeking your cooperation. We have twice failed to reach our dollar objectives. We still register less than one-half of Bowdoin alumni as contributors. Let's make our goals this year.

*How Our 1955-56
 Alumni Fund Gift Was Used*

Alumni Fund Scholarships — (26 Students)	$ 15,200
Tuition Bowdoin Plan Students	8,173
Staff Travel to Schools and Alumni Clubs	1,645
The ALUMNUS to all Alumni	7,746
Contributions for Designated Purposes	36,569
Our Wholly Unrestricted Gift to Bowdoin	44,506

Help Wanted

WHEN THE SEMESTER ends next month, the Director and the Assistant Director of Admissions, will have visited schools and alumni through the northeastern states and in several cities of the Middle West. The purpose of these visits is to interview young men who have applied for admission to Bowdoin and to talk with others who may become Bowdoin candidates. With the large number of students seeking admission to college today, there is, of course, no dearth of applicants.

But to talk of admissions simply in terms of numbers is not to describe the situation clearly. Every college is seeking the best possible candidates, best as persons as well as scholars; and for these there is keen competition. Much of Bowdoin's success in this competition in the past has depended upon the aid of Bowdoin alumni in bringing to the attention of the College these most desirable candidates. In recent years there has been a growing interest in this aspect of the College's work; and to maintain its position among colleges of its kind, Bowdoin will depend upon even greater assistance from all of the alumni.

The booklet "Bowdoin Alumni and Bowdoin Admissions," which was sent to all alumni last year, was designed to inform and especially to encourage further alumni interest in admissions. In connection with this, the booklet states, "Bowdoin needs the thoughtful assistance of all of its alumni in assuring the interest of well-qualified applicants and the continuous improvement of the quality of its entering classes. . . . At Bowdoin education involves people, not numbers and formulas; and the work of admissions should reflect this part of the College's essential nature. The relationship between the alumnus and a prospective candidate, like the relationship between the alumnus and the College, has been . . . a simple and sound one. Regardless of the steadily changing situation in college admissions throughout the country, there is no reason . . . that admissions at Bowdoin will become either unmanageable or impersonal.

"When an alumnus becomes interested in a young man for Bowdoin, the initial step is a short note to the Admissions Office giving the prospective freshman's name, address, and school. It is helpful if . . . the alumnus also explains as much as he knows of the boy's interest in the College and the extent of his acquaintance with the boy. If the boy has already begun his application, the Admissions Office will tell the alumnus of this and what further steps may be taken. If an application has not been made, the Admissions Office will send the candidate material about the College and at the same time ask his school for a preliminary estimate of him.

"Should the preliminary estimate by the school indicate that the prospect's general ability and academic average, as well as his course of studies, are below those necessary for qualification at Bowdoin, the alumnus will be immediately notified. He will also be notified should the preliminary estimate indicate unquestionably good qualifications. For the majority of cases this estimate will be less conclusive, and for these the alumnus will be told what additional steps will be necessary to complete the candidate's application and what may be done to further the young man's interest in the College."

What are these steps that may be taken to help the candidate learn about the College and to help the College learn about him? There are many ways, of course. Any alumnus can answer most of the important questions that a young man has about the College. Some questions of detail are answered in the booklet, most are in the catalogue, and any others can be answered by forwarding them to the Admissions Office. Frequently an alumnus can introduce a prospective candidate to other Bowdoin alumni in his community, either at a meeting of an alumni club or by some other means. But most of all, perhaps, an alumnus can see that the young man visits the College. A planned visit is unquestionably the best opportunity for a good candidate to learn more about the special qualities of Bowdoin.

There will be several weekends this year when candidates will be invited to the campus so that they may spend some time with undergraduates and get a first-hand impression of the College. An alumnus need only notify the Admissions Office that he would like to have someone included in these invitations, and it can be done simply. In some cases, either because of distance or the applicant's own schedule, such visits cannot be arranged. For them, other means for increasing their interest in and information about Bowdoin must be used; but whenever such a visit can be arranged, it is most desirable.

Additional copies of the booklet "Bowdoin Alumni and Bowdoin Admissions" are available at the Admissions Office. Catalogues are also available there, and alumni who are interested in admissions may have them on request. The work of finding the best young men for Bowdoin is of the greatest importance, and all alumni are urged to participate in it.

One of the questions most frequently raised in connection with admissions is concerned with scholarship grants to incoming freshmen. Because of a change in the policy of granting awards, beginning with the present freshman class, the following statements may be helpful.

Number of awards to freshmen entering in 1956	47
Range in amount of awards	$300 to $1,200
Total amount awarded	$38,000

Until this year the scholarship committee voted awards of tuition ($800) or of half tuition ($400). Now grants are made in increments of $100 with minimum and maximum limits that vary according to the ability of a candidate to contribute toward his expenses at Bowdoin. Determination of the size of the awards is based on the difference between estimated college expenses and the computed contribution by the applicant and his family. If a student enters without an award, he is eligible to apply for aid for the second semester of his freshman year.

The essential expenses at Bowdoin are:

Tuition	$ 800
Board	450
Room	216
Fees	43
Total	$1,509

To this amount are added the variable costs of books, fraternity, travel, and personal expenses, making an estimated total for most students of between $1,800 and $1,900.

Two years ago Bowdoin joined a group of more than one hundred and fifty colleges which use a standard scholarship form for a candidate's statement of financial status. The use of this form enables all colleges to make reasonably similar judgments of the amount that can be contributed to his college expenses by the candidate and his family. These forms are available at the Admissions Office and should be filed by March 1.

"Not of the Head, But of the Heart"

A guest editorial, made up of passages taken from several Chapel talks delivered during World War II by the late Paul Nixon, Dean of Bowdoin from 1918 until 1947. In a sense, this is his final Chapel talk to the Bowdoin men he loved so well.

April 24, 1943: The most amazing and radiant and tranquilizing and transforming reality that this life of ours holds is an awareness of God's presence, even a momentary awareness. And that is something that comes from no sharpening of mental processes, comes at no one's casual beck and call. It comes, if it does come, only from deep human need, only if it is sought, sought fervently, sought in utter humility of mind and spirit, sought in prayer.

April 10, 1943: Among the most satisfying things that a small college can offer for a lifetime to all its members should be these three: a real and justified sense of belonging, a solidarity of friendliness and helpfulness, and a close personal pride in the achievements of fellow-members alive and dead.

November 27, 1943: Good will is sometimes, from some individuals, hard, almost impossible, to gain. But this much is certain — the only basis of a decent world is international good-will, and the only way to win good-will is to show good-will.

January 9, 1943: Somehow or other, we have got to carry over into international life something of the best qualities we manifest in family life. Inside the family we usually make the accommodations and sacrifices necessary to keeping things running smoothly and amicably. . . . I wish there were some short cut to rearing an international family. I fear there is none. We need good brains for it, we need good organization for it, but, most of all, we need good will for it. And good will on that scale does not come easily and naturally, and is not bred of brains and organization. It is bred not of the head but of the heart, not of the mind but of the spirit.

I suspect that if we wish peace, real peace, enduring peace, and a decent world, a world of fair play and good will, we shall have to begin with God, begin and base our lives on the will of the sort of God whom Jesus Christ called Father, his Father and our Father.

December 12, 1942: Generous emotions and generous enthusiasms are a very necessary and important part of the human beings most of us most like and admire. Especially in times like these, most of us are wary of the man who even seems to be too utterly dispassionate, too coldly analytical, too calculating and cautious, too completely beyond the reach of anything but his reasoning faculties. Yet generous emotions and some degree of common sense, both, are badly needed.

January 8, 1944: We ordinary people must not leave it entirely to the "great thinkers" to set the world right when this mess is over. It will take plenty of thinking, plenty of masterly blue printing, yes. But more necessary still will be rapid growth in national and group and individual tolerance, sacrifice, compromise, and helpfulness.

It's going to take more than noble thinking and lovely diagrams to make this country and this world the kind they should be. And one of the things needed will be money, money paid out rather cheerfully by the "haves" to get the "have-nots" on their feet. Whatever it costs, I suspect it may be the cheapest insurance we ever bought.

November 13, 1943: The greatest of the great simplicities is this — "To do justly, to love kindness, and to walk humbly with thy God."

Paul Nixon was many things to many people, but perhaps most of all to most of us he was the embodiment of this "great simplicity."

A Tribute To Dean Paul Nixon

By RED COUSINS '24

Taken from the Portland Press Herald for October 31, 1956

TWO YEARS AGO last Saturday was a warm, sunny October day. Bowdoin was playing Colby at football at Waterville.

As we parked near the football field a half hour before the game, a ruddy, white-haired man hailed us genially. He was standing by the tail-gate of a station wagon, his mouth full of sandwich.

"Come join us for lunch," he called. "There's something for everybody."

Bowdoin's dean emeritus, Paul Nixon, had ridden down to the game with artist Stephen Etnier and his wife, Brownie, and Doc George and Lib Pullen of South Harpswell. We had lunch with us, we thanked them. We sat on the tail-gate of our car and swapped football talk with Nick, the Etniers and Pullens as we munched.

Last Saturday Bowdoin was back at Colby again to play football. It was another warm, sunny October day. Mrs. Lincoln and I recalled the congenial lunch of two years ago as we parked in the identical place and looked around for Nick and his party. They weren't there. So we ate our sandwiches and drank our coffee alone and didn't think much about it. Nick was surely there somewhere, we figured. He never missed a game.

Between halves we ran into Bowdoin's Vice President, Bela Norton. He told us of Nick's sudden death that morning.

He was sitting in his chair waiting for the Etniers to pick him up, all rigged out in his longies and his flannel shirt. His lunch, all put up, and his thermos bottle of coffee were on the floor beside him. It happened just like that.

Bowdoin made its Dean Emeritus Nixon a doctor of humane letters at its 1943 Commencement. That was but formal recognition of qualities with which Bowdoin men of 30 classes had been familiar. They knew him as a kind but firm disciplinarian — fair, friendly, humorous, but most of all human.

Old Wesleyan footballer Nick always relished his dual role as dean of a rival college when Wesleyan and Bowdoin met on the athletic field. He was always in demand as a speaker at football rallies. But never more than when Bowdoin was playing Wesleyan.

And so it happened that in the fall of 1935, Coach Adam Walsh's first year at Bowdoin, the student body marched by the Dean's house after the rally on the Delta and demanded a speech.

Nick came out on his porch. He was, he felt, being made the butt of campus pre-game spirit. Now he wanted Bowdoin to have a successful football season but he wasn't particularly eager to have them take it out on his own alma mater.

"I won't mind if you beat them 7 to nothing," he told his hecklers, "nor maybe 14 to nothing, even 21 to nothing. But if it's any more than that, I tell you I'll resign as dean and enter a nunnery."

Wesleyan lost on Whittier Field that next day nothing to 33. Bowdoin men spent the weekend wondering if Wesleyan's great defeat was a greater defeat for them — and speculating how Nick would shape up in a nun's habit.

Came Monday morning and a notice on the bulletin board by the chapel. It said:

"Bulletin from the College Office — — —

"The Dean is almost rational again. Complete amnesia has set in, however, regarding the events of Friday evening and Saturday afternoon. It is hoped that this condition may not be permanent. The college secretary reports that the Dean sits at his desk muttering 'Thirty-three. Go get Williams.' She wants to know why 33 should go — wouldn't a half dozen be enough? — and who is Williams?"

Nick had his bouts with insomnia, too. We found that out personally our senior year in college when we had our only disciplinary brush with his office. Ours was typical of experiences scores of students had with a wise man of gently sarcastic humor.

Chapel attendance was compulsory. Undergraduates were allowed only a certain number of absences or they got in trouble. Throughout our college career we'd always looked upon chapel each morning between breakfast and classes as a damned nuisance.

We were making the most of being in a position to have unlimited cuts in academic classes that last semester. By a traditional formula we had calculatedly arranged our courses so that we had no classes until mid-forenoon. Digging out of the sack just to attend chapel seemed to make less sense than ever. So we just snoozed on until that invitation to visit Nick in his office arrived.

"Here you are just a few weeks away from graduation and you've never been any problem to me," he said. "It's a shame to get put on probation at such a late date as this and spoil a clean record. What can you give me for an excuse?"

We were sure the boom would be lowered hard if we fessed up to our own private rebellion against compulsory chapel. So we mumbled a mouthful of tommy-rot about reviewing courses for our major, having trouble getting to our books around the fraternity house until after things had quieted down late at night. . . .

We sensed we weren't making much sense to Nick. He was leaning back in his swivel chair, his gray gaze fixed steadily on us. He was obviously disappointed that we weren't a more accomplished liar and that a senior had come so badly prepared. So in desperation. . .

". . . and then when I do get to bed, my head's in a whirl with all the studying I've done and I toss and turn. . . . I've been suffering a lot with insomnia lately and. . ."

Nick rocked forward to his desk in obvious relief and seized a pencil.

"Ah, insomnia!" he breathed. "That's a terrible affliction in one so young. I know just what you mean because I'm a fellow sufferer. Only in my case it's worrying about promising young men like you spoiling good records that keeps me awake nights. Except for that, things are pretty quiet nights around my place.

"But I sympathize with you. Tell you what we'll do. Let's scratch off all these chapel cuts to date" (with a mighty flourish of the pencil on our record card) "and begin over again. And see if you can't get there once in a while, when you haven't had too sleepless a night, huh?"

Having a chance to start over again fixed us up but good. There wasn't enough of the college year left for us to get on probation if we hadn't attended a single chapel service.

But we did. We dug ourselves out of the sack pretty regularly from there on out. And pretty regularly, too, we saw fellow-sufferer Nick grinning at us across the aisle.

And as we matured, we came to understand that even a dean probably would have preferred staying in the sack lots of mornings to making chapel.

The late Robert Peter Tristram Coffin said it much more simply in two stanzas of the poem he wrote for the faculty testimonial dinner for Nick in May, 1948. His colleagues were honoring him then for 40 years of service to the College. Said poet Coffin, who also checked out just like that almost two years ago now:

Paul whose face for forty years
Has lighted classrooms with a smile,
Whose patience with the C men goes
Not yards and rods but mile on mile.

He is the humanest of deans,
The bronze and grandeur, iron of Rome
He has combined with Yankee wit,
Good sense and charity of home.

A fellow feels a great sense of personal loss when understanding men like Nick and that other great humanitarian of our college days, President Casey Sills, die. He doesn't come in contact with such men too often in this selfish, competitive world.

Each died not too far short of 75. Casey would have reached that milestone in about three weeks when he died two years ago this coming month. Nick would have been 75 next May.

Casey had a heart attack; Nick had a cerebral hemorrhage.

Everybody always says that's the way to go when your time comes. It is, of course. Except that it seems that there ought not to be such a time for men of their mold.

In Nick's case death was a somewhat tardy blessing. He had a throat cancer. Two years ago surgeons operated — "cut some tissue away so he wouldn't have so much trouble swallowing." But it was temporary relief. Some months past he hadn't been able to take anything but liquids. And his breath came hard at times.

Not many people knew that, even among his academic colleagues. Nobody would ever have known it from Nick. He lived out each day to the fullest it could offer him. Only last Friday he was down at the practice field watching the football team's final preparation for the game he was planning to see the next day.

Well, we attended chapel again day before yesterday, Nick. And you hadn't forgotten, having been there all these quick intervening years — how hard the seats are there. But we had. They were just as hard as they were 30 odd years ago, Nick, when you understood. Yep, even a lot harder, Nick.

Charles Cutler Torrey

Charles Cutler Torrey, Overseer Emeritus of the College, died in Chicago, Illinois, on November 12, 1956, at the age of 92. He served as an active member of the Overseers for more than forty years, from 1899 until 1942.

Professor Torrey had a remarkable career — one which extended throughout his long life. Even at the time of his death he was writing a book on the Apocalypse of John. He was an outstanding athlete at Bowdoin, particularly in baseball; he held honorary degrees from Yale, Bowdoin, the Jewish Institute of Religion, the Jewish Theological Seminary, and the College of Jewish Studies. As a matter of fact, Bowdoin awarded him two honorary degrees — a doctor of divinity in 1900 and a doctor of letters in 1934, when President Sills said in his citation, “. . . one of the most distinguished Oriental scholars in the world, whose recent publications on the Aramaic versions of the Gospels mark a new and most important epoch in New Testament criticism.”

Born on December 20, 1863, in East Hardwick, Vt., Professor Torrey was one of a triumvirate of distinguished Bowdoin brothers. He was known as Torrey, the Second. His older brother Joseph was a classmate, and their younger brother, Elliot, was a member of the Class of 1887. All three were elected to Phi Beta Kappa; all three were members of Alpha Delta Phi fraternity.

Following graduation from Bowdoin, Charles Torrey began his lifelong career of teaching. He taught in Auburn for a year, then became Tutor in Latin at his alma mater for another year. In 1886 he entered Andover Theological Seminary, from which he was graduated in 1889 with a bachelor of sacred theology degree.

During the next three years Dr. Torrey studied in Europe and received a doctor of philosophy degree from the University of Strasburg in 1892. His dissertation was entitled “The Commercial-Theological Terms in the Koran.”

For the next eight years he taught at Andover Theological Seminary, first as Instructor in Semitic Languages, then as Professor of Biblical Theology and History. It was during this time that he wrote Composition and Historical Value of Ezra-Nehemiah (1896).

The year 1900 bulked large in Professor Torrey's life. He received an honorary master of arts degree from Yale and a doctor of divinity degree from Bowdoin, he became Professor of Semitic Languages at Yale, and he was immediately granted a leave of absence from Yale. He used this leave as founder and first director of the American School of Archaeology (later to be named the American School of Oriental Research) in Jerusalem. While in Jerusalem he carried on pioneer excavation at Sidon. This experience gave him a chance to develop two of his many interests, epigraphy and numismatics.

Dr. Torrey returned to Yale in 1901 and taught there for more than thirty years, retiring in 1932 and becoming Professor Emeritus. In addition to his teaching he was for many years curator of coins in the Yale University Library and was Chairman of the Department of Semitic and Biblical Languages, Literature, and History in the Yale Graduate School.

Charles C. Torrey, 1863-1956

As a scholar Professor Torrey was superb. Beginning in 1901 he served for seventeen years as co-editor of the Journal of the American Oriental Society. In 1901 he published The Mohammedan Conquest of Egypt and North Africa from the Arabic of Ibn 'abd al-Hakam. Five years later he issued a compilation of Selections from Bokhari. From 1906 until 1918 he was chairman of the Managing Committee of the American School of Archaeology.

Dr. Torrey's early work on Ezra and Nehemiah was followed in 1910 by Ezra Studies. In 1912 appeared The Translations Made from the Original Aramaic Gospels, and in 1916 The Composition and Date of Acts. His scholarship, which was described as “characteristically original,” is also evident in his work in the prophetic literature of the Old Testament. His commentary on The Second Isaiah appeared in 1928, and Pseudo-Ezekiel and the Original Prophecy in 1930.

After his retirement his scholarly output was increased, if anything. In 1933 he published The Jewish Foundation of Islam and The Four Gospels, a New Translation. These were followed three years later by Our Translated Gospels and in 1941 by Documents of the Primitive Church, both of which set forth the results of his years of work in the Semitic background of the New Testament.

A Brief Introduction to the Apocryphal Literature was issued in 1945, and his translation of Lives of the Prophets in 1946.

Professor Torrey was a Fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences and of the Mediaeval Academy of America. He was also a member of the Connecticut Academy of Arts and Sciences, the American Numismatic Society, the American Oriental Society, the Archaeological Institute of America, the Deutsche Morgenlandische Gesellschaft, the Egypt Exploration Fund, and the Society of Biblical Literature and Exegesis. He was an honorary member of the Palestine Society and on his 90th birthday was appointed an associate of the Oriental Institute of the University of Chicago.

In the field of New Testament criticism, Dr. Torrey developed the theory that the Gospels were written first in Aramaic, the language spoken by Jesus, and later translated into Greek.

Despite this evidence of a profusion of scholarly endeavor, Dr. Torrey was very much of an individual, a very warm and human friend. His interest in athletics, particularly baseball and tennis, never lessened. He had a keen interest in music and was a talented flutist. When asked once about his hobbies, he mentioned “the study of edible fungi, mainly for practical ends.” He also enjoyed fishing and read detective stories as a diversion. He had a summer home in the heart of the White Mountains, at Randolph, N. H.

He is survived by a daughter, Mrs. Anne T. Frueh, whose husband, Alfred, is a member of the University of Chicago faculty. Mrs. Torrey, the former Marian Richards, died ten years ago. She was the author of two novels, Zandrie, which appeared in 1909, and My Outrageous Cousin, which came out in 1929.

Charles Torrey's affection for the College he served for so many years as an Overseer remained strong and warm until the day he died. He returned for Commencement in both 1952 and 1954. And just before his death he mailed his regular annual contribution to the Alumni Fund. He will be sorely missed in many quarters.

R. M. C.

William Edward Lunt

William Edward Lunt, a member of the faculty of Haverford College for thirty-five years, died on Saturday evening, November 10, 1956, in Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania. He had been a member of the Bowdoin Board of Overseers since 1939.

President James S. Coles paid tribute to Dr. Lunt in these words: "Professor Lunt was a distinguished and widely respected medievalist, scholar, and teacher. For Bowdoin he rendered invaluable service for many years both as an alumnus and as a member of the Board of Overseers. There he contributed remarkably through his intimate knowledge of faculty affairs, and his keen appreciation and exposition of the intellectual aspects of the college program."

Born in Lisbon on January 13, 1882, Professor Lunt was the son of William E. and Catherine Flagg Lunt. He prepared for college at Lisbon High School and Edward Little High School in Auburn. In the fall of 1900 he entered Bowdoin and graduated four years later with magna cum laude honors and as a member of Phi Beta Kappa. In 1905 he received a master of arts degree from Harvard University and in 1908 was granted a doctor of philosophy degree there.

Dr. Lunt taught history at the University of Wisconsin from 1908 until 1910, then spent six months studying at the British Museum in England on a Sheldon Travelling Fellowship from Harvard. In 1911 he joined the Bowdoin faculty as Thomas Brackett Reed Professor of History and Political Science. The following year he became professor of English history at Cornell University, and in 1917 began his long association with Haverford.

When he retired from the Haverford faculty in 1952, that college conferred upon him an honorary doctor of humane letters degree. Two years earlier Princeton University granted him an honorary doctor of letters degree. In 1929 Bowdoin had also honored him with a doctor of humane letters degree. The late President Kenneth C. M. Sills said in his citation at that time, ". . . thorough scholar whose work on the medieval papacy has brought him international recognition; effective and inspiring teacher; one of that long line of eminent historians who have been trained at Bowdoin and have continued their service in the academic world outside; known by all his classmates and friends as honest and true."

An internationally known medievalist, Professor Lunt was a past president of the Mediaeval Academy of America. He was also a member of the Royal Historical Society and the American Historical Association. In 1941 the Mediaeval Academy granted him its Haskins Medal, given annually for distinguished work in the field of medieval studies by an American or Canadian scholar. The award was made for his volume Financial Relations of the Papacy with England to 1327, published in 1939.

Dr. Lunt was also the author of History of England, first published in 1928 and revised about a year ago for the third time. It has been one of the most popular books in its field for more than twenty-five years. In addition, he wrote The

William E. Lunt, 1882-1956

Valuation of Norwich (1926), and Papal Revenues in the Middle Ages (1934). Following his retirement he continued his studies on the history of papal finance, working steadily in typical Lunt fashion until his death.

In 1937 Professor Lunt received the Alumni Achievement Award at Bowdoin. He served as chairman of an alumni committee which in 1936-37 studied and reported on the needs of the College. He was also a member of the Bowdoin Alumni Council from 1934 to 1937 and was vice president of the Bowdoin Club of Philadelphia in 1939-40.

In 1918-19 Dr. Lunt served as Chief of the Italian Division for the American Commission to Negotiate Peace, meeting in Paris. In 1944-45 he taught a graduate course in modern European history at the University of Pennsylvania. When he retired from the Haverford faculty in 1952, he was Walter D. and Edith M. L. Scull Professor of English and Constitutional History.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Atkinson Lunt, whom he married in Macomb, Ill., on December 5, 1910; a son, William E. jr. of Philadelphia; and three granddaughters. A second son, Robert H. Lunt, who graduated from Bowdoin in 1942, was drowned at Mount Dora, Fla., in 1946 while trying to save a companion who could not swim. Like his father, he was a magna cum laude graduate and a member of Phi Beta Kappa and Zeta Psi fraternities.

Funeral services for Professor Lunt were held in Haverford on November 14.

These are the bare facts, but they hardly tell the story of the rare individual Bill Lunt was. Something of his character and philosophy of life can be seen in the following description of what he was proud to call "the gospel of hard work." When he retired at Haverford in 1952, he said, speaking to the graduating seniors — "If, as you go along, you can feel satisfied that your life, as you are living it, is of use to others, you will have, I think, a right way of life. The most profound and abiding pleasure that men can enjoy is the pleasure they derive from their work, from an occupation which is worth-while because of service to the community.

"Not all of the work in your chosen field will bring you pleasure. Some of it will be drudgery. But you wade through the drudgery because it is the essential foundation for attaining the results which are important to you and to others. If I may use an analogy which should bring the idea home to some of you, it is like plodding through the details of history in order to reach a valid conclusion of significance.

"I am well aware," Dr. Lunt concluded, "that I have been talking about a subject which some recent historians of the early Puritans have dubbed, sometimes rather scornfully, 'the gospel of hard work.' There was a time in the Victorian era when it was the consensus of social opinion that every man should do his duty and that part of his duty was to work hard at his occupation.

"At present there seems to be no more opprobrious term that can be applied to an idea than to call it Victorian, unless the speaker lets himself go all the way and calls it medieval.

"I have lived with the past for so much of my life that I am not disturbed by tags of that sort. I believe that in this, the second half of the Twentieth Century, you, just as men of preceding generations have done, can find in hard work applied to a right purpose an immense amount of pleasure."

Yes, as Casey Sills said, Bill Lunt was always "honest and true" — both to others and to himself.

Centralized Dining Room Service

This article is taken from a booklet published last May following the completion of ten years of the Centralized Dining Room Service. Don Lancaster '27, Director of the Dining Room Service, gave the editors of the ALUMNUS permission to reproduce the brief history in its pages. As he wrote in his preface to the booklet, "Here is a history-making business enterprise in a small American College for the financial stability of the college Fraternity."

In 1946 the Bowdoin fraternities whose dining-room operations annually amount to nearly a third of a million dollars joined with the College in a cooperative effort that is now well established as the Bowdoin Centralized Dining Service. Since this plan was adopted, no fraternity has ever had to ask its members for more money than the regular semester board bill for the operation of the dining rooms. The cost of food for house parties, alumni weekends, weekly guest privileges, and snacks at night has all been covered by the regular charges for board. This bill was $12.50 per week during the period of high post-war student enrollment, and has been held at $13.50 a week since January 1951, in spite of the inflationary trend in the living expenses of this decade.

Before 1946 fraternity dining rooms were operated as individual units. This system proved unsatisfactory because of the lack of a uniform system of management. In some houses, results in certain years were satisfactory, but by and large the system left much to be desired because of the lack of consistent good management and the transient or seasonal nature of employment. Non-collection of board bills was common. Short-notice retail ordering from the corner grocery store was often necessary because nearest wholesale markets are in Portland. There was no group purchasing, and often there was a lack of accurate, periodic reports to members. In some instances, unpaid bills accumulated to a point that was of grave concern to college officers, and the alumni were sometimes called upon to make up deficits, or one generation of undergraduates was compelled to pay for the losses incurred by graduated students.

In the spring of 1946, fraternity alumni officers, college officers, and representative undergraduates met for a series of conferences and carefully mapped out a plan for interfraternity cooperation that was so imaginatively and painstakingly done that the system remains virtually unchanged today. Since Bowdoin is essentially a fraternity college, all groups present were composed of Bowdoin fraternity men anxious to strengthen the business management of their chapters.

The Implications of the Movement

Since the College recognized its obligation to the undergraduates to help provide meals of the best possible quality at reasonable cost, it was willing to assist in the undertaking. A significant decision for fraternities and the College was made at that time when many institutions were establishing a college commons or all-college dining hall and eliminating the fraternity dining plan or de-emphasizing the place of the fraternity on the campus. The College assisted because it believed in the role of fraternities at Bowdoin; moreover, it was felt that recognition and encouragement of the fraternity unit, if properly administered by undergraduate leadership, would contribute to a well-rounded college, and widen the students' social and educational experience.

The Organization

The organization was first called the Interfraternity Cooperative. In 1949 it was renamed the Bowdoin Centralized Dining Room Service so that the general public would realize it to be a function of the College. Since fraternity treasurers or stewards prior to 1946 had much difficulty in collecting board and room charges, the College agreed to collect these charges (on the College term bills); board and room total about $375,000.00 a year. Saving in food purchases depends on buying and storing in quantity at the proper time of year. A storeroom for dry storage (canned goods, etc.), refrigeration for meats and fresh vegetables, and freezer storage for frozen foods, ice cream, etc., was first secured at the Brunswick Naval Air Station. These facilities were held under revocable lease until 1951 when the Naval Base was reactivated. At that time, the Dining Service under the direction of a Committee of the Governing Boards, which has acted as a policy-making and supervisory body since the inception of the plan, voted to erect a warehouse. The committee, composed of alumni who are members of Bowdoin fraternities, has been under the chairmanship each year of Harold Lee Berry '01, a devoted and active Trustee of the College.

The warehouse is located on Pickard Field, with access from Whittier Street, off Maine Street beyond the Bowdoin Courts and within easy driving distance of the campus. It is a one-story, cinder-block building, seventy-four by forty-eight feet, containing space for dry storage and a refrigerated area for meat, vegetables, and other foodstuffs. Its cost of $43,150.97 was financed by a 3% loan from the College. The Dining Service pays each year an amortization charge of 3% on the building and refrigerator boxes, and 10% on the refrigeration machinery, in addition to the 3% interest charge on unpaid balance each year of the total. This financing spreads the cost of the building over so long a period that only a small part has to be charged to any one generation of students.

As for financing the Centralized Dining Room Service, each fraternity was first charged 5% of gross income and in 1954, with decreased enrollment and increased expenses, this charge was raised to 6%. The charge is also made on the Moulton Union. The income from this source is used for financing the warehouse as well as for its operation. The 6% charge is an excellent investment for the fraternity because of the reduction of food costs by mass purchasing, collection of room and board, monthly operating statements, benefits to cooks, and the provision of an experienced and continuing management. The Bursar's office collects bills for board and room and makes all the disbursements of these fraternity dining-room accounts without a charge for overhead to the fraternities. These benefits amount to much more than the 6% cost to each fraternity.

The entire operation is supervised by a full-time Director of the Dining Service who is an officer of the College. The warehouse is staffed by a Purchasing Agent, a position first held by Commander Stephen Berry, who had been in charge of the Officers' Club at the Brunswick Naval Air Station. Since 1948 this post, now designated as Associate Director, has been filled by M. Stanley Bishop, Bowdoin '25, who has been in the food business since his graduation. Other members of the staff include a warehouse supervisor, butcher, truck-driver and bookkeeper. The heat, power and electric bills of the warehouse, the purchase and maintenance of a delivery truck, repairs, and small miscellaneous expenses complete the administrative budget of the Service.

The Dining Service office in the Moulton Union receives from the fraternities lists of their members. Board income is apportioned among the fraternities according to membership. All bills, after the approval by fraternity stewards, are processed in this office and sent to the Bursar's office for payment, and monthly operating reports are made to the fraternities. This is one of the most valuable services since it enables fraternities to know their profits or losses directly at the end of each operating period and to make necessary adjustments promptly. As a result, no fraternity has ever fallen permanently behind in its dining-room business. On the other hand, fraternities usually set aside reserve funds to purchase and maintain kitchen and dining-room equipment (ranges, refrigerators, dishwashing machines, dining-room tables, chairs, floor coverings, utensils, etc.). These expenditures amount to about $9,000.00 a year.

Fraternity stewards meet as a group, usually every two weeks, to discuss reports, budgets, make comparisons, and bring up all kinds of special problems. Stewards are carefully trained by personal directions and bulletins from the Director, and their work provides practical experience in business leadership, which is often a helpful factor in their business careers.

The fraternities have freedom to plan their own menus. Daily deliveries are made from the warehouse. The Purchasing Agent, while readily available by telephone, visits each chef or cook weekly for consultation and collects menus for the following week as a purchasing guide. Much purchasing is done by contract and in all cases efforts are made to compare qualities and prices. Fraternities may ask for special orders (brands, special cuts of meats, etc.), and if cooks or stewards think they know of special values not known to the purchasing agent they are encouraged to call these sources to his attention. Fraternities buy directly from sellers products not stocked at the warehouse such as fresh milk, cream, eggs, fish, bread, and pastry.

Fraternity Dining-Room Employees as College Employees

The foregoing description of the Centralized Dining Room Service presents an outline of its relationship to the several fraternities, the available services, costs and advantageous results. No attempt has been made to standardize fraternity kitchens and dining rooms. A strength of the chapter dining is its opportunity for expression of the tastes of the individual members in partnership with their cooks. Bowdoin might as well have a College Commons if it standardizes the menus inflexibly. Every effort has been made to keep standards high when securing new chefs or cooks, for it is recognized that fraternity employees are very close to the students.

Inasmuch as the Centralized Dining Service is an integral part of the College, fraternity dining-room employees are recognized as fulltime employees of Bowdoin College, working from September to June, and eligible for the benefits open to other college employees.

Fraternity cooks work a six-day week and are guaranteed a permanent wage from the opening of College in September until the closing in June, including college vacations. They are paid weekly and are eligible to participate in the college program of employee benefits, including the Retirement Plan, Blue Cross and Blue Shield, Group Life Insurance, and the Federal Old Age and Survivors Insurance. They are also protected by Workmen's Compensation Insurance as provided by Maine law. They are also part of the Employees College Retirement Plan. Sons of employees of the College who meet entrance requirements receive free tuition at Bowdoin, and under some circumstances, sons and daughters may receive free tuition at other institutions, under terms of the Faculty Children Tuition Exchange Plan.

Good fortune in securing and retaining superior dining-room employees over the years is the result of a sustained effort to make personnel policies as sound as possible for all employees of the College. The names of many men and women who are close friends of students and alumni come to mind. The following chefs or cooks are typical of those who have done much for Bowdoin men during their undergraduate days at the College: Emma Marstaller, at Alpha Delta Phi; Arthur Benoit, at Delta Kappa Epsilon; Peter Tenneson, at Zeta Psi; Albertine Dow and Walter Strout, at Theta Delta Chi; Orman Hines, Margaret Settle and Minnie Griffing, at Psi Upsilon; Minnie Walker, at Beta Theta Pi; Kenneth Sampson, at Sigma Nu; Ruth Tobey and Larry Pinette, at Chi Psi; Harold Stevens and Floyd Gilmore, at Kappa Sigma; Ruby Berry, at Alpha Rho Upsilon; Bill Harris, at Alpha Tau Omega; and Ruth Harrington, at Delta Sigma. These devoted men and women are faithful, skillful, and industrious employees who have helped to keep the fraternity dining rooms in good condition over these years.

In the years to come, the goals of the Service must continue to include the maintenance of dining rooms that achieve well-balanced meals in accordance with best nutritional standards, a high code of sanitation practices, and a sound financial rating.

The 1956 Football Season

By RICHARD E. DOYLE '40

The by now annual chore of accounting for the Bowdoin football famine isn't quite as tough as Eden's explanation of Suez, but it will do until the next Bowdoin husband drags himself home at 4 a.m.

This is really a tale of several seasons and, surprisingly, not one of complete woe. Perhaps its greatest contribution was throwing further light on the plight. Bowdoin men, high and low in the hierarchy, are seeing the situation more clearly.

Diagnosis is easy; prognosis, painfully — but not unexpectedly — slow.

Despite the second winless campaign in three Autumns, the situation was not entirely out of hand. The peaks of play were no futile Pickett's charges. The gallantry of the Williams game, the challenges hurled at Colby and Bates really demonstrated that only a few men of top caliber were needed to restore the balance or take command.

All the fight and more than one could ask of college men carried the White close to victory in the three above contests. Each time superior ability in a few or many positions turned back the Polar Bears.

What's it prove? That the College doesn't have to go out and corral 30-odd players of star caliber. It could have picked off a few wins this year with the addition of just five or six Grade A men.

That's about all Bowdoin ever had in the way of star material when it was more than holding its own in football.

Nowhere this season, however, could Adam find the combination of size and speed in the backfield to crunch out the yardage and give a promising pass attack the complement it needed to function at its best.

As a former Bowdoin footballer remarked sadly to a fellow alumnus in an early season commentary, "The backs are small and slow."

Speed is of the essence in football or any sport you can name. It was No. 1 on Knute Rockne's list of prerequisites. It's No. 1 on Bud Wilkinson's.

Minus John Papacosma most of the way, Bowdoin had not one back weighing 180 who was also fast. Every opponent was blessed with at least two or three in this category. This type can get by with less than perfect blocking. The small back of limited speed needs a clear avenue.

Sophomore Roger Coe qualified with fair speed and power, but chronic injuries were aggravated in pre-season scrimmaging and he never played a minute. Center Art Perry was also a permanent casualty and a batch of other wounds bothered the Bears from time to time.

Bowdoin's spirit rated high at the start and the losses didn't weaken it. The athletic soul needs victory for nourishment, however, and the White's morale would naturally have been higher with a win or two.

Most of the squad returns next year, but the freshmen aren't expected to fill many of the needs. Two or three good freshman teams in a row are needed. Alumni are being urged in a semi-organized plan to interest good scholar-athletes in Bowdoin. The scholarships, the campus jobs are there for those qualified. Bowdoin has enough to offer legitimately. It compares well with its rivals in this respect. But many good scholars who have what it takes footballwise go elsewhere for less inducement — simply because that college, through its staff and alumni, has shown a stronger interest in the boys than has Bowdoin.

But while we wait for the tide to turn, Coaches Walsh and Corey can hold their heads high in the knowledge they and the boys did well to come as close as they did on occasion.

Tufts 23, Bowdoin 0 — Concerted Tufts efforts to assure continuous supply of football material apparent in the huge Jumbo line and the Blue and Brown's big, fast backs. Bowdoin fought hard to no avail against the club that went on to beat Harvard. White, switching from T to single-wing, had understandable ball-handling trouble. Early misfire offset by strong stand, but Tufts scored on 43-yard pass, Ralph Thompson to Dick Fortin. Tony Fleishman was tackled in own end zone for safety early in second period. After a Dick Michelson fumble recovery and Stover-Fleishman 35-yard pass to the Tufts 4 gained nothing when Tufts held, Jumbos shortly drove 70 yards with Norm Wright, a real big-time back, blasting over from a yard out. Bad center pass gave Tufts second safety in third period and Andy Berzins ran 35 for the final TD. Stover's 35-yard pass to little Mike Karavetsos to the Tufts 14 gave Bowdoin a fourth period shot it couldn't follow up. White did pass for 170 yards, rushed only 35, with Karavetsos the top receiver. Pete Dionne, Ken Cooper, Dick Michelson, Capt. John Snow, Ernie Belforti Bowdoin line stars.

Trinity 40, Bowdoin 13 — Strong as Tufts in certain spots, Trinity capitalized Bowdoin fumbles to go with earned opportunities and make it worse. George Kelleher was the big noise at Hartford. The hefty speedboy galloped 52 yards on the first scrimmage play to the Bowdoin 5 and Ron Riopel sneaked over two plays later. Bowdoin drove 45 aerial yards, Dick Drenzek to Jim Carnathan, Steve Anderson and George Watkins but Trinity held. Two plays later Drenzek, looking good in his Nutmeg State, intercepted at midfield and ran it back to score. Anderson's conversion gave Bowdoin a 7 - 6 lead. But Kelleher and company quickly took charge for good. It was 19-7 at the half, helped by a Bowdoin fumble on its 32. An interception in Bantam territory and a midfield Bowdoin fumble led to two Kelleher TD's in the third period. A Bowdoin fumble on its 13 led to the final Trinity score in the fourth. Dave Gosse, Jim Fenlason and Rod Collette paced the Bowdoin reserves on a 60-yard march that Gosse completed with a 7-yard score.

Amherst 39, Bowdoin 12 — More of same, but damage mostly in first half. Bowdoin's first-play fumble set Jeffs moving from White 25, taking eight plays against stubborn Polar Bears before chunky Jim Krumsiek cracked the final three yards. Powerless Bowdoin had to punt and Hutch Tibbetts ran back to the White 44, then streaked 35 yards around his right end and swept 9 to his left to score. By the 10:50 clock mark Amherst led 20-0 on Tibbetts' 53-yard scamper. Amherst marched 68 yards for its fourth TD, Tom Gorman passing 9 yards to Jim Sabin. Drenzek passed to Fred Wenzel, and his clever stepping brought a 61-yard White TD. Amherst responded for its fifth TD near halftime as Gorman threw 11 yards to Pete Jenkins. Gorman passed to Jim Close, who ran 55 of a 75-yard scoring span five minutes into the third period for Amherst's last TD. Bowdoin closed out midway of the fourth period, going 47 yards after a Jeff fumble. Brud Stover hit Clayt Bennett in a 5-yard scoring pass. Moving only 82 yards on the ground — Bowdoin netted a sub-100 average per game — the White passed for 193. Belforti, Pete Dionne and Gosse were defensive stars.

Williams 13, Bowdoin 7 — Gallant stand against great odds. Dike finally gave way to flood of Williams manpower in last three minutes, but Bowdoin stands cheered battered warriors as they trooped off the field — "one of the most courageous exhibitions in recent Bowdoin history," Harry Shulman wrote. Bowdoin had yielded an average of 350 rushing yards in three games, held a previously 418-gated Williams to 162 rush yards. Gambling that Williams wouldn't throw, Adam set up an 8-3 defense nobly executed by regulars and reserves alike against the bigger, deeper Ephs. Bowdoin twice held Williams deep in White territory in the first half and scored on Stover's pass to Levine. Anderson converted for an incredible 7-0 Bowdoin lead at halftime. Twice again Bowdoin fought off the Ephs in second half, but switching to the air, Williams scored on two heaves from Garry Higgins to Norm Walker with less than three minutes left. Norm Cram's conversion tied it at 7-7. Bowdoin couldn't get the vital first down to retain the ball and Marv Weinstein, third Williams quarterback, ran the hurried punt back to Bowdoin's 17. With 15 seconds to go Weinstein hit Dick Kagan in the Bowdoin end zone for the agonizing decider. White defensive stars too numerous to mention.

Colby 24, Bowdoin 20 — Another reservation in Heartbreak Hotel. State Series opener lost in fourth period. A penalty helped Bowdoin march 67 yards to score from the opening kickoff. Drenzek passed to Capt. John Snow and Wenzel, then threw 24 yards to Levine for the touchdown. Anderson converted. Neil Stinneford, for three years a problem to Bowdoin, finished a 57-yard Colby counter-march to score. Anderson blocked the placement. Gosse smartly ran back an interception 46 yards to make it 13-6, Anderson's placement going wide. Colby's Mike Farren scooted 66 yards to make it 13-12 with Anderson again shooting the gap to block the boot. Three Stover passes to Levine, one for 38 and the third an end zone deflection, produced Bowdoin's third TD in a march going into second period. Anderson made it 20-12. Colby drove 83 yards to score on Dick Merri-man's short plunge and it was 20-18 at the half. Line play neutralized second half action until Colby staged a winning 47-yard march midway of the final period. After Stinneford setups, Bob Bates slanted nine yards for the decider. Two Bates interceptions stopped Bowdoin thereafter. Cooper led Bowdoin line, backed by Dionne and Belforti.

Bates 13, Bowdoin 12 — Again close but no cigar. Though outgained 2-1, Bowdoin got the jump and gave the champs their closest series score. Bad center-punt pass gave White its first shot on Bates 27. A plus penalty offset two losses, and after Drenzek threw to Levine for 15, Drenzek swept his left end to score. Anderson's placement was blocked by Brian Flynn. Bates stopped three more Bowdoin threats and the White checked a Bobcat march in the second period. Bates ace Bob Martin paced a 56-yard drive and scored the deadlocker in the third period from 2 yards out. His placement was wide. It was mostly Martin again in a 40-yard fourth period surge and he went 11 yards on a sweep for the lead. Tom Vail passed to Flynn for the deciding point-after. Gene Waters recovered Martin's fumble on White 42 for Bowdoin's last chance. Stover passed 17 to Waters and 36 to Paul McGoldrick down to Bates 4. Stover got 2, was held for zero, and Papacosma climbed the lines to score. Anderson's bid for matching point was wide. Bowdoin had only one play thereafter, a pass call on which Stover was run out of bounds with receivers covered. Cooper again stand-out of stout Bowdoin line.

Maine 33, Bowdoin 7 — Denied a fourth straight state title by its 19-13 loss to Bates, Maine took it out on Colby and Bowdoin. White routed for fourth straight year. Maine scored its five TD's in first 34 minutes. Bowdoin then went 74 yards for its touchdown, touched off by Drenzek and finished by a 39-yard pass, Stover to Levine. Anderson converted. Maine opened with 66-yard march, Ken Parady passing to Cleveland Browns' choice Thurlow Cooper 19 yards to score. Ray Hostetter capped a 39-yard strike for second TD. Cooper got the third on a 7-yard Parady pass in second period. Hostetter opened the second half with a 57-yard apparent TD, only to be called back to the 31 on a clip. But he went 17 to score three plays later. Three minutes later John Edgar baffled Bowdoin on a reversal of field for 33-yard score. Only other Bowdoin bid followed a fumble setup on Maine 28 in second period, with Papacosma leading a thrust that died on the 14. Levine, a classy end, Belforti, Cooper, Dionne, Snow and Ted Gibbons were top Bowdoin defenders.

Alumni Weekend

Alumni Weekend was compounded of many elements this year, both bone-chilling and heart-warming, with much of the activity falling somewhere in between these two extremes.

Heart-warming was the turnout for the dedication Saturday night of The Arena, Bowdoin's new covered and refrigerated skating rink. Heart-warming too was the reaction of the crowd to the performance of the five young skaters from the Skating Club of Boston, whose appearance was arranged by Paul E. Gardent jr. '39 and Mrs. Gardent. Their choice was felicitous, to say the least, and added a delightful touch to what, all in all, was a most satisfying weekend, despite the 33 to 7 loss to Maine on Whittier Field Saturday afternoon.

The most bone-chilling part of the weekend took place not in the refrigerated rink. That turned out to be quite comfortable by comparison! A raw wind coupled with already frigid temperatures sent many faithful Bowdoin rooters home early from Whittier Field. And yet even here, amid chattering of teeth, there was a heart-warming element. For never did a Bowdoin team of any era give itself any more completely to the task of trying to stop a superior team. They lost, sure, but neither they nor Adam lost anything in the eyes of Bowdoin men, both those present and those absent.

The weekend got under way on Friday evening, November 9, when many of the fraternities held formal dinners and initiation ceremonies, with returning alumni invited to attend. A pre-game rally was followed by an unusual swimming meet in the Curtis Pool, with the varsity, led by All-American Bob Plourde of Pawtucket, R. I., defeating the alumni and the freshmen in a three-cornered affair. Hoady White '58 of Brunswick set a new Bowdoin record and pool record in the 200-yard breaststroke.

On Saturday morning the Alumni Council held its regular fall meeting in Massachusetts Hall, with President Francis B. (Fat) Hill '23 of Manchester, N. H., presiding. Bela W. Norton '18, Vice President of the College, spoke at the morning Chapel service on "Bowdoin's Development Program."

At 10:30 Saturday morning the portrait of President Coles, reproduced in this issue and given by John W. Frost '04, was unveiled at the Walker Art Building in a brief, unpretentious ceremony.

A lobster stew luncheon at noon in the Gym helped to prepare alumni for a cold afternoon. Wallace M. (Jake) Powers '04 of Jackson Heights, N. Y., was awarded the Alumni Fund Cup for the best performance by a Class Agent in the 1955-56 Fund.

Following the game with Maine there was an informal reception by President and Mrs. Coles and Alumni Council President and Mrs. Hill in the Union.

At 7 o'clock the new rink was dedicated. Dr. Dan Hanley '39, the College Physician, was master of ceremonies at the program. The speakers included Athletic Director Mal Morrell '24, President Coles, and Harold L. Berry '01, chairman of the Skating and Hockey Rink Committee of the Governing Boards.

The United States Civil Service Commission is seeking applications from persons interested in a career in the Federal service through its Federal Service Entrance Examination. This examination, which covers a wide variety of occupational fields, is open to all college seniors and graduates regardless of their field of major study and to people who have had equivalent experience. Written tests will be given January 12, February 9, April 13, May 11, July 13, and August 10, 1957.

Most appointments will be made to positions at grade GS-5 with a beginning salary of $3,670 a year. Some appointments may also be made to positions at grade GS-6 and GS-7, $4,080 and $4,525 a year. Positions will be filled in various agencies in Washington, D.C., and throughout the United States, its territories and possessions. A few positions will be filled in foreign countries.

Some of the fields in which positions are open are general administration, economics, budget management, automatic data processing, library science, statistics, information, and food and drug inspection.

Further information and application forms may be obtained at many post offices throughout the country or from the U. S. Civil Service Commission, Washington 25, D. C.

Boston, were Gregory Kelley of Newton, Susan Blodgett of Auburndale, Frank Muckian of Lynn, Lynn Finnegan of Cambridge, and Bradley Lord of Swampscott. They more than lived up to their advance billing, and the crowd showed its appreciation in particularly noisy fashion, having discovered a new and fascinating way to "wood."

The new rink, made possible by the generosity of students, alumni, and friends of Bowdoin, has a playing surface 200 feet long and 85 feet wide. The main building is 212 feet long and 140 feet wide. Including the lobby and head house, containing the machine and team rooms, the overall length is 248 feet. The cement block walls are painted on the exterior to blend with the predominant tones of older brick structures on the campus.

Sixteen bow-string arches of western fir support the roof of the building. Ten miles of pipe, embedded in concrete and covered with bituminous material beneath the ice surface, carry the brine which makes the ice artificially. For the comfort of spectators the building is heated so that the temperature can be maintained at 45 degrees.

A jeep with superstructure including ice surfacing equipment scrapes the ice and sprinkles the surface with water so that in seven minutes a fresh coating of ice is provided.

The seating capacity of the rink is 2500 to 2800 people. Its main entrance faces College Street. Adjoining the entrance lobby, which has two box office windows, are two snack bars. At the north end of the building are dressing rooms for the use of home and visiting teams and for the mechanical equipment, a small office, and storage.

In addition to its use by varsity and freshman hockey teams, the rink provides space for physical education classes, intramural hockey, and recreational skating by the undergraduates, faculty, and public.

The weekend came to a happy conclusion with the Alumni Day dance in the Gym following the dedication. Music was furnished by Gordon Howe's orchestra, and the Meddiebempsters sang, as usual, at intermission.

On October 17, 1956, a signal honor came to an illustrious Bowdoin forester, Samuel T. Dana '04, Dean Emeritus of the University of Michigan School of Natural Resources. At the 56th annual meeting of the Society of American Foresters, held at Memphis, Tenn., he was awarded the Sir William Schlich Memorial Medal for distinguished services to forestry. The first award was made in 1935 to Franklin D. Roosevelt, and the second in 1940 to Gifford Pinchot. Mr. Dana is only the ninth recipient of the Medal in more than twenty years.

A summa cum laude graduate at both Bowdoin and Yale, from which he received a master of forestry degree in 1907, Mr. Dana entered the United States Forest Service in that same year. In 1927 he was named Dean of the University of Michigan School of Forestry and Conservation (renamed in 1950 the School of Natural Resources). He served in this position until he retired in 1953.

Mr. Dana was featured in the full-page Weyerhaeuser Timber Company advertisement in many national magazines during October. In it he is referred to as one of the nation's leading forestry educators, a man who helped train "hundreds of young men who have contributed much to wise use and good management of forest resources."

Bowdoin men everywhere, we suspect, will be interested to see "what a Maine Yankee does with himself after he gets fired for senility," to use Sam Dana's own expression. During the current year he has served as chairman and summarizer of the Conference on Graduate Resource Training, sponsored by the Conservation Foundation, Ann Arbor, Mich.; he has analyzed and criticized the Timber Resource Review (nine volumes) for the United States Forest Service; he has conducted an exploratory study of research in forest recreation for the U. S. Forest Service. And in December he will undertake a study of land ownership in California for the American Forestry Association.

Oh yes, and he has published four magazine articles on forestry during 1956 and has completed Forest and Range Policy: Its Development in the United States, without question the definitive study on that subject. This book was reviewed in an earlier issue of the ALUMNUS.

Never one to toot his own horn, Sam Dana subscribes to and lives up to the philosophy of hard work outlined elsewhere in this issue by his classmate, the late William E. Lunt. He writes modestly, "Hodding Carter '27 gave an outstanding address at the banquet at the meeting in Memphis in October. It was thoughtful, courageous, inspirational, and exceptionally well expressed. Commendation was unanimous."

There also seems to be unanimity about your own achievements, sir! We are deeply proud to claim you for Bowdoin.

On The Campus

On October 9 fifty-one undergraduates made their first deposits in the Morgan B. Cushing Memorial Blood Fund, named in honor of the late Professor Cushing, who taught economics at the College from 1922 until his death last April.

The donors came from three fraternities, Alpha Delta Phi, Sigma Nu, and Zeta Psi. Each man gave one pint of blood at the Coe Infirmary, where the Maine Medical Center Blood Bank mobile unit was on hand to collect the blood.

The Cushing Memorial Blood Fund was the idea of Donald L. Henry '55 of Lynn, Mass., who returned two years ago after a tour of Navy duty to finish his college education. In his own words, the fund is "a living memorial in honor of Professor Cushing, whose service to the college community and the town of Brunswick will long be remembered."

The purpose of the fund is to make blood available to those who are in need of it and cannot meet the financial cost. For the college community the fund will work as a "checking account." Members of the student body and their parents and the faculty will be eligible recipients if ever the need arises. The blood balance which remains at the end of each academic year will be donated to the general blood fund of the Maine Medical Center in Portland.

James Bowdoin Day

Seventy undergraduates were honored on October 17 at the sixteenth annual James Bowdoin Day exercises on a perfectly beautiful fall day, a day that made students and faculty alike wish that their vacations could come in October rather than in July and August.

Dr. Perry Miller, Professor of American Literature at Harvard, the speaker for the occasion, declared, "There is disturbing evidence that standards of performance in our elementary schools and in our colleges have deteriorated to accommodate the level of a mediocre mass." Bowdoin, he continued, must never become "the dream-castle of an indolent mediocrity."

At the convocation, held in the Pickard Theater in Memorial Hall, John J. Woodward of Winsted, Conn., received the General Philoon Trophy, presented each year to the senior who has made the best record at the annual summer camp of the Reserve Officers Training Corps.

Robert W. Packard of Jefferson was awarded the James Bowdoin Cup, given annually to the student who in his previous year has won a varsity letter and has compiled the highest scholastic average among varsity lettermen.

Among the James Bowdoin Scholars were 27 seniors, 23 juniors, and 20 sophomores. Maine had 24 representatives, Massachusetts 17, New York 13, New Jersey 3; New Hampshire, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and Virginia, 2 each; and Connecticut, Maryland, Michigan, Vermont and Germany, 1 each.

Dane For Kendrick

Professor Nathan Dane II '37 will serve as Acting Dean of the College during the spring semester, replacing Dean Nathaniel C. Kendrick, who will be on sabbatical leave, President Coles announced in October.

A native of Lexington, Mass., and a graduate of Bowdoin in the Class of 1937, Professor Dane has been a member of the faculty for ten years and is now Chairman of the Department of Classics. He is married to the former Maxine Anderson of Denver, Colo., who teaches English at Brunswick High School. They have three children, Nathan III, who is 12, and Caroline and Joseph, nine-year-old twins.

Dean Kendrick has been a member of the Bowdoin faculty since 1926. He is a native of Rochester, N. Y., and a graduate of the University of Rochester, where both his father and his grandfather were members of the faculty for many years. He became Acting Dean of the College in 1946, replacing Paul Nixon, who had held that position since 1918. The following year he became Dean. He continues to teach courses in the history of Europe from 1500 to 1789 and the history of the French Revolution and Napoleon (History 5, 6).

The Kendricks plan to travel, either in this country or abroad, during his long-delayed sabbatical.

Fathers' Day

The tenth anniversary of the founding of the Bowdoin Fathers Association was observed on Saturday, October 20, when a record number of dads, about two hundred in all, registered at the College and attended the annual meeting in the Moulton Union.

At the morning Chapel service Professor Alton H. Gustafson, himself a Bowdoin father, discussed the results of the recent Self Study. He was chairman of the Self Study committee on student life, which considered such problems as living conditions, extra-curricular activities, classroom attendance, and fraternities. One hundred students still live off campus, and the Self Study recommended the construction of a new dormitory as soon as possible to correct this condition.

Professor Gustafson is currently chairman of the Faculty Committee on Student Life, which has been appointed to continue the work of the Self Study Committee in these general areas.

President James W. Robertson of Winchester, Mass., called the annual meeting to order at 10:30 and introduced Assistant Football and Hockey Coach Nels Corey '39, who described the new hockey rink, then nearing completion. The Arena, as it was subsequently named, is providing much needed space for physical education classes, skating, hockey team workouts, interfraternity hockey, and faculty and public skating.

There are now 701 active members of the Fathers Association, which last year continued to live up to its two-fold purpose — to provide good fellowship among the fathers and to provide scholarships.

New officers of the group are as follows: President, Edward E. Langbein of Stamford, Conn.; Vice President, Robert M. Fletcher of Brockton, Mass.; Secretary-Treasurer, Herbert E. Mehlhorn of Brunswick; and Directors, James W. Robertson, Eugene B. Martens of Long Beach, L. I., N. Y., Howard Crabtree of Needham Heights, Mass., Eugene Wheeler of Old Westbury, N. Y., and Peter Stengel of Cambridge, Mass.

Music

On Alumni Day, November 10, the Meddiebempsters held a reunion at the Pickard Field House. Invitations were sent to nearly eighty former Meddies, dating back about twenty years. The purpose of this first reunion, according to Professor Frederic E. T. Tillotson, was "to form a permanent Meddiebempster Alumni Association with an aim to making some kind of annual contribution to the College and become active in promoting the best interests of the College."

On October 31 the first organizational meeting and rehearsal for a Bowdoin Concert Band were held, with about forty-five men present. A full-dress formal concert is planned in the spring.

The Glee Club presented its first concerts of the 1956-57 season on November 30 at Framingham, Mass., and on December 1 at Waban, Mass. A new Glee Club long-playing record is planned in the spring.

On January 7 violinist Zlatko Balokovic will present a concert. The Bowdoin Music Club will appear on January 16, and on February 16 it will give a performance jointly with Westbrook Junior College. A second student recital comes on February 24.

Emanons And Quill

The EMANONS, a relatively new musical group on the campus, recently released a 12-inch long-playing record processed by R.C.A. The recording has had a good reception among the undergraduates and is being made available to alumni.

Terry Stenberg '56 and Jim Kushner '57 were responsible for the birth of the EMANONS in the spring of 1954. With the addition of Dan Bernstein '59 and Charlie Chapman '57 the next fall, the group became integrated. The further

ATTRIDGE '50 SHOOTS SELF DOWN

WASHINGTON, Oct. 25 (UP)—The Navy said today this actually happened — a jet fighter plane flew so fast it caught up with its own speeding bullets and shot itself down.

The stranger-than-fiction accident was a "million-to-one shot," a spokesman said, and may never happen again. But as a precaution the Navy has warned test pilots to turn aside or pull up after test firing their guns.

The plane which lost the dogfight with itself was a F11F supersonic fighter flown by Test Pilot Tom Attridge, who made a crash landing in which he suffered a fractured leg and three broken vertebrae.

Attridge never knew what hit him — he thought it was a bird that shattered his bullet-proof canopy — until later.

The Navy said three shell holes were found in the crashed plane and a cannon slug of the type Attridge was firing was lodged in the jet engine.

This, it said, was proof that Attridge qualifies as a rival to the legendary man who turned around so fast he met himself coming back.

The freakish accident occurred September 21 when the 33-year-old test pilot, a former Navy flier, was testing the plane's 20-millimeter cannon over the Atlantic Ocean near Long Island, N. Y.

From an altitude of about 13,000 feet, Attridge put the plane into a shallow dive at a speed of about 880 miles an hour and fired two four-second bursts.

As he continued in the dive, the canopy over the cockpit suddenly shattered and Attridge headed for an air strip near Calverton, L. I. But then the engine conked out and he had to make a crash landing in a wooded area a half-mile short of the field.

A Navy spokesman said the experts have surmised that this is probably what happened:

When the cannon shells left the barrels, they were travelling at least 1,500 feet per second faster than the airplane.

The bullets, however, began to slow down because of air resistance, and the drag of gravity caused them to follow a curve trajectory toward the water.

The jet plane, meanwhile, maintained or even picked up speed as it went into a slightly steeper dive. About two or three miles from the point where the guns were fired the paths of the shells and the plane crossed. Attridge thus scored a direct hit on himself.

The F11F Tiger is a new fighter now undergoing tests before being placed into use by the fleet. It is armed with four 20 millimeter cannon which fire at the rate of 1,000 rounds per minute.

Attridge said that after the shell crashed into the cockpit, a pilot in a standby airplane kidded him, saying, "Maybe you shot yourself."

"But I didn't really know what hit me," Attridge said. "All I knew was that I ran into something."

Attridge, father of three girls, spent two weeks in the hospital. He now is recuperating in his Glen Cove, N. Y., home. His leg is in a cast and he wears a back brace.

addition of Olin Sawyer '58 made them complete as they are heard on the recording. In their own words, these five, "with due respect for jazz standards, were in search of a newer and finer expression."

Although Stenberg is the arranger, the other four all have had a hand in the creation of their music. Pianist-arranger Stenberg is a musician who instinctively knows the instruments and can combine them with unusual facility and good taste. Jim Kushner, trumpet, is a symphony-schooled artist who brings to the group a wealth of wide experience. Charlie Chapman on the drums conveys the zest and essential spirit of a piece to his listeners. Dan Bernstein on the bass adds a keen ear and perceptive approach. Oley Sawyer, flute, adds a new scope to Stenberg's arranging and a new dimension to the group's sound.

Selections featured on the recording are "I've Got Rhythm," "Continental," "My Funny Valentine," "Mood Indigo," "Beckwithology," "Facade," "Stompin' at the Savoy," "The Lady is a Tramp," "Lullaby of Birdland," and "Popo."

The record is available for four dollars plus a charge of twenty-five cents to cover mailing costs. Alumni may send their orders to Charles A. Chapman, 7 McKean Street, Brunswick.

Alumni who remember the Quill nostalgically and those who wish to read the undergraduate literary magazine may subscribe by sending two dollars to the Bowdoin Quill at the Moulton Union. Two issues are put out each year.

Fund Conference

Approximately forty-five Class Agents and Fund Directors attended the seventh annual on-campus conference of the Alumni Fund on October 12 and 13. Louis B. McCarthy '19 of New Castle, N. H., Chairman of the 1956-57 Fund, presided.

Five agents received specially inscribed certificates as leaders of their decade groups in the 1955-56 Fund. They were John W. Leydon '07, Frederick W. Willey '17, Samuel A. Ladd jr. '29, Carleton S. Connor '36, and Gerald N. McCarty '50.

Connor, Louis Bernstein '22, Paul Sibley '25, and George S. Willard '30 also received special certificates in recognition of their service as chairmen of the Fund during the four years that Dr. James S. Coles has been Bowdoin's President.

During the course of the weekend the Agents and Directors heard talks from President Coles, Dean Nathaniel C. Kendrick, and Earle S. Thompson '14, Chairman of the Governing Boards' Advisory Committee on Development.

The sports picture remains relatively dim, on the whole, but there are two notable exceptions to this general statement. The first is the sailing team, which has compiled another brilliant fall season, capped by a second place in the annual Midwest Thanksgiving Invitational Regatta at the Belmont Yacht Club in Chicago. Competing in snow and with sails sheathed with ice, the Polar Bears were fourth, behind Michigan, Brown, and Notre Dame, during the first two days of the competition. On the third and final day they came up strongly and just missed catching first-place Brown by two points. The Bruins had 290 points, Bowdoin 288, Michigan 283, and Notre Dame 275.

Trailing were Purdue, Wisconsin, Ohio Wesleyan, Marquette, Oberlin, Georgetown, Fordham, Michigan State, and Northwestern in that order.

Bowdoin's representatives were George Howland, Auburndale, Mass.; Charlie Leighton, North Chatham, Mass.; Dave Belknap, Damariscotta; and Ron Dyer, South Portland.

The sailors also retained possession of the H. Kent Hewitt Trophy at Middlebury, Vt., on October 21, finished fifth in the Schell Trophy Regatta at Tufts, and took second in the fifteenth annual New England Intercollegiate Sailing Association Team Racing Championship at M.I.T.

So it's three cheers for the sailing team, and three more for the members of the Class of 1930 who have been responsible in part for this surge of victories through their generous gift of five Tech dinghies at their 25th reunion in June of 1955.

Football is covered elsewhere in this issue of the Alumnus. Ed Coombs' freshmen defeated Hebron Academy handily but then were more or less swamped by Maine Central Institute, Phillips Exeter, and Phillips Andover.

Frank Sabastanski's freshman and varsity cross-country teams hardly set the world on fire, but they did get in a good deal of running and conditioning that should serve them well during the coming indoor track season. Outstanding weightman Bill McWilliams '57 did not return to school this fall. He plans to come back next September. Meanwhile his loss sort of knocks out any championship hopes the varsity may have had.

It is too early to say much about prospects in basketball, hockey, and swimming. The basketball squad under Ed Coombs has only three lettermen, plus four men who won varsity numerals last winter and some good-looking sophomores. The team plays eighteen games, beginning with Maine on December 5 and ending against Bates on February 27.

Dan MacFayden's hockey squad, in the new Arena, will have a happy and perhaps not unsuccessful year. Seven lettermen are available from last winter and there is a potentially good crop of sophomores. Once they acquire some experience, the squad may really jell. Certainly the men will not suffer from lack of practice! An ambitious schedule lists eighteen games, thirteen of them at home. Included are Army on March 1, the United States National Team on December 12, and the Alumni on March 9.

Bob Miller's swimmers open against M.I.T. in Brunswick on December 8. Five returning lettermen form the nucleus of this year's squad, with the stand-outs Captain Bob Plourde of Pawtucket, R. I., and Hoady White of Brunswick.

Plourde was named to the official All-America Swimming Team for 1956 and was rated fifth among all college swimmers in his specialty, the 200 yard backstroke. White holds the Bowdoin record and pool record in the 200 yard breaststroke.

The other "notable exception" referred to some paragraphs ago was unexpected and greeted with sorrow because of the way it came about. On November 18 the St. Dom's Arena in Lewiston was leveled by fire. As a result the U.S. National Hockey Team, which was to have practiced for a month at St. Dom's, is commuting daily from Auburn to Brunswick, where it is playing a seven-game schedule and holding its practice sessions.

The U.S. Team is made up of twenty

This is the portrait of President Coles presented to the College at a special ceremony on the morning of Alumni Day at the Walker Art Building. The gift of John W. Frost '04 of New York City and Topsham, the portrait was painted by Sidney E. Dickinson of New York.

John H. Halford '07 of Norristown, Pa., a member of the Board of Trustees and Chairman of the Governing Boards' Committee on Art Interests, unveiled the portrait.

Mr. Frost is a native of Topsham, where he continues to maintain a summer home. Engaged in the practice of law in New York since 1909, he served as Mayor of the Town of Pleasantville from 1933 until 1941 and again from 1943 to 1945. He has been a member of the Board of Overseers since 1929 and was its president from 1949 until 1953.

Mr. Dickinson, who studied under George Bridgman, William M. Chase, and Douglas Volk, is represented in the permanent collections of the Corcoran Gallery in Washington, D. C., the Art Institute of Chicago, the City Art Museum of St. Louis, the Houston Art Museum, the Davenport Municipal Gallery, and the Allentown, Pa., Museum. He has received numerous awards for his portraits. Since 1943 he has been an instructor at the Art Students' League in New York.

players, ten of whom competed in the Olympic games last winter at Cortina, Italy, finishing second. Coach of the team is Bill Stewart, formerly a big league baseball umpire, coach of the Chicago Black Hawks, and a National Hockey League referee. Its manager is Jack Matley of Wakefield, Mass., and it is sponsored by the Amateur Hockey Association of the United States.

The squad held its first practice at the Arena on November 24 and will conclude its training here on December 23. After a brief break for Christmas it will travel throughout the United States competing in exhibition matches. On February 3 the team will fly to Europe, where it will take part in a series of exhibition games in various countries outside of the Iron Curtain.

The Arena would seem to be more valuable than even its most ardent supporters would have dared to predict. On a typical Saturday in December it will be in use at least ten hours a day, with morning periods set aside for children under ten years old and for those between ten and fourteen. In the afternoon the varsity, freshmen, and U.S. National Team practice for four hours or so, and in the evening there is a game, followed by an hour of public skating.

Both critics and supporters of the Arena appear to be enjoying it. Many faculty members and their families are skating on its surface. The undergraduates have taken to it like a duck takes to water. And townspeople and other friends of Bowdoin throng to it at times set aside for them. As the months go by, it is anticipated that more and more people of all ages will take advantage of this opportunity to skate.

As Athletic Director Mal Morrell remarked at the dedication program on November 10, "We know that there is considerable interest in the rink on the part of the public. We are glad this is true and we intend to share the use of this facility, keeping in mind that its primary purpose is to serve the undergraduates of the College."

Debating

Two sophomores for the second consecutive year compiled an all-winning record in the annual University of Vermont Debate Tournament, held in Burlington November 16 and 17. They are Richard E. Morgan of Hempstead, N. Y., and Alfred E. Schretter of Keene, N. H.

Morgan and Schretter, defending the position that the United States should discontinue direct economic aid to foreign countries, won all five of their debates. This year they competed in the senior or varsity division, while a year ago they took part in the novice division.

Over-all, Bowdoin teams won fourteen debates and lost six in the tournament.

Debating has been both very active and very successful all during a busy fall season, under the tutelage of Professor Albert R. Thayer '22.

Dramatics

The Masque and Gown voted to dedicate its 1956-57 season to the late Alfred C. Kinsey '16 of Bloomington, Ind., who died on August 25.

The first production of the year was Arthur Miller's Death of a Salesman, which was presented on November 16 and 17. Acting Director of Drama Ray Rutan '51 directed, and the leading role of Willy Loman was played by Norman Levy '57 of New York City.

On December 5 and 6 two George Bernard Shaw plays, directed by Herb Miller '57 of Chestnut Hill, Mass., were presented. Both one-acts, they were The Man of Destiny and The Shewing-up of Blanco Posnet.

Da Vinci Show

During November the Walker Art Building featured a special exhibit on the mechanical genius of Leonardo da Vinci, made available through the Fine Arts Department of the International Business Machines Corporation.

Da Vinci's many inventions were presented in this show in a series of models made from his scientific drawings. The models were constructed by Dr. Roberto Guatelli, after years of study and research.

Self Study Report

More than two thousand copies of "The Conservative Tradition in Education at Bowdoin College" were mailed in November to alumni and to members of the American Association of Colleges. The booklet is the report of the Committee on Self Study, made possible by a grant in December of 1953 from The Fund for the Advancement of Education.

With the assistance of its alumni advisers, the Self Study Committee pre-

Professor Herbert R. Brown recently passed along to the Managing Editor of the ALUMNUS the following request: "Professor Wilmot Brookings Mitchell (that noblest Roman of them all) is eager to acquire (you'd never guess!) several copies of Mitchell's School and College Speaker, the Bible of English 4 for years and years. He'll be happy, he says, to pay for them! Do you suppose you might tuck an appeal in the ALUMNUS somewhere? The book is out of print, and he can't turn up any copies in local bookstores."

pared and sent to all alumni a questionnaire covering various aspects of their college experience. Approximately fifteen hundred replied, either by returning the questionnaire or by letter. Copies of "The Conservative Tradition" were mailed to each of these men.

D M S

Ten seniors have been designated Distinguished Military Students in the Reserve Officers Training Corps. They are Richard K. Fickett, Naples; Richard W. Greene, Bath; Kent G. Hobby, Weston, Mass.; Russell H. Longyear, Great Neck, N. Y.; Richard B. Lyman jr., West Nyack, N. Y.; Joseph W. McDaniel, Wollaston, Mass.; Joseph J. Murphy, Teaneck, N. J.; Arthur L. Perry, Weston, Mass.; John I. Snow, Braintree, Mass.; and Clement S. Wilson, Brunswick.

Men designated Distinguished Military Students are eligible to apply for a commission in the Regular Army.

Gibson Trophy

The Harvey Dow Gibson Memorial Trophy has been awarded to Beta Theta Pi fraternity. Presented to the College in 1951 by the Bowdoin chapter of Theta Delta Chi, the cup is given each year to the house that has shown the greatest improvement in scholastic standing during the previous academic year.

The Gibson Trophy honors the late Harvey D. Gibson '02. For many years a trustee of Bowdoin, he was at the time of his death in September of 1950 President of the Manufacturers Trust Company in New York, where he was widely known for his leadership in business and civic life. Gibson Hall of Music, completed in 1954, stands as a memorial to his lifelong interest in music.

1931's Hi-Fi

A Hi-Fi music system, presented through the generosity of the Class of 1931 at its 25th reunion last June, was dedicated at Bowdoin on October 11. Costing about $1,400, the system was installed in the Moulton Union. It was designed and built by the Listening Post in Boston.

At the dedication Mr. and Mrs. E. Farrington Abbott of Auburn represented the Class of 1931, which also established a $10,000 scholarship fund last June in memory of fifteen classmates who have died during the past quarter of a century.

Four or five concerts of all types of music are being presented over the new Hi-Fi system each week throughout the college year.

Bowdoin and California Institute of Technology have joined in a Combined Plan for the education of engineers, President Coles announced in August. Under the Plan students will study for three years at Bowdoin and two years at California. At the end of that time they will qualify for the degree of bachelor of arts from Bowdoin and for a degree in engineering at California. Normally such a program would take six years.

A student participating in the new 3-2 plan will take at Bowdoin three years of mathematics, three years of physics, at least a year of chemistry, and will be expected to satisfy Bowdoin's language, literature, and group requirements. If his record is sufficiently good, he will be eligible for transfer to Pasadena for technical training in one of the world's foremost centers of advanced scientific study and research.

Nearly twenty years ago Bowdoin joined M.I.T. in a Combined Plan. This program has afforded a distinctive means of combining a liberal arts education with training in fundamental engineering subjects. In general, the program has won the approval of both schools and of the students participating.

Much more recently a Combined Plan was instituted with the School of Engineering at Columbia University.

Recent Gifts

The Keyes Fibre Company of Waterville has made an unrestricted grant of $500 to Bowdoin. President Coles said of the gift, "Such support from the business world, and particularly from leading local industries, is enheartening not only because of the monetary value of the gift, but also through the confidence which it expresses in the work Bowdoin is doing."

The First National City Bank of New York has presented to the College a pair of iron lamps, which have been placed at the entrance to Hubbard Hall.

The lamps were executed in 1908 from designs by the architectural firm of McKim, Mead & White and were installed on either side of the entrance of a building which it designed for the Second National Bank of New York, 250 Fifth Avenue, at the northwest corner of 28th Street.

The Second National Bank of New York was merged recently with the National City Bank of New York and became the First National City Bank of New York.

The lamps are in the style of the early Italian Renaissance. Handsome examples of their kind, they are somewhat similar to those to be found on Florentine palaces.

A Dream Come True

Just after Christmas of 1955 Ludwig Rang, a Bowdoin Plan student at the Theta Delta Chi Fraternity during 1954-55, wrote the following message to President James S. Coles. The letter illustrates how the Bowdoin Plan has benefited not only Rang but also dozens of other students from other countries.

The letter was set in type for the February 1956 ALUMNUS, but space never seemed to permit its publication, so the type was saved from issue to issue. Then last summer Rang was awarded a Rotary Scholarship Grant at Bowdoin for the academic year 1956-57. Thus the letter is somewhat in the nature of a dream, and Rang's second year at Bowdoin is almost literally "a dream come true."

"Two months ago I returned to Europe and, now that I am sufficiently settled in my old world surroundings to look back on the past fifteen months objectively enough, I wish to tell you how much my year at Bowdoin has meant to me.

"I remember when I was informed by Mr. Conant in July 1954 that I had won a Fulbright scholarship and that I was to study at Bowdoin College in Maine. At that time the name Bowdoin was completely unknown and a mystery to me and I would have placed Maine confidently almost anywhere east of the Mississippi except where I found it after looking at a map. Now I am more than ever convinced that I could not have made a better choice myself.

"At Bowdoin I found truly inspiring teachers, Professors whom one can get to know personally, the unique atmosphere of a small and old Liberal Arts College in America, comradeship and friendship in a Fraternity — in short, that kind of educational system which has as its aim equally the imparting of knowledge and the development of the individual.

"My year at Bowdoin for me was more than the usual experience of the foreigner who gets to know a new country and different way of life. I didn't have to struggle for too long with those perplexing and irritating surface-impressions of the first few months of one's life in a foreign country because I had been abroad several times before. I soon made many friends both in and outside the College, lived the same life as all the other students, travelled through America from Maine to Florida and to California and all the way back again and, after a while, just ceased to feel like a 'foreign' student.

"A whole new world opened itself for me during these months, the world of American literature and history, of the immense possibilities of the American language and of, what seemed to me, a freer way of thinking — a world and a country of which I had heard many true and many false things previously and yet knew nothing about.

"This, then, is Bowdoin's contribution to my life, and I am indeed very grateful to the College and my Fraternity for making it possible.

"I am now studying English literature at the University of Bonn, but I often think that some day I would like to return."

Alumni Clubs

CHICAGO

On October 10 a small group met at the Union League Club for dinner with President Coles. The President gave a frank report on the state of the College and discussed some needs and problems facing Bowdoin. A long and profitable question and answer period followed his talk.

The secretary reported that the club's mailing list has been brought up to date. Members are to be polled to learn their desires for future meetings.

CLEVELAND

Peter Barnard '50, Secretary of the Cleveland Bowdoin Club, sent in another of his inimitable reports late in October. In the thought that alumni from other areas will be interested in reading it, here it is.

"Friday, October 26, was a red letter day for the Bowdoin Club of Cleveland. We were to have Professor Herbert Brown as our visitor from the campus, and he did a very great deal for the cause of the small liberal arts college in general and Bowdoin in particular.

"At 8:45 in the morning Herbie spoke to the assembled students and masters of the upper six grades at the chapel exercises at University School for Boys in Shaker Heights. He gave a short but most inspiring talk, and the boys and the masters alike left the hall buzzing with praise and commendation. More questions were subsequently asked me about Bowdoin — and its teachers— than I ever had heard before!

"In the late afternoon the Cleveland Club held what we believe to have been a unique and unusual meeting. We invited a number of the college counselors from various local high schools and preparatory schools to attend a small, informal meeting at The Country Club. Cocktails were served in a very pleasant atmosphere, and Professor Brown gave a short and informal talk to the group. He spoke about the importance and advantages of a small liberal arts college, and then he talked more specifically about Bowdoin. The meeting was concluded by a question and answer period in which the guest counselors seemed to show a great deal of interest.

"A third and final meeting was held the same evening at The University Club. This was our annual fall dinner, and over twenty alumni and wives turned out to meet the durable Mr. Brown and to listen to some witty and well-chosen remarks from him on the current state of affairs at the College. Everyone was very much pleased by his visit, and the Club members gave him a rousing round of applause and a sincere and hearty vote of thanks."

KENNEBEC

Forty-seven members and their ladies met at the Elmwood Hotel in Waterville on October 24 for the annual fall meeting of the Kennebec Bowdoin Club. President Richard S. Norton '46 presented to the members the proposal of the Somerset Bowdoin Club that the two clubs merge. Harry L. Palmer '04 spoke of the difficulties experienced in arranging meetings and effective programs to help the College. He said that the Somerset Club members believe they should be a part of the Kennebec Club. By vote, the merger was made effective. The group is now known as the Kennebec Valley Bowdoin Club.

Richard B. Sanborn '40 presented for the nominating committee the following slate of officers for 1956-57: President, Bernard Lucas '28; Vice-President, Robert Martin '41; Secretary, Willard B. Arnold III '51; Council Member, Richard S. Norton '46. These officers were elected.

Burleigh Martin '10 was toastmaster. He commended the work of the club officers and noted that four of seven schoolboys entertained last year are now freshmen at Bowdoin. Following introduction of those at the head table, Mr. Martin introduced Dean Kendrick, who gave a lengthy report on the state of the College, mentioned the results of the Self Study, and stated positively that alumni help is wanted and needed to interest the best schoolboys in Bowdoin. Students who are athletes are welcomed and the College is much better able to assist such boys than ever before. Bowdoin grants no athletic scholarships but can and does offer substantial help to all well qualified students in need, athletes as well as others.

Coach Adam Walsh stated that Bowdoin's need is for more students who are athletically able and inclined. He outlined the handicaps placed on the coaching staff in recruiting work and urged all alumni to become active in this field. Adam is all for keeping the State Series despite Bowdoin's current poor record of victories. Undergraduates are our best salesmen and they are presently determined to work at finding good schoolboy prospects. Alumni are the next best Bowdoin salesmen. Coach Walsh urged that they join in the recruiting effort.

The year's necrology was read and the meeting adjourned at 10:30 p.m.

KNOX-LINCOLN-WALDO

The Knox-Lincoln-Waldo Bowdoin Club held its annual fall meeting at the Knox Hotel in Thomaston on November 15. Fourteen prospective students were present from the high schools of the three counties.

Guests from Bowdoin were Coach Dan MacFayden, who gave a description of The Arena and also related some big league baseball stories. Assistant Director of Admissions Paul V. Hazelton '42 gave a reassuring talk on the admissions question.

Officers of the Club elected for the ensuing year were as follows: President, Jasper J. Stahl '09; Vice President, Frederic H. Bird '30; Secretary-Treasurer, Alfred M. Strout '26. The Program Committee is composed of Ralph Cushing '05, Glenn Lawrence '07, and Ned Packard '32. The Bowdoin Committee is made up of Kennedy Crane jr. '34, David Soule '38, Don Lewis '27, Charles Begley '48, and Dr. Fred Denison '31.

PORTLAND

Nearly 150 members of the Portland Bowdoin Club enjoyed steak at Vallee's in Scarborough and one of the club's best meetings on October 25.

President Marcus P. Chandler '23 welcomed the members to a year of constructive work for Bowdoin and introduced the speakers.

Athletic Director Malcolm E. Morrell '24

recited the provisions of our agreement with Amherst, Wesleyan and Williams. Bowdoin is living up to that agreement strictly. The athletic staff cannot be active in recruiting. Alumni can be active and they must be if we are to get our share of student-athletes who are now entering the colleges with which we compete.

Coach Adam Walsh elaborated on Mr. Morrell's remarks and asked that each alumnus set himself to interesting one able boy who likes athletics. The undergraduates are already busy.

The chief speaker of the evening was Dr. Ronald Bridges '30. From his wide experience in the field of religion, Dr. Bridges gave an extremely entertaining and informative talk. Taking as his theme that a little laughter is good for us, he stated that humor has always been helpful in relaxing tensions, that humor has throughout history helped us to learn how to live with each other in a steadily contracting world.

Dr. Bridges had his audience in stitches throughout his talk as he offered samples of humor — old and new. A story-teller with few peers, he was able to tie his yarns into the serious message which he brought.

The meeting adjourned at 10:00 p.m.

ROBERT P. ASHLEY JR., Rebel Raiders: John C. Winston Co., Philadelphia, 1956; pp. 176; $1.75.

Robert Ashley has again reached into his store of knowledge of the War Between the States for an exciting story of an unusual engagement. Rebel Raiders tells of the extraordinary maneuver by the Confederate command which took place in St. Albans, Vermont. The raid on this sleepy Vermont town, hundreds of miles from the fighting front, was part of a strategy developed in an attempt to weaken the strength of the Union army by siphoning off part of its manpower to protect the towns of the Canadian border.

In retrospect, it seems an unlikely proposition, but the men who partook of the audacious attack were convinced of the logic involved and felt they were rendering invaluable service to their cause. Momentarily they did throw northern Vermont into a panic, but the futility of the gesture adds a certain poignancy to the account of it.

We are introduced to the raiders as they escape from a Union military prison and we follow their subsequent adventures running the maritime blockade. Although these episodes are interesting in themselves, this reviewer thought the prolonged build-up to the actual raid detracted from the climax, which lacked the tension and excitement and color present in the author's previous book for children, an account of the "great locomotive chase" which took place during the same war. A younger and less sophisticated reviewer in our household, in the age group for whom the book was written, violently disagreed, stating it was every bit as "keen" as the earlier book.

MARTHA REED COLES

ARTHUR SHERBO, Samuel Johnson, Editor of Shakespeare; with an Essay on The Adventurer: University of Illinois Press, Urbana, 1956; Illinois Studies in Language and Literature, vol. 42; pp. 181; $4.00 cloth; $3.00 paper.

"Dr. Johnson's interest in the plays of Shakespeare was lifelong and keen. As a boy he was terrified by the Ghost in Hamlet; and a few days before his death he quoted [to his physician] Macbeth's 'Canst thou not minister to a mind diseased?' [Macbeth is here speaking to his doctor shortly before his own death.] The death of Cordelia affected him so much that he could not bring himself to reread the last scenes of King Lear until he had to do so for his Edition of Shakespeare." So Professor Sherbo records at the outset of his new book. Presently he says, "In a very real sense we can know a man by what he has to say about Shakespeare." And in this volume he manages to throw much fresh light on Doctor Johnson by a very close study of all that pertains to his great Edition of Shakespeare, published in 1765 and reissued with revisions three times before his death in 1784.

In his first chapter Sherbo deals with the "Genesis and Progress" of the Edition. Johnson had it in mind almost a quarter of a century before it materialized; and all of his readings and writings during that interval are scrutinized by Sherbo for their bearing upon the coming work. He deals particularly (Chap. 2) with the Dictionary (1755) that made its author famous. It abounds in quotations from Elizabethan writers, including several thousand from Shakespeare; for whose writings it constituted, in effect, "the most complete glossary and concordance" so far produced. And about one-fourth of the 3600 Notes in the Shakespeare Edition are "traceable, directly or indirectly, to the Dictionary." Next, Sherbo considers Johnson's indebtedness to other editors and critics of Shakespeare (Chap. 3). "He wished to claim for himself what was his, and he wished to give due credit for what was not his." But despite his surpassing honesty he was guilty of a good deal of unacknowledged borrowing. Sherbo demonstrates that fact conclusively; and he leaves us to imagine — I wish he had given us his own opinion fully — to what extent this fault was due to Johnson's occasional and notorious laziness rather than to deliberate intention on his part. And now, having cleared the way, the author in his subsequent chapters deals with those opinions which are clearly Johnson's own, the aim being to discover just what he "liked and disliked in Shakespeare, and why" (p. 68). The author points out that critics have hitherto been content to deduce the Doctor's views from his famous Preface to the Edition, neglecting his voluminous Notes. But the Preface, however striking and masterly, is mainly a summation, as Sherbo shows, of the eighteenth-century conception of Shakespeare. The special preferences of the editor himself cannot be discovered without a complete study of the Notes. Sherbo's chapter on them is so fascinating and revealing that one wishes it could have been very much longer.

Doctor Johnson, author and critic, is popularly regarded today as the apostle of commonsense and reason, unimaginative, emotionally flat. On the other hand it is apparent from the biographies of him that as man he had deep and strong feelings; which he strove, often enough unsuccessfully, to keep under firm control. And Sherbo, as suggested by the long passage quoted at the beginning of this review, has always in mind the man underneath, and larger than, the critic; showing how Johnson responds to the power of Shakespeare's genius even while censuring details of form and style in his plays. Sometimes the censure is quite submerged by the response. Consider for instance Johnson's reaction to the following "gaudy" passage that opens the fourth Act of 2 Henry Sixth. It begins as follows:

The gaudy, blabbing, and remorseful day
Is crept into the bosom of the sea. . . .
One would expect, as Sherbo points out (p. 76), that the gross word "blabbing," not to speak of the rest of the passage, which is even more noisy than the two quoted lines above, would be particularly offensive to the Doctor's fastidious taste. Instead, his imagination seizes upon a fact which a less heedful and less emotional reader might easily miss: namely the atmospheric effect of the passage in its total context. It is uttered by a sea-captain (note the word "sea" in the quoted lines) who, after suppressing his conscience with some difficulty (it pricks him in line 28), determines upon the murder of the Duke of Suffolk (line 68). Johnson's comment is: "The epithet blabbing applied to the day by a man about to commit murder is exquisitely beautiful. Guilt is afraid of light, considers darkness as a natural shelter, and makes night the confidante of those actions which cannot be trusted to the tell-tale day."

The Doctor's heart and imagination are also exemplified in this book's final chapter, which has nothing to do with Shakespeare but much with Johnson as poet. He had a hand, more or less concealed, in his friend Hawkesworth's periodical The Adventurer which began appearing in 1752. The essays therein, by various contributors, contained excerpts from the Greek and Latin classics and were headed by mottoes from the same. English versions of those quotations were provided when the essays were published later in collected form. And Sherbo, after careful investigation, is able to demonstrate that most of the unsigned translations were made by Johnson, thus extending the canon of his verse. The addition is very welcome. For Johnson's versions, cited by Sherbo along with the originals (pp. 157-173), are generally in his best vein — free, clear, delightfully colloquial, often racy: the Doctor put his human heart into them along with his wit. Here it should be stated that Sherbo's own English style is remarkably good. Many of his pages, however, are so minutely factual as to be of interest only to the specialistic scholars for whom this volume is mainly designed. But perhaps in the future he will write for the general reader — with as many footnotes and appendices for scholars as he desires — a book on a large subject which, though partially dealt with by many other writers, has not yet been fully and finely treated: Samuel Johnson, Critic of Books, Ideas, and Persons — including that great and multifarious person whom he often takes to task, his own self.

GEORGE ROY ELLIOTT

ARTINE ARTINIAN, Pour et contre Maupassant; Enquête internationale — 147 témoignages inédits: Librairie Nizet, Paris, 1955; pp. 145; $1.50.

This book brings up to date an earlier survey of Maupassant's fame published by Artine Artinian in 1943 and entitled Maupassant Criticism in France 1880-1940. Like its predecessor, it includes a critical study of Maupassant's popularity through the last sixty years, and it reproduces 147 judgments by well-known men of letters, mostly French. About thirty-eight of these were received between 1948 and 1954 and are therefore a welcome supplement to the original list of contributors. Among them are to be found French professors at the Sorbonne, the Collège de France and Yale University, several literary critics, and younger writers who have emerged since 1940, such as Albert Camus, Julien Gracq, Hervé Bazin, Maurice Druon, Robert Merle.

Despite the drastic changes that have taken place in literary taste, no less than in our general outlook and mode of living, Maupassant still retains a fairly high place in the esteem of the literati. What is surprising is not that some should profess complete indifference, but that there should still be so many who value his work and in some cases acknowledge a debt to him. On the whole, it can be said that he has suffered no more than his contemporaries in the field of fiction. If anything, he has worn better.

It would be interesting to make an exact tabulation of the opinions collected here, so as to bring out the main points of criticism. The following may serve as a beginning.

There is no complete agreement as to which part of his work ranks first. The short stories, as expected, are considered by most as his major achievement, but some feel very strongly on the importance of his novels, and within the short stories a distinction is sometimes made between those that deal with the upper and middle classes and the more rustic ones, such as the Contes de la bécasse, the latter being preferred.

The quarrel between those who favor Maupassant and those who swear by Chekhov still goes on. Sherwood Anderson, for instance, regretfully sees in the Frenchman the leading practitioner of the plot — not to say the trick — story, while Somerset Maugham, who can afford to be brief after his fuller treatment of this question in The Summing Up, merely reiterates his previous stand that the Russian has been vastly overrated since World War I.

Maupassant is still recognized, particularly by historians of language or literature, as the classicist of naturalism, that is to say, as the man in whom the realism of the age was cleansed of its Zolaesque impurities and assumed a classical form. His style, especially, has stood the test of time because of its clarity and simplicity. At this point it is observed by some that his French makes him an ideal author for foreigners studying the language, and it is probably true that his hold on schools in foreign countries is still strong, although newcomers in the field of the short story are beginning to challenge it.

But this classical treatment of realistic subjects may account, if only indirectly, for the ground he has lost with the present generation. Classicism may not be enough of a corrective to make up for the remoteness of naturalism and it may not be what we feel we need most in our troubled world. There is expressed in various ways through this collection of opinions a feeling that if Maupassant is read with zest in one's younger years, and often for reasons not strictly literary, he is seldom read again. This is advanced by men who have established themselves in the field of criticism or in that of creative writing, and it is worth looking at. The argument essentially is that Maupassant is too clear, too obvious. One reading of a story drains it of all its contents. You can't go back for more. The world he lets us into is flooded with a bright light and affords no shadowy recesses to explore. According to André Gide, who endorses this view, Maupassant has really nothing to tell us, he has no message, and his personality is devoid of interest. A younger writer, Julien Gracq, adds that he saw better than he understood. On the other hand, his American biographer, Francis Steegmuller, cautions us against this deceptive accessibility of Maupassant. He is, he asserts, much more complex than we give him credit for. Those who do not agree may be tempted to accept Julien Gracq's opinion. Before they do so, however, they might reflect that this simplicity which in our age has become a liability is the result of careful selection. Is it possible to select the significant detail without a thorough grasp, instinctive or otherwise, of the reality to be rendered?

Another view advanced by some who deplore his decline is that he is too closely identified with a certain period not to be included in the revulsion from it. Seen in retrospect, the forty years before World War

I strike us as futile, fussy and funny, and there are not many stories by Maupassant that are not redolent with some outmoded aspect of the Victorian era. If the Contes de la bécasse seem to elicit more praise, it is probably because their setting is less dated.

From all this it would seem that Maupassant still ranks high with a fair number of present-day writers, whose opinion, incidentally, may be based more on sentiment than on a detached re-appraisal. To the extent that there is an eclipse of his popularity, we can attribute it to two factors.

We are still reacting against the style of living prominently described in his works. Moreover, we don't seem to find in him the subtlety and complexity which many deem essential in good writing. The cumulative effect of symbolism and subsequent literary trends has made it harder for us to be content with a matter-of-fact story drawn from ordinary life. As Gilbert Sigaux said: "His esthetics are too simple for a modern writer to feel their impact."

These two reasons may not be the only ones. They would be almost sufficient in themselves.

But as we reach this conclusion, we should perhaps remember Maupassant's admonition to the critics in his preface to Pierre et Jean: the critics have no right to condemn the author without first ascertaining his aim and determining to what extent he has achieved it. If we adopt this principle, can we deny that Maupassant did superlatively what he had set out to do?

And there the matter could rest. Except that we are under no obligation to be moved by his stories. We have a perfect right to decide that they fail to satisfy our intellectual or emotional needs. But our opinion is as revealing about ourselves as about him, and for that reason the evidence ably collected and analyzed by Mr. Artinian will be of value to both the Maupassant scholar and the cultural historian.

JEAN DARBELNET

EARL BALDWIN SMITH, Architectural Symbolism of Imperial Rome and the Middle Ages: Princeton University Press, 1956; pp. 219; $7.50.

Six years ago Professor Baldwin Smith published a remarkable essay on the early history of the Dome. Now, while Bowdoin and the larger world of scholarship lament his recent death, we receive a sequel to it. Like his previous book it is perhaps best described as a "study in the history of ideas" — this time, of divine kingship. The theme is not late antique and medieval architectural symbolism in general, but the case-history of a particular significant motif, namely the city-gate and the palace entrance. Almost literally, the author invites us to see heaven in a grain of sand. For the city-gate and the palace portico where the divine ruler manifested himself symbolically or ceremonially to the people were commonly regarded in antiquity and the middle ages, both in the East and in the West, as images of heaven. Indeed it is only yesterday that we ceased to call Constantinople the "Sublime Porte."

The story begins with the "epiphanies" of Hellenistic kings before their city-gates.

These were distinguished by towers and cupolas, symbols of heaven. Professor Smith shows how the tradition of imagery and ideology was taken up and handed on by Rome — in the triumphs and "advents" of emperors, in the architecture of triumphal arches, in the arcaded facades of imperial palaces, in the Westwerke of Carolingian basilicas. Secondly he follows the career of the domed vestibule in imperial palaces from Hellenistic Egypt into old Rome and to Byzantium. Contrary to usual opinion he sees much of the inspiration of the Islamic dome in Byzantium.

Such are the bare bones of the thesis. The difficulty about it is that the cardinal pieces of evidence are often missing. Little or nothing, for example, of Alexandrian or even Constantinopolitan imperial palaces remains. Professor Smith is therefore obliged to rely on secondary sources like coins, manuscript pictures and stray literary allusions, and to argue backwards. The result is a tissue of circumstantial argument, as the author is ever reminding the reader. It must stand or fall on its merits, and surely, on the whole, it stands.

The interest of such an essay in the history of Staatssymbolik (to borrow Professor Schramm's phrase) extends, obviously, far beyond mere architectural history. Narrowly, as Professor Smith himself observes, "the basic issue underlying many of the conclusions is the question of whether we should not reformulate some of our preconceptions regarding the historical development, domical structure, ceremonial purpose and heavenly symbolism of the sacrum palatium at Constantinople." This is a matter for the specialist. But at the same time there can be few students of late antiquity and the middle ages who will not find some new light thrown on their pet subjects by this richly documented, closely argued and wide-angled and imaginative study.

The footnotes are marred by a number of grotesque errors of transcription, especially of German. So scrupulous and painstaking a scholar deserved better proof-reading.

Looking

The first Commencement of the College occurred in September, 1806. Distinguished visitors from Maine and Massachusetts attended. A postponement to the next day was made necessary by a violent storm, and the exercises were then held in the unfinished building located on the site of the present First Parish Church. The storm continued, however, and the audience was pelted by pouring rain. President McKean presided with an umbrella over his head. It was many years before the town again witnessed such a gathering of brilliant personages, and the small villages of Brunswick and Topsham were hard put to it to harbor the influx of strangers. Misadventures under the pelting rain in the unlighted, gullied, and muddy streets of Brunswick produced many reminiscences during the years to come. General Knox' carriage, filled with gentlemen and ladies in their best party apparel, was upset down the bank on the side of the bridge across the Androscoggin. Foot passengers groping in the dark lost their way. Houses were crowded with guests, many of them sleeping on the floor. The ball on Commencement evening was held in spite of the rain, and notwithstanding the storm it was repeated on the second evening.

The College at that time consisted of Massachusetts Hall, a plain, unpainted wooden chapel, and a single wooden dwelling for the president.

The controversy between President Allen and the Governing Boards reached an impasse in the fall of 1831. As president since 1820, to him belongs the credit for many progressive changes in the college curriculum, but his narrow, arbitrary personality built up antagonism.

Early in 1831 the legislature put it in the power of the Governing Boards to eject him from the presidency under a law requiring annual elections for the presidents of Bowdoin and Colby. The legislature thus attempted to exercise the power supposed to have been conferred on it when in 1820 the College formally surrendered its Massachusetts birthright.

At Commencement in September, President Allen refused to promise to resign if re-elected. The trustees deadlocked, the Boards adjourned, and for two years the College had no president. At the end of those two years, a law suit brought by President Allen against the College to collect his pay resulted in a decision by Mr. Justice Storey invalidating the 1820 proceedings and restoring Bowdoin to its status as an institution subject to both Maine and Massachusetts.

Maine Hall was reoccupied in the fall of 1836, having been rebuilt at an expense of $11,000 after the destructive fire of February 17, 1836, the second time that this building had been burned out. In the fire of 1836 the interior of the north end was destroyed but the fire wall protected the south end, so that by the time it caught fire from the roof all the contents and even the doors and windows were saved from the south end. In rebuilding, the middle entrance and cornice were removed and the dormitory became a plain brick rectangle like Winthrop and Appleton.

The legislature of 1836 repealed the exemption of college students from membership in the militia and from attendance at the annual "Muster Day" which had become an occasion for jollity more than for military exercises. This legislation undoubtedly meant that students were liable to enrollment in their home towns, but Bowdoin students decided that the occasion demanded a muster of the entire student body. Attired in bizarre costumes and led by two horsemen, one of whom wore immense wooden spectacles and a drooping rooster feather, they paraded the streets of Brunswick with great eclat and burlesqued military exercises on a vacant lot on "Back Street" (now Federal Street).

The Eastern Argus of Portland, traditionally critical of the College, deplored the conduct of the students in making light of a required military obligation. The Family Pioneer and Juvenile Key, then Brunswick's only periodical, came to the defense of the students, pointing out that there was no legal requirement for military service by the students while away from home — and therefore why shouldn't they spoof?

On August 1, 1856, there was a "class war" which almost reached the status of a pitched battle. The freshmen having ducked all the sophomores who had been concerned in a certain hazing affair except one who safely roomed with a junior, the sophomores gathered en masse and were resisted by the freshmen armed with knives, clubs, and pistols. Before the affair reached a climax, vacation's arrival dispersed the crowd. The affair confirmed in the minds of the readers of some religious weeklies their firm belief that there was much intemperance at the College. But the high spirits responsible for the affair were not imbibed.

In its report to the 1856 meeting of the Boards the visiting committee criticized the lack of discipline in the student body and suggested that delinquents should be firmly separated from the College without regard to the feelings of parents. The committee hinted that some professors were overkindly in failing to discover delinquencies.

Joshua L. Chamberlain, who after the

Backward

Civil War was to be president of the College and Governor of the state, having been elected instructor in elocution, told the visiting committee that the courses in voice culture were not properly appreciated by the students. "Those who most need it" did not attend. He reported that he had examined 1100 themes during the year and said he required every student to revise and rewrite until his theme was brought to tolerable accuracy.

The Orient alleged that one of Bowdoin's Massachusetts rivals had "purchased" Bowdoin's pitcher, who had previously pitched at Bates, as well as Brown's catcher. The Orient was skeptical of the report that the whole affair merely involved a commendable understanding on the part of the alumnus of the Massachusetts college to defray a needy athlete's college expenses. It appears from the general catalog that the pitcher subsequently duly graduated from the Massachusetts college and taught school successfully for many years.

The Orient was at this time, as it had been from its founding and continued to be for many years, a combination of editorials, literary essays, and college news. Little is to be found of interest today in the essays, but the editorials illuminate the college life of the time. For instance, there were editorials commending faculty receptions and urging students to enter town society. Monday evening receptions at faculty homes were begun but soon flopped. The attendance was skimpy largely because anyone who dressed up and went was mildly derided by his friends. The paper's encouragement of student entry into town society also produced no definite results. The Orient advocated budgeting time and spending money so that a student could afford to enter the gay society life of Brunswick and thereby gain "a large circle of friends, conducive to his advancement."

The pipes of the Brunswick Water Company, laid in the village, were extended to the college grounds. Hydrants were installed and the pressure was sufficient to spray the roofs of the dormitories. Water was not as yet piped into the dormitories. There were outlets near each end where water for drinking and toilet purposes could be obtained. To be able to get water at an outdoor faucet instead of from a well was regarded as a great improvement.

The faculty announced that henceforth no individual ranks would be given out, but simply an indication of the quarter of the class in which each student stood. The plan was soon abandoned.

H. S. Card '88, who has now returned annually for Commencement for nearly seventy years, was elected business manager of the '88 Bugle.

"Did you know that for fifty cents. . . you can order a barrel of charcoal at the treasurer's office which will be sufficient to build your fires all winter? The present wanton destruction of attic floors is both wasteful and expensive." Attic floors were the traditional source for kindling wood in students' stoves and were renewed annually at the expense of the students through a college charge for "average of repairs."

The gymnasium was in full operation under the instruction of Dr. Whittier. A horizontal bar was put up on the south side, and class drills, which were to become a feature for many years of the annual athletic exhibition, were begun. Gymnasium attendance was as yet voluntary and fell off greatly after the novelty of the building wore off. A class was formed for townsmen, "mostly ministers."

Clay tennis courts were being laid out by the various fraternities behind the dormitories. Six had been completed by the fall of 1886. Gymnasium supplies were on sale at a room in Appleton.

Both the Bowdoin and Colby papers were urging that football should be established in the Maine colleges. Colby and Maine State College favored an intercollegiate league and Bates was expected to cooperate. Both papers deplored the decision of the faculty at Orono excluding Maine State College from the state baseball league. The New England Intercollegiate Athletic Association was formed at a meeting in Boston of delegates from Amherst, Bowdoin, Brown, Dartmouth, Trinity, Tufts and Williams.

On October 25th at 3:00 A.M. occurred the sophomore "peanut drunk." A. J. Booker, who had the care of the college grounds and buildings, reported that the only food was half an old turkey and that the "sophomores were rather a bad lot."

Sidney Dickenson lectured on "Spanish Painters" on a stormy night to a large audience.

A concert was given in Memorial Hall to add to the fund for the payment of the Hawthorne portrait which had been obtained and was on exhibition during the concert.

In football Bowdoin beat Maine 6-0, played a scoreless tie with Colby, and lost to Bates 6-0. Bates won the state championship for the first time, breaking the alternation between Bowdoin and Maine. No victories resulted from games with out-of-state teams, Cornell, Exeter, Harvard and Tufts. There was a scoreless tie in the Wesleyan game.

The worst defeat was by Cornell, 72-0. George B. Chandler '90 wrote to the Orient a fierce criticism of the College for playing with teams outside its class and thereby hurting Bowdoin's prestige. John W. Frost '04 answered, pointing out the truth which has been reiterated so many times since, including the current season, viz: that teams vary in quality from year to year and in esprit from game to game. No one game is a reliable indication of the athletic capabilities of a team during the season or of a college over the years. He prophesied correctly the favorable outcome of the University of Maine game.

The Orient did, however, have an editorial criticizing the stiffness of Bowdoin scholastic requirements which often kept good men off the team.

William R. Crowley '08 was elected captain of the football team for the next season.

The financial statement for the season filed by manager Neal W. Allen '07 showed

ARSENIC AND OLD WALLPAPER

An investigation of arsenic in wallpaper was made nearly seventy years ago by the then professor of chemistry at Bowdoin College, Franklin C. Robinson of the Class of 1873, for the Maine State Board of Health, of which he was a member. His preliminary report in the collected papers of that Board for the year ending December 31, 1898 (page 284), and his complete report a year later in the Reports of the American Public Health Association (Vol. XVII, page 212) are of special interest in the year 1956 because of the news item that Clare Boothe Luce, ambassador to Italy, was stricken by arsenic poisoning in the seventeenth century Villa Teverna where American ambassadors to Rome reside. The report was not taken seriously by some columnists. At least one of them doubted the causation and said that ridicule of the absurd story might embarrass her into resigning.

That may be so, but the report in Time of her exposure to the dust from an ancient ceiling and her consequent symptoms are entirely consistent with facts found by Professor Robinson. His analyses in 1888 of many samples disclosed that arsenic was at that time a dangerous component of wallpapers currently on sale. And in his report he told of a significant experience in a family which in his preliminary report was unnamed but which in his final report he concedes was his own.

It appeared that during the time he was making his general investigations he moved into a newly constructed house and his two oldest boys slept in a low roofed chamber with English wallpaper depicting in bright green colors scenes of harvesting and pressing grapes. The gabled ceiling met the wall a foot or two above their heads in the corner where they slept in a double bed. They began to develop the nausea and other symptoms which Ambassador Luce described in Time as having had. The baby of the family would also occasionally sleep in that room, would develop temporarily the same symptoms and would recover when placed in his own crib in another room; and the mother of the family sitting by the window to sew found herself becoming despondent as well as nauseated.

Eventually the professor was struck with the resemblance between these symptoms in his own family and those in the cases of arsenic poisoning reported in the books. He analyzed the wallpaper and found it loaded with arsenic and also found arsenic in dust lodged in the crevices of the floor and around the door. He says in his first report that but for the early discovery the children would probably have died.

Nowadays, of course, American paint and wallpaper are colored by mineral and aniline dyes. So one might well suppose that investigations and reports on the subject of arsenic in these commercial products could be forgotten lore. But evidently in an ancient palace in Italy an American ambassador in 1956 repeated the experience of Professor Robinson's family in 1888.

CLEMENT F. ROBINSON '03

a cash balance of $48.23 with sufficient accounts receivable to more than pay the unpaid tag ends for the season. The receipts for the whole season were $4,330.50.

Brunswick water was so bad that the College supplied Pine Spring water to the dormitories.

In a letter to the Orient George W. Burpee '04 criticized the scantiness of alumni news and urged that a graduates' magazine should be substituted. Edward Stanwood '61 (editor of The Youth's Companion) objected to duplicating college publications and said that the Orient needs the support of the alumni and could well increase its alumni coverage. The Orient replied with a statement that it had difficulty getting alumni news, but the editor took a dim view of starting another magazine. Mr. Burpee's suggestion was to become effective in 1927.

The student body greeted Robert E. Peary's train passing through the railroad station on his return from an unsuccessful attempt to reach the Pole (he was to do it on April 6 1909). Commander (later to be Admiral) Peary spoke to the students present, expressing his loyalty toward Bowdoin, from which he had graduated 29 years before.

By way of anti-climax, most of the students went down to the depot a few weeks later to get a glimpse of one Francis, a convict escaped and recaptured, who was being taken back to the state's prison at Thomaston.

The first of four college teas was held on December 14th. This social institution was as yet more successful than the faculty receptions attempted twenty years earlier.

A dismal football season. Bowdoin lost every game: Massachusetts State College, Williams, Wesleyan, Colby, Bates, Tufts, and Maine. Maine won the state championship. College enthusiasm was at one of those low ebbs that occur from time to time. Some blamed admissions requirements, some blamed coaching, some blamed the woeful absence of good players who preferred other activities, and there were a few who felt that Bowdoin ought to give up playing football with institutions evidently out of our class. One thing, of course, that was needed was the confident will to win. With the coming of Adam Walsh in 1935 that need was filled.

Alumni Day in connection with the Bates game was featured by a polo match between the Bowdoin Riding Club and a Cape Elizabeth team.

The Orient carried a lively account of a ping-pong bout at the Union won by the "intrepid" pair, Herbert Brown and Fritz Koelln, from an unnamed professor's wife "of Pennsylvania origin" and the Tallman professor, M. R. Ridley.

Statistics of the athletic department showed that the average man in the entering class in the fall of 1931 was two inches taller and ten pounds heavier than his predecessor forty years earlier.

Additions to the faculty included R. L. Korgen in mathematics and E. C. Helmreich in history and government. The ratio of one instructor to eleven undergraduates was maintained. Professor Maurice R. Ridley, Balliol College, Oxford University, was Tallman lecturer. Linn Wells joined the coaching staff. President Sills declined to run for governor on the Democratic ticket. The college endowment stood at over six million dollars.

Robert Hillyer lectured on "The Rhythm of English Verse." Twenty-five years later a lecture by Professor Coxe told of the radical changes that had happened in the meantime.

Doubtless both speakers would agree to Mr. Hillyer's theory that poetry is fundamentally to be heard not seen. Mr. Hillyer deplored the increasing tendency to write obscure poetry with limping feet unreadable aloud. He read examples of poetry carrying a meaning as well as a rhythm. Professor Hillyer's lecture was interestingly supplemented by a lecture by Professor S. E. Bassett of the University of Vermont entitled "On Reading Homer." Homer's poems were oral long before they were transcribed.

Still a third evening during the fall was devoted to poetry when an "enthusiastic audience gathered in the lounge of the Union to listen in expressive silence to the voice of Hermann Hagedorn" reading from his own poems.

Adrian Van Sinderen of New York, a recognized authority, spoke on rare books.

The Orient for November 11th devoted a page to Armistice Day, as a recollection of the martial spirit in an earlier period, contrasted with the then-current peaceful status of the world.

From week to week the Orient headed its editorial columns with this list of college needs: a senior dormitory, a classroom building, a covered hockey rink, better roads through the campus, closer faculty scrutiny of the finances of publications, separation of the Bowdoin Alumnus from the Bowdoin Publishing Company, student representation on the blanket tax committee, a longer reading period, closer contacts between student council and undergraduates, reorganization of requirements for degrees. During the next twenty-five years many of these things were measurably accomplished.

The Bowdoin Gymnasium Team under the guidance of Professors Thomas Means and Roland H. Cobb '17 had become one of the most highly respected groups in the country according to a report published with Professor Means' picture in the issue of January 2nd.

Professor Alfred O. Gross lectured on the birds of Canadian Labrador illustrated by motion pictures and colored lantern slides. With Thornton W. Burgess, the nature story writer, he had spent three months in Labrador studying and photographing birds.

Necrology

1884 CHARLES CUTLER TORREY, Overseer Emeritus of the College, died in Chicago, Ill., on November 12, 1956, at the age of 92.

Dr. Torrey had a remarkable career as one of a triumvirate of Bowdoin brothers, all three of whom were members of Alpha Delta Phi fraternity and were elected to Phi Beta Kappa. (See page 4.)

1894 For the third time within the past year, death has taken a member of the class of '94. EMERY HOWE SYKES died in Lafayette, California, on November 7, 1956.

Mr. Sykes was born in Auburn on February 17, 1874. He prepared for college in the public schools of that city and entered Bowdoin in the fall of 1890. At Bowdoin he was the typical all round college man. He had high ranks, was a member of the football team three years, for the same period a member of the baseball team, its captain his senior year. During his junior year he was chosen president of his class, which position he held until his death. His fraternity was Alpha Delta Phi.

After graduation, he coached football at Colby and taught school at Billerica, Massachusetts. In 1899 he enrolled in the Law School of Columbia University and graduated in 1902, at which time he was admitted to the New York Bar. At Columbia he continued his football activities, playing quarterback on the team of 1899 that defeated the U. S. Naval Academy team.

In 1903 he became associated with the law firm of Sullivan & Cromwell of New York City, remaining with that firm until his retirement from active practice on December 31, 1949. His career at the bar was principally in the field of litigation. He handled a large number of important cases involving commercial and corporate matters. He was widely and affectionately known among his fellow lawyers for his ability, courtesy and helpfulness.

For many years during his association with Sullivan & Cromwell, John Foster Dulles, the present Secretary of State, was the senior member of the firm and Allen W. Dulles, present head of the U. S. Central Intelligence Agency, was also a member. Mr. Sykes also worked with Harlan Fiske Stone, late Chief Justice of the United States, during the time when Judge Stone was a member of the firm.

On March 17, 1915, he married Lillian F. Stemler, who survives him, together with two daughters, Mrs. Janet S. Poulton of Staten Island and Mrs. Mildred S. Klitgaard of Lafayette, California.

ARTHUR CHAPMAN '94

1900 WILLIAM BILLINGS WOODBURY, for thirty years a superintendent of schools in various Maine towns before his retirement in 1939, died on October 19, 1956, in Skowhegan. Born April 20, 1877, in Farmington, he was the son of Roliston Woodbury '64. He prepared for Bowdoin at Deering High School in Portland and following his graduation magna cum laude taught in Bucksport for a year, then was a principal successively in Pittsfield, Vt., Hanover, N. H., Farmington, N. H., and York before becoming superintendent of schools in Turner and Canton in 1910. Two years later he went to Belfast and Searsport, and from 1918 until 1921 was superintendent in Farmington, New Vineyard, and Temple. He then became superintendent in Skowhegan and Madison, where he remained for eighteen years, retiring in 1939.

President of the Somerset County Teachers Association in 1927-28 and of the Maine Teachers Association in 1934-35, he received a master of arts degree from Dartmouth in 1906. He was a Mason and a member of Rotary. Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Maude Johnson Woodbury, whom he married in Belfast on June 25, 1903; two sons, Colonel Kenneth Woodbury of Manchester, N. H., and Frederick Woodbury '33 of Detroit, Mich.; one brother, Nelson of Portland; and three grandchildren. He was a member of Beta Theta Pi and Phi Beta Kappa.

1902 EDGAR MEADE SIMPSON, a rancher in Hood, Calif., was killed on September 17, 1956, when a team of runaway horses threw him from a wagon. He and his son Edgar jr. had been using a light training wagon in breaking a colt to harness with an older horse. Edgar was driving when the colt got tangled with the wagon tongue and both horses bolted. Edgar jr. raced after the horses, but a wagon wheel struck a plow in the yard, the jolt throwing his father out.

Born October 31, 1880, in Oakland, Calif., Edgar prepared at Phillips Exeter Academy and attended Bowdoin for one year as a special student. He spent fifteen years at sea, during which time he was master of a four-masted barkentine and served with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, then spent several years more at his father's Oregon mill and shipyard. His hobby was the collecting of old stage coaches, and his coaches were used in several motion pictures, including "Ben Hur" and "The Oregon Trail." He gained a corner on the old Concord type stage by buying up the patent years ago. He also had an excellent collection of old guns, dating back to the earliest days of the frontier in the West.

President and owner of the Friend and Terry Lumber Company in Sacramento, Edgar was also owner and manager of the Diamond S Ranch at Hood, where he had lived since 1914. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Nora Simpson; two sons, Michael and Edgar jr.; and a sister, Mrs. Roy Pike of San Francisco.

1904 WILLIAM EDWARD LUNT, who retired from the faculty of Haverford College in 1952 after teaching there for thirty-five years, died on November 10, 1956, in Bryn Mawr, Pa., at the age of 74. He had been a member of the Bowdoin Board of Overseers since 1939 and served on the Governing Boards' committees on the Library and Educational Policy. He was a member of Zeta Psi and Phi Beta Kappa. (See page 5.)

1908 BOWDOIN NEALLEY GREGSON died in Portland on October 17, 1956, at the age of 70. Born in Wilkinsonville, Mass., on February 24, 1886, he prepared at the Holderness School in Plymouth, N. H., and attended Bowdoin for three years. From 1907 until 1917 he was an architectural draftsman in Boston. During World War I he served as a corporal with the United States Engineers in the 26th Division. He was later a draftsman in Portland, Philadelphia, and Harrisburg, Penna., and became a registered architect in Maine. He worked in the shipyards in South Portland during World War II.

In 1931 Bowdoin received a certificate from the University of Pennsylvania after completing a special three-year course in architecture. He was a member of Alpha Delta Phi fraternity.

1908 JOHN EUGENE REMICK MUDGETT died of a heart condition in Roosevelt Hospital in New York City on September 16, 1956. Born September 5, 1881, in Bangor, he prepared at the local high school and at Phillips Exeter Academy. Before spending two years at Bowdoin as a special student, he worked for the Bangor Commercial for several years. He returned to that paper in 1906 and remained with it for six years, then joined an architectural firm in New York City in an advertising and sales capacity. He was president and director of Architects Samples Corporation, vice president and director of Edwin A. Scott Publishing Company, and vice president and treas-

Where There's A Will . . .

There's A Way To Serve Bowdoin

The College has received notice of the following legacies:

From Charles C. Torrey '84 the sum of one thousand dollars, to be used for the purchase of books for the Library in the field of Fine Art.

From Chauncey W. Goodrich H'15, subject to life interests, the sum of five thousand dollars for the general purposes of the College.

urer of Carpenter Manufacturing Company. His fraternity was Alpha Delta Phi.

1913 VURNYER ADRIAN CRAIG died on November 4, 1956, at Greater Niagara General Hospital, Niagara Falls, Ontario, Canada, following a brief illness. He had been engaged in the insurance business for the past forty years. Born on March 5, 1882, in Mattawamkeag, Vurnyer did not enter Bowdoin until he was twenty-seven. He prepared for college at Washington Academy and after graduation in 1913 taught school in Maine for a short time before going to Niagara Falls. A Mason and Certified Life Underwriter, he was also active in the life of his church, where he was clerk and taught a young men's Bible class.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Verna Larrabee Craig, whom he married in Starks on November 6, 1912; three sons, Keith and Richard of Niagara Falls, and Leonard of Batavia, N. Y.; two brothers, Samuel of Bangor and Edward of Orono; two sisters, Mrs. Bessie Angove of Belfast and Mrs. Eugene Ward of Searsport; and nine grandchildren. He was a member of Delta Upsilon.

1914 GEORGE FRANKLIN EATON, loyal Bowdoin man and prominent Bangor lawyer and businessman, died at his home in that city on October 1, 1956, at the age of 64. Born March 15, 1892, in Brewer, he prepared for Bowdoin at Bangor High School and following his graduation in 1914 attended the University of Maine Law School, receiving a bachelor of laws degree in 1916. He set up his practice in Bangor and practiced as an individual until 1940, when he founded and became senior partner in the firm of Eaton, Peabody, Bradford, and Veague.

Widely known and respected for his many civic and charitable interests, George was a trustee of the Bangor Savings Bank and a director of Eastern Corporation and Merchants Corporation. He was a trustee of the Eastern Maine General Hospital, the Bangor Public Library, the Bangor Family Welfare Society, the Y.M.C.A. and the Y.W.C.A. He was a former trustee and treasurer of the Bangor Theological Seminary. From 1921 until 1925 he was Bangor City Solicitor; he served on the Bangor School Board from 1926 until 1931, was a member of the City Council during 1932-33, and was Penobscot County Attorney from 1926 until 1928.

During World War I George served as a first lieutenant in the Air Corps for two years. He was president and director of the European and North American Railway until the company was sold last year. He was president of the Maine Bar Association in 1954-55 and served his profession in hosts of ways.

George also served Bowdoin in hosts of ways. He was a member of the Alumni Council from 1935 until 1938, was president of the Penobscot County Bowdoin Club at one time, and was a keenly interested Director of the Alumni Fund a few years ago. His four sons inherited his love for the College, and all four are Bowdoin men.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Littlefield Eaton, whom he married in Bangor on August 22, 1917; four sons, Franklin W. '42, Richard G. '44, Robert J. '51, and Dwight L. '57; two brothers, Arthur G. Eaton of Bangor and Fred G. Eaton of Augusta, and six grandchildren. He was a member of Alpha Delta Phi. Friends and classmates will want to read Al Gray's moving tribute to George in the 1914 Class Notes in this issue of the Alumnus.

1916 HUGH MERRILL HESCOCK, whose life encompassed many careers, died on September 21, 1956, in Laconia, N. H., following a long illness. Born July 30, 1894, in Foxcroft, he attended Foxcroft Academy, and following his graduation from Bowdoin taught at Taunton, Mass., High School for a year before enlisting in the United States Army with which he served as a sergeant in England and France with the 82nd Division.

After the war Hugh was successively a salesman with the Library Bureau in New York City, a real estate salesman in Baltimore, Md., and a member of the United Fruit Company staff in Cuba. He then taught at Foxcroft Academy, was manager of WLBZ in Bangor and WLNH in Laconia, N. H., and was a salesman for the National Cash Register Company, General Electric, and Alexander Hamilton Institute until 1934. For five years he was president of the Lakes Region Association of New Hampshire. From 1941 until 1949 he was a production supervisor with Scott-Williams, Inc., in Laconia. He also did publicity work and operated a restaurant, retiring finally because of ill health.

Surviving are Hugh's father, Charles H. Hescok; a son, Merrill, of Laconia; and two grandchildren. His fraternity was Zeta Psi.

1922 LOUIS EDWARD GOLDBERG, M.D., chief of the pediatrics department at Beth Israel Hospital in Newark, N. J., died suddenly in that city on September 24, 1956. Born in Portland on December 22, 1899, he prepared at Portland High School and attended Bowdoin for one year. In 1924 he graduated from the University of Vermont Medical School and had practiced in Newark since 1928.

Louis was a Fellow of the American Academy of Pediatrics and a member of several medical societies. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Lillian Bucharest Goldberg, whom he married on February 25, 1939; three sisters, Mrs. Milton Canter of Gardiner, Mrs. Robert Weinstein of Portland, and Miss Jeanette Goldberg of Newark; one nephew, and two nieces.

1924 RICHARD HOWELL BLAISDELL, President of Bryant and Stratton School in Boston since 1942, died of a heart attack in his home on October 7, 1956. Born August 29, 1901, in Newton, Mass., he prepared for college at the Berkeley Preparatory School in Boston and left Bowdoin after one year. He was connected briefly with the banking house of Estabrook & Company and the United Fruit Company before joining the faculty of the McAllister School in Concord, Mass. In 1924 he became a member of the faculty of Bryant and Stratton, where he served as examination head, placement manager, vice president, and director of the corporation before being elected President in 1942.

Dick was a past president of the Massachusetts Association of Business Schools, a member of the Boston Rotary Club, the New England Business College Association, the Massachusetts Schoolmasters' Club, and a Mason. He was also a trustee of the American Foundation for the Preservation of the Christian Heritage. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Hazel Townsend Blaisdell; a son, William H. of Boston; and a daughter, Mrs. Nancy Reed of Sudbury, Mass. His fraternity was Alpha Delta Phi.

1930 PAUL WILLIAM BUTTERFIELD, M.D., pathologist at Alpena Hospital in Alpena, Mich., died on October 12, 1956, in Chicago, Ill., where he was attending a medical meeting. Born on April 23, 1909, in East Wilton, he prepared at Wilton Academy and graduated from Bowdoin with magna cum laude honors in 1930. He then entered Boston University Medical School and graduated in 1934. He interned at Salem Hospital, Salem, Mass., and was resident pathologist in 1935-36 at Huntington Memorial Hospital in Boston and at Massachusetts Memorial Hospital. From 1937 until 1944 he was pathologist at Bishop De Goesbriand Hospital in Burlington, Vt., and was also Assistant Professor of Pathology at the University of Vermont Medical School.

From 1944 until 1953 Paul was pathologist at Washington County Hospital in Hagerstown, Md., and was consultant pathologist at the Newton Baker Veterans Administration Center at Martinsburg, Md. He went to Alpena in 1953. A Fellow of the College of American Pathologists, he was also a member of the American Society of Clinical Pathologists, the Michigan State Pathological Society, and the Michigan State Blood Bank. Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Violet Koyovich Butterfield, whom he married in Wilton on July 24, 1944; two sons, Paul W. jr., 9, and Stewart, 7; and a sister, Mrs. Frank Beedy of East Wilton. He was a member of Phi Beta Kappa.

Mrs. Butterfield wrote of her husband, "Paul had been in ill health since 1950. He had tuberculosis then but had conquered it. In 1953 we moved to Alpena — the hospital was smaller and he felt the work would not overtax him. Two years ago he had a slight heart failure—his blood pressure was 250/120. He had hypertension for at least twenty years. . . . He gave a lot of himself to the boys and they have grasped it. Now to keep it up until they are ready to come to Bowdoin. They are informed of 'Daddy's school.'"

Faculty

PAUL NIXON, Dean of Bowdoin from 1918 until 1947, died on October 27, 1956, at his home in Brunswick following a cerebral hemorrhage. He had been preparing to drive to Waterville with his wife and some friends to see the Bowdoin-Colby football game. Seventy-four years old, he was Winkley Professor of the Latin Language and Literature, Emeritus, and the close friend of literally thousands of alumni.

Paul Nixon was born on May 23, 1882, in Des Moines, Iowa, and prepared for college at Thayer Academy. In 1904 he graduated from Wesleyan, where he majored in classics, was elected to Phi Beta Kappa, was president of his class, and was a member of the varsity football and track teams. He was selected as the first Rhodes Scholar from Connecticut and studied at Oxford University in England for three years. Before coming to Bowdoin in 1909, he taught at Princeton and at Dartmouth.

When Dean Kenneth Sills became President of the College in 1918, Professor Nixon became Dean. In addition to his duties as teacher and Dean, he served for many years as an informal director of placement and was closely connected with the program of admissions at Bowdoin, until the Admissions Office was established in 1935 and the Placement Bureau in 1944. He held honorary degrees from Wesleyan, Colby, and Bowdoin and was an honorary member of Delta Upsilon fraternity.

At Bowdoin the Dean taught at one time or another more than a dozen Latin courses and also courses in the history of Greek civilization and Roman civilization. He served on almost every faculty committee during his forty-three years at the College. He was the author of a number of books, most of them well known and widely used translations of Latin works. His translations of Plautus and Martial were especially popular.

During World War I the Dean was a first lieutenant with the Third Maine National Guard and later served as a second lieutenant in the United States Infantry. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Mathilde Spengler Nixon, whom he married in Rockford, Ill., on July 7, 1919; an adopted son, Philip, of Greenlawn, L. I., N. Y.; a daughter, Katrina, now Mrs. George F. Chisholm '36; a sister, Mrs. Curtis M. Hilliard of Wellesley, Mass.; and two brothers, Hugh Nixon '21 and Theodore Nixon '22.

When he retired in 1952, Paul Nixon said, "The biggest thing in my life has been Bowdoin College, and for a great many years I have known virtually every student. The association with the undergraduates and alumni when I was Dean was the thing which I have most enjoyed in my life."

See pages 2 and 3 of this issue of the ALUMNUS for Red Cousins' tribute to the Dean.

HENRY PRATT FAIRCHILD, Daniel B. Fayerweather Professor of Economics and Sociology at Bowdoin in 1909-10, died in North Hollywood, Calif., on October 2, 1956. Born August 18, 1880, in Dundee, Ill., he was a graduate of Doane College and received a doctor of philosophy degree from Yale in 1909. After leaving Bowdoin he taught at Yale for eight years and in 1919 joined the faculty at New York University, where he remained until his retirement in 1945. He was chairman of N.Y.U.'s Graduate School of Arts and Sciences from 1938 until he retired.

A leading advocate of birth control and eugenics, Dr. Fairchild believed that keeping population stationary was the only method of establishing international peace. He was president of the American Eugenics Society from 1929 to 1931, president of the American Sociological Society in 1939, and vice president of the Planned Parenthood Federation from 1939 to 1948. For a time he was national chairman of the controversial National Council of the Arts, Sciences, and Professions, and was a member of the National Council of American Soviet Friendship. A prolific author, Dr. Fairchild was a member of Phi Beta Kappa. He is survived by a daughter, Mrs. Eleanor R. Cadwallader of North Hollywood, and a brother, Dr. Frederic R. Fairchild.

1910 ELMER JONATHAN BROWN, M.D., died on October 6, 1956, in Manchester, N. H. Born February 22, 1884, in Freeman, he was a general practitioner in Stratton and Rangeley following his graduation from the Maine Medical School in 1910. He also spent a year in New York City doing post graduate work in urological studies before moving to Manchester, where he was a member of the staff at the Elliot Hospital for twenty-eight years. He was a member of the American Urological Association and the American Medical Association, a charter member of the Manchester Kiwanis Club, and a Mason. Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Beatrice Brown; a sister, Mrs. Lulu Brown Taylor; and several nieces and nephews.

Honorary

1915 CHAUNCEY WILLIAM GOODRICH, D.D., died on October 5, 1956, at his home on Boody Street in Brunswick, after a long illness. He was 91 years old. Born November 17, 1864, in Cleveland, Ohio, he prepared for college at Hopkins Grammar School in New Haven, Conn., and graduated in 1886 from Yale, where he was elected to Phi Beta Kappa and was a member of Psi Upsilon fraternity. Five years later he graduated from Union Theological Seminary in New York and became assistant pastor of the Madison Square Presbyterian Church in that city. From 1895 until 1901 he was pastor of the St. Cloud Presbyterian Church in Orange, N. J., then held pastorates in Cleveland, at the American Church in Paris, France, and at New York's Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church before coming to the First Parish Church in Brunswick in 1913. In 1917, during World War I, he returned to the American Church in Paris, where he remained until 1923. Following three years as American representative of the Protestant Bureau of Relief, with headquarters in Geneva, Switzerland, he came back to Brunswick to live in 1926.

In a sense Dr. Goodrich's life was only beginning when he retired. He became part of Brunswick in a way that few other citizens have ever become part of the town. For sixteen years he raised privately the money needed to support the Girl Scout program — in 1949 he was awarded a special Thanks Badge for these efforts. He also was active in the Emergency Relief program during the depression years. Hundreds of Bowdoin men and other young men came to know him well. He had a real capacity for friendship and a rare understanding of young people, who often sought his advice. A faithful correspondent, he wrote literally thousands of letters through the years — an art now almost extinct.

For many years The Bowdoin Handbook, published for entering freshmen at the College, has carried Dr. Goodrich's sound advice about the place of religion in the lives of students. In 1915 Bowdoin conferred upon him an honorary doctor of divinity degree.

Dr. Goodrich is survived by two daughters, Miss Eleanor Goodrich of Brunswick and Miss Mary Goodrich of Boston.

The Associated Press reported from North Gorham on October 19— "Admiral Donald B. MacMillan, 81, famed Arctic explorer and onetime high school principal here, said today he has had offers for three film appearances. . . . Locations for the films, the admiral said, are either in Labrador, in Italy, or at his home in Provincetown, Mass. He has not decided which, if any, to accept, he told a friend."

Ned Marston left his North Anson home soon after Thanksgiving for Florida, to spend the winter there, as he has done each year since his retirement from medical practice in 1950.

Tom Merrill, who still deals in livestock in Sidney, Mont., reports that that part of the country was in the drought area this year but that by reducing somewhat the number of his cattle he thinks he can winter.

Ned Nelson is spending the winter in Philadelphia, where his address is School Lane House, Apartment 423.

For the past three years 1903 has been a part of the Old Guard, so our class performance as such did not appear in the Alumni Fund report in the October Alumnus. It is a fact, however, that since the Alumni Fund was started in 1919, largely because of Clem Simpson's leadership and urgings, the Class of 1903 has contributed a grand total of $65,239.34. Of this fine total $12,890.76 has gone to the 1903 Scholarship Fund. We may all take pride in this record.

1907 Secretary, John W. Leydon
3120 West Penn Street
Philadelphia, Penna.

Glenn Lawrence has been busy as the inspiring leader of the movement for a community hospital in Belfast, which will be constructed on land donated by him. The citizens of the vicinity have raised a large endowment and building fund.

The annual picnic of the Class of 1907 was held at the cottage of Glenn Lawrence on the shores of Penobscot Bay at Belfast on August 25. Members of the Class present were the Adamses, Bennetts, Duddys, Haleys, Halfords, Huppers, Lawrences, Leydons, Linnells, Robertses, Snows, Merle Webbers, Millard Webbers, Whipples, Tom Winchell, Edith Weatherill, Mrs. Sue Burnett, Katherine Drummond, the Everett Gileses '41, and guests of the Lawrences, to bring the number to over forty. A chicken barbecue was served, following the lines of similar events most popular in that region of Maine, where chicken raisers think nothing of producing flocks of twenty thousand each year.

After the dinner a meeting of the Class was called by President Linnell and committees were suggested for the coming fiftieth reunion. The important Gift to the College Committee was organized with John Halford as chairman.

Special guests at the dinner were Dr. and Mrs. Rufus E. Stetson '08.

On October 24 Owen Brewster spoke before the Bangor-Brewer Lions Club. On October 25 he was the main speaker at the annual meeting of the Fitchburg Area Council of Boy Scouts in Massachusetts.

On November 2 Owen spoke extemporaneously before the Maine State Federation of Women's Republican Clubs at their pre-election meeting in Pittsfield. He was intercepted on his way from Bangor to Dexter an hour before the meeting to become a last minute speaker. The scheduled speaker was grounded in Washington because of flying conditions.

Early in October Bud Rich wrote, "Harold Burton writes of a very interesting trip which he and Mrs. Burton took during the past summer. They sailed down the East Coast to South America and flew back along the West Coast by air. They were gone six weeks, visited eight countries, and included visits to the Supreme Courts in six of these countries."

"The Writings of Arthur H. Cole" is the title of a reference list compiled last July by the staff of the Baker Library of Harvard University's Graduate School of Business Administration.

The introduction to the list states, "Admiration and esteem for Arthur H. Cole, now retiring as Librarian of Baker Library, have led the staff of this library to compile and issue, without his consent or knowledge, this list of his writings. A glance at the bibliography shows the many sides of Dr. Cole's scholarly and professional activities: a world-renowned economic historian, an able administrator, but above all that now rare but wonderful combination: gentleman and scholar. In his twenty-six years as Librarian of Baker Library, he turned an adequate library into a great one, and served as an effective bridge between the written word and its user. He has been most generous in sharing his knowledge; many scholars throughout the country have attested publicly to his guidance, counsel, stimulation, and encouragement. With this reference list we thank him for the privilege of working with and knowing him. We wish him good luck as he continues as Director of the Research Center in Entrepreneurial History."

The reference list contains the names of thirteen books written by Arthur, five more for which he was editor, numerous essays, articles, chapters, prefaces, forewords, pamphlets, reports, and book reviews, in addition to some sixty-four magazine articles. A perfectly amazing output and achievement!

Leon Conway notes, "Retired. No activity, no news."

1914 Secretary, Alfred E. Gray
324 Canton Avenue
Milton 87, Mass.

Al Gray wrote early in October, "We deeply mourn the passing of our dear friend, George Eaton of Bangor. George was one of our stalwarts and one of Bowdoin's finest. Highly intelligent, having very definite and sound opinions on all matters of importance, and able to express himself in both the spoken and written word in form that had real style; talented in art and music — we remember him as a fine art editor of the Bugle and as a great singing leader of the Glee Club — he went on to study law and in the practice of his profession he was highly successful, winning pre-eminence and general recognition throughout his state. His was indeed a life of real achievement, and a happy one, too. He had fun; he loved sailing, finding, I believe, in the handling of a craft with sails something that satisfied his inner nature. As secretary, I shall miss his forthright and stimulating letters."

Warren Eddy reported last spring that he would reach the age of retirement in September but that the trustees of the Maine Savings Bank of Portland, where he is Mortgage Officer, wished him to stay on but take it easy with a long summer and winter vacation. At that time Warren wrote, "I am working very hard with undiminished gusto."

Elwyn Gage has retired from Montclair State Teachers College in New Jersey and is living at Readfield Corner.

Phil Pope has a fifth grandchild, Susan Lee Patten, born March 1. And this from Phil: "I am back in teaching in a limited way. . . . Lowering my sights to their capacities is not altogether easy and I am not fully adjusted yet." The school: St. Paul's School for Girls, at Walla Walla. The Papes made an extended trip by car last summer to parts north of Seattle into Canada and as far as Alaska. Sample of their experiences — "We took the boat trip on the Chena and Tanana Rivers (Fairbanks area). The first is a small, turbid stream flowing through town and the other as big as the Yukon, with a half-mile bed full of islands and sandbanks like all the larger rivers. We visited an Indian village, saw their fish wheels and salmon drying and on the boat Indian Pete gave us a fine talk about moose hunting, trapping, and their way of life."

1915 Secretary, Harold E. Verrill

Members of 1918 will be interested in these excerpts from an article in the September 18 Springfield, Mass., Union. "The story of how a former local man fulfilled a boyhood dream and then transferred it to a Rhode Island veterans' hospital is told in the current issue of a Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Company publication. He is Roderick Pirnie, general agent for the company in Providence.

"Born here of a well-to-do family, he was unable to realize his childhood ambition of owning and operating a model railroad until recent years. But when he acquired "Shore Leave," his new property, he had three partitions on the second floor removed to accommodate a full model railroad layout.

"When I was a kid, I always wanted to have a train set, but there wasn't any room at home for a permanent layout," Pirnie is quoted in the story. Recently, when layout space was no longer a problem, he found he didn't have enough time to devote to it.

"On his wife's suggestion, he gave the model railroad to the Providence Veterans' Administration Hospital."

From the New York Times for October 10 comes this item — "London, October 9 — A 'cancer-immune' mechanism in man was reported here today by Dr. Cornelius P. Rhoads of New York. Dr. Rhoads' report was based on work done by the Sloan-Kettering Institute, of which he is scientific director. Researchers in the Institute transplanted cancer cells to convict volunteers and found they 'grew well in cancer-bearing patients,' but evoked 'a most vigorous inflammatory reaction' in patients who were well. This reaction, he added, was 'so intense that the transplanted cells were promptly rejected and disappeared.'

"Dr. Rhoads said he thought 'the key' to the difference between cancer cells and normal ones existed in the presence of different types of nucleic acids."

Dr. Daniel Hanley was recorder at a workshop on "Rehabilitation for Self-Care" at the Second Conference and Workshop on Aging, held on October 24 in Augusta.

Professor Cecil Holmes is a member of the by-laws committee of the Brunswick Community Hospital. He is also serving on its building committee.

Professor Charles Huntington is engaged to Miss Louise Chapin Slater of Cambridge, Mass., a graduate of Radcliffe College and a member of the faculty at the Northfield School for Girls. They will be married on December 22.

Dr. Huntington was a speaker at the annual luncheon of the Bird Conservation Club of Bangor on October 18. His subject was the Bowdoin Scientific Station at Kent Island, New Brunswick, and the work carried on there.

Don Lancaster, Manager of the Moulton Union, has been elected to a three-year term as a director of the Brunswick Area Student Aid Fund.

Professor Eaton Leith has been elected Vice Chairman of the Brunswick Chapter of the American Red Cross.

Professor Noel Little spoke to Boy Scout Troop 93 of Woolwich on October 25. His subject was astronomy.

Mr. Charles Mergendahl, Lecturer in Mathematics, took part in a symposium on "The Teaching of Secondary School and College Freshman Mathematics" at the Maine Regional Meeting of the New England Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, held at Kents Hill on November 1.

Mr. Mergendahl also attended the dinner meeting of the Association of Teachers of Mathematics in New England, held at Boston University on October 20.

Charles Mitchell, the Tallman Professor at Bowdoin during the fall semester, spoke on November 2 at Harvard University's Fogg Museum. His subject was "Sigismondo Malatesta and His Memorials."

In August Professor James Moulton was re-elected an Associate in Marine Biology of the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution. On October 23 he spoke to the Harpswell Post of the American Legion. His subject was "Fisheries Research."

Dr. Moulton has received a grant from the Faculty Research Fund, set up by the Bowdoin Class of 1928 at its 25th reunion in 1953. He will use the grant in his research on the relation of sound to the biology of fish.

Professors Norman Munn and David Russell and Dr. Merle Moscowwitz of the Psychology Department attended the tri-state meeting of the Maine, New Hampshire, and Vermont Psychological Associations, held October 6 and 7 at North Conway, N. H. Both Dr. Russell and Dr. Munn were speakers.

Vice President Bela Norton spoke before the Pittsfield Tuesday Club on October 16.

Alumni and friends wishing to write to Professor and Mrs. George Quinby in Iran should address mail to USIS, APO 205, New York, N. Y.

Professor David Russell, Director of Admissions Hubert Shaw, and Assistant Director of Admissions Paul Hazelton attended the New England Regional Personnel and Guidance Association meeting, held in Portland October 11 and 12.

During the month of October, Mrs. Gates Stern, wife of Lt. Col. Stern of the ROTC staff, was co-chairman of the Brunswick-Topsham Boy and Girl Scouts house-to-house fund raising campaign.

On October 16, Lt. Col. L. R. Van de Velda, ROTC Branch, G-3 Section, First Army, visited the ROTC detachment, bringing special praise for Captain Thomas W. Stockton, who was an instructor at the Orientation Course for newly assigned ROTC teaching personnel, which was held at Governor's Island last August.

On November 6 the ROTC detachment at Bowdoin was visited by Brig. Gen. R. C. Aloe, Special Assistant for Reserve Components at Headquarters, First Army. He was accompanied by Colonel Gerald Chapman, Chief of the Maine Military District.

Professor Burton Taylor was the keynote speaker on November 9 at a Health Conference called at the State House in Augusta. His subject was "A Philosophical Approach to the Fuller Development of Community Health Consciousness Through the Organization of a Local Health Program." The conference was designed to develop health consciousness at the local level.

On October 24 in Augusta Professor Taylor was chairman of a workshop on "A Goal for Community Planning and Activity" at the Second Conference and Workshop on Aging.

Professor Albert Thayer on November 30 addressed a New England Debating Tournament of Secondary Schools, held at Cushing Academy, Ashburnham, Mass. His subject was "Debating and Democratic Society."

The Skowhegan Rotary Club has established a student loan fund in memory of Professor Perley Turner, who was principal of Skowhegan High School from 1924 until 1934.

Excerpts from a few of the many tributes to Professor Turner are reproduced below.

"As you know, I always considered Professor Turner one of my favorite people and my favorite educator. He may have gone, but what he taught will remain and I will cherish the moments I had in his classes and with him personally."

"There are many, many men and women today who are better daily-citizens only because they caught the vital zest to learn and progress under the guidance of Perley Turner. So many of us caught the spark, tossed to us by a man big enough to carry the torch before critical and ever-changing teen-agers."

"It is always difficult to understand why such a fine and helpful person must leave important work not yet completed. However, in the years that he was spared, he had left a record which will long be remembered and which will long be effective."

Leighton van Nort, Instructor in Sociology, visited Harvard recently to inspect the Department of Social Relations' Laboratory for the study of small group behavior.

Professor William Whiteside has been re-elected President of the Brunswick Choral Society.

On November 10 and 11 Dr. Whiteside attended the meeting of the New England American Studies Association at Amherst. He has been designated membership committee chairman for Maine and New Hampshire. He is also a member of the Committee on American Studies Programs for the National American Studies Association.

Lt. Col. Will Winfrey, formerly Professor of Military Science and Tactics, left in November for new Army duties in Japan, where he expects to be assigned at Yokohama Port.

On October 4 the Bowdoin Teachers Club met in Lewiston in conjunction with the annual Maine Teachers Association convention. Those attending from the Bowdoin faculty included President James Coles, David Russell, Paul Hazelton, Charles Mergendahl, and Hubert Shaw. President Coles and Professor Russell also attended a meeting of school board members at the convention.

Former Faculty

Philip Booth, formerly an instructor in English at Bowdoin and now a member of the English Department at Wellesley College, has won the 1956 Lamont Poetry Selection with a collection of lyric poems entitled, "Letter from a Distant Land." The award was made on October 16 by the Academy of American Poets, Inc.

Joseph Miller, formerly with the ROTC staff at Bowdoin, has been promoted to the rank of lieutenant colonel, as of October 12.

Medical School

1891 Before the national election on November 6 Dr. Daniel Dennett sent a telegram to Adlai Stevenson asking him to take a complete physical examination as President Eisenhower did.

In a recent letter to the Winchester, Mass., Star Dr. Dennett commented, "The billions of dollars spent in this country every year for the unnecessary and harmful things would change the whole picture of the nation if they could be diverted to the welfare of all the people. Slums and poverty would be abolished; education in endowed colleges would be free to all; the dives would be closed, and there would be more happiness in the homes."

Honorary

1926 Robert Frost received an honorary doctor of laws degree from Cincinnati University earlier this year.

1939 Dr. Frederick Meek, Minister of the Old South Church in Boston, was moderator for a panel discussion at a special convocation on "Facing the Critical Shortage of Ministers," held on October 23 at the Bangor Theological Seminary.

1941 The Reverend Robert Gannon received an honorary degree last June from Seton Hall College

1947 Cadwallader Washburn's etchings and paintings were exhibited in the Atlanta Art Association Galleries in Georgia October 17 to 28. On the final day there was a reception in honor of Mr. Washburn's 90th birthday.

1948 General Maxwell Taylor received an honorary doctor of laws degree last June from Pennsylvania Military College.

On October 27 he received another doctor of laws degree from Lafayette College, on its Founders Day. He also delivered the address upon that occasion.

Governor Christian Herter of Massachusetts has been named as one of ten Boston area public figures to receive the Greater Boston annual achievement awards for 1956. He was described as "unselfish in directing his abilities and the prestige of his office toward the common good of all the people in the Greater Boston area and the Commonwealth of Massachusetts."

Others to be honored included Dr. Paul Dudley White, Tenley Albright, Arthur Fiedler, and Edwin O'Connor.

1949 President James Killian of Massachusetts Institute of Technology received an honorary doctor of laws degree from the University of California earlier this year.

Mrs. Marie Peary Stafford has purchased a home at 265 Maine Street in Brunswick.

1950 Judge Arthur Vanderbilt received an honorary doctor of laws degree last June from Colgate University and spoke at its commencement exercises. Judge Vanderbilt also received honorary degrees from Allegheny College and Washington University in St. Louis.

1952 Professor Warren Lewis of M.I.T., widely regarded as the man primarily responsible for the development of modern chemical engineering, has won a $1000 American Chemical Society award in industrial and engineering chemistry. The award, which also includes a gold medal, will be presented next April in Miami, Fla., at the 131st national meeting of the Society.

1953 William G. Saltonstall, principal of Phillips Exeter Academy since 1946, was among twenty people who received honorary degrees on September 23 from Princeton University at the Nassau Hall Bicentennial Convocation.

Colonel and Mrs. Walter Kennett of Topsham announce the engagement of their son, Walter jr., to Miss Lura Ruth Price, daughter of Captain and Mrs. Glennon G. Price. Captain Price is a former commanding officer of the Brunswick Naval Air Station.

1955 His many friends express to Lowell Innes their deep sympathy in the death of his mother, Mrs. Georgie L. Innes of Saco, on September 25.

1956 Frank Abrams received an honorary doctor of laws degree from Williams College last June.

The Fessenden Associates

Mainly because of the efforts of John L. Baxter '16 of Brunswick, a member of Bowdoin's Board of Trustees, the restored portrait of William Pitt Fessenden of the Class of 1823 hangs in its rightful place in the United States Treasury Building in Washington.

The Fessenden story, always an interesting one, took on fresh interest a few years ago when Nils Lennartson of Falmouth Fore-side became Director of Public Relations for the Treasury Department. Knowing that the government pays for portraits of all Cabinet members, Lennartson started looking for that of Fessenden, who had been Secretary of the Treasury under Abraham Lincoln.

Finally the painting was located in a treasury vault or cell, in the sad condition shown in the picture at the left above. Lennartson got estimates for restoration, which ran as high as $1600. He also found that no government funds could be used for the restoration. So John Baxter decided to collect the necessary money from descendants of "Uncle Pitt."

With typical Yankee ingenuity and shrewdness Mr. Baxter found an artist who would do the $1600 job for $275, and do it as well as it could have been done by any other man who specializes in such work. He is Hiram Howell Hoelzer of New York City.

John Baxter has given the Editors of the ALUMNUS the following list of what he chooses with good reason to call "the Fessenden Associates." They are Henry A. Gardner, Chicago, Ill.; Dr. Charles S. F. Lincoln '91, Brunswick and St. Petersburg, Fla.; William Merrill, Amherst, Mass.; Leonard A. Pierce '05, Portland; Mrs. Sarah B. Langley and Mrs. Allen E. Morrell, both of Brunswick; Mrs. Alonzo B. Holmes, Topsham; John F. Dana '98, Portland; Robert Gardner, Chicago, Ill.; James M. Pierce '11, Houlton; Daniel C. Fessenden, Los Angeles, Calif.; Mrs. Ellen L. McMillen, Coconut Grove, Fla.; Mrs. W. R. Montgomery, New Canaan, Conn.; Charles Pitt Fessenden, Berkeley, Calif.; and Mr. Baxter himself.

The late Kenneth C. M. Sills '01, in his last address at the College, on James Bowdoin Day, October 20, 1954, said of Fessenden, "His name is associated with one of the most dramatic and well-known incidents in American history — the impeachment proceedings against Andrew Johnson. During the trial the Republican press throughout the country was practically unanimous for conviction. Mass meetings were held all over the North urging the Republican Senators to vote against Andrew Johnson, and threatening those who would not do so. Fessenden was the Republican leader in the Senate; he was a loyal party man.

"Senator Fessenden was the first of the Republican Senators to vote 'Not Guilty'; seven others followed his example and the final vote was thirty-five to nineteen."

President Sills concluded his James Bowdoin Day address with the words, "Today, when the College is a real fortress of freedom, we need to emphasize again and again this virtue of intellectual integrity, which is of importance in private but especially in public concern. The nurturing of this virtue is one of the principal functions of the College. We need men like Fessenden and Reed who, loyal to their party, yet recognize that in time of crisis it is the duty of a Senator or Congressman not to yield to temporary popular pressure but to do his best to represent his constituents at their best. Such integrity as it applies to public office it is one of the duties of the College to teach. And it must never be forgotten that this fine courageous virtue can flourish only where there is freedom of inquiry, freedom of expression, freedom of the mind."

This is why Bowdoin men everywhere rejoice that the William Pitt Fessenden portrait is hanging once again in the Treasury Department.

A Tribute To Robert P. T. Coffin

It was a little more than two years ago, on January 20, 1955, that Rob Coffin, Pierce Professor of English at Bowdoin, died suddenly in Portland while preparing to lecture at Westbrook Junior College. It seems appropriate to pause briefly at this time to pay tribute to him. Dr. Thomas S. Burr of the Class of 1891 has made his tribute in the two sonnets reproduced below. Dr. Burr retired as a physician more than ten years ago after a career that took him to Ann Arbor, Mich., South Bend, Ind., Millerstown and Britannia, Newfoundland; Lisbon Falls, and Rumford. He now makes his home in Holyoke, Mass., where he occasionally turns his hand to poetry rather than medicine.

We are printing both of Dr. Burr's sonnets because it is difficult to choose between them.

ROBERT COFFIN

He was a son of earth and of the sea;
He knew the feel alike of plow and oar,
The surge of tides, the storm-wind's sullen roar;
The sweet tranquility of flowered lea,
And wild things in the woodland, running free;
The bay, the isles, the many fingered shore,
The College on the Hill, its friendly door;
All these things helped to mold the man to be.

These were the paths his boyhood feet had trod;
And here it was his manhood role was played;
These are the things of which his songs were made.
What, more than this, could one desire of God —
To do the work one loves, to win renown,
Amid remembered scenes of one's own school and town.

ROBERT COFFIN

He was a son of earth and of the sea;
He knew the feel alike of plow and oar,
The surge of tides, the storm-wind's sullen roar;
The sweet tranquility of flowered lea,
And wild things in the woodland, running free.
While still a lad he came to know the lore
Of ancient books; and to the classic door
Of learning's cloistered halls he found the key.

The poet gathered up these varied things,
And loosed his songs on iridescent wings;
He sang of things in earth and sky and sea,
Weaving of them a splendid tapestry;
And when his ship dropped anchor in the West,
He rode the flood tide at its very crest.

THE COVER

This night-time shot of The Presidents' Gateway, one of the northern entrances to the campus from Bath Street, was taken last winter by Sgt. Peter DiVenere, then a member of the Reserve Officers Training Corps staff and currently stationed at Fort Dix, N. J. The Presidents' Gateway was erected in 1932 as the gift of the Class of 1907 in memory of President Hyde "as a mark of the enduring regard of all Bowdoin men for the leadership of their Presidents." It is this gateway through which President Coles passes on his way from 85 Federal Street to his office in Massachusetts Hall. Since the Class of 1907, which was celebrating its twenty-fifth reunion in 1932, will observe its fiftieth next June, we feel the cover picture is particularly appropriate, paying tribute as it does both to Bowdoin's nine Presidents and to one of her most distinguished classes.

Freshman English At Bowdoin—English 1-2

By Professor A. LeRoy Greason Jr.

IN A RECENT SURVEY of the college graduates employed by the General Electric Company a large majority of the non-engineers cited English as the college subject they had found most valuable in their professional and private lives. Engineers listed English second only to mathematics, in a sense another language of communication. The preference accorded English over such subjects as French and history indicates, I think, only the difficulty of assessing the real worth of these subjects in practical terms. But the point remains that a good background in English is important.

The Freshman English course at Bowdoin, as part of a liberal arts curriculum, is primarily concerned with the student as a private citizen, although the skills and insights it teaches are vocationally valuable as well. The course aims at teaching the student to express his views with integrity, clarity, and interest — and at the risk of foolishly trying to weigh intricately related values, I'll add that those aims are listed in the order of their importance. The course also seeks to increase awareness and appreciation of the insights and truths peculiar to good literature.

To implement these aims, Bowdoin divides the freshman class into sections of twenty to twenty-five men meeting for one hour three times a week. From each student the instructor extracts a weekly theme of approximately five hundred words. These themes, together with assigned reading, constitute the matter for class discussion.

The nature of the theme varies from week to week and from section to section, but most frequently it involves the student in a discussion of a subject selected from the reading or it challenges him to handle some technique such as definition, analysis, or comparison. In correcting and grading these papers, the instructor assumes that correct grammar has been mastered in secondary school and will be used in college. Like many pedagogical assumptions, of course, this assumption is too good to be true. In actual practice some class time is given to discussing common errors in grammar, but there is no formal drill. This is reserved for a special remedial section carrying no academic credit and compulsory for all who stand in need. In the regular sections the emphasis is, as it ought to be for college work, on writing with depth of insight and appropriateness and effectiveness of expression. Inevitably such an emphasis involves more than an individual consideration of fact, diction, syntax, or organization. It implies a sense of tone, that is a judicious blending of these elements in such a way as to reveal the writer's attitude toward the facts, an attitude as essential to the writer's meaning as the facts themselves. This full utilization of the powers of expression is what is meant by style, and it is with style in this sense that English 1-2 is primarily concerned.

The discussion of literature in a composition course derives its fullest justification from this same concern. Good writing is possible only when a student has a sense of what good writing is. Furthermore, since good writing is the reflection of clear, mature thinking, literature, by hastening a student's intellectual growth, will help him as a writer, particularly when he is asked each week to demonstrate this growth verbally.

Dr. Greason

In addition to meeting with the teacher in the classroom the students also see him at private conferences scheduled regularly during the year, at office hours if the student is in need of extra help, and during panel discussions. These discussions, held in the Smith Auditorium, take place at the end of each unit of reading. The panel, comprised of the instructors in the course, discusses the reading by attempting to answer questions from the students. Apart from developing further insights into the reading, the real value of the panel probably lies in demonstrating to the students that there is no such thing as a party line in interpreting literature. Members of the department can and do maintain honest and — they like to think — intelligent differences of opinion. Attendance at the panels is voluntary, but since the freshman sees the panel as a court of appeal from the tyranny of his section man and a preview of coming hour exams, attendance — unlike the motive! — is usually good.

The temptation to stop at this point is strong, for a list of required reading is bound to raise objections. Yet any reservation an alumnus might have is undoubtedly shared by at least some member of the staff. The list is the result of much discussion, some wrangling, and a certain amount of compromise, but in general the following books are fulfilling exceptionally well the role intended for literature in the course.

FIRST SEMESTER

Selections from the Bible
Ovid, Metamorphoses
Plato, Euthyphro, Apology, and Crito
Swift, Gulliver's Travels
The Autobiography of Benjamin Franklin
Thoreau, Walden and Civil Disobedience
Adams, The Education of Henry Adams
Orwell, A Collection of Essays (all by Orwell)

SECOND SEMESTER

Sophocles, The Oedipus Cycle
Shakespeare, King Henry the Fourth, Part I
Strindberg, Six Plays
Shaw, Arms and the Man
Ten Modern Masters (an anthology of short stories)
Immortal Poems of the English Language
Fitzgerald, The Great Gatsby
Stendhal, The Red and the Black

In terms of literary merit, there is nothing sacred about this list. It represents an improvement over last year's list — in the same sense that next year's will probably be thought an improvement over this. The Bible and the Metamorphoses are here because so many students lack the cultural background these books provide. Plato is for many students their introduction to philosophical writing. Swift asks of the reader a perception of irony and satire as Thoreau does of metaphor. The idealism of Thoreau contrasts with the practical morality of Franklin, and Adams and Orwell challenge the students to apply these standards to recent and contemporary problems.

If the objection to this list consists simply of its being too hard, then the answer, I think, is that it should be too hard, at least too hard for any student to assault with ease. The kind of writing the course demands is possible only when a student is straining toward his full intellectual stature, as he must when he reads these selections intensely and reflectively. Such effort carries him in his own writing beyond tricks of technique to the fullfledged style of a maturing and thinking individual. Anything less would not warrant including Freshman English in the list of required courses at Bowdoin.

Fall Semester Lectures

During the late fall and winter there have been many interesting lectures at Bowdoin, with the subject matter varying from the annual festival at Hawick to the memorials of an Italian Renaissance prince, from the machine translation of languages to the jackass penguin.

On November 20 Dr. James Patterson of South Portland spoke on "The Queen of the Border" under the auspices of the Caledonian Society, a new organization at Bowdoin. Membership is open to those members of the faculty and student body who are of Scottish descent. Hawick, the subject of Dr. Patterson's talk, is noted for an annual festival held in memory of the forces which routed invading troops at the Battle of Hornshole in 1514.

On November 26 Edgar McInnis, President of the Canadian Institute of International Affairs, opened the 1956 Bowdoin College Lecture Series with a talk on "Canada and the United States: The Bases of Good Neighborhood." He declared that "the United States has a right to expect all reasonable support from the free world that calls on it for leadership, but it would be wise for Washington to look over its shoulder occasionally to make sure that the rest of us are going your way." He went on to term Canada "the most patient and the most understanding friend that the United States has in a highly critical world."

Mr. McInnis, who was Tallman Professor at Bowdoin some fifteen years ago, called American leadership and support the essential bastions of the free world, in which Canada has a vital stake. The unguarded frontier between the two countries is not simply a natural phenomenon. It has been established "by a long and arduous process of mutual concession and mutual forbearance. Both countries have had to pay a price in the sacrifices and self-restraint that were needed to create the present state of harmony and mutual confidence."

The 1956 Lecture Series was continued on November 29, when Dr. Arthur J. R. Smith, an economist with the Canadian Office of the National Industrial Conference Board in Montreal, was the speaker. Dr. Smith is also lecturer on money and banking at McGill University. In his talk, entitled "Adventurous Economic Growth in Canada," he stated, "In the past ten years the output and consumption of economic goods and services have risen even more rapidly in Canada than in the United States. In rough terms, Canada has doubled its national output every generation for the last three generations. But if anything like the tempo of advance in the last decade is maintained, Canada will considerably more than double its output within the next generation."

Mason Wade, Director of Canadian Studies at the University of Rochester, concluded the Lecture Series on December 13, when he spoke on "Quebec and Canada's Century."

"The life has gone out of the old politico-economic nationalism which painted the picture of an endless conflict between French and English in Canada," Mr. Wade declared. "The development of better understanding between English and French Canadians has been as rapid since 1939, and particularly since 1945, as the economic development of Quebec during the same period. To my mind, these relations are now better than they ever have been in the history of Canada."

Charles Mitchell

"Now that the integration of Quebec into the North American economic system is well advanced," Mr. Wade continued, "new attitudes towards industrialization are developing. There are still thunderings from high places against 'Anglo-Saxon' materialism, and the evils of industrialism and urbanism, but there is also a growing recognition that material progress is not to be despised. There is also increasing recognition of the fact that industrialization and urbanization are not part of an 'Anglo-Saxon' plot against the French-Canadian way of life, but rather part of a world-wide process to which no flag is attached."

Miss Elizabeth Bowen, noted British writer and author of the psychological novel, The Death of the Heart, lectured on December 4 under the auspices of the Society of Bowdoin Women. Her subject was "The Novelist and the Modern Novel."

Professor Lawrence S. Hall '36 spoke on December 5 on "Observations on Two Different Colleges: Columbia and Bowdoin." Professor Hall, who teaches English at Bowdoin, was on leave of absence last year to study and teach at Columbia University as Carnegie Visiting Professor in the Humanities under a grant from the Carnegie Corporation.

Dietmar Klein of Bremen, Germany, took as his subject on December 12 "Germany, What Now?" as he spoke under the sponsorship of the Political Forum. A Bowdoin Plan student last year, Klein is now a Fellow in German.

The 1957 Tallman Lectures were delivered on January 3, 10, and 17 by Charles Mitchell of London, England, Visiting Professor of the History of Art on the Tallman Foundation. The twenty-fourth in that distinguished series of lecturers, he took for his subjects "The Memorials of an Italian Renaissance Prince," "German Art and the Reformation," and "Royal Portraiture." During the first semester Professor Mitchell taught a course in Renaissance culture, with special attention to Italy and the classical tradition.

On January 8 Professor George D. Bearce jr., who succeeded Professor Thomas C. Van Cleve upon the latter's retirement a few years ago, spoke on David Hume under the auspices of the Caledonian Society.

Three days later, on January 11, William N. Locke of the Class of 1930 took for his subject "Machine Translation of Languages." Dr. Locke is now head of the Department of Modern Languages and Director of Libraries at Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Bowdoin's own Olin Pettingill, a 1930 classmate of Bill Locke, delivered the annual John Warren Achorn Bird Lecture on January 15, shortly before the two-weeks break for midyear examinations. Dr. Pettingill talked on and showed delightful color slides of penguins, which he termed "social birds, nesting during the summer in huge colonies located sometimes a mile from the sea, to which they travel daily over a worn ancestral path. Because they have no natural fear of anything on land, human visitors disturb them little. The colonies are never lacking in excitement and drama. Courtship and family-rearing, conducted with the dead-pan seriousness of a circus clown, are a constant delight. 'Teen-age' penguins romp and play, annoy their parents, and are so completely fascinated by human beings that they follow them around."

Harrison Atwood '09

I first met Harry Atwood when I was an undergraduate at Bowdoin. The Atwoods lived in Auburn, about twenty miles away. The attractive girls from the twin cities of Lewiston-Auburn were invited to our college dances, and, as some of us came to know these girls, we would get invitations to their local parties. We would be invited to their homes for refreshments, and we came to know the families. It was a natural thing — we were all Maine home folks.

Harry Atwood's older sister was one of the group of Auburn belles, and an invitation to her home was always welcome, as her father, who was himself a Bowdoin graduate, had built in his house a games room with a pool table. Also, there were two Atwood youngsters, about high school age, who would invite us to play pool, and would, to use a colloquialism, "beat the pants off us."

Harry Atwood was the older of these two boys. He was a modest, likeable lad, and our group decided that "he had the stuff," and we must get him to come to Bowdoin. With the tradition of the family, this did not prove to be difficult, and Harry entered Bowdoin in the Class of 1909.

Harry's college record was excellent in every way. He was a good student, made Phi Beta Kappa. He captained the track team both his junior and senior years, and was captain of the class track team for four years. He was an excellent dash man and broad jumper. He was voted the most popular man in the class and in 1909 was graduated with summa cum laude honors.

President of the Bowdoin charge of his fraternity, Theta Delta Chi, Harry was held in high esteem by his classmates as a square shooter — a guy who was always on the level and never cut corners.

By the time Harry graduated, I had become Advertising Manager of the New York Telephone Company and needed to find a young man to add to the staff as a trainee. I thought of Harry Atwood and finally persuaded him to take the job. About two years later I became Advertising Manager of the Standard Oil Company, just a few months before its dissolution by Government decree. Again I drafted Harry Atwood for my staff.

Following the Standard Oil dissolution, I organized the H. K. McCann Company to take care of the advertising needs of the various Standard Oil units. Harry Atwood was one of the founders of this company. The company had been operating for about a year when it was found necessary to open an office on the Pacific Coast, and Harry was given the assignment. After he was settled in San Francisco and doing well, he married a charming girl from his home town, Lena Paul, and there are three Atwood girls, all married, and four grandchildren.

Harry Atwood stayed in San Francisco until 1920, when he came back to the New York office. Since that time he had been one of the anchor men on our team. Organization methods and practices interested him. He was also interested in overseas advertising and took the lead in opening our Latin-American offices. Outdoor advertising engaged his attention, and he was a Board member of the Outdoor Advertising Bureau for almost thirty years, during which he served as Chairman. For a number of years he was Chairman of our Finance Committee. In recent years he became much interested in employee benefits, and he served as Chairman of our Employee Benefits Committee.

Harrison Atwood 1886-1956

Throughout his life Harry maintained an active interest in Bowdoin. He was a member of its Board of Overseers, to which he was elected in 1942, and served on the Finance Committee and the Advisory Committee on Development. He was a Director of the Alumni Fund from 1923 to 1926, was a member and president of the Alumni Council some twenty years ago, and was president of the Bowdoin Alumni Association of New York and Vicinity in 1938-9.

As the years rolled by, my admiration and affection for Harry Atwood constantly grew. He had loyalty, integrity, and intellectual honesty. A man like that has nothing to fear, and, needless to say, he had courage.

In McCann-Erickson circles around the world Harry Atwood was not only respected, but regarded with admiration and affection. Alton Ketchum, one of our associates, who had worked closely with Harry, wrote a fine tribute to him for our McCann-Erickson News Bulletin, which expresses the unanimous opinion of the members of our organization, and from which I quote:

"In Harrison Atwood, the Yankee spirit that shaped the American dream had been transmitted in its original hues and authentic outlines. If you had ever wondered what the men were like who signed the Mayflower compact and fired the shots at Concord Bridge, you had only to look in at office number 6, where the light went out last week. In his alertness, his dogged determination, his zealous attention to the smallest details, he epitomized the best of the Yankee traders, of the Down-East merchants who dispatched the clippers to the ends of the earth, of the bold enterprisers who planned and strove to build a new way of life unknown before in history. Shrewd, conscientious, resourceful, Harry was a perfectionist who never allowed himself to be discouraged because the realization did not always live up to the ideal.

"But even more important, Harrison Atwood was, like his Colonial forebears, mightily concerned with the rights of man. Throughout his long management of fiscal affairs, profit and loss meant more to him than totals in a ledger; when it came to the summing up, moral values had to be considered too. And when there was a decision to be made between the easy way out and the honorable way through, between assuming responsibility and dodging it, between compassion and self-interest, no one ever doubted where he would stand.

"Indeed, Harry spent his last hours in the office attending to matters which he felt had to be taken care of at once to protect the interests of McCann-Erickson people. The same burning desire to do a good job in human terms which had animated him for all the 45 years since that day when he helped to found the Company carried him through his final day on earth.

"All of us at McCann-Erickson are rich indeed in the endowment which Harrison Atwood has left us. It is a sense of obligation to ourselves and our fellows which flows from the traditions he did so much to establish. It is part of something even bigger than our business; it is the doctrine of the square deal, of the hard game well played, of the dedication to decency in our daily work."

Harry Atwood will be missed. Men of his character and ability are rare.

HARRISON K. MCCANN

On The Campus

The Bowdoin Music Club's first concert of the year, presented on December 9, was dedicated to the memory of the late George W. Graham '55, who died in Brunswick last June following a long illness and four days later was awarded his bachelor of arts degree, posthumously.

Taking part in the concert were the Meddiebempsters, with whom Graham sang for several years and with whom he went to Europe to appear before United States servicemen; the Brunswick Choral Society, the Pembroke College Glee Club, the Bowdoin Chapel Choir, and the Music Club orchestra.

The second Music Club concert, on January 16, featured music for wind instruments and selections by the Chapel Choir.

On January 7 Zlatko Balokovic, world-famous violinist, entertained a Pickard Theater audience with a program which he himself said represented "plenty of good music and fire works!" Now a resident of Camden, Balokovic made his debut in Yugoslavia at the age of 14. He received highest honors at the Zagreb Academy of Music and went on tour at 18. He came to the United States about twenty years ago and since then has appeared as a guest artist with all the major symphony orchestras. In addition, he has made numerous world tours.

On February 16 the Chapel Choir will appear with the Westbrook Junior College choir in the Pickard Theater. The second student recital of the year will be presented on February 24, the Campus Chest Weekend concert is set for March 16, with Bradford Junior College, and the Curtis String Quartet makes its annual appearance in Brunswick on April 15.

Glee Club appearances are scheduled for March 1 at South Braintree, Mass., March 2 at Westbrook Junior College, March 22 at Worcester, Mass., March 23 at Norwich, Conn., March 24 at the New York Historical Society, March 25 in Washington, D. C., March 26 at Hackettstown, N. J., and March 27 at Briarcliff, N. Y. On April 12 and 13 Professor Frederic Tillotson's singers will travel to Lasell Junior College and Bradford Junior College in Massachusetts.

The annual Campus Concert will be held on April 19 in the Pickard Theater in Memorial Hall. The Betas will defend their title in the Interfraternity Sing on April 24 and 25. And on May 9 it will be "Bowdoin Night" at the Boston Pops.

Lockman Gift

DeWitt M. Lockman of New York City has presented to the Museum of

Zlatko Balokovic

Fine Arts his still-life painting entitled "Pink Carnations."

Mr. Lockman's gift was made, in his own words, "as a token of appreciation of the splendid work being done by your art department and museum in the interpretation of American painting to your students and to the public."

A well known portrait, landscape and genre painter, Mr. Lockman is represented in the permanent collections of the National Academy of Design in New York, the United States Military Academy, Yale University, the Farnsworth Art Museum in Rockland, the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York, and many other public and private collections.

He has received many awards for his work, including the Lippincott Prize of the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts, the Maynard Portrait Prize of the National Academy of Design, and the gold medal of the Allied Artists of America.

DeWitt M. Lockman

Mr. Lockman was president of the National Academy of Design in 1949-50, president of the National Association of Portrait Painters in 1925, and president of the Allied Artists of America in 1945-46. Since 1947 he has been Honorary Curator of Painting at the United States Military Academy and is a Fellow in Perpetuity of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, of which he was a trustee in 1949-50.

Wesleyan Returns

The varsity football team will play seven games next fall. The schedule opens against Tufts in Medford, Mass., on September 28 and closes against the University of Maine at Orono on November 9.

Three games will be played in Brunswick, against Trinity, Colby and Bates. Alumni Day will be held on November 2, the day of the Bates game.

The complete 1957 schedule follows: September 28, Tufts at Medford; October 5, Trinity at home; October 12, Amherst at Amherst, Mass.; October 19, Williams at Williamstown, Mass.; October 26, Colby at home; November 2, Bates at home; November 9, Maine at Orono.

Wesleyan University will return to the Bowdoin football schedule in the fall of 1958, when the Polar Bears will journey to Middletown, Conn.

Kennedy Bequest

In 1930 Bowdoin was named as one of six equal residuary legatees to an estate in excess of a million dollars, left by the late Edward P. Kennedy of Boston. The fund established at Bowdoin, as at the other institutions named, is to be known as the Bridget Kennedy Fund Foundation, in memory of Mr. Kennedy's mother.

With the death of Mrs. Kennedy last year, Bowdoin has received the sum of $312,045.78, income from which will be used for the general purposes of the College.

A native of Lewiston, Mr. Kennedy was engaged in business there until about 1900 when, with two brothers, he organized a chain of stores in the Greater Boston area. Although never in any way directly connected with Bowdoin, he became interested in the College through association with Thomas C. Spillane '90 and Alfred B. White '98, who in 1930 was named executor of his estate.

How will Bowdoin compare in 1956-57

ROTC

The Reserve Officers Training Corps interview board at Bowdoin has sent to the Department of the Army its recommendations of the branches of service in which senior Military Science students at the College should be commissioned.

Sixteen of the seventy seniors in the ROTC program were recommended for commissions in Armor, eight in the Signal Corps, and six in Military Intelligence. Other recommendations were as follows: Infantry, Artillery, Army Security Agency, Military Police, and Medical Service Corps, each five; Transportation Corps, Chemical Corps, Quartermaster Corps, and Adjutant General Corps, each three; Finance Corps, two; and Ordnance Corps, one.

The interview board was made up of Lt. Col. Louis P. McCuller and Captain Thomas W. Stockton of the ROTC staff; Professors Jeffrey J. Carre, Robert H. Ivy, Kevin B. J. Herbert and Clement E. Vose, Dr. Daniel F. Hanley, and Coach Edmund L. Coombs, all of the Bowdoin faculty.

The ROTC, now in its seventh year at Bowdoin, is a general military science unit. It offers a voluntary curriculum of Military Science and Tactics to eligible students.

Currently there are 392 undergraduates enrolled in the unit, or almost half of Bowdoin's total enrollment of 820. Included are seventy seniors, fifty-seven

Financial Report

During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1956, Bowdoin received gifts and legacies amounting to $481,779 for general College and miscellaneous purposes and $110,092 for scholarships, according to the annual report of Roland E. Clark '01 of Portland, Treasurer of the College. In addition, income amounting to $20,880 was added to the principal of the Endowment Fund, which as of last June amounted to $13,088,721.55.

"It is particularly gratifying," Mr. Clark wrote, "to report that the Alumni Fund, always of real assistance to the College each year, has again this year exceeded all previous records both in the number of contributors and in the total amount. There were 3,539 alumni contributors, and in addition, 93 friends of the College contributed to the Fund. Contributions to income amounted to $77,320, and those to principal to $36,518.

A. H. (Bert) Merrill '24 would very much like to have a copy of the Bowdoin College Catalogue for 1920-21. Anyone able to help him may write to 255 Allen Avenue, Portland.

"All connected with the administration of the College," Mr. Clark stated, "feel particularly indebted not only for the generosity of the contributors but especially to the Class Agents and Directors of the Alumni Fund for their continued loyal efforts."

The Financial Report shows that Bowdoin's Endowment Fund is bringing an annual return of approximately 4.66% on book value and 3.51% on market value. More than half, or 50.9%, of the Endowment Fund, at market value as of June 30, 1956, was invested in common stocks. Of the rest 11% was in U. S. Government bonds, 12.9% in public utility bonds, 14.9% in industrial and miscellaneous bonds, 6% in preferred stocks, 3.7% in railroad bonds, and 0.6% in real estate and mortgages.

Bowdoin ended its fiscal year with an operating surplus of $2,431. During the past decade, there have been five years with surpluses and five with deficits, with an over-all deficit of $74.37. Total income during 1955-56 was $1,378,717.18, and total expenses amounted to $1,376,285.53.

Dramatics

Following its productions of Arthur Miller's Death of a Salesman in November and two George Bernard Shaw one-acts in December, the Masque and Gown is producing a new student-written musical revue in February. "A Little Folly" has lyrics and sketches by William Besson '56 of Wayne, Pa., and James Dewsnap '57 of West Long Branch, N. J. The music is by Terry Stenberg '56 of Milton, Mass., Fred Wilkins '56 of Lynnfield, Mass., and Alan Bernstein '59 of New York City.

"A Little Folly" will be presented on February 6 and 7 and again on February 9 as the midwinter houseparty play. It has a cast of twenty, plus a fifteen-piece orchestra directed by James Kushner '57 of Brooklyn, N. Y.

Parsons Fund

Dr. Harry S. Parsons of Winchester, Mass., has established a $2500 scholarship fund at Bowdoin in memory of his brother, the late George W. Parsons of Medford, Mass.

Income from the fund, to be known as the George Winfield Parsons Scholarship Fund, is to be used "to help any student from Brunswick who needs a little financial help."

Both Dr. Parsons and his brother were born in Brunswick and were graduated from Brunswick High School. George Parsons went on to Bowdoin, where he received a bachelor of arts degree in 1887 and a master of arts degree in 1890. He taught school in Winthrop, Mass., for two years before going to Medford, where he taught and was a grammar school principal until 1933, when he retired. He died in 1946.

Dr. Parsons was born in Brunswick in 1867, four years after his brother. He was graduated from the Maine Medical School at Bowdoin in 1891 and the following year received a D.M.D. degree at Harvard Dental School. For about sixty years he was actively engaged in the practice of dentistry in Boston, retiring only recently. He was also for some years a member of the faculty at Harvard Dental School.

Development Assistant

C. Cabot Easton '48 of Reading, Mass., has been appointed Administrative Assistant at Bowdoin. He began his new duties on December 10.

Easton, who is assisting in the Development Program in the office of Vice President Bela W. Norton '18, had been with the New England Telephone and Telegraph Company since 1948. He held various positions in supervising accounting operations, compiling statistics used in rate testimony before state public utility commissions, and analysis of work methods and results.

A graduate of Bowdoin in the Class of 1948, Easton was captain of the varsity track and cross-country teams. He was also business manager of the Bowdoin Orient, was president of Bowdoin-on-the-Air, and served as vice president of Delta Upsilon fraternity.

Easton enlisted in the United States Army Signal Corps as a private in 1950 and participated in educational research and evaluation of Army instruction at Army schools at Carlisle Barracks, Pa., and Fort Devens, Mass. He attained the rank of sergeant before entering the Signal Corps Officer Candidate School at Fort Monmouth, N. J., from which he was graduated in July of 1952. He saw service as a commissioned officer in the Far East and was released from active duty in 1953. He is currently a member of the Army Reserve with the rank of first lieutenant.

Vice President Johnson

Miss Helen B. Johnson, Bowdoin's Registrar, has been elected Vice President of the New England Association of Collegiate Registrars and Admissions Officers.

Registrar at Bowdoin since 1947, Miss Johnson has worked at the College since 1943. She is the daughter of the late Dr. Henry L. Johnson, who was college physician from 1927 until 1947. Since his death she and her mother, Mrs. Mary Buffum Johnson, have continued to live in the home at 12 Boody Street in Brunswick which was constructed by Dr.

Sports

The sports picture through the first ten days of January was not as gloomy as many had prognosticated. For example, on January 9 in the Sargent Gymnasium, a fired-up Polar Bear basketball team ran roughshod over Bates 96 to 58. This same Bates team had defeated the White 84 to 76 before the Christmas recess.

Coach Ed Coombs' men also defeated Maine, Clark, and Trinity, while losing to Bates, Colby, Williams, and Amherst twice. They were tied with Bates for second place in the State Series at 2 and 2. Colby had a 4 and 0 record, while Maine was 0 and 4.

Easton '48

The team's leading scorers were Brud Stover of Bath and Dick Willey of Ellsworth, but with the Bates game the entire squad seemed to be jelling into a smooth-working unit.

The hockey team had only one victory over Merrimack College to show for its efforts through January 10. Its defeats came at the hands of Middlebury, Colby, Tufts, New Hampshire, and the United States National Team, which trained at the Arena for the month before Christmas. Coach Danny MacFayden hoped for better things in the remaining dozen games.

Bob Miller's varsity swimming team, cheered by the prospects of real help another year from the freshman squad, defeated M.I.T. in a close meet December 8. The score was 44 to 42. The Polar Bears, led by Captain Bob Plourde, were to face Amherst on January 12, then lay off until after midyears.

The varsity track team, coached by Frank Sabastanski '41, faced no dual meet competition until February 9, when Boston College was due to come to Brunswick. An interclass track meet on December 13 found the juniors edging the seniors in a close affair, with the former's depth proving decisive.

The freshman teams have yet to lose this winter, that is, through January 10. The swimmers in particular looked good defeating Brunswick High School 46 to 31 and deadlocking Portland High 35 to 35. George Downey of Worcester, Mass., has turned in a 2:12.4 clocking for the 200 yard freestyle and a 1:08.4 in the 100 yard breaststroke. Russ Henshaw of Montclair, N. J., has done 55.4 in the 100 freestyle, and Bob Roach got down to 24.4 in the 50 freestyle. Carington Noel has a mark of 1:10.8 in the 100 yard backstroke.

Back row: Coach MacFayden, George Crane, Dave Ham, Brian Flynn, Mike Coster. Front row: Doug MacKinnon, Fred Thorne, Art Perry, Ron Desjardin. This picture of the eight hockey lettermen available from last season was taken on November 7, three days before the Arena was formally dedicated on Alumni Day. This was the first day on which the artificial ice of the Arena was skated upon.

All in all, the future looks bright for the swimming team, particularly with Plourde and Hoady White '58 of Brunswick back for another year of competition next season.

The freshman basketball team has been coached during the first semester by Lou Audet '53, back in college to finish up work for his degree following Army service. The squad has defeated all comers, with six straight victories through January 8.

The 1960 hockey squad, coached by Nels Corey '39, was scheduled to make its debut on January 12, just after the deadline for this issue of the Alumnus.

The freshman track squad appeared to be as strong as other squads of the past few years. Its first meet was scheduled against Deering and Portland High Schools on January 11, with South Portland and Thornton furnishing the competition a week later.

BOSTON

President Bill Curtis '20 greeted over 200 at the University Club on December 7 when the Bowdoin Club of Boston held its annual Sports Night. Nearly fifty schoolboys of Greater Boston were guests of the Club, as were Neil Mahoney, former Bowdoin baseball coach and now Red Sox scout, Dick O'Connell, Ted Lepcio and Dick Gernert. These major leaguers, Coaches Walsh, Sabasteanski, Magee and MacFayden, Athletic Director Morrell, and Admissions Officers Shaw and Hazelton gave the youngsters a thrilling evening.

Mal Morrell described Bowdoin's new athletic facilities, particularly the Arena. Adam Walsh offered the schoolboys some good advice about college and invited them to visit Bowdoin. Both speakers urged alumni to become active in recruitment of likely boys, assuring club members that the present low status of intercollegiate competition can only thus be changed. Football movies were shown.

Bill Owen '37 was program chairman and master of ceremonies. He and Paul Gardent '39 were praised and thanked for arranging one of the best meetings in recent club history.

NORTHERN NEW JERSEY

The Northern New Jersey Bowdoin Club held its annual dinner meeting at the Hotel Suburban in East Orange on December 13 with twenty-five members present. President W. Merrill Hunt '29 presided. Secretary-Treasurer Arthur Betz '50 reviewed the year's activities, reporting a treasury balance and welcome improvement in responses to mail notices. Frank St. Clair '21 outlined the activities of the Alumni Council.

Chairman George Bacon '15 presented the nominating committee's slate for 1957 club officers as follows: President, Carl S. Kuebler '17; Vice President, Malcolm S. Moore '50; Secretary-Treasurer, Arthur D. Betz '50; Assistant Secretary, Peter O. Grant '48; Council Member, Frank A. St. Clair '21. These nominees were elected.

Following some discussion of a member questionnaire to determine wishes as to frequency of meetings and future programs, President Hunt introduced the Alumni Secretary, who gave a report of campus doings and answered questions from members.

The meeting adjourned at 10:30 P.M.

PENOBSCOT COUNTY

The Penobscot County Bowdoin Club held a dinner meeting on December 13 at the Tarratine Club in Bangor, with President Vale G. Marvin '36 presiding. Present were forty-six Bowdoin men and guests, including ten high school students and the Athletic Director at John Bapst High School.

Speakers from the College were Coaches Adam Walsh and Nels Corey '39 and Director of Athletics Mal Morrell '24. They discussed present athletic problems at Bowdoin and also showed movies of the dedication of the new Arena on Alumni Day, November 10.

Saying he had no desire to show football movies of the 1956 season, Adam showed instead the 1952 Bowdoin-Maine game!

ST. PETERSBURG

That old stalwart, Dr. Charles Stuart Fessenden Lincoln '91, Convener of the St. Pete

Bowdoin Club, sent in the following message a few days before Christmas: "We collected eleven alumni for our first lunch of the season on December 20 at the Suwannee Hotel. Two new men have moved in this year, Elden Barbour '12 and Ray Kennedy '13. The Club will miss Dr. Kendall, who always came when well. Colonel Tarbox from Tampa was the only magnate from near-by cities, and we hope for a better turnout in January, when some of the later comers arrive to get thawed out. Present were Cos Smith '90, Fessenden '95, Dr. Marston '99, Damren '05, Haley '07, Webster '10, Barbour, Kennedy, Tarbox, and Parkhill '46.

"A student from the deep South who lands in Bowdoin is as rare as a Kentucky Cardinal in summer. But we do urge all Bowdoin alumni who come to the West Coast, which means Florida, to report their presence and join the gang here. Third Thursday of each month from December to May."

Doc Lincoln's address is 342 Roland Court, N. E., St. Petersburg.

WESTERN MASSACHUSETTS

The Western Massachusetts Bowdoin Club held a dinner meeting on November 30, with four Bowdoin Plan students from the College as guests of honor. It was a most interesting evening for all concerned — the foreign students as well as the twenty in attendance, including wives and three sons of members. Club President Bob Fleischner '39 wrote, "The Bowdoin Plan students did a truly exceptional job and made a very profound impression on our members."

Books

MARY LINEHAN MACKINNON, One Small Candle: Crown Publishers, 1956; pp. 250; $3.50.

The theme of this novel, inferred by the title, is that "One small candle in a true heart will cast its rays and pierce the bitterest dark." This refers specifically to Ellen, an Irish immigrant who came to America a short time before the Civil War, and was employed as a servant on a farm in upper New York State. A neighboring farmer, Denis, whose young wife had died in childbirth, needed someone to care for his three small children, so he persuaded Ellen to marry him; it was purely a marriage of expediency on his part, since he persistently kept alive the memory of his first wife and did not return Ellen's love. The center of the novel is Ellen's struggle to win her husband's complete affection, and this she achieved in a most unusual manner. In final desperation, she committed adultery, and paradoxically it was this incident which finally broke down the barrier that Denis's stubborn pride had erected between himself and his wife.

Ellen's story and the numerous other individual and family histories which make up this novel are faithfully and meticulously related by Jessie, a sister of Ellen's former employer. This choice of a narrator is one of the most commendable features of the entire work. Jessie was a cripple and could not walk, yet she was not bedridden. Most of her hours were spent in a corner of her sister's or a neighbor's kitchen, where she felt that she was not imposing upon anybody and yet could enjoy being a silent observer of all that went on around her. In her own words, "I am, in the essence of my existence, a spectator. I can play no part. I can only observe." She is therefore the perfect solution to the novelist's problem of choosing a consistent and authentic point of view. Jessie's convenient presence at almost every important incident at times seems a bit fortuitous, but this is not a serious distraction, since the reader is abundantly rewarded by the keen observations peculiar to one in Jessie's condition. Just as a blind man can walk sure-footed where a person blessed with sight may stumble, Jessie's understanding of human beings has been intensely sharpened within her limited sphere; this combined with her meticulous attention to detail lends an easy sense of credibility to the novel.

The skillful method of narration makes the novel structurally sound, but the reader may be disconcerted by a weakness in the action surrounding Ellen's discovery that she is bearing the child of a man other than her husband. Ellen has been presented to us as a completely honest, loyal, God-fearing woman who held deep affection and respect for her husband, and who loved his children as if they had been her own. The reader is not prepared for such a drastic departure, and it is equally puzzling to find that Denis, who had been a fiercely possessive if not an affectionate husband, was so quickly pacified after he learned of his wife's condition. The fault lies not in the incident itself, but in the fact that this climax is dealt with so slightly.

The effectiveness of this dramatic incident could be greatly heightened if it were given more weight, thereby improving the balance of the total action in the story.

The novel is otherwise successful. Mrs. MacKinnon is well acquainted with her characters and their environment, and she writes of their experiences with sympathy and humor. Her language is effectively simple, and her graceful sentences reveal a truly musical ear. Dialect can easily become tiresome in a novel, but the reader is enchanted by Mrs. MacKinnon's skillful rendering of the gentle, lilting cadences of Irish speech, and it never becomes monotonous. It is a pleasure to find a novel written today which is so sensitively and artistically created, without dependence upon bizarre effects and psychoneurotic personalities.

EDWARD CHASE KIRKLAND, Dream and Thought in the Business Community, 1860-1900: Cornell University Press, 1956; pp. 175; $3.00.

Professor Kirkland, the ablest and most piquant of the historians currently revising long accepted ideas about American business leadership during the age of the robber barons, brings his finest talents to these essays. They were delivered as the Messenger Lectures at Cornell in the spring of 1956. Bowdoin alumni fortunate enough to have been Kirk's students in History 11 or History 17 will recognize the sharpness of wit, the masterful handling of language, the sure sense of style which grace these essays. Again they will hear the sly tone, again they will enjoy the fun of a Kirkland lecture. All who read this short volume will feel well rewarded by its many remarkable insights into late nineteenth century American culture.

"I regard the rich and successful," confesses the author in explaining his motivation, "as part of the human race, and an influential part; hence I wanted to ascertain. . . what they thought or thought they thought." Each essay approaches the goal from a different angle. The first examines the natural law rationale of business leadership during a period of change and uncertainty, in which economic depression, confusion, and the possibility of failure figured far more prominently than conventional interpreters have realized. The second asks why the magnates built their palatial mansions on San Francisco's Nob Hill, Chicago's Gold Coast, and New York's Fifth Avenue, and why they built them as they did. Succeeding essays explore the thinking of businessmen about education, government, and philanthropy.

Unwilling to deal in facile textbook generalizations, Kirkland has sought the answers to his questions in the private papers of business leaders. His suspicion of accepted views is announced at frequent intervals. "The conventional explanation for the big house" is rejected. "Our habit of writing the history of the era in terms of politics, Supreme Court decisions, and briefs of learned counsel" is deplored. "The conventional sneer [that] those who met these problems of change successfully were well rewarded for their pains" is rejected in favor of a number of sufficiently unconventional sneers throughout the book. "Veblen to the contrary notwithstanding" introduces a fresh analysis of business attitudes toward higher education.

The thesis is not uncritically pro-business. The epithet applied by Charles Elliott Perkins, president of the C. B. & Q., to muck-rakers and reformers as a miscellaneous group of "philanthropists, Professors, and Lady Millionaires" appears repeatedly as a sort of leitmotif, but Kirkland is making as much fun of Perkins and his correspondents as he is of the reformers. It is, however, clear that he does not regard the businessman as the villain of post-Civil War America. Business leaders were neither unprincipled nor unpatriotic. Nor were they as powerful as Josephson, Parrington, and Beard would have it. They might boast of their ability to dictate to congressmen and state legislators, but Kirkland employs a Shakespearean rejoinder:

Glendower: I can call spirits from the vasty deep.

Hotspur: Why so can I, or so can any man; But will they come when you do call for them?

In at least two fields — architectural taste and governmental corruption — Kirkland suggests that the nameless public deserve more blame than celebrated robber barons for the shortcomings of American culture during the gilded age. Willing to obey Carnegie's plea, "Don't shoot the millionaire!", the author presents a sympathetic exposition of the rationale of philanthropy.

The ultimate quality of this book is the revealing character of the unusual questions asked, and the wise decision to let businessmen answer in their own words. This is not the definitive analysis of the business mind in his period which Professor Kirkland will write, but it is a suggestive and eminently worth while appetizer.

WILLIAM B. WHITESIDE

EDWARD A. STRECKER and VINCENT T. LATHBURY, Their Mothers' Daughters: Lippincott, Philadelphia and New York, 1956; pp. 256; $3.75.

In addition to his years as a practicing psychiatrist, Dr. Strecker served as Consultant for the Secretary of War to the Surgeons General of the Army, Navy, and Air Forces during World War II. In that war nearly two million men were rejected for military service on psychiatric grounds; more than half a million more were discharged for similar reasons. Such statistics are appalling, but lack a personally relevant punch. The punch, however, was presented to the American public with the publication in 1946 of Their Mothers' Sons. The statistics became alive and provocative in terms of "mom" and her boy, down the street, next door — or even closer.

Now Dr. Strecker has been joined by another psychiatrist, Dr. Lathbury, and they have produced a companion volume on the divergent daughters produced by motherhood and "momism." Perpetual emotional immaturity is not unevenly distributed between the sexes and lest "mom's" boy point the finger at his wife, there is an all too brief chapter on "Their Fathers' Daughters." However, it is not only in this chapter that it is made perfectly clear that even a mother's daughter has a struggle to retain her maturity if she marries "mom's" boy.

"Mom" is the immature maternal parent who fails to prepare her children for adult living. She may be any one or a combination of several known varieties — the efficient Manager; the sweetly self-sacrificing No Trouble mother; the long and quietly suffering, professionally Frail type; the outraged Don't You Dare Punish My Child mother; the hearts and flowers Pollyanna; Narcissus' direct descendant, the Pretty Addlepat; or, the empty Pseudo-Intellectual. "Mom," however much she fits into or misses such categories, reveals her own immaturity and emotional impoverishment by binding her offspring with "the silver cord," ever ready to bring them to heel if they show signs of assuming independent, responsible, mature, adult status. They are, and, if she has her way, always will be, her "children."

This is a popularly written, easily read book that is intended for the general public. However, it is a "light" book only if immaturity, neurosis, psychosis, divorce, crime, and even international upheaval are matters of concern only to other people, as "mom" would agree — until it no longer happens to just other people. When one considers the material the authors have at hand, they are well restrained and non-vituperative. Fortunately, they do not dwell exclusively on psychopathology; they conclude the book with two chapters entitled, "A Mother-Daughter Design." Pedantic souls may wish to escape the implications of the ninety-item questionnaire that starts off the volume by quibbling over its technical aspects. But, it is a useful didactic device and should provoke some soul-searching by those who consider it seriously. And, the questionnaire and the subsequent chapters could well be considered seriously by alumni as well as alumnae.

Necrology

1889 EARLE ABBOTT MERRILL, retired lawyer, died on August 24, 1956, at a nursing home in Brookline, Mass., where he had lived since giving up his law practice in Westfield, N. J., several years ago. Born September 22, 1867, in Farmington, he prepared at the local high school and following his graduation from Bowdoin was employed by the Edison Electric Illuminating Company of New York City as assistant superintendent of the construction department. He was later with the Chicago office of Edison General Electric Company, then with J. G. White & Co., street railway contractors, in New York City, and Pierce & Miller Engineering Company in New York. In 1897 he joined McIntosh, Seymour & Co., engine builders in Auburn, N. Y., representing this firm for a time in Japan, where he became interested in selecting choice Japanese wares. It was from this collection that Bowdoin and the Good Will Schools and Homes were the recipients of several pieces.

In 1891-92 Earle did post graduate work at Cornell University, where he was elected to Sigma Xi. In 1910 he entered New York Law School and late in 1912 settled in Westfield, N. J., for the practice of law. He retired in 1946. Surviving are a grandchild, five great grandchildren, a sister, and a brother, Carleton P. '96. He was a member of Phi Beta Kappa and Delta Kappa Epsilon.

Carleton Merrill wrote recently of his brother, "Earle was interested in athletics as carried on at Bowdoin in his time and I well recall that at one of the exhibitions of the Bowdoin Athletic Association he performed the feat of sitting, blindfolded, in a rocking chair balanced on the bar of a trapeze. Although I clearly remember the event, what is more vivid in my memory is the protest of my father to Earle's performing such a foolhardy stunt."

1893 WILLIAM STORY BRIRY, for some years President of the Massachusetts College of Pharmacy, died in Winter Park, Fla., on December 17, 1956, at the age of 86. Born in Bath on October 6, 1870, he prepared for Bowdoin at the local high school and left the College after one year to enter the Massachusetts College of Pharmacy, from which he was graduated in 1894. In 1937 he received a doctor of pharmacy degree from that institution. For many years he was a druggist and manufacturing chemist in Melrose, Mass., before joining the United States Treasury's Customs Department in 1922. He served in this capacity for eighteen years, and in 1940 became president of the Massachusetts College of Pharmacy, of which he was also a trustee for more than thirty years.

For some years Massachusetts Commissioner of Pharmacy, Mr. Briry was also president of the Boston Druggists Association and the Massachusetts State Pharmaceutical Association. He was a member of Zeta Psi.

1896 HENRY WILSON OWEN JR., Class Secretary of 1896 and a retired colonel in the Maine National Guard, died at the Veterans' Facility in Togus on December 26, 1956. Born in Bath on April 3, 1875, he prepared at Bath High School, where he was valedictorian of his class. He began newspaper work as an undergraduate at Bowdoin and was later a reporter for the Bath Times, then spent a year on the old New York City Press & Commercial before returning to Bath in 1898. He remained with the Bath paper until 1917, when he retired as editor to serve as an artillery captain at Maine coastal forts. Actually Henry's military service began in 1898, when he enlisted in the Hyde Light Guards, the Bath militia company. He remained active in the Maine National Guard and retired as a full colonel in 1939.

From 1921 until 1934 Henry was United States Postmaster in Bath. He served in the Maine House of Representatives in 1937-38 and was with the Maine State Department of Health and Welfare in Bath from 1938 until 1946. In 1936 his History of Bath was published, culminating a lifelong interest in the city of his birth.

For many years he was a trustee and secretary of the Bath Memorial Library. He was also a trustee of the Old Folks Home and was secretary of Patten Free Library. He was active in Rotary, the Masons, the American Legion, and the Colonial Club.

Surviving are Mrs. Owen, the former Ellen Turner, whom Henry married on June 21, 1931; three sons, Edward '38, William W. '41, and Maurice H. of Bath; a brother, Maurice; and several grandchildren. He was a member of Psi Upsilon.

Rochester following a stroke two days earlier while at work. Born November 22, 1875, in Andover, N. Y., he prepared for Bowdoin at Lincoln Academy in Damariscotta and following his graduation taught school in Cincinnati, Ohio, for some years. In 1902 he became director of manual training at the Collegiate Institute in Kingston, Ontario, Canada. He was also lecturer on methods in drawing and manual training at Queens University in Kingston for four years, until 1912, when he became secretary-treasurer of the Davenport Machine Tool Company, which his brother-in-law, William S. Davenport, had founded in Rochester. After Mr. Davenport's death in 1937, he became President and General Manager of the company.

Four years ago Augustus established the Davenport-Hatch Foundation in memory of his sister and brother-in-law. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Mabel Maund Hatch, whom he married on June 21, 1913; two daughters, Mrs. Austin Hildebrandt and Mrs. Hart Taylor; a brother, Charles, of Miami, Fla.; and six grandchildren.

1905 JOHN HALL BRETT, retired international banking official, died in Santa Barbara, Calif., on December 21, 1956. Born September 25, 1884, in Auburn, he prepared at Edward Little High School and following his graduation from Bowdoin with cum laude honors in 1905 was one of the first group General Thomas Hubbard picked to go overseas for the International Banking Corporation, later the National City Bank of New York. He was in London for a year, then in China until 1928, in Shanghai, Canton, Peking, and Tientsin. From 1932 until 1938 he was Manager of the Siam Commercial Bank in Bangkok, the first American to hold that position.

Since his retirement John had been living in California with his wife, Mrs. Tedesco Greenley Brett, whom he married on May 15, 1915, in Yokohama, Japan. His fraternity was Alpha Delta Phi.

A classmate writes:

"I cannot let the passing of John Brett go by without attempting to express, however inadequate it may be, my feeling for this very close friend, loyal classmate and Bowdoin alumnus. Classmate in grammar and high school, fraternity brother and roommate for four years at Bowdoin gave me ample time to know well the fine qualities and sterling character behind his quiet and almost standoffish manner. But when manhood had found us, I was privileged to have our trails cross at various places in the world and to learn that those same fine qualities and the same strength of character were being developed and carried on in his career as an international banker in the Orient. We were not able to get together often enough, but numerous occasions were possible. We picked up each time from our last get-together; in Maine after John's first China tour; in Honolulu through the charming Miss Tedesco Greenley, who was Shanghai bound to marry John; in Tientsin, China, where following Tiny Williams and Charley Donnell, he was branch manager for the National City Bank of New York; again in Maine with the Bretts on leave from the Orient; in Washington, D. C. at least twice; and in Bangkok, Siam, where John's outstanding administration as the first American Manager of the Siam Commercial Bank added greatly to American prestige in that country.

"Following a business lifetime in the Far East, it was natural for the Bretts to settle upon retirement on the West Coast. But John's interest in and loyalty to Bowdoin were never lost. Last winter the Bretts and the Henry Lewises reunited for several weeks at the Halekulani in Honolulu, a hotel operated by the descendant of a Maine family who is married to Bill Webb's daughter. The Bretts came back to the campus for our Fiftieth reunion. They were making plans to return this year but it was not to be.

"My own loss is not for this column. But from the list of living alumni has gone the name of one who never failed to support generously every worthwhile effort of his Alma Mater. In his quiet but effective way, John Brett added much to Bowdoin's fame for deeds well done."

1908 SHIPLEY WILSON RICKER, submaster of Woburn High School in Massachusetts since 1918, died suddenly at his home in Woburn on December 14, 1956. Born in South Berwick on January 3, 1887, he prepared for Bowdoin at Berwick Academy and graduated in 1908 with magna cum laude honors. Following graduation he was for a time an assistant in the Library of Congress in Washington, D. C. then served for six years as Chief of the Current Periodicals Division of the New York City Public Library. He went to Woburn in 1918, was Woburn High School's first basketball coach, and taught chemistry and physics. From 1922 to 1931 he was treasurer of the New England Association of Chemistry Teachers.

Shipley is survived by his wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Marie Ricker, whom he married in Boston in December, 1928; a son, Frederic E. of Eastondale, Mass.; and four grandchildren. His fraternity was Delta Upsilon.

1909 HARRISON ATWOOD, Vice Chairman of the Board of the advertising firm of McCann-Erickson, died in New York City on November 22, 1956, at the age of 70. He had been a member of the Bowdoin Board of Overseers since 1942. Survivors include his wife, Mrs. Lena Paul Atwood, whom he married in Auburn on June 16, 1915; three daughters, Mrs. Catherine George of Long Beach, Calif., Mrs. Patricia Longhi of Vashon, Wash., and Mrs. Harriet Frazer of Cortland, N. Y.; a sister, Mrs. M. J. Webster of Auburn; and four granddaughters. (See page 4.)

1910 JOHN DAVID CLIFFORD JR., Judge of the United States District Court in Maine since 1947, died in Lewiston on November 18, 1956, at the age of 69. Born May 15, 1887, in Lewiston, he prepared for Bowdoin at Lewiston High School, where he was a member of the state championship football team. At Bowdoin he was orator at Class Day and was a shot putter on the varsity track team. In 1913 he received his bachelor of laws degree from Georgetown University Law School and returned to Lewiston to practice. His brother, William '11, joined him the following year. John was active for many years in the Democratic party, serving as chairman of the Lewiston City Committee and the Androscoggin County Committee and representing Lewiston in the Maine House of Representatives in 1915-16.

In 1934 President Roosevelt appointed John

United States District Attorney, and he served in this capacity until 1947, when he became the first Democratic Federal judge in Maine's history.

Surviving are a son, John D. III '42; a daughter, Mrs. Jeanne Clifford Delahanty of Lewiston; a brother, William '11; two sisters, Mrs. Edgar T. Reynolds of Montreal, Quebec, and Mrs. Cathrine Sughrue of Forest Hills, L. I., N. Y.; and five grandchildren. His fraternity was Alpha Delta Phi.

1910 HENRY JEWETT COLBATH, head coach of track at The Hill School from 1916 until 1952, died on November 25, 1956, in Pottstown, Pa. He had been ill since last July. Born September 1, 1888, in Clay Center, Kan., Cobbie prepared for Bowdoin at Dexter High School. An outstanding distance man at the College, he still holds the Bowdoin record for the mile run, set more than forty-five years ago at 4 minutes, 21 seconds. He was captain of the varsity track team and also for four years was captain of the 1910 team. He was also president of the Athletic Council and delivered the opening address on Class Day.

Following his graduation in 1919, Cobbie joined the faculty at The Hill School, where he remained for the rest of his life. As head of the Science Department there for more than thirty-five years, he was instrumental in the erection of a modern science building. The books in the Science Library are dedicated to him, and last spring a new lecture room was named in his honor.

As head coach of track, Cobbie was closely associated with Mike Sweeney, Director of Athletics for forty years. Between them they developed a host of college track stars, including five members of United States Olympic teams.

Upon his semi-retirement in 1953, Cobbie assumed the post of Alumni Director, doing public relations work and fund raising. He also continued as Director of The Hill Summer School at Wolfeboro, N. H. During World War I he served as a second lieutenant in the Army.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Marion Potts Colbath, whom he married on June 11, 1919, in Pottstown; his mother, Mrs. Ernest L. Colbath of Dexter; a daughter, Mrs. Dorothy C. Baber of Wilmington, Del.; a son, Henry J. jr. of Laconia, N. H.; a brother, George '17; and two granddaughters. His fraternity was Delta Kappa Epsilon.

1912 FREDERICK BENJAMIN SIMPSON died at a Sullivan nursing home on September 3, 1956. Born in Carmel on June 19, 1889, he prepared for college at Bangor High School. From 1916 until 1928 he was president of the F. L. Jones Company in Bangor and for many years was president of the Community Broadcasting Service in that city. Since 1949 he had been living with his son, Francis, at Prospect Harbor. Also surviving are two grandchildren. Fred was a member of Delta Kappa Epsilon.

1915 MANNING COLE MOULTON, Bangor eye specialist, died at his home in that city on December 5, 1956. Born March 26, 1893, in Portland, he was the son of Dr. Willis B. Moulton M'83. He prepared for Bowdoin at Portland High School and following his graduation in 1915 continued on to the Maine Medical School, receiving his M.D. degree in 1918. He interned at the Maine General Hospital in Portland, did graduate work in ophthalmology at Tulane University, and served at the Massachusetts Eye and Ear Infirmary. During World War I he was a lieutenant in the Navy Medical Corps.

In 1920 Manning set up practice in Searsmont, then went to Bangor four years later. A Fellow of the Academy of International Medicine, he served on the boards of the Home for Aged Women and the Good Samaritan Home and had served as a member of the Bangor City Council and the Bangor Water Board. He was also a trustee of the Bangor Public Library, was ophthalmologist for the Bangor and Aroostook Railroad, and was a resident consultant on the ophthalmological service at the Eastern Maine General Hospital.

Manning is survived by his wife, Mrs. Ina Nelson Moulton, whom he married in Portland on August 10, 1918; two daughters, Mrs. Virginia M. Emery of Bangor and Mrs. Margaret M. McKee of Camden; two sons, Robert M. of Baldwin, N. Y.; and Dr. Gardner N. '47 of Bangor; two brothers, Albert '09 and Bryant '13; a sister, Mrs. Arch H. Morrell of Augusta; and seventeen grandchildren. He was a member of Kappa Sigma.

1930 NORMAN SUMNER WALDRON died in Rockland on December 6, 1956. Born there on July 14, 1909, he prepared for Bowdoin at the local high school and following his graduation cum laude taught languages at the Manlius School in New York, later serving as its headmaster. He resigned in 1942 to enter the Army Air Corps, in which he served for three years as a staff sergeant. He was for four years a vocational consultant with the Veterans Administration and then was employed by the A. C. McLoon Lobster Company in Rockland.

Norm is survived by a sister, Miss Mildred Waldron, with whom he lived. He was a member of Sigma Nu and Phi Beta Kappa.

1937 DAVID NICKERSON HILL died in an automobile accident at Delray Beach, Fla., on December 6, 1956. Born March 30, 1915, in Worcester, Mass., he prepared at North High School in that city and attended Bowdoin for two years. During World War II he served overseas as a lieutenant in the Air Force with the 467th Bombardment Group in England. He was employed as sales manager for Acme Sign Company in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., at the time of his death.

Dave is survived by his mother, Mrs. Vivian N. Hill of Worcester, Mass.; and two brothers, F. Whiting Hill of Huntsville, Ala., and Donald R. Hill of Eau Gallie, Fla. His fraternity was Alpha Delta Phi.

1947 STANLEY NATHANIEL ALTMAN died suddenly in New York City on November 24, 1956. Born in Boston on January 13, 1927, he prepared at the Boston Public Latin School and graduated from Bowdoin cum laude. During 1947 he was also a Teaching Fellow in Latin. Stan went on to do graduate work in romance languages at Harvard. He then took a degree in library science at Boston University while studying Semitic languages at Harvard. For some years he was a librarian at M.I.T. and last September went to New York City, where he was employed as a librarian in the Jewish Division of the New York Public Library at the time of his death. He

From the Chapel Hill, N. C., Weekly for December 11 comes the following interesting item — "Sturgis Leavitt, like many other men at the top of the teaching profession, has great powers of concentration. Sometimes you fancy you can see him exercising these powers as he walks along the street, apparently oblivious to the mundane affairs going on around him.

"Mr. Leavitt was thus concentrating on something the other morning when he left the Post Office to get in his car, in which Mrs. Leavitt awaited him. As he was about to drive off, the woman seated beside him said, 'This is fine, but won't your wife wonder where you are?'

"The woman was Mrs. J. Penrose Harland, whose husband had just left her in the Harland car parked behind the Leavitt car. She had watched fascinated as Mr. Leavitt had got in the car with her, pushed in the clutch, and switched on the ignition. But when he looked back to see if he had a clear road, she figured it was time to say something.

"She did so, and Mr. Leavitt was soon on his way in his own car with his own wife."

On October 24, 1956, the Massachusetts Committee for United Nations Day and the World Affairs Council of Boston presented a citation to Carl de Suze. It said, in part, "Ancestry rooted in four nations of Western Europe, you were born aboard a steamship in New York Harbor, the modern gateway to the New World.

"Your New England upbringing steeped you in the native fountainhead of America's traditions, resourcefulness, and ingenuity. Your education seeded you with a sensitive and sympathetic wide-ranging interest in man, his world, his affairs, and their history.

"Your contact with the cradles of civilization in the Old World have stirred you to fulfill the substance of your parents' hope that you would pursue a career in international relations. You have become a lay ambassador for the universalities of man's essential traditions and spiritual aspirations.

"You serve as a gadfly of understanding and tolerance among men. May your maturing career increasingly impress your growing audience that the pursuit of peace lies in the strengthening of human brotherhood without limitations of nation, race, creed, or color."

Early in December Ken and Marion Baker wrote from the Fellowship Center, Le Chambon-sur-Lignon (Haute Loire), France, "The first of May we came here as successors to Howard and Elsie Schomer, who had been living and working here since 1946. They first came to Le Chambon because of its position in French Protestantism. The town itself and several of the smaller villages in the region are made up of Protestant majorities. In Le Chambon about 85% of the year-round population are in the Evangelical tradition. In the summer the population of a little more than 3000 swells to about 10,000 as people come from the cities to spend their vacations here in the mountains. We live over 3000 feet high, as you would have realized had you seen the piles of snow which covered the area in October. In general, this country is poor, the hills are rocky, and there are abundant forests of spruce and other evergreens. Sometimes we can easily think we are back in the Berkshires or 'down Maine'. It is partly because the terrain is rather hostile that Protestantism was able to survive here during the long years of bloody persecution which in the 17th and 18th centuries wiped out the Protestantism in some regions of France and forced thousands into exile. During the war years Le Chambon served as a center of refuge for those persecuted by the Nazis and their French collaborators. Only last month we had a visit from a man who had been hidden for three weeks in a barn near here and then helped to escape to Switzerland. He had come back to thank the people who had very literally saved his life.

In November Gil Pletts wrote from Reno, Nev., "After receiving my master's in 1951 I went to work for Ohio State University doing research for the Air Force. This job took us from Tampa, Fla., to Columbus, Ohio, to Colorado Springs, Colo., and finally to Reno. My contract was for three years, so at the end of the third year I went to work for the Washoe County Welfare Department in Reno as their staff psychologist. While working for them I was approached by a Reno school administrator and asked if I would be willing to start a public school for mentally retarded children. Since I did a lot of work with this type of child while doing my graduate work I decided to try it. This is my third year and we now have four teachers and twenty-eight children. It is quite a job but is really a lot of fun. Besides the basic academic subjects I teach woodworking (we have about three thousand dollars worth of power tools and equipment), leathercraft, basketweaving, working with plastics, and many other handcrafts. On top of the teaching work I handle the administrative affairs of the school.

"I still work for the Welfare Department on an appointment basis and as much as I want to in the summer time. I am the scoutmaster for a troop of mentally handicapped boys, which takes up a little more time. Navy Reserve has spoken for all of my Monday evenings. If there is any spare time, I occasionally take on a private case, but these are quite limited.

Faculty

Professor Philip Beam is Chairman of the Committee on Music at St. Paul's Episcopal Church in Brunswick.

Prof. Herbert Brown's countless friends will grieve to learn of the death late last fall of his father, Captain Guy Paul Brown of Allentown, Pa. Captain Brown commanded a company of the Rainbow Division during World War I. He was buried in Arlington National Cemetery on December 5.

Professor Dan Christie attended the annual meeting of the Northeastern Section of the Mathematical Association of America, held on November 24 at the University of Connecticut. Dr. Christie presented an invited paper on "Algebraic Aspects of Dimensional Analysis."

Their many friends extend to Professor and Mrs. Manton Copeland their deep sympathy in the death of their daughter-in-law, Mrs. Edna Evans Copeland, on December 29 in Williamstown, Mass. Her husband, Manton jr., is a member of the Williams College faculty.

Professor Athern Daggett lectured in Augusta on November 9 under the auspices of the YAYF Club. On November 15 he spoke on international affairs before the Women's Fellowship of Christ Church in Kennebunk.

Professor Nathan Dane has been appointed Regional Associate for the American Council of Learned Societies. He is Acting Dean at Bowdoin during the second semester.

Professor William Geoghegan was the opening speaker in the annual forum series of Temple Beth El in Portland on January 27. His subject was "A Bird's-Eye View of the Bible as a Drama."

Professor Emeritus Alfred Gross continues to be a popular lecturer around New England. On November 5 he spoke before the Stanton Bird Club in Lewiston on "Birds Seen on a Trip around the World."

In December Professor and Mrs. Gross sailed from Brooklyn, N. Y., on the S. S. Partner, which was scheduled to visit several South American ports. The Grosses plan to spend about three months in the British West Indies before returning to Brunswick in May.

Professor Charles Huntington was married on December 22 to Miss Louise Chapin Slater of Cambridge, Mass., a graduate of Radcliffe College and a member of the faculty at the Northfield School for Girls.

Professor Huntington spoke on "Sea Birds of This Area" at a meeting of the Rockland Community Men's Club on December 3.

Professor Samuel Kamerling is chairman of the advisory committee on building of the Brunswick School Board. It is meeting to explore further possible solutions to the problem of school crowding in the town.

Dean Nathaniel Kendrick presided at the business meetings of the 71st annual meeting of the New England Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, held in Boston in December.

Professor Noel Little was elected to the Executive Committee of the New England Section of the American Physical Society at its meeting held at Storrs, Conn., on November 3.

Bursar Glenn McIntire attended the annual meeting of the Eastern Association of College and University Business Officers at White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., last November.

Tallman Professor Charles Mitchell spoke to members of the Maine Branch of the English Speaking Union on December 9 in Portland. His subject was the social changes in England during the past decade.

Professor Thomas Riley has reported on his experiences as a Fulbright Fellow in Austria to audiences in Brunswick, Waterville, Wiscasset, Thomaston, Yarmouth, and Round Pond, while Mrs. Riley has given similar talks in Portland, Topsham, and Bath. Their talk was usually entitled "Austria and the State of Maine."

Professor William Root is Chairman of the Committee on College Work at St. Paul's Episcopal Church in Brunswick.

Professor and Mrs. Burton Taylor announce the arrival of a grandson, born on November 24 in Algiers, Algeria. He is the first child of Yves Saint Leger and Mme. Saint Leger, the former Edith Taylor.

Professor Clement Vose spoke before the Portland League of Women Voters on December 12. His subject was the Public Administration Service's report on Maine's state government.

Football Coach Adam Walsh is minority floor leader for the Democratic Party in the Maine Legislature this winter. The Portland Press Herald for December 20 said in editorial comment, "Someone has to tackle the toughies and it is a credit to Walsh that he didn't duck this one, even though it is certain to produce the most severe headaches he has had in his short political career as a representative from the town of Brunswick."

Philip Wilder, Assistant to the President, was a member of the Advisory Committee for A Guide to Undergraduate Study for Foreign Students, published last September by the Institute of International Education in cooperation with the Association of American Colleges, with the assistance of a grant from The Hazen Foundation. Mr. Wilder is, among his many other duties, Advisor to Foreign Students at Bowdoin.

Honorary

1956 Frank Abrams has been elected to the Board of Trustees of Hofstra College for a three-year term.

A Report On The Arena

By Athletic Director Mal Morrell '24

WE believe that in the short time we have had the Arena in full scale operation it has become an important unit of the physical education plant. Undergraduate use of this facility has exceeded our expectations. In my opinion, we are now in a position to offer the best over-all physical education program we have ever had, largely because of this new structure. It has been a good thing for student morale.

We are pleased that there is considerable public interest in the Arena and we want to share its use with the people of Brunswick and the surrounding communities to as great an extent as is consistent with the first purpose for which it was constructed, that of serving the undergraduates.

It is estimated that through January 10 the Arena has been used by more than 14,000 people. This includes 2500 at the dedication program on Alumni Day, November 10; about 4700 who attended the seven United States National Hockey Team games; 1850 spectators at Bowdoin hockey games; 4100 adults and children during public skating hours; 600 Bowdoin students during hours set aside for them; and 400 high school students. In addition, the Arena is used by about 100 undergraduates during morning hours. Sixty compete in fraternity games each week as well as in practice sessions. About thirty-five more boys are on the freshman and varsity hockey squads and practice or play six days a week.

Listed below are a few typical days for the Arena.

Sunday, January 6

- 1:00- 2:30 p.m. Undergraduate free skating.
- 3:00- 4:30 p.m. Family skating (children with parents).
- 7:30- 9:00 p.m. Public skating (no children under 14).

Monday, January 7

- 9:00-10:00 a.m. Physical education class and undergraduate free skating.
- 10:30-12:30 a.m. Physical education classes and undergraduate free skating.
- 1:30- 3:15 p.m. Freshman practice.
- 3:30- 5:30 p.m. Varsity practice.
- 7:00- 9:00 p.m. Fraternity games.
- 9:00-10:00 p.m. Fraternity practice.

Saturday, January 12

- 9:00-10:00 a.m. Children under 10.
- 10:30-11:30 a.m. Children 10 to 14.
- 11:30- 1:15 p.m. Skating group from Portland.
- 3:00- 5:00 p.m. Freshman game vs. Dixfield High School.
- 7:00- 9:00 p.m. Varsity game vs. M.I.T.
- 9:00-10:00 p.m. Public skating—undergraduates free.

BOWDOIN ALUMNUS

April 1957

In 1907 an enterprising gentleman named H. D. Nichols made an engraving of the Bowdoin campus from an architectural projection. The campus appears to be seen from a high vantage point. Prints appear to be aerial views. Picturing the Bowdoin campus as students from 1903 to 1912 knew it, the prints make a fine addition to those of 1821 and 1860.

The Alumni Office has acquired hand colored copies of these engravings, about 27 by 17 inches on large white vellum sheets. Ready for framing, the prints are priced at $20.00 (plus 2% sales tax to Maine residents).

THE BOWDOIN ALUMNUS: published October, December, February, April, June, and August by Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Maine. Subscription $2.00 year. Single copies 40 cents. Second-class mail privileges authorized at Brunswick, Maine.

THE 150TH ANNIVERSARY of the birth of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow was observed at Bowdoin on February 27.

Room rents at Bowdoin will be increased to $270 a year, beginning next September, President Coles announced on February 12.

The Special Committee of the Governing Boards on Planning of Buildings has been designated to make studies concerning a new dormitory, its facilities, location, and financing, to report to the Boards in June.

The Advertising Council, Inc., has undertaken a public service advertising campaign on behalf of higher education, to begin this month and to continue for a period of at least two years.

Strange as it may seem, all four of these apparently unrelated matters are very much related. When Longfellow was an undergraduate at Bowdoin more than 130 years ago, living in Winthrop Hall, he paid less than $100 a year for his education, including tuition, board, and room, and all other expenses. Tuition was $16 a year, room rent $6.68, and so forth.

Undergraduates listening to Dr. C. Wilbert Snow '07 speaking on Longfellow on February 27 now pay between $1850 and $1950 a year on the average for their Bowdoin education, exclusive of scholarship aid. The College pays a good deal more for each man toward his education — for no one comes even close to paying for that education. Those who have gone before him provide for much of this additional sum through their generosity, both by yearly gifts through the Alumni Fund and in the present and the past through bequests and other capital gifts.

In 1943 Bowdoin students paid $180 a year in room rent. This figure was increased in 1949 to $216, where it remained constant until the present time, despite continually rising costs. Next fall it will be $270.

During the first semester more than 150 men were living off campus, many of them sophomores. The most recent dormitory to be built was Moore Hall, constructed in 1941. Since that time the number of students has increased from 625 to 785 this semester. Many dormitory rooms designed for two have three undergraduates living in them.

And what has all this to do with the Advertising Council's campaign? Just this — the campaign which is beginning this month is designed "to create in the American public a greater awareness of its stake in our institutions of higher learning, and to stimulate it to provide increased financial support for them."

If the American people sincerely believe in the cause of higher education, and it seems inconceivable that they do not, then the Advertising Council's campaign can be only a success. It will involve all major media — newspapers, magazines, radio, television, and transit car cards. All time and space will be contributed by the media or paid for by business advertisers; and the advertisements will be created without charge by one of the country's leading agencies.

There are four peak periods scheduled: April and November of 1957 and April and November of 1958. Every Bowdoin man can help by contributing generously each year to the Alumni Fund, by urging fellow alumni to contribute, and by seeing that his company, his associates, and his friends understand the needs of higher education and the alternative to these needs not being met.

The Advertising Council campaign must be a success if colleges like Bowdoin are to continue to "serve the common good." This goal outlined by President Joseph McKeen on the sandy plains of Brunswick on that fateful September day in 1802 remains the crystal-clear, bright star by which Bowdoin steers her course.

The cover picture, taken on the night of February 22 by Harry Shulman, Portland Press Herald and Associated Press correspondent for the Brunswick area, shows a mixture of alumni and machinery. The alumni, from left to right, are Bob Dysinger '44, Carl Connor '36, and Lou McCarthy '19, all of whom were attending the on-campus conference of the Bowdoin Alumni Council.

The Zamboni machine has been a feature attraction at the Arena all winter long. It shaves, shovels, and resurfaces the ice, all in one operation. It eliminates the need for scrapers, water wagons, and the snow pit formerly regarded as essential for artificial ice rinks. The Bowdoin Zamboni, the first to be purchased by a college in the East, is the model which the inventor, Frank Zamboni of Paramount, Calif., plans to put into mass production. Built around a conventional Jeep, the machine is seven feet high, seven feet wide, 13 feet 3 inches long, weighs 5,400 pounds unloaded, and carries 200 gallons of water.

THE TWELFTH ANNUAL on-campus meeting of the Bowdoin Alumni Council was held on Friday and Saturday, February 22 and 23.

The sessions this year included talks by President James S. Coles and Acting Dean Nathan Dane '37. Twenty-eight members of the Council were in attendance. They were guests of Bowdoin for the weekend as they discussed such subjects as scholarship aid, Placement Bureau activities, prospective students, alumni clubs, the Alumni Service Award, and nominations for the annual ballot, to be mailed to all alumni later this spring.

Dean Dane spoke on "The State of the College" at a dinner in the Moulton Union on Friday night, following which members of the Council adjourned to witness a varsity hockey game in the Arena. Aside from the score — Northeastern 11, Bowdoin 2 — all enjoyed the evening.

President Coles addressed the Saturday morning session, giving a frank and somewhat confidential outline of Bowdoin's needs in the next decade. Later he and Mrs. Coles entertained the group for luncheon. During the afternoon Council members attended a varied schedule of athletic events as guests of the Athletic Department.

Most of the sessions during the two days were devoted to the subject of prospective students and how alumni can help Bowdoin get its share of the really outstanding boys.

In attendance at the on-campus conference were the following alumni: Members at Large — President Francis B. Hill '23, Louis Bernstein '22, Seward J. Marsh '12, Glenn R. McIntire '25, Paul Sibley '25, Henry A. Shorey III '41, Everett P. Pope '41, Leland W. Hovey '26, Carleton S. Connor '36, Louis B. McCarthy '19; Representative Members — L. Damon Scales '40 and Luther D. Abbott '39 (Androscoggin), Richard S. Thayer '28 (Essex County), Paul E. Gardent jr. '39 (Boston), Philmore Ross '43 (Brunswick), Charles M. Barbour '33 (Connecticut), Robert E. Dysinger '44 (Kennebec Valley), Donald R. Bryant '37 (New Hampshire), Frank A. St. Clair '21 (New Jersey), Stevens L. Frost '42 (New York), Robert S. Shepherd sr. '43 (North Shore), Arthur K. Orne '30 (Philadelphia), Lyman A. Cousens jr. '31 (Portland), Marshall Swan '29 (Rhode Island), Robert D. Peakes '36 (Vermont), Cloyd E. Small '20 (Worcester), Alumni Fund Vice Chairman Jotham D. Pierce '39, and Administrative Assistant Robert M. Cross '45.

Write A Letter, Alumnus!

Reproduced below is an actual letter from an alumnus to the Admissions Office. It is printed here (with the names changed) as an example of what the Admissions Office considers to be the kind of letter it would like to receive from many alumni. The letter gives a good deal of information about the boy that perhaps would not come to the Office from the school he is attending. Alumni who are interested in suggesting prospective students may want to save this letter and pattern their own after it.

The presence of such a letter in an applicant's folder is always helpful, especially during the period when final decisions are being made.

At this time more than 1000 applications are being studied by the Admissions Office to select the Class of 1961. The Governing Boards have indicated that the freshmen should number 200 next fall. Notifications of decisions on admission and scholarship awards are scheduled to be mailed on April 20.

During the summer and fall the Admissions Office would particularly welcome such letters from alumni who are interested in certain boys. This is one concrete way in which alumni may assist in admissions.

I am writing to you in regard to a boy in our town who is interested in going to Bowdoin. I interviewed the boy last Friday and will give you his background as best I can. His father is a good citizen of the town and a salesman for one of the large oil companies. His mother works part-time as a trained nurse, a very fine woman. The boy would be interested in some financial assistance if it were possible.

The boy's name and address are as follows: John R. Doe, 10 Smith Street, North Brunswick, New Hampshire. He is now 18 years of age, becoming 19 in May. He is 6 feet, 1 inch tall and weighs 170 pounds, blonde in complexion. He attends the Baptist Church in North Brunswick. He went through the 9th grade in North Brunswick High School. For the past three years he has attended Bowdoin Institute, Newtown, Vermont. In his first year there he captained the J.V. football team, has played center on the Varsity for the past two years. I understand they have a very good team. He has played varsity tennis for two years and this winter is on their track team. Also he is President of his senior class.

Scholastically he tells me that his studies have continuously improved over the past three years and that he was able to make the Dean's List during the past term. In talking with the boy and his mother, it is my feeling that he had trouble with his studies in high school but that by hard work he has been able to improve them steadily since going away to school. He admits that he has to work hard for what he gets in his studies. He tells me, also, that he waits on tables to assist his parents in sending him to school.

Now I do not profess to know this boy real well; his mother I am well acquainted with through her nursing in our family. After my interview with him, referred to above, it seemed to me that he was the type of boy that we would like to have at Bowdoin.

If, after reading this, you concur in this belief, I would appreciate your sending him the proper papers for him to make application on. If there is any other information that you would like, I should be glad to try to obtain it for you.

A Tribute To William E. Lunt '04

The following letter was written on January 29 by President E. Newbold Cooper of Girard College in Philadelphia. It is reproduced here not only because it is a tribute to Professor Lunt but also because it is in a very real sense a tribute to everything that Bowdoin has stood for in its more than a century and a half of existence.

Mr. Cooper is really saying what Robert Frost once put into these words: "We love the things we love for what they are."

We appreciate receiving the Alumnus because, aside from its interesting content, it reminds us of the many able Bowdoin men who are or have been on our faculty. Likewise, we are kept in touch through it with Girardians who have matriculated at your outstanding institution and have grown to love it so well.

This letter, however, is to thank R.M.C. for his sympathetic, well written article on Dr. Lunt, the college professor who made me work harder than anyone else. I took his course on English Constitutional History at Haverford in 1921 and have never forgotten the experience.

Dr. Lunt began to speak ere he took his seat at the desk, and if you wool-gathered during the hour, you were lost. It got so that we learned to take down the lecture almost word for word, and upon the occasional opportunity for questions or discussion we avoided the "bluff" approach and the "synthetic" answer like the plague, for he did not suffer fools gladly. We had two texts with much outside reading, and we did not neglect the assignments. Nothing was acceptable but the best you could do, and we produced our very best.

Not long ago as I was going through some old papers, I came across one written for Dr. Lunt. It was marked "A, a good paper," and I had kept it all these years because it stood for something in my life. My "A's" were few and far between, but there would have been more if I had sat under more Lunts. For me he has always symbolized sound scholarship, high standards, and the ability to make you feel ashamed at doing less than your best. Before that year's end we had glimpsed what he meant when he said at Haverford in 1952, "The most profound and abiding pleasure that men can enjoy is the pleasure they derive from their work. . . ."

William E. Lunt typifies for me that strength of character so common in men from the State of Maine who have been broadened by Bowdoin experience. He was somewhat stern and demanding, but just. Yet underneath there was humor and a warmth of personality, the sight of which rewarded those who labored hard in his vineyard. He taught us, and particularly me, to value scholarship and to find the heart-warming satisfaction that comes from doing a thorough job. Dr. Lunt would so readily have understood Stephen Girard when the latter said, "The love of work is the finest legacy a father can leave to his son."

Thank you again for publishing such a warm article on a man honored alike at Bowdoin and Haverford, not only for his achievements, but also for being what he was, a superior blending of intelligence and integrity. Because he lived and worked, many lives have been enriched, many horizons expanded.

A Message To Every Alumnus

From The Society of Bowdoin Women

PERHAPS YOU HAVE wondered about our Society; for what purpose were we organized, what are we so busy about during Commencement, who is eligible to join? The answers are simple, and we hope they will appeal to you so much that you will urge all the women in your family to become members and lend a hand.

Our one aim is to help the College, both through the services we offer during Commencement and through gifts of various kinds we are able to make, thanks to the interest and generosity of our members. All day Friday and Saturday morning, we staff a Headquarters at the Gibson Hall of Music, where any woman visiting the campus may get information, meet friends, and relax. Bowdoin men of all ages are finding this a popular spot to park their families and friends, while they are off on projects of their own, knowing their "girls" are having as much fun as they are!

We also sponsor and run two luncheons. The Friday Luncheon is a feature of the Annual Meeting of our Society, the most important business being the presentation of gifts. Last June there was great excitement when we sent a check for $500 to the Arena, gave $400 worth of Bowdoin china as permanent equipment to the President's House, voted to cover the expenses of the biennial lecture by an outstanding woman we sponsor at the College, and added $100 to the Society of Bowdoin Women Foundation, an unrestricted gift to the College. You have doubtless heard of the magnificent present of table silver for the President's House donated by our honored and beloved member, Mrs. Frederick W. Pickard, which was given in the name of our Society and announced for the first time at our meeting. We can't promise a grand climax like that every year!

At the Saturday Luncheon we entertain as Guests of Honor the mothers and wives of members of the Graduating Class. All other women visitors are welcome to share at cost price the same delicious menu which is being served to the men at the same time in another room of the same building.

There are only two requisites for membership in our Society: a desire to help the College and the payment of $1.00 annual dues. Our Board looks forward to the time when one or more women from the family of every Bowdoin man will be enrolled on our lists. Won't you persuade your mother, wife, daughters, sisters, cousins, aunts or other Bowdoin ladies to join today by sending a dollar to our Treasurer, Mrs. Alden H. Sawyer, 1747 Congress Street, Portland 4, Maine?

We hope very much that those who are planning to attend Commencement this June will add a note, offering to help on one of our committees. We can promise them that if they take even a small part in our program, they will enjoy their visit to Bowdoin more than ever before!

Cordially yours,

On The Campus

Assistant Director of Admissions Paul V. Hazelton '42 has been appointed Assistant Professor of Education at Bowdoin, effective July 1. Robert H. Glover '56 of Brockton, Mass., has been named Assistant Director of Admissions and began his new duties on March 1.

Sports

The winter sports season concluded early in March, and, generally speaking, the results were not as dismal as many had predicted. The varsity basketball team, led by Brud Stover of Bath and Dick Willey of Ellsworth, finished with a record of 9 wins and 11 losses and a strong second place in the State Series, behind perennial winner Colby. The freshmen compiled a 9 and 4 record.

The swimming team split in six dual meets, while the freshman squad demonstrated convincingly that it will be a tremendous help to Bob Miller next winter by winning seven meets and deadlocking with always-powerful Portland High in its other contest.

The varsity track team lost to Bates and Maine and defeated Boston College, while the freshmen defeated their high school competition but lost to a strong Phillips Exeter squad.

The hockey team had a difficult first year in the Arena, winning three games and dropping fifteen, many of them by one-sided margins, with the Polar Bear goalies making between 50 and 60 saves per game. The freshmen defeated Kents Hill twice and lost their other nine games.

The Sailing Club, under Commodore Dave Belknap '58 of Damariscotta, has a full spring schedule lined up. It began on March 30 and 31 with the Mc-Millan Cup event at Annapolis, Md. Competition is scheduled for the next six weekends, with an interfraternity meet also planned and possibly a faculty race.

The Meddiebempsters will be one of ten college singing groups to appear in a joint concert at Carnegie Hall in New York on the evening of May 10. Other schools will be Brown, Colgate, Columbia, Connecticut College for Women, Cornell, Princeton, Smith, Vassar, and Yale.

Clarence D. Rouillard '24 has informed the Alumni Office that gifts to charitable and educational organizations in the United States may now be included among those for which exemption is claimed on Canadian income tax, and vice versa. Bowdoin men, both in this country and in Canada, may wish to take advantage of this new agreement.

tinue their splendid showing of the past few years, capped by a second place in the Midwest Thanksgiving Regatta in Chicago last fall.

They also hope to retain possession of the Class of 1930 Trophy in further appreciation of that group's generosity in presenting five Tech dinghies at its 25th reunion in June of 1955.

Hormell Cup

Brendan J. Teeling, a sophomore from Salem, Mass., was on January 5 awarded the Orren Chalmer Hormell Cup, given annually for high scholastic honors and skill in athletic competition in the recipient's first year at Bowdoin. The trophy is given by the Sigma Nu fraternity in honor of Orren C. Hormell, DeAlva Stanwood Alexander Professor of Government, Emeritus, for many years faculty advisor to the Sigma Nu's at Bowdoin.

Teeling came to Bowdoin as the recipient of an Alumni Fund Scholarship. A James Bowdoin Scholar and Dean's List man, he won his class numerals in both baseball and swimming last year. He is also a member of the staff of WBOA, the campus radio station. His fraternity is Psi Upsilon.

Music

The Glee Club has just returned from another successful spring vacation tour which took them on successive days to Worcester, Mass., Norwich, Conn., New York City, Passaic, N. J., Hackettstown, N. J., and Briarcliff, N. Y. Earlier concerts were presented at Westbrook Junior College, Abington, Mass., Falmouth Foreside, and Brunswick, when Bradford Junior College joined with Bowdoin in the annual Campus Chest weekend program on March 16.

On April 5 the Glee Club under Professor Frederic Tillotson's direction will present its annual campus concert in the Pickard Theater. On April 12 and 13 it will appear at Lasell Junior College and Bradford Junior College for joint concerts.

THE PICK TURNER TREE

The Class of 1919 is going to plant a tree on the Bowdoin campus in memory of the late Pick Turner. Roy Foulke, who is serving as a one-man committee to raise between $300 and $500 for the purpose, will welcome gifts from any of Pick's countless college friends and former students who wish to contribute. Checks should be made out to Bowdoin College and mailed to Roy at 99 Church Street, New York 8, N. Y.

The letter sent to all members of 1919 termed Pick Turner "the one member of our Class who became a Professor at the College and served it with honor and distinction, sincerity and warm friendliness for many, many years. Pick ran a great race with long powerful strides and with that honest smile of his to the very end."

Present plans call for the purchase of a fifteen or twenty foot oak or maple tree from a nursery or the transplanting of some tree from Pick's East Parsonsfield farm, which he loved so much.

There are at present five memorial trees on the campus, ranging from the Thorndike Oak, planted in 1802, to the Shumway Tree, a Rocky Mountain fir dedicated in 1955. The others are the Class of 1869 Tree, a large white elm standing to the west of Winthrop Hall; the Class of 1879 Tree, a red oak west of Massachusetts Hall; and the Elijah Kellogg Tree, a large pine east of Sills Hall and the Smith Auditorium.

The Betas will defend their title in the Interfraternity Sing on April 24 and 25. And on May 9 it will be "Bowdoin Night" at the Boston Pops. Professor Tillotson will appear as soloist in the Bach piano concerto in d minor.

The Bowdoin Band will take part in the annual New England Band Festival at Colby College on April 11, 12, and 13, and will appear at Bates on April 14.

Campus concerts include the Curtis String Quartet's yearly appearance on April 15, with Professor Tillotson collaborating in the Brahms Piano Quintet. The Music Club and the Masque and Gown will present John Gay's "The Beggar's Opera" on May 11 and 13. On May 5 Professor Tillotson will present the Bach piano concerto in d minor in the Pickard Theater. He will be accompanied by the Colby College orchestra.

Carter and NCCBS

Hodding Carter '27, noted not only for his accomplishments in contemporary journalism but also for his work in the field of education, is a charter member of the National Citizens Council for Better Schools. The NCCBS is a non-partisan group spearheading the nationwide drive for school improvement.

Formed early in 1956, this lay organization has a broad membership of prominent, public-spirited men and women not professionally identified with religion, education, or politics. Mr. Carter is one of 78 members representing varied backgrounds and opinions who are united in the Council's purpose: to alert Americans to the continuing crisis in education and to the need for constructive action in their own communities.

The NCCBS sponsors a national advertising campaign, through the Advertising Council, to point up why our schools need help and to show that schools are the common concern of every citizen. Individuals and groups are aided in finding their own answers to school problems through a clearinghouse of case histories on what other communities have done. In addition, the NCCBS distributes a series of 17 working guides. These how-to-do-it handbooks give background and history of U. S. public education, as well as technical know-how in meeting current difficulties. They approach the problem from many angles, from "What Should Our Schools Accomplish?" and "What Are Our School Building Needs?" to such subjects as "How Can We Help Our School Boards?" and "How Can We Get Enough Good Teachers?"

Through national headquarters in New York (9 East 40th Street) and regional offices in Louisville, Minneapolis, and Denver, the new Council is carrying forward the program of its predecessor group, the National Citizens Commission for the Public Schools, of which Hodding Carter was a member. Initial financing came from the Carnegie Corporation and the Fund for the Advancement of Education.

NCCBS members assist in carrying out the Council's aims at the state and local level, where questions of inadequate facilities and problems of financing are growing more acute. State citizens' groups for better schools have been organized in 35 states, and several others are now in formative stages. About 15,000 local citizens' groups in the cities and towns around the nation are currently working with school authorities to improve their schools.

Carter '27

As editor and publisher of the Delta Democrat-Times in Greenville, Miss., Hodding Carter has been a strong advocate in the cause of better schools. He is the author of several books and many articles about social problems in the South. His journalistic honors include a Nieman Fellowship, Guggenheim Fellowship, and the Pulitzer prize for editorial writing. Since 1950 he has been serving on the Pulitzer Prize Selection Committee. He is a trustee of Tulane University and of the George Peabody College for Teachers. On February 20 he delivered the Delta Sigma Lecture at Bowdoin, taking for his subject "The South: Yesterday and Tomorrow."

There are now 37,729,600 boys and girls in elementary and secondary classrooms. This is more than two million in excess of capacity. At this moment, the schools need 141,000 qualified new teachers.

In less than a decade, 1,200,000 more teachers will be needed as replacements and to take over expanded enrollments, for by 1965, another 10,000,000 children will be expecting to find desks!

The 1956-57 Alumni Fund

The American Alumni Council has launched an intensive program among member colleges to secure this year One million new givers to American Education. Supporting this program is the major public service in behalf of higher education being given by the Advertising Council.

Your Alumni Fund Directors have set, as Bowdoin's 1956-57 minimum share in the program, an increase in the number of contributors of 950. Last year 3539 alumni (48.4%) participated. This year we seek Sixty Per Cent.

Chairman Louis B. McCarthy '19 directs attention to the fact that, as of this writing 1659 Bowdoin men (22.2%) have contributed. A successful 1956-57 Alumni Fund means that 2811 others must have a share in it.

The Fessenden Story — Chapter Two

ALUMNI who recall the inside front cover of the February Alumnus, featuring the restored Fessenden portrait in the United States Treasury Building, will perhaps be interested in this continuation of the Fessenden tale. The facts have been provided by John L. Baxter '16, a member of the Board of Trustees and a direct Fessenden descendant himself.

Daniel Chalmers Fessenden of Los Angeles, Calif., is the only surviving grandchild of William Pitt Fessenden of the Class of 1823, who had four sons. All four were graduated from Bowdoin and were members of Chi Psi. They were James Deering, 1852; William Howard, 1855; Francis, 1858; and Samuel, 1861. James was a Brevet Major General at the close of the Civil War, Francis a Brigadier General; Samuel was a first lieutenant when he was killed at Centerville, Va., in 1862.

Daniel C. Fessenden

Daniel, the son of William Howard Fessenden, is a graduate of Leland Stanford University and President of the California Warehouse Company of Los Angeles. John Baxter's acquaintance with him began in 1955 when he wrote him, among other Fessenden relatives, about the U. S. Treasury's problem in connection with the Fessenden portrait. His reply was prompt, and he generously offered to take care of the entire expense of restoration.

Since an adequate number of other relatives were glad to share in the cost, Mr. Baxter accepted from Daniel Fessenden only his pro-rata share.

Meanwhile, Charles Jellison, a native of Maine but a graduate of Stanford, visited John Baxter in Brunswick. He was a Du Pont Fellow at the University of Virginia, working for his doctorate and searching for Fessenden papers to use in connection with his dissertation. Jellison said he was eager to find the original source material which General Francis Fessenden had used when he wrote the only existing biography of his father, but that he could not discover where the papers were.

After their first exchange of letters, Messrs. Baxter and Fessenden continued to correspond, to their mutual pleasure. In the course of their correspondence, Mr. Fessenden wrote that he had all the papers Jellison was looking for and some other Fessenden papers besides and would gladly donate them to Bowdoin if the College would like to have them.

Bowdoin, of course, accepted the offer gratefully. The papers were sent to the Bowdoin Library by way of the library of the University of Virginia so that Jellison could have convenient access to them while he was preparing his dissertation.

The thesis is now complete and Jellison is in the process of revising it into a biography of William Pitt Fessenden. Since the one by Francis Fessenden was published in 1907, there appears to be need for a new volume. Jellison is now a member of the history department at the University of New Hampshire.

The papers sent to the University of Virginia have recently been received by the Bowdoin Library, joining the other Fessenden papers, which arrived last summer. Included are many interesting photographs and Fessenden's commission as Secretary of the Treasury, signed by both Abraham Lincoln and William Seward. The two pictures on this page were borrowed from the collection by the Alumnus.

This is the U. S. Revenue Steamer Wm. P. Fessenden. The inset is a photograph of a miniature of William Pitt Fessenden as a young man.

Eighteen of the students were out teaching during the winter term. "Mitch," as he was going to be known to generations of Bowdoin men, then a freshman, was teaching at Harpswell.

The report of the Boating Association shows that the expenses for the season total $613.90. Everything was itemized including 3 cents for clothespins.

Albert W. Tolman, a junior — in after life to become a lawyer and distinguished writer of boys' stories and still living at Portland — was elected president of the Athletic Association and managing editor of Volume 17 of the Orient, beginning in April.

A number of students in Prince Alberts and white kid gloves attended the governor's reception at Augusta.

Henry Clay, the very dusky man-of-all-work about the campus for many years, was a frequent lodger in the county jail for minor infractions of the law but was declared not guilty of stealing an overcoat after a hearing in Bath. He informed the court that he was "finely" educated at Bowdoin College, where he had for many years "cleaned out spittoons, lugged coal," and "done sich dirty work." He told the court that he was born in 1844 and was 66 years old. Subsequently — as this department some time ago noted — Henry's brain when measured by the Medical School class in anatomy was found to be exceeded on the records only by Daniel Webster's.

The winter lecture course comprised lectures by W. D. Northend '43 on the Massachusetts Bay Colony; F. R. Kimball '76 on the Theory of Storms; and Professor C. C. Everett '50 of the Harvard Divinity School, on Religion. These seem to have been the only literary exercises during the winter outside of the regular college courses.

Preparatory to the installation of a few electric lights in the campus buildings Mr. Cothren gave a lecture on this new method of illumination. Darkening the room and showing the various effects and colors in incandescent lights, he gave a "very pretty" display. Wires were stretched on Brunswick streets from the source of power at the bridge. The Orient editorialized, "The Town authorities seem to have overlooked the fact that the evils of overhead wires are becoming every day more apparent. The poles and wires are surely not an ornament, and in case of fire it will be found that the wires will interfere with the workings of the fire department."

An audience of 450 attended the annual athletic exhibition on March 24th. As for many years to come, every class had a drill (A. W. Tolman leading the juniors in "bar bells") and there were exhibitions on horizontal bar, flying rings, tight rope, and trapeze; the program concluded with pyramids which the editor of this department remembers were topped by a tiny freshman, George T. Files, later for many years to be Bowdoin's Professor of German.

The baseball nine took a Massachusetts trip on which they met (and were duly defeated by) the "Harvards," "Amhersts," "Tufts," and "Holy Cross" besides several semi-professional teams. But they did beat Harvard 10 to 5. Bates and Maine State College having withdrawn from the state league, five games were played with Colby, which duly won the series. Indeed the Orient congratulated Colby, saying that "While we have no desire to spring the old chestnut of Bowdoin luck, we may say that in several instances the Bowdoin have been unfortunate. Sadness reigns in the classic shades of Bowdoin tonight." At one Colby game the gate receipts amounted to $39, "the largest amount ever received."

Donworth '90 was given a great send-off on leaving the College to enter West Point. At the close of his military career in 1900 he took up the practice of law in Aroostook County, became a writer of some note, and died within the last five years.

The Ivy Day oration on "The Advantage of a College Course" was by George F. Cary, later to be for many years a banker in Portland and a distinguished member of the Board of Overseers.

"Bowdoin Verse," a collection of over one hundred pieces and "Under the Bowdoin Pines," a collection of over 30 short stories of Bowdoin life, were published under the editorship of J. C. Minot '96, who some years previously had published "Tales of Bowdoin" and was one of the most enthusiastic of Bowdoin alumni.

The remodeled outdoor running track was in use throughout the winter although its use was often bothered by snow and ice.

Bowdoin's first recorded hockey team was organized informally. The first game was to have been played with a team from Augusta which didn't show up. Two games were played with the University of Maine. The game at Brunswick seems to have been the first hockey game ever played on the campus. Bowdoin won 4 to 1; it lost the subsequent game at Orono 3 to 2. Prior to the college series St. Paul's School defeated the Bowdoin team at Concord 11 to 0.

The Anasagunticook Snow Shoe Club was a feature of a snowy winter, making trips to Mt. Ararat and other places in the vicinity. In spite of frequent stormy weather the young ladies were on hand just the same and the trips were "none the less enjoyable." Freedom from snow during the first part of the winter made ice skating on the river a popular sport, but snow later in the season was bad for the outdoor hockey rink. It was the coldest and snowiest winter for 19 years.

William S. Linnell was elected president of the senior class and Fulton J. Redman its class orator. After graduation both eventually became and still are lawyers in Portland.

Seventeen recent Bowdoin graduates were scattered over the world in the employ of the International Banking Corporation of which General Thomas H. Hubbard '57, Bowdoin Trustee and generous benefactor, was one of the owners. Several of the senior class were to be added to the list.

The college teas and junior assemblies continued throughout the winter months.

A minstrel show, "The Bowdoin Tars," in the Town Hall the last week in January was a hit with a large audience. The stage was set to represent a scene on the ship "Bowdoin" and the fifty members of the chorus were dressed as tars. Kimball '07 was the interlocutor and there were solos by Leydon '07 and Linnell '07, who during the fifty years since their graduation have been two of the mainstays of one of Bowdoin's most remarkable classes.

The College received a gift of $5,000 from Mrs. Mayhew of South Orange, New Jersey, in memory of her niece, the wife of the Reverend Samuel V. Cole '74, for the purpose of establishing the Annie Talbot Cole lectureship, which is still annually given.

The one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Longfellow was celebrated by exercises in Memorial Hall on February 27th. There was a poem by Professor Henry Johnson, an address by Professor W. B. Mitchell (both of which are printed in full in the Orient), and several musical numbers.

A letter to the Orient from Edwin Leonard '47, one of Bowdoin's oldest alumni, suggested that Longfellow's room in North Winthrop should be marked, and this was subsequently done. In his letter Mr. Leonard tells of being present as an undergraduate when Longfellow revisited the room. Occupied by J. S. Whiting, a son of a major in the U. S. Army, the room was locked and in great disorder. In giving up the key Whiting asked one of the seniors to keep the distinguished visitor waiting so that he could put things in better shape, but there was no chance to do it. Longfellow stepped immediately into the room, went to one of the windows, looked out, and then left. "His whole bearing was that of a gentleman. He did not appear to notice the disorder." He was a trifle thin and wore, as Mr. Leonard remembered it, whiskers. "His dress was very neat, his trousers were of light color, he wore a light tan frock coat and very light colored gloves." This, Mr. Leonard says, is consistent with the mention which Longfellow makes of an old woman in Europe who spoke of him as "wearing gloves a shade too light for a strictly virtuous man." Mr. Leonard disputed the statement of Col. Higginson that Longfellow ever wore trousers with wide stripes running around the legs. Mr. Leonard is sure that he never wore an "untasty" garment. Both Senator Hoar and Edward Everett Hale spoke of him as a "dandy" and the first professor to call his students "Mister." Mr. Leonard also told that Longfellow purchased his clothes in Paris because they were "in better taste and cheaper even after paying the duties."

A set of the silhouettes of the Class of 1825 was presented to the Library by Dr. William C. Mason of Bangor.

Frederick Moore, war correspondent of the London Times during the Russo-Japanese War, spoke on conditions in Turkey. "A large audience enjoyed the occasion."

Participating in the Bradbury Prize Debate were seniors Redman, Drummond, Hupper, Kimball, Roberts, and Snow. The latter three won. The subject of the debate: "The Annexation of Cuba to the United States."

The absence of fire extinguishers caused serious damage from a fire in South Maine. The damage to the premises amounted to only about $600, but several students lost all their clothing, books, and furniture.

Speakers during the winter and spring were Dr. Alexander McKenzie of Cambridge, Massachusetts, Dr. Lyman Abbott of New York, Professor Hugh Black of New York, and Professor Fenn of the Harvard Divinity School.

At the twelfth annual indoor meet, which followed the annual athletic exhibition, class drills, relay races, 25 yard dash and hurdles, high jump, shot put, and pole vault made up the program. Racing at top speed 25 yards across the Town Hall floor into mattresses was a test of daring, and putting the shot and vaulting were a little fearsome. No wonder the high jump (won by Atwood) reached only 5'3", but Deming '10 in the pole vault went 9'6" and Garcelon put the shot 35'3".

Arthur L. Robinson '08 as editor-in-chief and Harold H. Burton '09 (now a judge of the U. S. Supreme Court) as assistant editor-in-chief took over the management of the Orient in April.

Dr. de Tarnowsky, fellow in French, and Professor Koelln of the German Department lectured on their trips abroad, and Dr. T. Z. Koo, vice-president of the World Student Christian Federation, recently back from China, discussed that country, which was in the midst of trouble with Japan.

Public feeling against Japan was rising high. President Sills together with several other college presidents and many distinguished citizens signed a petition urging a boycott against Japan which was criticized by President Gray of Bates College. In the same issue in which this subject was discussed Susumu Kawakami, a Japanese student, in an interview with an Orient reporter defended Japan and subsequently spoke at a Bowdoin Forum in support of Japanese policies in China. At the same forum W. W. Lockwood upheld China's position and Professor D. C. Stanwood took a nonpartisan position.

Hockey players were active all through a winter which permitted frequent playing on the outdoor rink. The swimming team made a distinguished record. In "the most sensational and dramatic event in the history of Bowdoin's swimming" Wallberg '35 smashed the New England intercollegiate record for the 440 yard free style event during an intermission of a Bowdoin-Wesleyan swimming meet at the Curtis Pool.

Bowdoin swept to victory in the mile relay race against Amherst and Williams in the BAA games and in the two-mile race was ahead of Harvard and M.I.T. but was beaten by Bates and Boston University.

In the University Club games at Boston the relay team won over Maine, and McLaughlin equalled the world indoor record in the high hurdles.

Oliver Baldwin, son of Great Britain's former prime minister, spoke in Memorial Hall on "The Future of British Politics." He seems to have taken a dim view of England's future. He predicted a clash between communism and capitalism within fifteen years.

There was much discussion of the interfraternity athletic system. President Sills spoke of his belief in it, but fraternity sentiment was rather closely divided.

Heading the editorial page of the Orient during the winter was a list of Bowdoin's needs; a senior dormitory, a new classroom building, a covered hockey rink, a better road through the campus, closer faculty scrutiny of the finances, separation of the Bowdoin Alumnus from the Bowdoin Publishing Company, a longer reading period, closer contact between students and faculty, reorganization of requirements for degrees.

Stating this program can but give a pleasant feeling twenty-five years later. Twenty-five years from now will the current aspirations show an equal measure of accomplishment?

Professor Kirkland delivered a notable address on George Washington at exercises celebrating his 300th birthday, but the one hundred twenty-fifth anniversary of Longfellow's birth passed without public notice except for an appreciative article in the Orient.

The annual observance of the vocational forum sponsored by the placement committee of the Alumni Council set a high standard.

At the NEAAU Meet Galbraith won the championship in the 35-pound weight with a throw of 50'9". At New York he was nosed out of the national title only by the slimmest of margins. At the University Club he had bettered Sexton's winning New York throw.

Dr. John May of Cohasset, Massachusetts, lectured on "Bird Life in Our Western Parks." Presumably this was the Mayhew Lecture, but the Orient doesn't say so.

Fencing was an athletic activity of the winter, but the Bowdoin team scored no victories.

Throughout the winter the Orient carried letters pro and con on the subject of Bowdoin's competition with colleges outside its class which had been opened up by a letter of Chandler '90 to the Orient in the fall.

Alumni Clubs

CLEVELAND

Secretary Peter C. Barnard '50 reports as follows: "The Bowdoin Club of Cleveland has been having a very successful winter season. We were happy to have Professor Herbert Brown's delightful visit followed up by the equally pleasant annual appearance of Admissions Officer Bill Shaw. Bill spent the better part of November 13 and 14 out here in our 'back yard,' and we feel that great strides were made in our efforts to capture some really top-notch boys from the clutches of certain other Eastern competitors! (Bill visited a large number of public high schools and preparatory schools, and he talked to more prospective candidates than have ever before been available from this region.)

"On Thursday, December 27, we took another step in our effort to interest and hold some of these good prospects. Ten alumni (Chase '14, Adams '15, W. Burton '37, R. Burton '43, Emerson '49, Bond '37, Brown '36, Woods '37, Foster '33, and Barnard '50) and two undergraduates, Parsons '57 and Relic '58, entertained ten prospective candidates at a luncheon at The Midday Club. This was rounded out by a showing of slides by Messrs. Bob Burton, Ned Brown, and Pete Barnard, which was designed to give the boys some little idea of the physical aspects of the College and its campus.

"Various members of our local alumni group have joined together for occasional informal luncheons throughout the year, and we are hoping that we can have another larger gathering late in the spring which will correspond to the highly successful lobster picnic we held last June.

"The current officers of the Cleveland Club are Oliver F. Emerson '49, President; Robert S. Burton '43, Vice President; and Peter C. Barnard '50, Secretary-Treasurer and Council Member. Virgil G. Bond '37 has kindly consented to take over local Bowdoin placement matters from Hallett P. Foster '33, who has ably and cheerfully done the job for a number of years."

CONNECTICUT

The Bowdoin Club of Connecticut held a meeting in Hartford on Friday, March 8, with a splendid turnout of seventy-five alumni and five prospective students. Guest of honor at the gathering was President James S. Coles.

NEW YORK

The Bowdoin Alumni Association of New York and Vicinity held its 87th annual dinner meeting on January 25 at the Manhattan Club. Secretary George E. Griggs jr. '44 reports as follows:

"The change from a hotel was a good one, and the facilities at the Manhattan Club were very good for our size crowd. Even on a snowy night we had a good turnout. Our speakers included President Coles, Mal Morrell, and Danny MacFayden.

"Election of Officers and Committees for the coming year included Ted Fuller '28, President, with Dexter Foss '45 and I continuing as Treasurer and Secretary, respectively. Steve Frost '42 is again our Alumni Council representative, and Bud Stevens '40 and Dick Van Varick '32 head the Prospective Students Committee and Placement Committee, respectively.

"Our general feeling is that in 1957 we are looking forward to more alumni activity here in our area.

"We were all interested in comments by both Mal Morrell and Danny MacFayden regarding the hockey situation now that the Arena is in operation. A movie showed those who had not seen the rink just how things are set up and enabled those who had seen it during its construction to see the finished product.

"President Coles brought us up to date on the State of the College and pointed out some of the problems which face liberal arts education.

"We all had a good evening and we are pleased with the number of younger fellows who came out. With a more active Turnout Committee with some of these young men on it, we hope to have a greater response to smokers and dinners this year."

PHILADELPHIA

President James S. Coles was the principal speaker at the annual dinner meeting of the Philadelphia Bowdoin Club, held on January 26 at the Merion Golf Club in Ardmore.

ST. PETERSBURG

Convener Charles S. F. Lincoln '91 wrote on January 25, "January Bowdoin lunch, West Coast Ltd., was held on the 17th, with 12 faithful on hand — Smith '90, Fessenden '95, Carmichael '97, Marston '99, Clark '04, Sewall Webster '10, Barbour '13, Tarbox '14, Pope '11, Kennedy '13, Parkhill '46, and the Agitator. Clearwater and Sarasota failed to qualify. Asa Pike '07 and Dr. Bryant Moulton '13 came the other day but too late to connect. Hope both will be here through February at least. We had a low 40 above last week that congealed the natives and annoyed the refugees from New England. We pray that Bowdoin will not suffer any Arctic casualties.

"Keep as well as you can, and don't get a coronary shoveling snow. Supply any other good advice I have omitted."

A further report from Convener Lincoln states, "The Bowdoin lunch was held today, February 21, at the Carleve Hotel, the best turnout this season, 16 in all. They were Smith '90, Fessenden '95, Carmichael '97, Marston '99, Don White '05, Briggs '07, Haley '07, Pike '07, Pope '11, Barbour '12, Wish '13, Webster '10, Kennedy '13, Herb Sawyer '45, Parkhill '46, and Lincoln. Everyone was happy, and the lunch good. The same place March 14. And we will look forward to a big crowd, wives included, to meet President and Mrs. Coles April 5.

"At the March or April meeting some of the Longboat-Sarasota heelers will be here to add to our happiness."

LELAND M. GOODRICH, Korea: A Study of U. S. Policy in the United Nations: New York, Council on Foreign Relations, 1956; $3.25.

This is a concise, sharply-focused, and well-balanced exposition of U. S. policy with reference to one particular problem, Korea. It assumes a knowledge of the structure and operation of the United Nations, of the broad panorama of world events since V-J Day, and of the over-all policies with which the United States has met the development of those events. The book owes much of its effect to the austerity with which the author hews to his line. It is in the very best sense a case study.

At a time when the United States is attempting to work through the United Nations toward the solution of other serious problems in regard to which the world is sorely divided this study is of especial value. It shows how such divisions may limit and condition the action that can be taken.

At each of the steps in the development of the story the author explains the policy supported by the United States, its consideration by the United Nations, the working out of a decision, and its application. What was done was conditioned partly by what the United States had done, wanted to do, and was willing to implement; partly by the opposition of Russia and her associates; and very much by what the other members of the United Nations would support.

The initial submission was an attempt to escape from the "highly unsatisfactory position" in which the United States found itself after "failure to reach an acceptable agreement with the Soviet Union" at a time when the "United States Military Government had been unsuccessful in giving satisfaction to any important elements in the Korean population," and when the Joint Chiefs of Staff believed that "the two divisions then stationed in South Korea 'could well be used elsewhere.'" It was hoped to broaden the responsibility for the action to be taken and to lessen the American commitment.

The undeviating opposition of the Soviet Union meant that action in the United Nations had to be sought through the General Assembly. Except for the quite exceptional period when Russia's self-imposed absence from the Security Council permitted that body to function, the action was centered there. Under the circumstances "the General Assembly seemed a suitable instrument for mobilizing political and psychological pressures on the Soviet Union." This was in contrast to the assumption of great power unity which was a San Francisco premise. It meant pushing through a program although "the one member whose cooperation, next to that of the United States, was most essential had made it clear that its attitude would continue to be 'negative.'" If it was to succeed in its objective, the United States needed decisive support from all states outside the Soviet group. The account of the maneuvering to obtain and keep that support is one of the most interesting aspects of this study. Even when support seemed strongest there were often significant abstentions in the voting. The "necessities of keeping the coalition intact" came to be one of the factors limiting the United States' choice of policy. The whole episode points up the truth that "the authority of the United Nations depends in fact upon the existence of a consensus among the great majority of its members."

A careful case study, after scrupulously considering all the factors, then presents its conclusions. This the author does. "By developing its policies and actions within a United Nations framework, the United States was able, in cooperation with other members, to demonstrate that aggression does not pay, to broaden and strengthen its solidarity with other Members of the United Nations, and to increase the sense of security within the free world, while at the same time avoiding a general war."

KEVIN B. J. HERBERT, Hugh of St. Victor's Soliloquy on the Earnest Money of the Soul, translated from the Latin: Marquette University Press, 1956; pp. iv, 37; $1.50.

If Professor Herbert's rendering of Hugh of St. Victor's Soliloquy is a fair sample of the quality of the whole series, Mediaeval Philosophical Texts in Translation, the editorial board at Marquette University deserves high commendation for making a distinct service to mediaeval studies in general. Too often the gems of the Middle Ages remain unknown, hidden behind the language barrier and obscured by their better-known forebears, the works of the classical writers. Translation of such a work as that of Hugh serves to help lift the Dark Curtain separating pagan Rome from the Renaissance, affording a better understanding of the continuity of the intellectual stream of Christian thought.

In the Introduction (pp. 3-12) the life, thought, and works of Hugh are clearly set forth for the uninitiated, and Dr. Herbert devotes several valuable pages to twelfth-century mysticism in general and that of Hugh in particular. The Earnest Money is explained as the gifts of God at the time of His avowed betrothal to the soul of man. The Soliloquy itself, then, is actually a conversation between a man and his soul "to direct the soul toward a true love of self, an attitude which is identical with a love of God" (p. 11).

As literature, the Soliloquy in tone and appeal is not unlike The Prophet by Kahlil Gibran or the famous allegory The Tablet by Cebes, although Hugh's work is more complex and emotional. There is in the original Latin of Hugh a conscious rhythm and increase of tempo which the translator has skillfully reproduced. The final paragraphs of the Confession rise to a rapid climax of ecstasy terminated only by the Man's final insistence on and the Soul's acceptance of the exclusive necessity of the Love of God. To read this short but moving work is not an idle intellectual exercise, but an emotional and spiritual experience in itself.

NOTES

English Can Be Fun, written and edited by Herbert Prescott '30, Associate Professor of English at Grinnell College, has been recently published by J. Weston Walch '25, 1145 Congress Street, Portland. To quote from the author's introduction, "This book is meant to offer recreational English and to be used on occasion rather than as a daily text, workbook, or manual." The fifty-four units consist of games and projects to stimulate interest in spelling, grammatical principles and writing which have been used successfully by junior and senior high school students.

Westernized Yankee by Larry Gara, the story of Cyrus Woodman 1836, published by the State Historical Society of Wisconsin, and Susie, the Naughty Little Bat by Isabel Whittier, daughter of Dr. Frank N. Whittier '85, Pageant Press, New York, are recent publications which will be reviewed in an early issue of the Alumnus.

Professor Kevin B. J. Herbert, whose opusculum entitled Hugh of St. Victor: Soliloquy on the Earnest Money of the Soul is reviewed in this issue of the Alumnus, has also written an article entitled "The Identity of Plutarch's Lost Scipio," which appeared in The American Journal of Philology for January, 1957.

Harvey B. Lovell '24 is the author of a volume entitled Honey Plant Manual, published last December. The book is based on five years of research and travel to forty-two states interviewing beekeepers and photographing honey plants.

Sven Hamrell '48, a Bowdoin Plan student at the College some ten years ago, has recently finished editing a Swedish edition of F. Scott Fitzgerald's autobiographical essays, to be published in April. He is also the author of an article on the Youngstown case, published in the Swedish journal Statsvetenskaplig Tidskrift.

Louis O. Coxe, Pierce Professor of English at Bowdoin, is the author of several poems included in the anthology entitled Sixteen American Poets, published in January by the University of the Philippines in Manila.

A poem by Dr. Edwin B. Benjamin '37, Assistant Professor of English, was published recently in the New York Times.

Dr. James M. Moulton, Assistant Professor of Biology at Bowdoin, is the author of "Influencing the Calling of Sea Robins (Prionotus Spp.) with Sound," which appeared in the December, 1956, issue of Biological Bulletin, pp. 393-398.

Edward J. McCluskey '51 is the author of two articles in the November, 1956, issue of the Bell System Technical Journal. They are entitled "Minimization of Boolean Functions" and "Detection of Group Invariance or Total Symmetry of a Boolean Function." Ed received his Doctor of Science degree from M.I.T. last June and is now doing research in electronic switching systems with the Bell Telephone Laboratories in New York City.

Necrology

1892 LYMAN KINGMAN LEE died at his home in Dover-Foxcroft on February 10, 1957, in his ninetieth year. He was born on a farm in the same town on April 25, 1867, the son of Chauncey and Eva Lee.

Lyman read Elijah Kellogg's WHISPERING PINES series in the Sunday School Library and determined to go to Bowdoin if possible, an ambitious dream for one in his circumstances. After finishing the one-room country schoolhouse, he entered Foxcroft Academy. One summer he worked in an Old Town sawmill eleven and a half hours per day. Later he stayed out a year and taught Latin at Blue Hill Academy.

His college course was also interrupted by months spent in teaching at Outer Long Island. His vacations were spent in working. At college he joined Zeta Psi, which had quarters at the Getchell house on Bath Street, now owned by the College.

After graduation he was principal of Thomaston High School, Corinna Union Academy, Oakland Academy, and Foxcroft Academy. On July 2, 1895, he married Sarah French, also a teacher, and they attended Harvard summer school that year. Mr. Lee taught classes in Latin. True to the classical tradition, he insisted upon high standards of scholarship, always striving to make the subject interesting but never trying to make it easy. The classics were so familiar to him throughout his life that he naturally found passages to illustrate every day occurrences, and give a deeper appreciation of their ancient words to his children and friends.

Mr. Lee was six feet tall and slim, with regular features, keen brown eyes and a full brown mustache. He played a good game of tennis and had a summer cottage which was regularly occupied by his growing family of five children. He walked with a brisk stride and drove a spirited horse.

In 1904 Mr. Lee resigned as Principal of Foxcroft Academy to go into business as Treasurer and General Manager of the Dover & Foxcroft Fuel Company. This was an active business, employing a number of men and horse drawn carts. He served a term as president of the Maine Coal Dealers Association.

The depression which struck the country at the close of World War I and the changing character of the business persuaded Mr. Lee to sell out and devote his time to orcharding and some lumbering operations. He concentrated upon developing a fine apple orchard on an old farm which he had purchased some years before. He took endless pleasure in working around his trees and produced mackintosh, northern spy and milding apples of the highest quality. He grew a bit heavier and slower of step. The driving horse was replaced by a Model T. Ford, driven at relatively high speed over rutted country roads. He helped to establish a cooperative marketing association for orchardists and was President of the Maine Pomological Society.

Throughout his life he continued his interest in education and encouraged many a young man to continue on to college, in an era when college training had not the vogue which it has today. Many of these went to Bowdoin and Zeta Psi. Sir Harry Oakes '96 is perhaps the best known among these. Mr. Lee was a school committeeman, town moderator, President of the Trustees of Foxcroft Academy, and active in many other community projects. He was for many years class agent for the Bowdoin Alumni Fund. He served two terms in the Maine Legislature, representing the Dover-Foxcroft and Sangerville district.

He was also devoted to his church, serving in practically every capacity from temporary janitor to Deacon of the Congregational Church, and being constant in his attendance and support. His faith was a real and vital thing and its influence permeated the family circle without ever being an object of ostentation.

The depression of the 1930's affected the apple market to the point where fine fruit brought a scarcely better price than that of poor quality. The needs of a large family and of relatives whom he assisted weighed upon him. Although he was beyond the prime of life, he insisted upon finding work to do during the winter months when the orchard was dormant. He got work as foreman of a construction crew and left the house at 6 A.M. on cold winter mornings to put in full time at hard labor. Two other winters were spent as scaler for the Great Northern Lumber Company, deep in the Maine woods. In this way he continued to make some contribution to the people and the causes that he had always supported. He was well beyond eighty before he would accept the idea that he should no longer labor full time.

Mrs. Lee, with whom he observed their 60th anniversary two summers ago, survives him. He is also survived by his sister, Hattie L. Smith of Dorchester, Mass., and three of his children — Richard Lee '24, Carter Lee '30, lawyers and legislators in Boston, and Olive Lee, now on the staff of the Bowdoin Library. Another daughter, Alice, and a son, Francis, who worked the orchard with him, died before him.

It is fitting that in the spring,

"Whan that Aprille with his shoures sote
The droghte of Marche hath perced to the rote," he will be laid to rest in the little Lee cemetery near his birthplace, and on a hillside not far away at Foxford Orchards the apple buds will turn pink and bloom again on the trees which he loved.

R. H. L.

1895 PERLEY DENNISON SMITH, a lawyer in Boston and Lawrence, Mass., for more than fifty years, died in Boston on February 15, 1957, at the age of 85. Born September 9, 1871, in Berlin, Mass., he was the son of Isaiah P. Smith '58 and Clara Relief Smith and prepared for Bowdoin at Monson Academy. Following his graduation he studied at Harvard Law School and set up practice in Lawrence in 1897, specializing in conveyancing and corporation work. He was also attorney for the Lawrence Savings Bank and the Mattapan Co-operative Bank.

Perley is survived by his wife, Mrs. Annie Sewall Smith; a brother, Brainard of Methuen, Mass.; and two granddaughters. His fraternity was Zeta Psi.

1897 FREDERICK KEITH ELLSWORTH, for more than fifty years a Congregational clergyman until his retirement in 1948, died on February 25, 1957, at the age of 91. Born December 1, 1865, in Windham, Pa., he attended Bangor Theological Seminary before coming to Bowdoin. Among his many parishes were Vanceboro, Sandwich, Mass., East Machias, Wells, Saugerties, N. Y., Newbury, Vt., Windsor Locks, Conn., Three Rivers, Mass., and Dayville, Conn. Following his retirement in 1948 he made his home in Three Rivers, Mass. He is survived by two sons, Frederick K. jr. and Stanley F., and four grandchildren, Peter F., Michael H., Anne Susan, and Mary L.

1898 DWIGHT RICHARD PENNELL, for many years a member of the Legal Division of the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company, died on January 8, 1957, at his home in Jamaica Plain, Mass. Born May 16, 1877, in Lewiston, he prepared for Bowdoin at the local schools and was graduated in 1898 magna cum laude. He went on to Harvard Law School, receiving his bachelor of laws degree in 1902. He practiced law in Boston for four years before joining U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty, with which he was associated until his retirement on December 31, 1944.

Dwight never married. He is survived by two sisters, Mrs. Frances P. Parkhurst of Montclair, N. J., and Mrs. Maude P. Chase of Madison, Wis. He was a member of Alpha Delta Phi and Phi Beta Kappa.

1904 DONALD STONE WALKER died at his home in the Towers Hotel, Brooklyn, N. Y., on February 2, 1957. Born in Liberty on September 16, 1881, he prepared for Bowdoin at Coburn Classical Institute. Following his graduation he attended Brooklyn Law School from 1910 to 1913, when he joined his uncle, John Brookman, as a trustee for investment and real estate holdings in Brooklyn. He remained active until his death.

Don was the donor of Walker Memorial High School in Liberty and also gave generously to the new building fund of the Waldo County General Hospital, now under construction in Belfast. He endowed a scholarship at the University of Maine for students from Liberty and Montville.

Don, who never married, was a veteran of Army service in World War I. He is survived by a sister, Miss Madge Walker of Pasadena, Calif. His fraternity was Delta Kappa Epsilon.

1905 KENNETH HOWARD DAMREN, for nearly forty years an official in the Massachusetts state government, died on February 1, 1957, in St. Petersburg, Fla. Born in Auburn on March 16, 1882, he prepared for Bowdoin at Edward Little High School and following his graduation studied at Harvard Law School for three years. After a short time as a lawyer in Boston, he became associated with the Shaw Lumber Company in that city. In 1912 he was appointed Massachusetts State Personnel Officer, a position he held until 1930, when he became Suffolk County Personnel Administrator. He retired several years ago and spent winters in Florida and summers at Camp Allen in New Hampshire. Ken was one of the founders of this camp, sponsored by the Boston Kiwanis Club for blind and visually handicapped girls. He once said of the camp, "It has been my chief recreation for over twenty years. I headed the camp corporation for twelve years until my retirement. Since then I have lived there throughout the summer as sort of camp grandfather."

Ken also served as director and vice president of the Commonwealth Co-operative Bank in Boston for some years, was for three years president of the Boston Lions Club, and in 1927 was District Governor of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, and Massachusetts for the Lions. Between 1908 and 1917 he held the offices of auditor, member of the school committee, and town moderator in Maynard, Mass.

Surviving Ken are his wife, Mrs. Ruth Blanchard Damren, whom he married in Nashua, N. H., on March 25, 1908; two daughters, Mrs. Maxine D. Scott of Westfield, N. J., and Mrs. Marion D. Hibbard of Newtown, Conn.; two brothers, Dr. Fred L. Damren of Augusta, Ga., and Samuel N. Damren of Ann Arbor, Mich.; a sister, Mrs. Blanche Brown of Auburn; and four grandchildren. His fraternity was Beta Theta Pi.

1906 CHARLES FITCH JENKS, one of the sparkplugs of the Class of 1906 ever since it entered Bowdoin many long years ago, died on January 19, 1957, in Wellesley Hills, Mass. Born February 12, 1884, in Lawrence, Mass., Stubby prepared for Bowdoin at the Roxbury Latin School and following his graduation entered the woolen business in Canton, Mass. He remained in this field until his retirement in 1939, serving successively with Winslow Bros. & Smith in Norwood, Mass., Swift & Company in New York, S. A. Maxfield Company in Bangor, and Houghton Wool Company in Boston, of which he was Vice President until 1928. For the next eleven years he was a wool top salesman with the Combing Division of Cudahy Packing Company.

Stubby always gave every bit of himself to whatever he undertook, and that "every bit" was somehow always good enough to ensure that a good job was done. As his classmate Fred Smith wrote, "He rarely missed Commencement and his love for the College never grew less. I am glad that so many of us could get together at our Fiftieth last June and have him present."

Stubby is survived by his wife, Mrs. Gertrude Oak Jenks, whom he married in Bangor on May 14, 1914; two daughters, Mrs. Mary C. Dolan of Uxbridge, Mass., and Mrs. Gertrude Nielsen of Van Nuys, Calif.; and a brother, Henry A. of Word has also been received of the death of the following Alumni. Appropriate notice will appear in the June Alumnus.

Robert S. Benson '02

Charles J. Hicks '06

Cambridge, Mass. He was a member of Theta Delta Chi.

1909 CHARLES LEON STEVENS, a retired Congregational minister, died in Bath on February 5, 1957. Born July 14, 1881, in Warren, he prepared at the local high school and entered Bangor Theological Seminary. He transferred to Bowdoin in 1907 and completed his work at the College while serving as pastor of the Congregational Church in Phippsburg. He held pastorates in Chicopee, Mass., from 1911 to 1915, in Camden until 1918, in South Deerfield, Mass., until 1930, and in Alfred until 1948, when he retired. During World War I he did YMCA work in Brooklyn, N. Y., for two years. For many years he was interested in summer camping and ran Kamp Keebec at Phippsburg.

Charles is survived by two brothers, James E. of Rockland and Elmer of Portland, and two sisters, Miss Ida Stevens and Mrs. Raymond Watts, both of Rockland. His fraternity was Kappa Sigma.

1910 RALPH BOOTHBY GRACE, a partner in the accounting firm of Charles E. DiPesa and Company in Boston, died on January 10, 1957, in Everett, Mass. Born July 10, 1886, in Saco, he prepared for Bowdoin at Thornton Academy and following his graduation taught for a year at Biddeford High School. He entered business in Boston in 1911 and by studying nights at Boston University for five years received a bachelor of business administration degree in 1924. Becoming a certified public accountant in 1928, he joined the firm of Charles E. DiPesa and Company, in which he became a partner in 1946. He was a member of the Massachusetts Society of Certified Public Accountants and the American Institute of Accountants. He was at one time a member of the Everett Rent Control Board.

Ralph is survived by his wife, Mrs. Josephine Hill Grace, whom he married on June 20, 1914, in Biddeford; a daughter, Caro; and a sister, Miss Alice M. Grace of Saco. His fraternity was Kappa Sigma.

1910 ARTHUR ALEXANDER MADISON, at one time personal lawyer to Father Divine, died at the Harlem Hospital in New York City on January 18, 1957. Born November 11, 1883, in Montgomery, Ala., he prepared at the State Normal School at Montgomery and attended Howard University for two years before transferring to Bowdoin. Following his graduation cum laude, he was a salesman for the Fred Douglass Shoe Company in Haverhill, Mass., for a year, then sold men's and boys' clothing and shoes at the Madison Store in Montgomery. He later became a lawyer in New York.

Arthur's classmate, Herman Dreer, wrote of him, "He was buried on his extensive estate, Madison Park, Montgomery, Ala., on January 25. This estate he was rapidly developing into a city with a garment factory. For this purpose he had induced the superintendent of a garment factory just outside of New York City to train the women who lived on his estate in the use of power sewing machines. Previously he had established there a store, a church, and a school."

1912 STEPHEN WINFIELD HUGHES, former judge of the South Portland Municipal Court, died on January 19, 1957, in Portland. Born December 26, 1889, in Everett, Mass., he prepared for Bowdoin at South Portland High School and following his graduation read law in Portland. He set up his own practice in South Portland in 1916. In addition to his private practice he was attorney for both the Cumberland Savings and Loan Association and the Falmouth Loan and Building Association. During World War I he served overseas as a second lieutenant in the Army. He was a past commander of the Stephen P. Morrill Post of the American Legion, served as City Solicitor for South Portland from 1920 to 1927 and as Corporation Counsel from 1941 to 1946.

Steve was Judge of the South Portland Municipal Court from 1927 to 1931 and again from 1932 to 1936. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Florence Higgins Hughes, whom he married on June 7, 1922, in South Portland; a son, Lee '50; two grandchildren; and two sisters, Mrs. Donald C. Wight of South Portland and Mrs. Paul S. Harmon of Hollis. His fraternity was Delta Kappa Epsilon.

1916 LELAND STANFORD McELWEE, a retired accountant, died at his home in Union on February 8, 1957. Born in San Diego, Calif., on May 23, 1894, he prepared for college at Houlton High School and at Bowdoin was captain of the varsity baseball team, playing both shortstop and third base. During World War I he served for a year as a Navy ensign, then entered the field of investments in Boston. He later went into the advertising business in Newton, Mass. After attending the Bentley School of Accounting, he moved in 1937 to Union, where he was an accountant and tax consultant. Following World War II he was Chairman of the Sesquicentennial Fund campaign in Knox County.

Lee retired last June. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Virginia Thompson McElwee, whom he married in Lowell, Mass., on November 14, 1925. His fraternity was Delta Kappa Epsilon.

1917 HAROLD ELWOOD COOMBS died on September 11, 1956, in Glendale, Calif. Born January 31, 1892, in Bath, he prepared at Westbrook Seminary and transferred from the University of Maine to Bowdoin in 1913. After a year at Bowdoin he became a pharmacist in Portland. From 1922 until 1927 he was a member of the Maine State Police, then joined the motorcycle police in Glendale, where he remained the rest of his life. First in seniority in the Glendale Police Department, he would have been eligible to retire the first of this year.

Harold attended the Los Angeles Police Academy and also the F.B.I. School in that city. He was Relief City Marshal of Glendale and a Los Angeles Deputy Sheriff. He is survived by his mother, Mrs. Lillian H. Coombs of Glendale. He was a member of Sigma Chi fraternity at Maine and was President of the Glendale Sigma Chi Alumni Association from 1939 to 1943.

1919 EVERETT FREEMAN LARRABEE, postmaster in Bridgton, died there on February 18, 1957. Born July 18, 1896, in Bridgton, he prepared at the local high school and attended Bowdoin briefly. He was a veteran of Army service in World War I. For about twenty years he was associated with his father in business. He was named acting postmaster in Bridgton in 1940 and received the permanent appointment January 3, 1942. Surviving are two brothers, Raymond H. and William H., both of Bridgton; two sisters, Mrs. Mildred L. Cockburn and Miss Francina B. Larrabee, both of Bridgton, and several nieces and nephews.

1921 PHILIP GARRETSON McLELLAN, M.D., a surgeon in Hartford, Conn., since 1931, died suddenly at his home in West Hartford on January 22, 1957. Born in Caribou on February 28, 1900, he prepared at the local high school and was graduated from Bowdoin cum laude in 1921. Four years later he received his M.D. from Harvard Medical School. He interned at Hartford Hospital and was a resident in surgery at the Union Memorial Hospital in Baltimore, Md., before returning to Hartford to enter the practice of surgery.

Phil was Director of Surgery at the Hartford Hospital, past president of its staff, chairman of its executive committee, and active in staff organizational work. He was a Fellow of the American College of Surgeons and a member of the New England Surgical Society and the New England Cancer Society. He was also a consultant in surgery to the Manchester Memorial Hospital. His hobby was the cross breeding of iris, and he was a member of the American Iris Society and the American Rose Society.

During World War II Phil served for three years as a lieutenant commander in the Navy Medical Corps. Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Lillian Kowalsky McLellan; a son, Robert; a daughter, Phyllis; and a brother, Lendal '23. He was a member of Delta Kappa Epsilon.

1935 HENRY ALFRED ROMBERGER JR. died in Hermosillo, Mexico, on January 24, 1957. Born January 13, 1911, in Philadelphia, Pa., he prepared for Bowdoin at the Episcopal Academy in Overbrook, Pa., and graduated from the College cum laude. He went on to graduate work at the University of Pennsylvania, then joined Thayer Baker & Company, investment bankers in Philadelphia, for several years. During World War II he was with the American Field Service in India. After the close of the war he went to France, again under the auspices of the Field Service, to help in the rehabilitation of that country.

After his return from France Harry was unable to do much because of ill health. He traveled extensively throughout Europe and South America in an attempt to regain his health. Surviving are his brother, Burton Romberger of Newport Beach, Calif., and two nieces. His fraternity was Beta Theta Pi.

1935 HAROLD CHARLES TIPPING, Director of Industrial Relations for Avco's Crosley Division and Convener of the Cincinnati Bowdoin Club, died on March 2, 1957, in Charleston, West Va., while returning to Cincinnati, Ohio, with his family after a vacation in Florida. Born June 14, 1914, in New York, Harold prepared at DeWitt Clinton High School and following his graduation from Bowdoin, joined General Electric Company in Schenectady, N. Y., where he remained until October of 1940, doing personnel and business training work. He then joined Wilson & Company in Chicago, leaving in May of 1942 to join the Navy, where he served for three and a half years, being released from active duty as a lieutenant senior grade. He returned to Wilson & Company, where he was personnel supervisor on the staff of the vice president in charge of operations.

In 1946 Harold entered Cornell Law School and was graduated in 1949. During these three years he was also a personnel consultant with the Morse Chain Company in Ithaca, N. Y. He became associated with the Cincinnati law firm of Pruitt, Desvernine & Coursen and handled much of Avco's labor relations activities. He became Avco's Director of Industrial Relations in 1953.

Harold is survived by his wife, Mrs. Agnes Hansen Tipping, whom he married in Chicago on September 28, 1941; two daughters, Lynn, 6, and Gail, 10; his mother, Mrs. Robert W. Tipping of Maywood, N. J.; and two brothers, K. W. Tipping and Robert Tipping, both of New York City. His fraternity was Delta Upsilon.

1938 RALPH BUTLER SAVAGE JR. died several years ago, according to word recently received in the Alumni Office. Born on May 1, 1915, in Pittsburgh, Pa., he prepared at the Arnold School in Pittsburgh and after attending Bowdoin for three years accepted a position with Stevens & Thompson Paper Company in Greenwich, N. Y. He is survived by his wife.

1950 MANUEL LEVINE, Manager of the Plumbing Sales Department at the Quincy, Mass., office of L. Grossman Sons, Inc., died by foul play early in February in Havana, Cuba, where he had gone on a vacation. His body was found on February 11, 1957. Born on May 23, 1928, in Cambridge, Mass., Manny prepared at Boston Latin School and Roxbury Memorial High School. Following his graduation from Bowdoin he joined the Grossman firm, where he had worked ever since. He flew to Havana on January 26, planning to be gone three weeks and possibly four. His death is still being investigated by Cuban police.

Manny is survived by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Maurice W. Levine of Cohasset, Mass.; two brothers, Irving '46 and Borah, a senior at the University of Miami; and a sister, Mrs. Bryna Elkind of Framingham, Mass. His fraternity was Alpha Rho Upsilon.

Former Faculty

WILLIAM F. MARSH, known as "Fish" Marsh when he coached the Bowdoin track team from 1911 to 1913 as Jack Magee's predecessor, died last December at the age of 85. Bill Stearns, University of New Hampshire sports publicist, wrote of him, "His stock in trade was a burning salve which smelled like the Augean stables and took off three layers of hide upon one application. Its medicinal value was dubious, but its psychological value was tremendous. One application and the patient was ready to face anything, save possibly another application.

"A versatile fellow who competed in virtually any event the promoter saw fit to add to the program, Bill claimed several world's championships at various times, including one in the hop, skip and jump, still an Olympic standby.

"Bill was known professionally as Fish Marsh, a nickname he acquired because he came from Eastport, Maine, and as such he was billed in his vaudeville act, which featured Bill pole vaulting over high obstacles, broad jumping over stacked chairs, and cavorting about the stage in a highly athletic manner. It never rivaled Shakespeare, or even the Flora Dora Sextet, but it was a good drawing card.

"Before coming to New Hampshire, Bill coached varsity track and field at Bowdoin and at Amherst. He came to Durham in the twenties, from a job as freshman track coach at Dartmouth.

"Bill belonged to another era in sports, the era of John L. Sullivan, Ironman McGinty, and Home Run Baker. But he also belonged to several generations of New Hampshire men. His memory is firmly entrenched in Wildcat archives."

It might be added that Fish Marsh is also "firmly entrenched" in the memories of those Bowdoin classes which came in contact with him more than forty years ago.

Medical School

1897 CLARENCE CAPEN PEASLEE, M.D., who practiced medicine in the Lewiston-Auburn area for more than fifty years before retiring in 1951, died in Portland on February 16, 1957. Born in Biddeford on August 30, 1870, he prepared at the Nichols Latin School in Lewiston and following his graduation from the Maine Medical School started his practice in Auburn. He was a member of the consulting staff of the Central Maine General Hospital in Lewiston and in 1947 was awarded a fifty-year service medal by the Maine Medical Association. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Susan Hight Peaslee, whom he married in Dorchester, Mass., on June 7, 1899; a son, Dr. C. Capen Peaslee jr. of Portland; two granddaughters, and two great-grandchildren.

1907 RALPH WALDO FOSTER, M.D., for nearly half a century a physician in Bucksport, died there on September 28, 1956, at the age of 74. Born August 11, 1882, in Milbridge, he prepared at Kents Hill Seminary and was graduated from the Maine Medical School in 1907. He set up practice in Brewer but soon moved to Bucksport, where he remained for the rest of his life. The Bucksport Free Press, calling him "one of the town's most beloved citizens," said "For years Doctor Foster responded to calls of the sick when a horse and carriage were his only means of conveyance. Many of those living in this area were 'brought into the world' by the kindly physician. If a family was in need and without money, Doctor Foster often 'forgot' to send a bill for his services."

Surviving are Mrs. Foster; their son, Philip of Alfred; a brother, Russell of Bucksport; and several nieces and nephews.

News of the Classes

1884 Ernest Smith is the only surviving member of the Class.

1889 Lory Prentiss' address is now Hotel Cabrillo, 1116 Prospect Street, La Jolla, Calif.

1891 Secretary, Dr. Charles S. F. Lincoln
342 Roland Court, N. E.
St. Petersburg, Fla.

Doc Lincoln wrote from St. Petersburg, Fla., on February 17, "Don MacMillan '98 is speaking here on Tuesday before the Women's Club. Do not yet know where he will be housed, or if I can crash the door at the lecture. Will find out tomorrow.

"Had a brief call from Dr. and Mrs. Dennison '31 and Ralph and Mrs. Cushing '05 from Thomaston; on their way to New Orleans and then home.

"Plan to get over to Winter Park this month, and also to Miami; both out of bounds for us West Coast people, who see no reason for going there except to see friends not otherwise available."

Later word from the good Doctor is, "I am acting as first aid man for the Three Quarter Century Softball Club. Not an arduous job, but the old boys sometimes fall down or run into someone or a softball, and then need a little aid or iodine. So I feel in duty bound to be there on their regular days twice a week."

1892 Secretary, Rev. Harry W. Kimball
20 Washburn Avenue
Needham, Mass.

Lyman Lee died at his home in Dover-Foxcroft on February 10. His many friends may be interested in this anecdote of his childhood. As a young boy he and his brother Cleveland were intrigued to find a half-sized yoke in the barn. They wanted to try it out, but the only livestock on which it would fit was a single calf. Accordingly, Lyman teamed up with the calf on the other side of the yoke and they started to haul a small cart. The calf soon panicked and swerved into some bushes beside the road. Cleve rushed to unfasten his brother still yoked to the struggling calf. "Unhitch the other one," said Lyman. "I'll stand."

1895 Secretary, Thomas V. Doherty
Box 390, Houlton

Classmates and friends will regret to learn of the death of Perley Smith on February 15.

Gorham Wood writes that he is wintering in Hawaii and is very well situated at the Reef Hotel in Honolulu.

1896 Pop Williams was defeated in his bid for re-election to the Topsham Board of Selectmen in March. He had served continuously since 1912, except for 1940, when he lost by a margin of three votes.

1897 Secretary, George E. Carmichael
Flori De Leon Apartments
130 Fourth Avenue, North
St. Petersburg, Fla.

Classmates and friends will grieve to learn of the death of Fred Ellsworth on February 25.

1898 Secretary, William W. Lawrence
14 Bowdoin Street
Portland 4

Boat builder George I. Hodgdon, 75, of Boothbay Harbor, died in that town on January 30. It was his yard that constructed the "Bowdoin," Admiral Don MacMillan's Arctic vessel.

Classmates will be sorry to learn of the death of Dwight Pennell on January 7.

Ed Wheeler is serving as Co-Chairman of the Advisory Committee for the Brunswick Community Hospital Building Fund campaign.

1899 Secretary, Edward R. Godfrey
172 Kenduskeag Ave., Bangor

Ned Marston spends his winters in St. Petersburg, Fla., as do a number of other Bowdoin men. Ned was one of 16 at the St. Petersburg Bowdoin Club's February luncheon, who ranged from Smith '90 and Lincoln '91 down to Kennedy '13, and the Club is now looking forward to its next luncheon, on April 5, when President and Mrs. Coles will be in attendance, and ladies are invited.

Tom Merrill has had a good winter in Montana and wintered his cattle well in spite of setback by drought last summer. His ranch is located in the Williston Basin, where oil has recently been discovered. Classmates hope Tom will have the good luck of finding that some of the oil is under his land.

To Ned Nelson, in Philadelphia, the days are all the same. He walks, reads, listens to the news. When summer comes, he expects to spend it somewhere on the Maine coast.

Win Smith and his wife spent February and March at Delray Beach, Fla., whose winter climate they prefer to Baltimore's.

202 Reedsdale Road
Milton 86, Mass.

Class Secretary Bob Edwards has sent in a fine collection of notes for this issue. They are reproduced below.

"John Bass writes that he and his good wife took an ocean voyage last September, leaving Montreal and arriving in Scotland, where they proceeded to Greenock and spent a few weeks and thence to London for an additional visit. They sailed from England to New York, returning to Wilton in time to cast their votes for the re-election of President Eisenhower. They hope to visit their daughter's family this spring at Columbia, S. C. John states that he and his wife have eight grandchildren, four girls and four boys. The boys, of course, should be Bowdoin candidates one of these days.

"Letter from Bob Chapman, who seems to be enjoying the passing years very much. He has quite a busy social life among his old friends in Portland. Bob put in a difficult time a few years ago, as he was hospitalized with a rather serious operation for the removal of a slipped disc from his spine. He is now fully recovered and he tells that a two-mile walk each day of the week is on his schedule. Keep it up, Bob; there is nothing better for slipped discs or other slipping difficulties. Bob reports that his granddaughter was married during the Christmas holidays in 1956. He is now looking forward to becoming a great grandfather sometime.

"I myself am in pretty fair condition after a rather tough New England winter spent at my home in Milton, Mass. I take my daily walks too. Although these were pretty tough to take during the month of January, I did not miss one day during that month. Now that our New England spring weather is just around the corner, I am looking forward to my usual gardening and my golf.

"I have received a lengthy Christmas letter from C. C. Robinson and as usual he and his wife are happily busy with their church and community work in Santa Cruz, Calif. This beautiful little city on the Pacific coast about 100 miles south of San Francisco has become the Robinsons' real home location. I recently received a second most interesting letter from Robbie. Parts of both are quoted below.

"A letter from Cheney Rowell, dated March 5, states that he cannot be positive about attending Commencement in June. He tells me that he looks forward to receiving the Alumnus regularly and is interested particularly in the class news from 1896 through 1903. At the present time he reports that he is in tip-top condition.

"Charles and Effie Willard are sailing on the SS Argentina of the Moore-McCormack Line from New York on March 14 and after twenty days on the boat will arrive at Buenos Aires on April 3. During this period the boat makes several ports of call, including Trinidad, Bridgetown, Barbados; Bahia and Rio de Janeiro, Santos and Sao Paulo, Montevideo, and Buenos Aires. Thence by plane to Santiago, Chile, Lima, Peru, and Quito, Ecuador, with various side trips at each stop, and finally leaving Panama April 18 by plane to Miami, Fla. At Miami Mrs. Willard's daughter will be awaiting their arrival, and they will drive home in their own automobile. For an uncalled for guess, I would think that they would be very happy to be back in the United States of America."

In his Christmas letter Robbie wrote, "We have not been outside California during the entire year 1956. We went one evening to the Republican National Convention at San Francisco. We spend most of our time on church work. Jane is active on the Board of the local YWCA. We are both on the Board of Deacons and Deaconesses in the Congregational Church here and have helped in the raising of $130,000 the last three weeks towards our wonderful new church plant. I am working on a history of the church for the 100th anniversary in 1957."

In his second letter Robbie reported that their son Reginald '29 on February 1 began work with the Joint Commission on Mental Illness and Health (a national study being done for Congress). He is Director of the Project on Community Social Services, that is, the non-psychiatric resources for promoting mental health.

Robbie also reported in that letter, dated January 28, that Santa Cruz that morning had the most snow it had seen in 40 years. All the roofs and lawns were covered.

1902 Secretary, J. Hudson Sinkinson
North Waterboro

Hudson Sinkinson is serving as 1902's Class Secretary. Ralph Stone was forced to resign because of poor health. Members wish for Ralph a good recovery.

1903 Secretary, Clement F. Robinson
260 Maine Street, Brunswick

Luther Dana retired on February 1, although he is retaining an active interest in the Dana Warp Mills in an advisory capacity.

Dan Munro writes, "Am spending the winter in Washington, D. C., watching our politicians."

Clem Simpson wrote early in March that he was spending a few weeks in a North Carolina mountain sanitarium, mainly for massage and medical baths. Mrs. Simpson, who has been so constant and helpful since his accident last year, is standing by in their winter quarters at the George Vanderbilt Hotel in Asheville. She reports that he is in "fair to middling" condition; and he would "love to hear" from his thirty-two classmates, especially about the 1903 Scholarship Fund. Clem was Class Agent for the Alumni Fund for more than twenty-five years and harks back to the year when the Class of 1903 gave Memorial Gates to Whittier Field.

1904 Secretary, Wallace M. Powers
Jackson Heights, New York, N. Y.

In January Sam Dana wrote from 6011 Shafter Avenue, Oakland, Calif., "We are greatly enjoying our winter in California. It seems strange to have roses, calla lilies, fuchsias, and many other flowers blooming freely and paying no attention to the occasional frosts. It's quite a change from Ann Arbor — or from Brunswick, for that matter. We have not travelled much about the state as yet but expect to do so later. Christmas vacation with our doctor son and his family in Portland, Ore., was most enjoyable, including auto travel, which took us north via the redwood highway and the Oregon coast and south via routes east of the Cascades and west of the Sierras. All of this may sound as if I were not doing much work on the American Forestry Association project, but I really am!"

Classmates and friends will grieve to learn of the death of Don Walker on February 2.

2220 Waverley Street
Palo Alto, Calif.

His classmates and friends will grieve to learn of the death of Ken Damren in St. Petersburg, Fla., on February 1.

Jim Emery still retains his home in Pawtucket, R. I., but spends most of his summers in Maine and New Hampshire. He is visiting several months this winter in Florida, at Eglin Air Force Base, where his son, a major, is stationed.

Paul Robbins, who retired four years ago, settled in Mason, N. H., where he has been an acting Selectman.

1906 Secretary, Fred E. Smith
9 Oak Avenue, Norway

Classmates will grieve to learn of the death of Stubby Jenks on January 19.

Arthur Putnam has been elected a Director of the Maine Publicity Bureau.

1907 Secretary, John W. Leydon
3120 West Penn Street
Philadelphia, Penna.

Ben Briggs reports, "Will be at my summer place in Adamsville, R. I., this summer." Ben is spending the winter at 217 Hillcrest Drive, Clearwater, Fla., where he has been attending the meetings of the St. Petersburg Bowdoin Club.

With the assistance of John Halford, the Class Secretary is laying plans for our Fiftieth Reunion. Our campus headquarters will be Conference Room B in Moulton Union, and rooms for class members will be available in Hyde Hall. Notice later about our class dinner. A special gift will be presented to the College in June; many generous contributions have already been made to it via the Alumni Fund.

Glenn Lawrence recently sent in a clipping from the fifty years ago column in the February 19 Lewiston Evening Journal. It says, in part, "The Bowdoin College hockey team got into print through a picture. In the group were Glenn Lawrence, Abbott, Hamburger, Bower, Arthur Hughes, Dresser, and Smith. They had won the first intercollegiate hockey game ever played in the state and the University of Maine team was their victim." For further details about this team see "Looking Backward" in this issue.

The Millard Webbers announce the arrival of a grandchild, Justin Carroll Webber, born on February 1 to Mr. and Mrs. Millard Carroll Webber jr. of Portland.

1908 Secretary, George W. Pullen, M.D.
Hurricane Ridge
South Harpswell

Aaron Putnam is Vice President and a Director of the First National Bank of Houlton.

Dr. and Mrs. Carl Robinson are planning to attend the international convention of Rotary International at Lucerne, Switzerland, May 19 to 23.

Rufe Stetson has retired as Chief of Staff of Miles Memorial Hospital in Damariscotta, a position he had held since 1949. He is remaining, however, as an active staff member. In January

CORRECTION

The late John D. Clifford jr. '10 was not the first Maine Democrat to be appointed to a Federal judgeship. The statement in the February issue of the ALUMNUS should have made it clear that Mr. Clifford was the first Democrat to be appointed to the office of United States District Judge for Maine.

Rufe was honored at a testimonial dinner at The Ledges in Wiscasset. In February the Stetsons left for a two months' vacation in New York, Washington, and points south.

1909 Secretary, Irving L. Rich
11 Mellen Street
Portland 4

Class Secretary Bud Rich wrote in January, "Recently received a most unexpected and welcome letter from Bob Atwell, who is living at 843 Market Street, Salem, Ore. As a graduate of Bowdoin he says he has come a long way from Brunswick. States that in 1951 he was retired as Chief Translator for the War Department of U.S.A., which he served with civilian status. States that his own special language was Spanish but managed to check all the other items that had to be translated. He ends his letter 'Yours for Bowdoin,' and may I as Class Secretary add that it was mighty nice to hear from you after many years and our best wishes to you, Bob."

Owen Brewster is Chairman of the National Affairs Committee of the Maine State Chamber of Commerce for 1957.

On January 31 Owen addressed the annual dinner of the North Shore Council of the Boy Scouts of America, held at Gloucester High School in Massachusetts. The night before he was the speaker at the annual banquet of Scouters of Hampden Council, Boy Scouts of America, held in Springfield, Mass.

Dan McDade wrote in the middle of January, "We had a very quiet Christmas, with a small tree, decorations, and so forth, and are happy that things are going better for us. Nance had a major operation in September from which she has made a slow recovery, with yours truly utilizing all the arts acquired over these many years, cooking and other household chores. We had intended going down to New Orleans for a visit with Anna and her four youngsters, but fate decided otherwise. Son-in-law left the service a year ago and is now on staff of Charity Hospital in New Orleans.

"I manage to keep busy. This a.m. had committee meeting of Boys State commission and tomorrow report on progress to date at state executive meeting. Spent a day at Oregon State College laying groundwork for '57 session and hope to have 425 boys at Corvallis in June. May take in some of the legislative proceedings as I am interested in certain matters."

Dan wrote a very clear and sensible article about jury duty for the Oregon Journal Northwest Living Magazine for January 6. He is Multnomah County Jury Commissioner.

Mrs. Dorothy Marsh wishes a Happy New Year to the Class of 1909. Every year since Harold's death and that of Max Cushing she has made a memorial contribution to the Class through the Alumni Fund. Class Secretary Bud Rich writes, "A wonderful spirit and greatly appreciated. All good wishes to you from the surviving members of that good old class."

Dr. Harold W. Stanwood '08 is very anxious to obtain a copy of the 1909 Bowdoin BUGLE. Anyone with a copy he is willing to sell or give to Dr. Stanwood should write to him at Buckfield.

On March 9 Joanne Scamman, daughter of the Clarence Scammans, was married to Robert B. Thompson of West Hartford, Conn. Joanne is a graduate of Pembroke College and Thompson of Marlboro College in Vermont.

Sympathy has been extended to the family of Charles Stevens, who passed away in a Bath hospital on February 5.

1910 Secretary, E. Curtis Matthews
Piscataqua Savings Bank
Portsmouth, N. H.

Sam Dreer writes, "I spent the summer abroad visiting Ireland, Scotland, England, Holland, Germany, Switzerland, Italy, Egypt, Lebanon, Jordan, Israel, Greece, and France."

Classmates will grieve to learn of two more deaths within our ranks. Ralph Grace died on January 10 and Arthur Madison on January 18.

1911 Secretary, Ernest G. Fifield
30 East 42nd Street
New York, N. Y.

Bill Clifford has been elected a Director of the Maine Publicity Bureau.

James Pierce is President and a Director of the First National Bank of Houlton.

1912 Secretary, William A. MacCormick
114 Atlantic Avenue
Boothbay Harbor

A committee composed of Jack Hurley, Al Woodcock, Seward Marsh, and the Class Secretary is laying plans for our Forty-fifth. Lookout Point House in Harpswell will be our headquarters.

Elden Barbour, retired after a long teaching career, has built a home in Largo, Fla. He reports enjoying life, halfway between Clearwater and St. Petersburg. He plans summer visits to Maine.

Mrs. Bernard Bosworth writes, "Bing is not able to be about. Arthritis following a fall while hunting last fall is keeping him from doing much that he so enjoyed doing. He sends best wishes for an enjoyable reunion and is always happy thinking about days at Bowdoin." Bing's address is 215 West Street, Leominster, Mass.

Gene Bradford, Cornell University's first Director of Admissions, will retire on July 1. He served as admissions officer at Cornell from 1928 to 1946 and had been Cornell's Registrar since 1931.

In announcing Gene's retirement, President Deane Malott of Cornell said, "In addition to his excellent administration of the registrar's office through a period of vast changes, he has gained admiration as a true scholar who has taken full part in the academic life of the campus. In his professional and personal relations, with his own staff and other administration personnel, with students and faculty, he has a constant reputation for quiet efficiency, fairness, kindness, and the highest idealism."

Gene and Marjorie's son, Edwin, graduated from Cornell in 1947 and is connected with a New York City publishing firm.

Tige Hale says, "Still on Wall Street. My daughter is a Bates Phi Beta Kappa, 1944. Takes after her mother. They wouldn't let her in at Bowdoin. Have three grandchildren, and guess that is about all (I mean news of myself)."

Steve Hughes' death is a shock to us all. He was always a faithful Bowdoin man and a worker for the class.

Herbie Locke wrote from Florida in February, "See quite a few Bowdoin men here during the winter. Only day before yesterday saw Henry and Mary Briggs."

John Miffin is now retired from a career in chemistry. He continues to reside in Niagara Falls, N. Y.

Arnett Mitchell will represent Bowdoin on April 29 at the inauguration of Novice G. Fawcett as President of Ohio State University.

Mitch reports, "Am closing out 36th year as principal of Champion Junior High School in Columbus, Ohio, and am the dean of secondary schools in the city from standpoint of years of service. There's a fifty-fifty chance I'll make our reunion in June."

Ned Morss reports, "Still with Ginn and Company. Made Treasurer to control spending of Company's money. Married in 1952 to Marion Clark. Honeymooned in Spain, Italy, and France — altogether a most happy occasion."

Squanto Wilson retired officially on January 1. The Kennebec Journal in Augusta said in a feature article on January 9, "Squanto has lived a full and active life and is now going to sit back and watch the rest of the world rush by. 'The only regret that I have,' he says, 'is that I would have liked to have been a doctor and followed the medical profession as my grandfather did. After my grandmother's death, my father and mother and I went to live with the old gentleman at Albion, where he was a country doctor."

"My plans then were to enter the professional baseball field and accumulate enough money to enter medical school. However, after a few years, I received a shoulder injury and had to retire from baseball and there were just not enough funds for medical school, so I turned to something else."

"Prior to coming to Winthrop, Squanto was a catcher with the Boston Red Sox and Detroit Tigers and also played with several minor leagues for about five years. He purchased his Winthrop store in June, 1915, from James H. Pinkham. At that time it occupied only one floor. Over the years the store has been expanded and now has two floors and a larger variety of merchandise. The upper floor is used for storage and work space."

Squanto later bought stores in Livermore Falls, Auburn, Norway, and Lewiston. He says of his plans, "I will probably go to Moosehead Lake during hunting and fishing seasons and enjoy the comfortable Wilson cottage and just take it easy. I have lived a good life and Winthrop has been good to me."

1913 Secretary, Luther G. Whittier R.F.D. 2, Farmington

The members of the Class of 1913 are hereby advised that plans are under way for observing our 45th in 1958. The Class Secretary called a meeting of the Class on the morning of Commencement Day in 1956. There were about 15 members present. Because of the death of both Ced Crowell and Doc Smith, we were without a President and Vice President. The Secretary suggested that temporary officers be elected to serve until our 45th, at which time permanent elections would be made. Those elected were Chet Abbott, President, and Stan Dole, Vice President.

President Abbott was instructed to appoint a committee to make plans and report at a meeting on Commencement morning, 1957. Chet has appointed the following men to the committee: Rex Conant, Chairman, Sime Pike, Bill Nixon, Obie Gardner, Chet Abbott, Paul Lunt, Ted Emery, Don Sewall, Luther Whittier.

Chet has some ideas already for observing the great event. He will tell them to us in June. Of course, Dick Dickson will be with us as usual. Begin to make plans now to attend. Nine members have died since our 40th. Fifty-three of our seventy-eight are now living. If any member has any ideas for the reunion, he is requested to send them to Chet or the Secretary.

Chet Abbott has been elected a Director of the Maine Publicity Bureau.

Ted Daniels retired on April 1, 1956, after 43 years in the steel industry. He is still living in Canton, Ohio, but now in a smaller house at 2106 32nd Street, N.W.

On January 14 and 15 Paul Douglas was a Phillips Visitor on the Haverford College campus, where he spoke on "Politics as a Way of Life" and also visited several classes in economics, political science, and social science.

The Class Secretary writes, "I had a letter from Duff Wood and Bry Moulton in January. Bry was visiting Duff at the time.

"Bill Spinney has sent me a copy of his Estate Planning, Quick Reference Outline. This is the fourth edition and is still the best seller of books of this kind. Bill writes, 'Am still on the job three years after compulsory retirement date. Tough old devil at 68. Work all day with no undue fatigue. Do some speaking, lecture at University of California Summer Work Shop on Family Financial Security.

"Am doing an article, promised three years ago, for Trusts and Estates Magazine on Trustees' Liabilities in Managing Business Enterprises. "This Yankee village of 500 farmers who 'refused to sit around and wait for federal aid' has built itself a modern schoolhouse which drew warm words of praise from President Eisenhower.

"Even as the President prepared to ask Congress for more than a billion dollars to help the states build schools, he took time out to call the nation's attention to 'the splendid story of the Canterbury elementary school.' In the President's words, it's a story of 'citizens rising to meet the challenge on a local level . . . in the best American tradition of self-reliance.'"

Canterbury citizens, finding they could not borrow enough money to construct a new school, put in some 3,000 hours of voluntary labor, saving $16,000. Then Alex decided that the White House might be interested in hearing how one small town solved its school problem, so he wrote Sherman Adams. Both Adams and the President replied, praising the example set by the people of Canterbury.

Stephens '55

1955 Secretary, Lloyd O. Bishop
16 Centre Street
Cambridge, Mass.

Pvt. Austin Albert wrote in February, "On August 10, 1955, after a year of teaching Latin at The Taft School in Watertown, Conn., I was inducted into the Army, underwent Basic Infantry Training at Fort Jackson, S. C., and have since been assigned to Company A, 714th Tank Battalion, Fort Benning, Ga. On March 6 we are gyroscoping to Schweinfurt, Germany, replacing the 826th Tank Battalion, which has just completed a three-year tour of overseas duty. My own job within the Battalion is that of Company A clerk, which again goes to prove that you do not have to be Regular Army in order to land a good job in the Army. My concluding remark is the well-worn phrase, 'Only 16½ months to go!'"

Jim Babcock notes, "I'm halfway through my studies for the ministry here at Berkeley Divinity School. How time flies! Working part-time as a teller at the New Haven Savings Bank and full-time Sundays at a church in Meriden. My wife, Nancy, and I send our regards to all."

I am teaching courses in accounting, cost accounting, and finance. Since in September I was elected Tutor (academic adviser) in the "Studentenheim Olshausen," which is something between a dorm and a fraternity house, with over 90 students, I live in the Studentenheim now. The most interesting part of my work is the close contact with the foreign students. We have nine foreign students from Japan, the Gold Coast, Portugal, France, Austria, Pakistan, England, Ecuador, and a representative of the United States, a genuine "Joisian" from Jersey City, a graduate of Fordham.

"We are expecting a couple of Hungarian students every day now who will be given free board and room in the house. At all the German universities student committees have been formed to help Hungarian refugees. They make trips to Graz in Austria to take food, medical supplies, and clothes that they have collected to the refugee camps and bring back with them families who from now on will live in this part of Germany. It is a frightening idea to find one's own fate repeated over and over again. The reports from the refugee camps in Austria remind me very strongly of our own experiences some eleven years ago. But I guess all we can do in the present situation is try to help alleviate the hard conditions these Hungarian refugees live in right now."

Pete Bramhall is engaged to Hope W. Palmer, a graduate of Colby last June, who is now an assistant buyer in a Portland department store. Pete is working for Hornblower & Weeks in Portland.

John Brewer reported in January, "I am currently located at the Armor Center, Fort Knox, Ky. Included in this distant, select Bowdoin group are the Warrens, Tamminens, Volks, and Warren Greene. It's a distant cry from the thrashers at

From the Cape Cod Standard Times for February 7 comes the following item: "The thrill of ocean photography a hundred feet beneath the surface is 'like drinking a cocktail of pure alcohol' to Army Private First Class Marvin H. Green of Cotuit, Mass., now stationed on Kansas plains many hundreds of miles removed from his usual summer occupation. With aqualung strapped to his back, diver Green sometimes stayed under water for as long as an hour to get the camera shots he wanted. He also sampled ocean bed soils for ability to support large structures in his work for the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution, but submersion times were shorter.

"For two years Private Green also donned a diving suit at the Navy's Arctic Research Laboratory in Alaska 300 miles from the North Pole, where underwater periods were necessarily briefer. He also gathered antibiotics for a chemical company while in this assignment."

Late in January Professor Pat Quinby '23 wrote from Shiraz, Iran, "Just a line from this heavenly spot, where I'm basking in bright sunlight by a pool surrounded by orange trees. We've come down for a series of four lectures at the local university (acting, directing, playwriting for the students — O'Neill for the general public) and to see Darius' Persepolis, much of which Alexander was unable to burn. Except for one cloudy day the weather's been glorious. We can see why Saadi and Hafiz wrote poetry here. Their tombs are magnificent, as is the new Iranian-American hospital. I've cured my touch of pneumonia, and Polly's sneeze is rapidly going. We fly back to reach Tehran on Wednesday. We'll hate to face the snow again.

"Billy Budd lost money but got good notices! I was hailed as a 'brave American' to do the show. The next show's not yet set, but we'll repeat Billy in March. The Shah very wisely refused to come into the icehouse in which we played (I'm now prepared for a show in the Arena!) but he may be lured in for the revival."

In February Professor Thomas Riley gave an illustrated talk on Austria to the Couples' Club of the Winter Street Congregational Church in Bath.

From March 11 to 13 Professor William Root attended a three-day meeting in Chicago of the Committee on Archaeological Identification, Division of Anthropology, National Research Council. He presented a talk on the identification and study of metal artifacts.

Professor David Russell has been appointed Consultant in Clinical Psychology and Vocational Guidance in Mental Deficiency for the Pownal State School.

In December Dr. Russell was re-elected Secretary of the Joint-Committee of School Union No. 46 (a union of school boards of Topsham, Bowdoinham, and Harpswell). He is currently Chairman of the Superintending School Committee of Topsham.

On February 6 Professor Russell attended a meeting of the College Personnel Seminar Group, held at Northeastern University in Boston.

Miss Myrtle Smith has resigned from her position as Assistant to the Bursar at Bowdoin after working for the College for 27 years.

Lt. Col. Gates Stern attended a conference at First Army Headquarters with President Coles on January 24. The topic of the conference was "Military Training and the College Man."

Professor and Mrs. Burton Taylor have another grandchild. Ann Wakeman Taylor was born on January 23 at the Hanover Hospital in New Hampshire. Parents are Mr. and Mrs. Hugh G. Taylor.

Professor Albert Thayer has been named President of the Board of Trustees of Bridge Academy in Dresden.

Professor Thayer has also been appointed to the Committee on Special Events for the joint convention of the Speech Association of America and the American Educational Theatre Association. He has been asked to prepare a paper on "Speech in the Small Liberal Arts College" for presentation at the national convention of the American Speech Association on August 27.

Professor Frederic Tillotson conducted the combined choirs and gave a one-hour class on the highlights of sacred music on March 3, 10, and 17 as part of the Bath University of Life Series.

On April 18, Dr. Tillotson will speak on music in colonial times and give a short piano recital for the Colonial Dames in Portland.

On April 25, 26, and 27 Professor Tillotson will attend the annual conference of the Intercollegiate Council of American Glee Club Conductors, held at East Lansing, Mich.

Dr. Clement Vose, Associate Professor of Government, and Kenneth Carpenter '58 have recently organized a set of manuscripts dealing with the Child Labor Amendment and labor cases in the Supreme Court in the 1920's. These papers of Roscoe McClave, Football Coach at Bowdoin in 1904-05 and again from 1907 to 1909, is in his forty-first year as Bergen County Engineer in New Jersey. Twice Speaker of the New Jersey Assembly, a Republican State Committeeman since 1943, and President of the United National Bank of Cliffside Park, he was first named County Engineer on January 1, 1917.

Mr. McClave received an honorary master of science degree at Bowdoin in 1942, when President Sills said in his citation, "Roscoe Parke McClave, of New Jersey; political leader; Bachelor of Science of Princeton University; known to an older generation of Bowdoin men back in the years 1907 to 1909 as one of the finest football coaches in any college of the time, large or small; carrying into politics the Bowdoin motto — 'Fair play and may the best man win' — prominent figure in the General Assembly of New Jersey, and twice Speaker of the House, an unprecedented record in that turbulent State; devoted to Bowdoin since the first day he set foot on our campus; skillful engineer, sportsman, gentleman, fine citizen."

the National Consumers' League contained important letters of Roscoe Pound, Felix Frankfurter, Florence Kelley, John R. Commons, Charles Beard, and other advocates of reform. Professor Vose and Mr. Carpenter arranged an indexing system for the papers and have had them microfilmed for their use at the Bowdoin Library. The original papers have been placed for permanent keeping in the Library of Congress. This work was aided by a grant from the Bowdoin College Faculty Research Fund, established by the Class of 1928 at its 25th Reunion in 1953.

Dr. David Walker of the Department of Government was invited by the International Relations Club of Westbrook Junior College to introduce the keynote speaker at their annual forum in March. The theme of this year's forum was "United States Foreign Policy — a Regional Analysis."

Philip Wilder, Assistant to the President, has been named Chairman of the campaign to raise funds for the new Brunswick Community Hospital. Plans call for a 50-bed hospital and service units, which will occupy two stories and a basement. The estimated cost of the new structure is $800,000, of which $250,000 is expected to be made available by the Federal Government in a grant under the Hill-Burton Act.

Medical School

1891 Friends extend their deep sympathy to Dr. Harry Parsons of Winchester, Mass., whose sister, Mrs. Hiram A. Webber, died in Brunswick on February 15.

1894 Dr. Albert Plummer was honored on his 88th birthday in January by the Lisbon Falls Lobster Club. John Gould '31, chairman for the occasion, referred to Doc Plummer as a vine which "cultivated by the severe discipline of pruning, in its age is straight and true, bearing rich harvest to bless those who come to partake and be nourished." He then went on to say, "To be different is not to be wrong. To be popular is not to be right. To be honest in your convictions and conclusions is unusual . . . to be Dr. Plummer."

The Portland Press Herald noted in an editorial entitled "Doctor in the House" on February 25, "In the study of a venerable physician in a neighboring town there is a flurry of activity of a non-medical nature these days, if our rural intelligence serves us correctly. Dr. Albert W. Plummer is getting ready for another town meeting. And all through the busy little manufacturing and farming town of Lisbon Falls, citizens are stirring in anticipation — some hopeful, some fearful — of the community reflexes Doc can be counted on to tap at the annual meeting. For as long as anybody around Lisbon Falls can remember — and living memory there begins and ends with the 88-year-old doctor — the Doc has always been up front at every town meeting, ready with carefully prepared prescriptions to offer for any and all of the ills of the body politic."

1897 Dr. Clarence Peaslee died on February 16.

1905 Dr. Fred Pritham reports, "I had the honor of removing the first appendix and of attending the first baby born in our Dean Memorial Hospital for 1957."

1907 Dr. Ralph Foster died last September 28.

1918 Captain Thomas Taber, who is retired from the Navy Medical Corps, lives at 3639 East Piccadilly Road, Phoenix, Ariz.

Honorary

1944 Sumner Sewall has been elected a Director of the Maine Publicity Bureau.

1948 Christian Herter, former Governor of Massachusetts, was sworn into office on February 21 as Under Secretary of State. He was welcomed by Secretary of State John Foster Dulles as a man "in whom I have implicit confidence."

Robert House, Chancellor of the University of North Carolina since 1945, is retiring from that position this year.

1949 Samuel Forsaith has been re-elected Chairman of the Board of the First National Bank in Brunswick, with which he has been associated for 61 years.

Mrs. Edward Stafford (Marie Peary) now resides in Brunswick at 265 Maine Street.

1953 Colonel Walter Kennett of Topsham has been appointed Maine Civil Defense Director. Formerly Commanding Officer of the Bowdoin Reserve Officers Training Corps unit, he retired in 1953 following thirty years of service in the Regular Army.

On March 16 William Saltonstall, head of Phillips Exeter Academy, received the Distinguished Service Award of the Southern New Hampshire Lodge of B'nai B'rith.

In 1907 an enterprising gentleman named H. D. Nichols made an engraving of the Bowdoin campus from an architectural projection. The campus appears to be seen from a high vantage point. Prints appear to be aerial views. Picturing the Bowdoin campus as students from 1903 to 1912 knew it, the prints make a fine addition to those of 1821 and 1860.

The Alumni Office has acquired hand colored copies of these engravings, about 27 by 17 inches on large white vellum sheets. Ready for framing, the prints are priced at $20.00 (plus 2% sales tax to Maine residents).

A Conversation Piece

Chesly Manly of the Chicago Tribune stirred up a genuine hornets' nest all over the United States, beginning on April 21 and continuing even today. The Tribune published on Sunday, April 21, the first in a series of articles by Manly on the "greatest schools in the nation." Ever since then harried public relations officers of colleges and universities throughout the country have been busy answering the favorite alumni question of 1957 — "Why wasn't Podunk College higher on the Tribune list?"

There are various lists. The ten top universities are rated in the following order: Harvard, Yale, California (Berkeley), Chicago, Columbia, Princeton, Michigan, Cornell, Wisconsin, and Stanford.

The first ten co-educational colleges are Oberlin, Swarthmore, Carleton, Reed, Pomona, Grinnell, Lawrence, College of Wooster, Kalamazoo, and Hope.

The ten best women's colleges (and keep your wife out of the fight if you can!) are listed as Bryn Mawr, Radcliffe, Barnard, Vassar, Mount Holyoke, Wellesley, Smith, Goucher, Pembroke, and Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

And the ten best men's colleges are, in the opinion of Mr. Manly, Haverford, Amherst, Kenyon, Wesleyan, Hamilton, Union, Bowdoin, University of the South, Washington and Lee, and Williams.

Manly is a man of courage if not, perhaps, of tact! He spent three months interviewing educators, scholars, scientists, and college presidents. He dug into the history of American education, the quality and scope of college curricula, and current trends in higher education. Various achievements and distinctions of many universities and colleges were assembled and evaluated. This material, the Tribune stated, "strongly supported the evaluations of the academicians Manly interviewed to determine top rated schools and the reasons for their greatness."

Alumni who wish to express themselves about the ratings should feel free to write the Tribune, which, in its own words, "does not believe that the list of institutions selected is necessarily 100 per cent correct or that additions or subtractions should not be made. The Tribune will welcome comments from educators, former students, or students in the country on the findings set forth in this series."

"The Good Die Young"

The words "The good die young" bring to mind once again, as they have done for years, a grand old man who would certainly have written the Tribune to demand in vigorous language the reason why Bowdoin was not placed first among men's colleges. The letter would in all likelihood have been typed personally. It would have been signed, "Irritatingly yours, Henry A. Huston."

Henry Huston never had a chance to write that letter. He died on the evening of May 4 at his home in Kew Gardens, N. Y., at the age of 99. Bowdoin's senior alumnus since 1955, "Uncle Henry" was a familiar figure on the campus, particularly at Commencement time. He always returned to march in the Commencement procession, proudly wearing on each arm the numbers 1879.

Uncle Henry always maintained that "the good die young," but he was for many years a living contradiction to this statement.

Bowdoin men everywhere pay homage to a remarkable man, Henry Augustus Huston.

THE COVER

The cover features the 1957 version of Bowdoin's famed Meddiebempsters, who have carried the name of the College all over the United States this spring as ambassadors of good will. On March 28 the Meddies appeared on the television show "Strike It Rich" in New York City, winning $500 for the Alumni Fund to aid two Hungarian students who accompanied them on the Glee Club's spring tour. The Hungarians came to Bowdoin during the winter and will be Bowdoin Plan students next year.

On May 10, the Meddies made a return trip to New York to sing in Carnegie Hall with nine other college groups, from Brown, Colgate, Columbia, Connecticut College for Women, Cornell, Princeton, Smith, Vassar, and Yale.

So the cover is a salute to the Meddiebempsters.

The Student Bowdoin Seeks

A Chapel talk delivered by President James S. Coles on March 5

THE TASK OF AN admissions officer in a college like Bowdoin is a difficult one. It is essentially two-fold: a task of selection and a task of presentation.

The admissions officer must select those candidates from the large number of applicants who are best able to profit from the Bowdoin experience. In so doing, he must consider not only the manner in which they may profit intellectually, but the manner in which they may profit in terms of increased maturity, personality development, and leadership potential. He must select on a broad basis, so that the College will not run too much to one type or another of personality, and yet he must select so that the essential character of the institution will not be changed. Naturally he will sometimes make errors, as would a paragon in such matters; on the other hand, he is right so much of the time, it is almost uncanny.

The second task of the admissions officer is to create interest for Bowdoin among the ablest of our pre-college youth. This seems paradoxical perhaps, for with such tremendous demand for a place in college, why is it necessary to promote the College among high school boys? Why not simply wait for them to come and rap the big brass knocker on the door of Massachusetts Hall? Why all the trouble and expense of presenting the College in its best light, and on an individual basis, to thousands of boys and hundreds of secondary schools and their principals and high school guidance teachers.

This active and aggressive admissions enterprise is necessary because Bowdoin wants the cream of the present generation for its students and future alumni. The College holds in trust many valuables — tangible and intangible. Some are traditions, some are values of the spirit, and some are represented by funds entrusted to Bowdoin, to be used wisely for the education of youth to the benefit of our society. If the College, holding these things in trust, is to be a proper trustee — and when it recognizes that the number of places for students which can be provided in college by the resources it holds are limited — it behooves the College to see that these places are filled with only the ablest men, with those who can profit most from the Bowdoin experience. Should the College fail to do this, it would be failing in its trust, and would not be expending its funds in the wisest manner. The College must, therefore, always seek out, and create interest among, the ablest candidates for admission.

Who are these ablest candidates — who are the boys for whom there will always be places at the top of the list of applicants? How can they be described? For whom are we looking?

The primary requirement for every candidate is demonstration of his ability to perform the intellectual tasks demanded of him by the academic program. The Bowdoin Faculty has devised a curriculum which it believes gives an able man a liberal education in its highest sense. The Bowdoin student in following this curriculum perforce gains much information, but even more important than that, he gains historic perspectives, humanistic ethics, and abilities to make value judgments. This requires both broad and intensive native capacity to meet the wide and yet concentrated requirements of the Bowdoin course of study.

In order that a man may be properly prepared to undertake this course of study, the Faculty sets certain prerequisites to be met by secondary school work — a given number of units of English, history, foreign language, mathematics, science, and so forth. These subject matter requirements are, in general, essential for admission, although often there may be mitigating circumstances which require flexibility in interpretation.

Beyond meeting these quantitative requirements through electing the suggested courses in secondary school, the applicant must also demonstrate that he has the mental equipment and intellectual capacity for college work. To this end his secondary school record is carefully scrutinized, and the Scholastic Aptitude Test of the College Entrance Examination Board is required. However, in spite of the infinite amount of work which has gone into test development, analysis, and so forth, the one measure which best predicts success at college for a given applicant is the success he has had in secondary school. Thus the secondary school record plays an important role in the determination of the admissibility of a candidate. It is also important in another way.

The motivation of the candidate for college work must be assessed. If a boy succeeds in his school work, it is because he wants to do so. This reflects the motivation necessary for success in college. The secondary school record is, then, as good an indication of motivation as is presently available. In addition, other means are sought to check the motivation of the student toward further study. It does little good to admit a man of high ability to college if he is not motivated to do college work. Rarely does a person at Bowdoin fail because of low ability — 95% of the time it is because of lack of motivation or lack of application. To this end the recommendation of the secondary school teacher or principal carries much weight.

The Class of 1961

The mailing of certificates of admission to the Class of 1961 was completed shortly after April 20 in keeping with the schedule of recent years. The size of the class was set at 200 by the Governing Boards. This is the same goal as was set for the Class of 1960, which finally registered last September at 207.

Approximately 1100 applications for admission were processed this year, an increase of about 100 for the second year in a row.

Announcements of scholarship awards were made simultaneously with the notices of admission. Nearly one-third of all candidates for admission also applied for financial assistance from the prematriculation scholarship funds. It is expected that between forty and fifty members of 1961 will enter with awards totaling about $40,000. In the present freshman class forty-seven students were recipients of prematriculation awards. These awards are renewable if need continues and satisfactory academic records are made.

Successful candidates were asked to indicate their plans for attending Bowdoin by May 1 unless more time was needed to reach a decision. Final notice was required by May 22.

Director of Admissions Bill Shaw '36 is especially grateful each year to a number of people who make his job and that of Assistant Director Bob Glover '56 easier.

The undergraduates have entertained hundreds of sub-freshmen at the fraternities during the year. Instead of one sub-freshman weekend such as many alumni remember, there are now several such weekends, extending from December to March and April.

The Admissions Office is also grateful to alumni, who were responsible for arousing the interest of many prospective freshmen in Bowdoin.

Recommendations from these sources, as well as from alumni, neighbors, and youth leaders who know the boy are also most valuable. (Of very little value and little reliability is the letter which starts out, "I do not know young Joe Smith very well personally, but I do know his father well and have been playing golf with him every Saturday afternoon for the last fifteen years. His father is a wonderful person, and if young Joe is anything like the old man, he is just the boy for you to have at Bowdoin." The big IF is there and remains unanswered. The old man may be the best person in the world, and the boy may be an utter failure. Perhaps this is even more likely to be so if the "old man," through the period of development of the boy, has spent every Saturday for the past fifteen years playing golf with his cronies, rather than paying attention to his family.)

The able candidate should be a good citizen. He will be a contributor to the affairs of his school; a cooperative worker toward all that is worthwhile. This is evident very often through his record of extracurricular activities — a boy who has evidenced no interest in his fellow students through extracurricular affairs at school is not likely to change much in college. But there is an exception to this in the serious, competent student who has not "mixed" in high school, but who gives promise of much social development in college. His ability and potential merit serious consideration.

Our ideal candidate will also have a good bit of independence of mind and thought. He will have the courage to be an individual, the courage not to conform to a single mould, yet he will be tolerant of others and make the necessary adjustment to differing personalities.

To the extent of what I have said there is a certain uniformity in the characterization of the ideal candidate for admission to Bowdoin College: academic background, intellectual capacity, motivation, citizenship, and character. Beyond this, however, the ideal candidate is characterized not by uniformity, but by its opposite — diversity. Bowdoin College, if it is to be representative of the best of these United States, must maintain the same diversity in its student body as is found in the nation as a whole.

Often we hear it said that we want the "well-rounded" student. The question is suggested, "Do we want a collection of 'well-rounded' individuals, or do we want a 'well-rounded' class, taken as a whole?" Actually, the latter is the case, for it is rare that the talents we all enjoy in the Pickard Theater will belong to the same man whose talents make a winning touchdown on Whittier Field, or who can edit the best Orient ever to be published, or be the best tenor in the Glee Club.

Bowdoin students must first of all as a group have a wide diversity of interests and talents. The College cannot afford to run to type; it, therefore, can not admit students whose interests are all the same, be they in music, literature, athletics, dramatics, technological matters, or for that reason, solely matters of the intellect. The student body must be balanced with respect to these interests and talents. Some students will excel in music, some in writing; some will excel in athletics, some as actors. Some will excel in their social adjustment or leadership, and others will excel in intellectual matters. It is through this diversity of interest and of talent that all students grow and broaden outside the classroom as well as in it. Most of the student's time is spent outside the classroom, and thus he learns much from his peers. Rubbing elbows with contemporaries with a wide pattern of backgrounds and abilities broadens his own background and develops new abilities.

There will also be a diversity of geographic origin among Bowdoin students. The College has an obligation to the State of Maine and to New England, and to that extent welcomes candidates from these areas. There is no plan, nor is there a desire, to change significantly the ratio obtaining at present: roughly 30% of our students are from Maine, 35% from Massachusetts, and usually 1/4 are non-New Englanders. All contribute, one to another, through their differing geographic origins.

It is equally desirable to have students of differing economic backgrounds. For that reason the College provides an extensive scholarship and loan program so that any student with sufficient ability can have the advantage of a Bowdoin education, regardless of the financial status of his family. The College seeks, too, a diversity of social backgrounds and a diversity of environments in its students. In a democratic society this again is necessary so that the college-trained person will not become a member of an elite society, but rather will be a member of the greater society. Withal, the College looks for virile men; men of energy, men of capacity, men who are ready to stand up for that in which they believe.

Perhaps the type of man Bowdoin seeks can best be summarized by saying it is the same type of man which Bowdoin has as its students at present, and has had in the past. Among those no longer living one dares mention names — Longfellow, Hawthorne, Pierce, William Pitt Fessenden, Thomas Brackett Reed, Robert E. Peary, Justice Fuller, Andrew Haldane, Alfred Kinsey, Kenneth Sills, Augustus Moulton, Willard Bass, John Peters, Forbes Rickard, Robert P. T. Coffin, Stanley Chase, and many, many others. Among those who are living one could specify as many of equal merit, but it would not be discreet to do so. You can pick them out for yourselves.

In selecting its students, and in interesting the ablest who are able to take advantage of Bowdoin, the College has always appreciated and welcomed the assistance of students presently here, its many alumni, and its many friends. To you, as undergraduates, the College is always indebted for your interest, and your hospitality as sub-freshmen visit the campus.

In the Bowdoin family, we all rise or fall as a family — students, alumni, faculty. Thus as the quality and ability of each of us here, and each chosen to join us, improve, so does the prestige of the College and all of its members benefit.

John Anderson (1813) And The Parson Smith House

By Neal W. Allen, Jr. '40

A few years ago there appeared in the Alumnus, under the title "Bowdoin Worthies," an account of the remarkable record of a distinguished Maine family. At least eight descendants of Abraham Anderson and Lucy Smith of Windham were noted in that article. What follows might be considered a postscript to, or a partial documentation of, the earlier sketch. But first, a word of explanation about the way in which these letters came to light.

Since 1953 my wife and I have served as summer custodians of the old Parson Smith house for the present owner — the Society for the Preservation of New England Antiquities. This spacious house, built in 1764, was for sixty-two years the residence of Rev. Peter Thacher Smith, from 1762 to 1790 minister of the first church and parish of Windham. Peter was the son of the famous Rev. Thomas Smith, first settled minister in Portland, and the author of the deservedly interesting (though now emasculated) "Journal." The son, a graduate of Harvard College in the Class of 1753, was married in 1765 to Elizabeth Wendell of Boston. Just before this marriage, Peter wrote to his future mother-in-law: "I have told Miss Betsey she must not expect that ceremony from a Country Parson as from a Boston Gallant — what is proper, I hope, I shall always strictly observe."

Despite this modest disclaimer, Peter and Betsey must have given to the life of the little farming community an elegance and "tone" that compared well with the social pretensions of more populous and sophisticated towns. A quaint eighteenth century picture, which was once in the house, portrays "the Seat of Rev. Peter Smith." In front of the house is a line of poplars, and one sees at either side the carriage house (still standing), barns, out-buildings and spacious grounds. Before the front gate stands the handsome coach in which Parson Smith and his lady travelled throughout the parish, or in to Portland. There is ample evidence that this was a home in which the intellectual and artistic concerns of life were encouraged and cultivated.

Peter and Elizabeth Smith had in all eleven children. Lucy, the third child, was married in 1788 to Abraham Anderson, son of one of the original settlers of the town. Their son, John, is the person with whom we are here concerned. He was born July 30, 1792, and entered Bowdoin in the Class of 1813. Peter Smith had shown much interest in the new College, and it was right that this promising grandson should have been enrolled there. The three letters which follow were found in a closet of the Parson Smith house several years ago. They are presented here for the interesting glimpses which they afford of Bowdoin and of the nation's capital in the early years of the nineteenth century.

The first letter was written to John Anderson by his sister; the young man was then a freshman. How many freshmen of the present would receive a letter of this sort from a younger sister?

Windham Feb 1810

Dear Brother,

We received your letter which was conveyed to my Father

by Mr Swan by it we learn you are well and likewise board at Mr Owens Dear Brother I hope you will beware of bad company and associate only with those of a moral and good character with such persons you are always secure they will religiously beware of engaging your affections without honourable views of these circumstances you must endeavor to Judge for your selfe or get some discerning and more experienced Friend to be your advisor and pay good attention to your studies now you have a very favorable opportunity for learning you ought to embrace it and not to spend any of your time foolishly for now we are young is the time for acquiring Knowledge and lay a foundation for happiness through life learning cannot be taken from us if everything else is therefore we ought to be the more earnest to get it and always remember the sabbath and keep it holy if you have no meeting to attend there is the bible for your perusal which will be greatly for your benefit as well as instruction we all know we must die therefore we ought to begin to prepare for death but let us not put off those things of the most importance for a few momentary things here below you must write as often as you can.

All the family desires their love to you

I am your sincere and affectionate Sister

In the second letter, written by John Anderson himself when he was a sophomore, we must surely have one of the earliest references to a musical organization at Bowdoin. We know that music was encouraged in his grandfather's house, and here is evidence that young John shared in this interest.

Hon parent,

I received your letter of the 20 and am very glad to hear that you are all well; I have been very well since I had the bile, and believe it has been very beneficial to my health.

Our band of Music is now formed and I am the only one that can play upon the Violin well enough to use that instrument in the band; we have 2 Bass viols 2 Clarionets 4 Flutes and 1 Flagolet my Violin is esteemed as the most essential instrument in the band it is so very loud it equals the 4 Flutes We have practised every saturday and wednesday afternoon and we expect to Suranade as soon as the weather will admit I have play so much on my Violin that I have worn out my strings and I would be greatly obliged to you Sir if you would buy me a set in Portland and send them on by the stage driver you can enclose them in a piece of paper and direct it to me to be left at Capt. Eastabrooks if you would get me a good set and send them on immediately you will much oblige me,

I wish for you to ask Thomas Little if he has received a letter from me for he promised to write me after I wrot him I have written to him but have received no answer [word illegible] that Execution in the Letter which I wrote him — you must write often and in form me of the health of Mr Ingersoll

[“There follows a post script, partly torn and very illegible. It apparently concerns two horses. John requests his father to see that one is shod, “he being so very clumsy I believe he never would be able to drive me to Portland again; as for the other you may indulge your own opinion. Bowd: Colle:”]

Only twelve years after his graduation from Bowdoin, John Anderson, who had already served in the Maine Senate, was elected to Congress. In April, 1826, during his first term in the House of Representatives, he wrote the following letter to his brother, Edward. It is torn in spots, and as he himself notes, his handwriting “grows worse & worse” towards the end. As a picture of the capital in its early days, and as a record of a northern Yankee’s observation of slavery and southern agriculture, it is interesting.

Brother Edward

We have at last fixed on the 22d of May as the day of adjournment. I shall of course be at Portland on the 28th, it requiring ten days & nights traveling to pass from this place to Portland — I was in hopes we should get away by the 15th but was glad to get even the 22d it was strenuously opposed, & I have not the least doubt many would like to stay here till the fevers draw them off. The season is considered the most backward of any ever Kn (-own torn) in fact vegetation is not one (torn; several words missing.) part of March & it is the same through (torn) as far South as North Carolina. All their early fruit except the apple is destroyed by severe frosts that we had the fore part of the month. The Country here has generally a miserable appearance & especially between this & Baltimore it looks like a barren waste — more for the want of cultivation than for any defect of soil. The whole tillage is left to slaves & they cant work unless they have a mule to ride on or old pacer, one northern farmer will do more work than ten of the best slaves this District can produce. The Land of course is miserably cultivated & never manured & soon runs out & to enrich it they turn it out for a common. At a few miles distant from this City they manage better, but their best managed farms would be considered neglect & waste at the North. All is left to the negroes — they have no judgment & less interest to labour or be frugal — You often see a negroe riding in his cart returning from Market with a yoke of miserable little oxen & a pair of horses & he is sure to keep the whole team on the trot & sometimes into a gallop — I was informed by Governor Holmes formerly Governor of North Carolina now a member of the House, that the best set of negroes he had ever known, & he owns a great number, do well if they earn their living — He says if Cotton & Tobacco happen to be high something may be made, but if at ordinary prices, his slaves, he thinks do well when they raise enough to feed themselves — very often he has been obliged to buy for them — He is convinced that hired labour is by far the cheapest but there is no getting rid of them & they must be supported.

The City is laid out in an immense scale & will never be filled up — As it is laid out it would hold, if built upon, at least one million of people — & it probably will never be a City of more than 30 or 40,000, it now contains about 15 or 16,000 but it will never increase fast as there is no great commercial advantages nor is there for manufactures — & they live altogether out of (2 words illeg.) Treasury & the Members & persons who are necessarily here at the sitting of Congress. The Capitol is an immense building — it covers over an acre & a half of ground & the yard round it contains 20 acres — but the building is of such an immense size, that no one would think the yard contained more than 5 or 6 acres. but when you come to know how much ground the building covers you readily see that the quantity of the yard is as great as stated. In the Center of the building is a large (dome torn) a perfect circle 98 feet in diameter & this is the main Dome of the building the top of which is over 100 feet from the floor of the room. The whole is built of a soft sand stone & painted white — This room is said to be the largest in the World. The apartments are allmost without number — & a stranger would soon get lost let him start in any direction from this great room or Rotunda as it is called. But one soon gets familiar with it & all its novelty soon vanishes. It is a very uncomfortable building on account of its dampness — such a mass of stone & such loose poreous stone too is constantly absorbing & sending out its vapour & fog —

You have no doubt before this seen an account of John Randolphs duel with Mr. Clay — Randolphs (two words illegible) is all that saved him from a sore bottom at least —* My wife wrote me that you would return with her & the children to Freeport — probably before this reaches you if the roads are settled you will have seen them safe home — but if not I trust you will see that all is safe as to carriage & before you start that no accident may happen on the way. I feel a considerable anxiety for their safe return & shall no doubt hear from Ann as soon as she gets back.

I have already, perhaps, written more than can be read for I find my hand writing grows worse & worse — & I perceive I began my letter on the wrong side of the paper — still if you can find it out it will be all the same as tho I had begun right.

Remember me to all the family & believe me

Sincerely your brother

John Anderson

*This reference is to the famous duel of April 8, which stemmed from Randolph’s speech of March 30, in which he made the charge of “corrupt bargain” against Adams and Clay, likening the coalition of “puritan and blackleg” to that of “Blifil and Black George.” Whatever it was that in Anderson’s opinion saved Randolph from a “sore bottom,” it is known that Clay’s second shot pierced the skirt of the long white gown or coat which Randolph was wearing.

The 1956-57 Alumni Fund

Chairman Louis B. McCarthy '19 presents below the May 15 status of the Alumni Fund by classes.

He reminds alumni that this year's objectives are a gift to Bowdoin of $125,000 and an alumni participation in that gift of, at least, Sixty Per cent and points out that, thus far, scarcely one third of the alumni are sharing.

The Chairman asks a question, "Have you done your part to help your agent reach his goals?"

Commencement Preview

Something new is on the Commencement program. At the suggestion of the Alumni Council, President Coles has arranged for an Alumni Institute. On Friday, June 14, alumni and friends of the College will have the opportunity to attend two seminar sessions. At 9:30 a.m., in the Physics Lecture Room, Searles Hall, Professor Noel C. Little '17 will deliver a lecture on "Some Aspects of Astro-Physics." He will illustrate his talk with mechanical demonstrations. At 2:00 p.m., Professor Athern P. Daggett '25 will lecture in Smith Auditorium on "Democracy and the Uncommitted Nations: Something for the Credit Side."

Professor Little

The Alumni Institute is an experiment. If sufficient interest is shown in this attempt to offer to returning alumni an educational and informative feature, it will be continued.

As always, class reunions will be the important phase of Commencement for many Bowdoin men and their families.

The Fifty-year Class has a full program, under the leadership of President William S. Linnell and Secretary John W. Leydon. Headquarters will be at the home of Mrs. Charles T. Burnett of Maine Street, with campus gathering spots for the men in No. 20 Hyde Hall and for the ladies, in Moulton Union. The class dinner will be held at the Eagle Hotel.

S. Sewall Webster is arranging 1910's off-year family reunion at the Wiscasset Inn.

1912 will celebrate its Forty-Fifth at the Lookout Point House in Harpswell, where families are to be housed and where the class banquet will be held on Friday.

Rooms for unaccompanied members are available in Hyde Hall.

Professor and Mrs. Little will open their College Street home as headquarters for the Class of 1917. Chairman Edward Humphrey has booked rooms in South Appleton and the New Meadows Cabins. The class outing and dinner on Friday will be at Sebasco Estates.

George Partridge and Roliston Woodbury are staging 1922's Thirty-Fifth at No. 3 South Moore. The class dinner will be at Widgery Thomas' home — Brentwood in Yarmouth.

Don Lancaster is Chairman of 1927's Thirtieth. Campus headquarters are in No. 7 North Moore and Friday's outing will be at Sebasco Estates.

1932's big Twenty-Fifth — steered by Philip Dana and Edward N. Merrill — will revolve around the Pickard Field House from Thursday on. Faculty Reception, stag dinner, family parties, and the outing and banquet at the Auburn Colony in South Harpswell are part of a full program. Accommodations will be furnished in North Appleton and at the Eagle and Trading Post Motels in Freeport.

1937 has campus headquarters in No. 1 and No. 3 South Maine. Chairman William R. Owen has engaged the Bath Country Club for Friday's outing and dinner.

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC EXERCISES
MASSACHUSETTS HALL
BRUNSWICK, MAINE

The Fifteen-year Class will gather at No. 17 North Maine, where rooms will be available. Friday's dinner will be at the New Meadows Yacht Club, according to Chairman John L. Baxter jr.

1947's Tenth chairman is Robert L. Morrell. Headquarters are in No. 3 South Winthrop. Friday's outing is at the Morrell cottages at Mere Point.

Campbell Niven heads the committee for 1952's Fifth. Campus headquarters are in No. 19 North Winthrop. The class outing on Friday will be at the Niven cottage at Mere Point.

Present indications point to a large alumni registration.

The Society of Bowdoin Women, those gracious ladies, will, as always, be on hand at their headquarters in Gibson Hall of Music. There any woman visiting the campus may get information, meet friends, and relax. The Society will also sponsor the Friday Luncheon and the Saturday Luncheon.

Bowdoin's Development Program

What?

Why?

How?

What is development?

This is really a new name for an activity which has been carried on with varying degrees of success since Bowdoin's earliest days.

The two essential phases of successful development work — public relations and fund raising — were recognized even as the idea of founding a college in the District of Maine was being discussed soon after the American Revolution. The merits of establishing a college in Maine and the need for a suitable location were so well publicized that no less than eight towns fought for the College before she was born.

The need for raising money to support this new venture was also evident, and much work was done by the founders of the College to find a benefactor who would contribute not only his name but also substantial funds. Unsuccessful overtures were made to William Gray of Salem, one of the wealthiest merchants and ship owners of New England, before the successful contact with the heir to the Honorable Governor James Bowdoin's estate produced both a name and funds for the new College.

Through the years, Bowdoin has been strengthened and enriched by the financial support of her loyal alumni and friends, who have realized the truth of the late President Sills' observation that "a college is like an eternal small boy always outgrowing his clothes."

While the final responsibility for public relations and fund raising rests with Bowdoin's President, he faces a growing complexity of duties both on and off the campus. President Coles' leadership and guidance are needed for successful development work, but he must not be overburdened to the point where his effectiveness as an educational leader of the College is curtailed.

Vice President Bela W. Norton '18 is in charge of the development program. He is assisted by Robert M. Cross '45 and C. Cabot Easton '48. News releases and information about college activities are furnished to newspapers and radio stations. Sources of funds for the College are constantly being analyzed and contacts made through the most appropriate channels.

In short, development at Bowdoin is a broad and continuing program of informing alumni and friends of her deeds and familiarizing them with her needs, in order that they may strengthen the College through their interest and support.

Why is a development program needed?

The Sesquicentennial Fund drive, which ended in 1953, provided for some of Bowdoin's most pressing needs, as follows:

- increases in faculty salaries
- a new classroom building, Sills Hall and Smith Auditorium
- a new chemistry building, Cleaveland Hall
- the renovation of an existing classroom building, Adams Hall
- the renovation of the Searles Science Building
- the modernization of the classrooms in Memorial Hall

Since the close of the Sesquicentennial campaign, further additions to Bowdoin's campus have been made. The Harvey Dow Gibson Hall of Music was dedicated in 1954. The Pickard Theater in Memorial Hall was first used for the Commencement play in 1955. The Arena, completed last November, was made possible by contributions from alumni, students, and friends of the College.

However, Bowdoin still has important needs which must be met if she is to maintain her financial and physical strength.

Faculty salaries must be further increased if strength and quality are to be maintained at the highest possible level. The recent Ford Foundation grant will provide an income of about $22,000 a year, which must be divided among almost 65 faculty members. More funds are needed and are being sought to maintain the desired scale of compensation.

Increased endowment funds are required to meet ever-increasing costs of college operation and to augment the scholarship program, which provides assistance for many worthy students who would not be able to attend college without financial aid. During the current year, approximately 225 undergraduates are receiving such assistance.

Important physical needs

- A new dormitory to house more than 100 men who are now forced to live off the campus.
- An addition to the Library to provide more room for storage of books.
- Endowment funds for the new Department of Geology.
- An addition to the Gymnasium, built in 1912 for a college of one-half the size of Bowdoin today.
- Additional endowment funds for the Infirmary and for general campus improvements.

The outline of Bowdoin's financial requirements for the next ten years is contained in the booklet "Bowdoin's Next Decade," which presents the details of the $10,000,000 program for insuring the strength of the College physically and financially. A copy of this booklet has been sent to each alumnus and to many friends of the College.

Table Of Bowdoin's Needs

Increased Endowment
For salaries	$3,000,000
For other general operations	3,000,000
For scholarships	1,000,000
For an Addition to the Library, including endowment for its maintenance	750,000
For a New Dormitory	400,000
For the Endowment of The Department of Geology	300,000
For an Addition to the Gymnasium including endowment for maintenance	700,000
For the Infirmary
Endowment for operation	500,000
For Campus Improvements	200,000

What has been accomplished so far?

The immediate results of fund raising and development are often difficult to pinpoint, for results of this work may come long after the initial planning and spade work. The following accomplishments are presented as encouraging indications:

During the year ending June 30, 1956, Bowdoin received gifts amounting to more than $800,000. While these are not wholly attributable to the development program, development activities have been a factor in cultivating this support from alumni and friends of the College. These gifts are at a level that ranks second only to the years of the Sesquicentennial campaign.

For example, two recent gifts totaling $30,000 for additions to the scholarship fund came directly as the result of individual solicitations made in connection with the Development Program.

The magnanimous grant of $509,500 from the Ford Foundation for increasing faculty salaries was announced in December, 1955. While this was not a direct result of development work, those in charge of the program spent much time in considering ways and means of presenting Bowdoin's needs effectively. Three weeks were spent in collecting data for the detailed questionnaire on which this grant was based.

The increasing interest in educational aid among foundations and business corporations emphasizes the importance of Bowdoin's continuing to keep its work and its needs thoroughly understood among such organizations.

Last year, Bowdoin participated in the corporate aid programs of more than a dozen corporations.

The campaign for the Arena, Bowdoin's new refrigerated and covered skating and hockey rink, has produced more than $205,000. Funds are still being actively sought to reach the total cost of this building. This is the first effort to seek new capital funds in the overall program for the next decade. It is worth noting that a minimum of interference with the Alumni Fund has resulted from this campaign, and it is known that the Arena solicitation has produced substantial gifts for other needs of the College.

Unpaid Sesquicentennial pledges — open accounts — have received attention periodically. These have been reduced from approximately 1250 on July 1, 1953, to 918 on April 1, 1957. More than half of the present open accounts are for $25 or less.

This program is in addition to the continuing efforts of the Alumni Fund — a most important source of current operating funds for Bowdoin.

Future Alumnus articles will keep alumni informed about details of the Development Program, such as the "matching-grant" plan developed by General Electric and since adopted by numerous other companies.

How can Bowdoin alumni help?

By keeping informed on the needs of the College and the continuing program for meeting these needs.

By cooperating with the Vice President's office in furnishing leads to possible sources of funds. These sources may include gifts, bequests, or trust funds from alumni and friends of the College; or grants from corporations and foundations.

By contributing each year to the Alumni Fund.

By remembering that Bowdoin's strength for the future lies in the continuing support of her loyal alumni, who have contributed so generously of their time and money to maintain their College's reputation as one of the finest of its kind in the nation.

On The Campus

Further steps in the modernization of the Library will be taken this summer. Included in the plans are new cataloguing facilities to give more space in the reading room, new lighting for many offices and for the lower hall, and a new charging desk in the lower hall.

These improvements are the continuation of a long-range project started in the summer of 1954, when twenty-eight individual study tables were installed in the stack area. In addition, the mimeographing department was moved at that time from the Library to Sills Hall, and the area thus freed was made over into two faculty studies.

In the summer of 1955 six new faculty studies were constructed upstairs, three each in the former history seminar room and the former economics seminar room. The stack area was completely rewired and fluorescent lights installed.

This summer's changes will provide one charging desk for all books, including those on closed reserve. Eleven additional individual study tables will be purchased for use in the periodical room.

Hubbard Hall, the library building, was erected in 1902-03 and thus is now well over fifty years old. It houses about 240,000 volumes.

Debating

During the year Bowdoin debaters met eighty-six college teams in intercollegiate competition. Bowdoin won 55 debates, tied in another, and lost 30. Colleges defeated included Yale, Georgetown, Dartmouth, Holy Cross, Smith, Bates, Johns Hopkins, Tufts, and Amherst.

The year ended with the Dartmouth Novice Tournament, which Bowdoin's debaters, two freshmen and two sophomores, won against 21 other schools.

Al Schretter '59 of Woodstock, Vt., had 23 wins and 10 losses during the entire season. Dick Morgan '59 of Hempstead, N. Y., Schretter's favorite partner, won 18 and lost 9. Among the freshmen Pete Smith of Durham, N. H., came out on top 14 times and lost only once. Steve Bunker of South Brewer, also a freshman and often Smith's partner, won 14 and lost only 3.

For the third time in four years Beta Theta Pi won the finals of the interfraternity debating competition for the Wilmot Brookings Mitchell Trophy at Bowdoin, when it defeated Alpha Delta Phi on April 10. Debating for the Betas were Dick Morgan '59 of Mitchel Air Force Base, Hempstead, N. Y., and Tony Perry '60 of Waterville. The AD's were represented by Nick Spicer '60 of Farmington, Mich., and Bob Virtue '60 of Orono.

Music

The Glee Club concluded another highly successful year under Director Fred Tillotson on May 9 when it made its annual appearance with the Boston Pops Orchestra in Symphony Hall. As always, the hall was packed with Bowdoin men and their ladies and families as well as friends of the College.

The annual campus concert on April 5 was another delightful evening, especially for the faculty, who turned out in large numbers. The Glee Club had invited faculty members and their families as special guests.

Beta Theta Pi successfully defended its top position in the Interfraternity Sing, with Zeta Psi finishing second. The Zetas seem to be like the girl who was always a bridesmaid but never a bride!

On May 5 Professor Tillotson was heard in the Bach piano concerto in d minor, accompanied by the Colby Community Orchestra. "Tilly" reached his 60th birthday earlier this year, but no one would ever know it. If anything, he plays better each year.

The Glee Club has completed a new double-faced long-playing record which was scheduled to be available on May 24. Included are the following selections: Rise Sons of Bowdoin, A Dirge for Two Veterans, Jesus Walked This Lonesome Valley, selections by the Bowdoin Vesper Choir, Rio Que Pasas Llorando, Marry a Woman Uglier Than You, selections by the Meddiebempsters, Landsighting, If I Got My Ticket, Can I Ride? Serenade from The Student Prince, Father William, Pore Jud from Oklahoma, The Fox, There Is Nothing Like a Dame, and a Bowdoin medley.

The record is available at the Moulton Union Bookstore and at the Bowdoin Record Shop, run by Herb Gillman '48 and Don Strong '48. Price is $3.95 plus sales tax, insurance, and postage.

"Forty years ago today the State of Maine made what is probably its only such gift to Bowdoin College, when it presented a stand of colors at Whittier Field," Philip S. Wilder '23, Assistant to the President at Bowdoin, stated on May 3.

Addressing undergraduates at the morning chapel service, Mr. Wilder told of the events which took place at Bowdoin following the declaration of war against Germany on April 6, 1917. Within two weeks there was organized a Reserve Officers Training Corps battalion of four companies and a band.

On May 3 Percival P. Baxter of Portland, a graduate of the Class of 1898, then a member of the Maine Legislature and later Governor of Maine, presented the stand of colors, which had been voted by the Legislature. The stand consists of a United States flag and a Bowdoin flag of the same size. The flags are now on either side of the speaker's stand in the Bowdoin Chapel.

President William DeWitt Hyde in his last public appearance accepted the colors on behalf of the College. He said, "For one hundred and fifteen years Bowdoin students have enjoyed study and leisure, work and play, under the protection of the Nation and the State . . . These young men forty years hence will forget much that we have taught them here; but they will not forget that their State placed the colors of their country, together with the College color in their hands; and they will bear themselves so that the State shall be proud and happy to remember that the trust committed to them was faithfully and honorably held."

Shortly after the April ALUMNUS was published, the Editors received the following message from Robert G. Morrison, a lawyer in Cleveland.

"In the April number of the BOWDOIN ALUMNUS, the illustration of the Str. Fessenden caught my eye and I wondered whether you or any reader would be interested in knowing that this steamer was rebuilt as the Chippewa, on which I have traveled many times. Since I believe that the Chippewa was never closer to Maine than the Delaware River and was put into service on Lake Erie, it is possible that Maine residents have never heard of it. The engineer of the Chippewa informed me of this conversion when I first rode on the steamer, and since that time I have collected other pictures of the Fessenden and the Chippewa. The hull and paddle wheels were remodeled, but the engine served in its original state.

"Perhaps I should explain that the ALUMNUS is addressed to my son-in-law, Logan A. Becker, at our residence."

Professor James A. Storer of the Bowdoin Economics Department (seated) discusses the new Maine Business Index, a monthly chart of economic changes in the state, with Mrs. Jean Gannett Williams, President of the Gannett Publishing Company, and Chester G. Abbott '13, President of the First Portland National Bank. Mrs. Williams and Mr. Abbott are members of the Senior Advisory Council that worked with faculty members from the four Maine colleges in preparing this Index.

The Index presents in graph form the course of Maine business activity since 1950, based on earnings of manufacturing companies, bank debits, department store sales, employment in construction, farm marketings, and so forth. It is part of a pamphlet called "Maine Business Indicators," which appears each month. The pamphlet is published by the Maine College-Community Research Program, organized in 1955 with a $25,000 grant from the Committee for Economic Development and the Fund for Adult Education of the Ford Foundation. Its purpose is to make available to business and the public an accurate yardstick of economic conditions in Maine.

Chester Abbott has been President of the group since it was first organized. Professor Storer is editor of the "Maine Business Indicators."

The Masque and Gown joined forces with the Music Club on May 11 and '13 to present John Gay's "The Beggar's Opera." The first performance was part of what Acting Dean Nathan Dane '37 called the "the best and quietest Ivy Weekend in my memory. The only phone call I received all weekend was from President Coles, saying he was back in town!"

On April 20 the Masque and Gown staged "The Occupied Man," a three-act play by Robley C. Wilson jr. '52 of Sanford, who is completing his work at Bowdoin in June after military service. The play is about the problems and loves of American troops in Germany in 1953, during the latter part of the occupation of that country. Many of the characters are young men, and much of the play is concerned with their problems of transition to a defeated, embittered society.

Lewiston High School's production of "Winsome Winnie" by Stephen Leacock and V. C. Baddeley was awarded first place on April 13 in the finals of the 25th annual State One-Act Play Contest. Westbrook High School was runner-up, with its presentation of the Trial Scene from Maxwell Anderson's "Joan of Lorraine." Other schools in the finals were Brunswick, Caribou, Skowhegan, Bangor, and Stephens High of Rumford.

This high school program, open to the public without admission charge, is always well attended and well worth attending. The modern generation may go for Elvis and rock and roll, but it can also act!

Leighton Top Sailor

Charlie Leighton '57, son of Dr. Wilbur Leighton '28 of Portland, was rated the top intercollegiate sailor in New England during last fall's competition, according to the statistical results released in March. Skip Howland '57, son of Winslow Howland '29 of Auburndale, Mass., was rated ninth on the list.

The ratings, computed somewhat in the same manner as baseball batting averages, are based on the finishing positions of the different skippers during last fall's meets.

Leighton was also rated first for his sailing in the fall of 1955, when he was Commodore of the Polar Bears.

There has been an unexpected demand for copies of "The Conservative Tradition in Education at Bowdoin College," published last year as the result of the report of the Committee on Self Study. Anyone who has a copy he does not want will earn the gratitude of his college by mailing it to Philip S. Wilder, Assistant to the President, Massachusetts Hall.

NEW GLEE CLUB RECORD

Both those who have heard the Glee Club and those who have not will be interested in the new LP record of this year's program which is now available.

The record may be purchased at the Moulton Union Bookstore or at the Bowdoin Record Shop, run by Herb Gillman '48 and Don Strong '48, and located near the First Parish Church. Price is $3.95 plus sales tax, insurance, and postage. Many alumni will want to get the record at Commencement.

Placement Report

"Business needs general practitioners as well as specialists," Samuel A. Ladd jr. '29, Placement Director at Bowdoin, said in his annual report to President James S. Coles.

"A liberal arts education is a practical education for one choosing a business career," Mr. Ladd continued. "Today's graduates are tomorrow's business leaders. Liberal arts skills may not be so immediately applicable to a special situation as those with a technical background, but they can be just as fundamental, they cover a wider range of activities, and they usually are more adaptable."

The Placement Bureau report shows that more than 120 business and industrial officers have visited the Bowdoin campus this year to interview seniors. Starting salary offers range from $3600 a year to better than $5400, with the average just over $4800, or $401 per month.

"A number of firms," said Mr. Ladd, "which previously considered an engineering degree a necessity have now revised their thinking and are willing to discuss career opportunities with well rounded liberal arts men for their training programs. This year again technical graduates were in short supply and much in demand. In general, business firms are becoming increasingly aware that they have not given sufficient attention to the fact that a company's future lies to a great degree in the proper selection and training of personnel."

Bowdoin seniors listed opportunity as the most important factor to be considered in accepting a position. Other factors were rated in the following order: 2. type of work offered; 3. training and educational programs; 4. location and kind of community; 5. working conditions; 6. company reputation and future plans; 7. salary and fringe benefits.

"During the past interview season," Mr. Ladd stated, "an average of more than three companies a day was maintained during the days available. Interview schedules averaged eighteen interviews per company and reached a high of sixty-two candidates for a utility company. In all, more than 1600 individual appointments were arranged and conducted in addition to more than 200 off-campus interviews.

"This year more Maine firms were visitors and opportunities in New England were generally considered favorably by the seniors."

Looking ahead to next year, Mr. Ladd commented, "Trends indicate that in all probability there will be more campus visits in 1958, more college graduates needed in industry, more job offers at higher salaries. Salaries today average

Thirteen "pearls of womanhood," the wives of a baker's dozen Bowdoin seniors, received their "diplomas" nearly two months ahead of their husbands at a special ceremony on April 30 in the Moulton Union.

The "diplomas" were presented by Mrs. Philip S. Wilder, advisor for the Bowdoin Wives Association, which was formed following World War II. The certificate, complete with the Bowdoin seal, was awarded "in recognition of the loyal and devoted service of this fair Wife to the cause of Husband and Bowdoin. She hath inspired her Loved One with her natural wisdom and typing ability, with patience hath borne his foul examination moods, and hath fortified well his inner man with budgeted nourishment. Loud be our praise of this pearl of womanhood, this true helpmeet and charming wife!

"And may she send her sons to Bowdoin in the fall."

Certificates were presented to the following wives: Constance E. Baribeau, Roberta M. Cooper, Shirley M. Coster, Elinor DeF. Crane, Anne E. Fleishman, Frances N. Greene, Ruth L. Hardie, Catherine D. Hone, Nadine F. Lyon, Patricia F. Morrill, Beverly A. Murdock, Jane G. Roundy, and Elizabeth B. Wagner.

The husbands of these "pearls of womanhood" will have to wait until Bowdoin's 152nd Commencement exercises on June 15 to receive their bachelor of arts degrees — after their helpmeets have seen them through their final examinations and major examinations.

In the picture above the wives, from left to right sitting, are Mrs. Robert Philbrook, Mrs. Donald Dole, Mrs. Oliver Hone, Mrs. Richard Greene, Mrs. Richard Baribeau, Mrs. Philip Wilder (advisor), Mrs. Logan Hardie. Standing, Mrs. Michael Coster, Mrs. Herbert Cousins, Mrs. Alfred Haller, Mrs. Myron Curtis, Mrs. James Murdock, Mrs. Charles Morrill, Mrs. David Roundy, Mrs. George Crane, Mrs. Anthony Fleishman, Mrs. Whitney Lyon.

The Bowdoin Sailing Team had another very good season. Here six of the sailors are pictured with some of their "loot," including the Class of 1930 Trophy, which they put up themselves two years ago and have won ever since. The trophy was given its name in appreciation of the generosity of that Bowdoin class in giving the Sailing Club five Tech dinghies at its 25th reunion in June of 1955. The five dinghies have gone a long way and have accomplished a lot. Now interest in sailing is at the point where another five dinghies would be in constant use!

$401 per month as against $383 a year ago. This figure is almost twice the average starting salary of ten years ago.

"The most active opportunities in 1958 for the liberal arts man will be in the fields of advertising, accounting, sales, production, marketing, and all aspects of insurance and finance. There will be many opportunities as well in research, for chemists, biologists, physicists, and mathematicians."

Tallman Professor

Dr. George M. Haddad of Damascus, Syria, has been appointed Visiting Professor of Near East History and Culture on the Tallman Foundation for the fall semester.

The twenty-fifth in the series of Tallman lecturers at Bowdoin, Dr. Haddad has since 1953 been Professor of History and Chairman of the History Department at the Syrian University in Damascus. He is a native of Homs, Syria, and attended the Protestant School there before entering the American University in Beirut, from which he received a bachelor of arts degree in 1929. From 1932 to 1934 he studied at the University of Paris and from 1947 to 1949 at the University of Chicago, which granted him a doctor of philosophy degree.

Professor Haddad has taught at the American Friends Boys' School in Ramallah, Palestine, and the public schools of Aleppo, Syria, as well as at the Syrian University. He was also for seven years Inspector of Education in Aleppo and Damascus.

He has collaborated in the writing of seven history textbooks for Syrian secondary schools. In addition, he is the author of "Fifty Years of Modern Syria and Lebanon" and of four volumes in Arabic on the history of world civilization.

Professor Haddad's appointment is made possible by a fund of $100,000 given in 1928 by the late Frank G. Tallman of Wilmington, Del., as a memorial to the Bowdoin members of his family.

The Alumni Council sponsored its annual dinner for members of the graduating class on Monday, April 29, in the Moulton Union. About 140 seniors attended.

Presiding at the dinner was Francis B. Hill '23, President of the Alumni Council and the Alumni Association.

The Pick Turner Tree has been planted on the campus north of Sills Hall and the Smith Auditorium. It will be formally dedicated at a brief ceremony during Commencement Weekend.

The Turner Tree, a sugar maple, has been made possible by contributions from members of the Class of 1919 as well as many other friends of Professor Turner.

Other alumni and friends wishing to make contributions should write a check to Bowdoin College and mail it to Roy Foulke at 99 Church Street, New York 8, N. Y.

The AD's Emma

Miss Emma Marstaller of Freeport, cook at the Alpha Delta Phi house for the past thirty years, was honored on April 27 by undergraduate and alumni members of that fraternity at a surprise party. She was the recipient of a specially engraved silverplate.

Emma was having her weekly night off when three AD's, ostensibly taking her out to dinner, drove her up to the chapter house and she was surrounded by about seventy undergraduates and twenty-five alumni, eager to celebrate the occasion.

Emma is completing her thirtieth year as the AD cook. Generations of Alpha Deltas have praised her cooking and placed it on a level at least equal to that of their mothers. Over the years she has also been an unofficial housemother for the fraternity. Some years ago she was given a "sister" pin by the AD's.

Earlier this year grateful and well-fed undergraduates presented a television set to Emma as a token of the affection in which they hold her.

Robert Frost Returns

On April 26 Robert Frost returned to Bowdoin as the Annie Talbot Cole Lecturer and spoke to a capacity audience in the Pickard Theater in Memorial Hall. No one could help feeling both moved and delighted as he listened to the country's best known poet read his and their favorite poems.

It was thirty-one years ago that Bowdoin honored Mr. Frost with a doctor of letters degree. The citation read on that occasion is just as applicable today—". . . generous and inspiring teacher of things of the spirit to American youth in different collegiate centers; beautiful and poetical interpreter of New England; a poet with few equals and no superior in contemporary American verse; rightly honored in all parts of our country, but nowhere more fittingly than north of Boston."

For the first time since 1873 the great English universities, Oxford and Cambridge, gave honorary degrees to an American poet this spring. On May 19 Robert Frost flew to England to receive these honors and to lecture and read his poems in London, Durham, and Edinburgh as well as at Oxford and Cambridge.

He is the first American poet to be so honored since Henry Wadsworth Longfellow of the Class of 1825 and James Russell Lowell.

Goodrich Books

The Yale University Press has presented thirty-one volumes to the Bowdoin Library in memory of the late Chauncey W. Goodrich of Brunswick.

A graduate of Yale in 1886, Dr. Goodrich received an honorary doctor of divinity degree from Bowdoin in 1915. He was pastor of the First Parish Church in Brunswick from 1913 until 1917, then retired to Brunswick in 1926. He was the friend and counsellor of hundreds of

Dr. Goodrich died at his home in Brunswick last October 5 at the age of 91.

A special bookplate showing the "Old Brick Row" at Yale has been designed for use in the Goodrich books at Bowdoin.

Woods Hole Grant

Assistant Professor of Biology James M. Moulton has received a grant of $1000 from the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution in Massachusetts in support of his research on the relations of sound to marine biology.

At Woods Hole this summer Dr. Moulton will continue his research in this field of biology. Since 1952 he has been studying the role that sound plays in the normal life of fish in the sea. Last summer he carried on research in the Bahama Islands, sixty miles east of Miami, Fla.

Fulbright For Ranlett

John Ranlett '57 of Bangor has been awarded a Fulbright Scholarship to Bedford College of the University of London in England, where he will specialize in European history, beginning next fall.

A graduate of Bangor High School, Ranlett is majoring in history and was elected to Phi Beta Kappa last June, when he was also awarded the Almon Goodwin Phi Beta Kappa Prize as the highest ranking man in his class. He has compiled a straight "A" record in all of his courses throughout his first 3½ years.

Last fall Ranlett was selected as one of the two Maine candidates for a Rhodes Scholarship to Oxford University in England. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. L. Felix Ranlett of Bangor and the brother of Charles Ranlett '54.

Alumni Clubs

ALBANY

The Albany Bowdoin Club met with Professor Athern P. Daggett '25 on April 10, with an excellent turnout of fourteen alumni. Included were Shorey '05, Hopkins '27, Rand '29, Manning '33, Allen '40, Lovell '40, Morrell '42, Greenly '45, Frederick '46, St. Clair '49, Washburne '50, Welch '50, Sweetser '52, and Lipas '55.

Convener John Manning reports that the Albany Bowdoin Club will sponsor another concert by the Bowdoin Glee Club next year.

AROOSTOOK

The Aroostook Bowdoin Club held a dinner meeting on March 28 at the Northeastland Hotel in Presque Isle, with Professor Samuel E. Kamerling as guest of honor from the College. He spoke to the twenty-two Bowdoin men present about the faculty, both old and new, and a most pleasant evening was enjoyed by all. The oldest member present was Thomas Doherty '95. Also in attendance were two undergraduates, Steve Green '60 of Presque Isle and Phil Kimball '59 of Fort Fairfield.

At the business meeting Sam Fraser '16 was elected President and Council Member, and Ken Bonenfant '42 was named Secretary-Treasurer.

BOSTON

The annual meeting of the Bowdoin Club of Boston was held at the University Club on Thursday, April 4.

President William W. Curtis '20 introduced Alumni Fund Chairman Louis B. McCarthy '19, who thanked those who have so far contributed and urged others to help improve the present 25% participation in the 1956-57 Fund. Mr. McCarthy described the Meddiebempsters' appearance with him on the "Strike It Rich" television show. He stressed the point that each alumnus is Bowdoin in his own business and social circle.

Vice President Bela W. Norton '18 brought greetings from President Coles and gave an informal account of campus doings.

John W. Tarbell '26 presented the following slate of nominees for 1957-58: President, Everett P. Pope '41; Vice-Presidents, Frederick A. Moore '49 and Robert L. Bell '42; Secretary, John B. Morrell '52; Treasurer, Donald N. Lukens '46. These nominees were elected. William W. Curtis was elected to the Alumni Council, with his term scheduled to begin July 1.

E. Frederic Morrow '30, Administrative Officer on the White House Staff, was the principal speaker of the evening. Asking Bowdoin men to share his pride in the College's history of constructive help to the American Negro, Mr. Morrow described his own work and recited many interesting incidents of his trip with Vice-President Nixon to Ghana and other African countries. Noting that Africa is the major target of communism, he stated that the United States must change its present practices and send as diplomats to those rising negro nations only the ablest men. Following his talk, Mr. Morrow led an absorbingly interesting, off-the-record question and answer session.

BRUNSWICK

The Bowdoin Club of Brunswick held its first meeting in nearly ten years when between 80 and 85 alumni from the area gathered at the Moulton Union on April 10 for a most enjoyable evening.

Following an excellent dinner the following officers were elected: President, Herbert Gillman '48; 1st Vice President, Edgar S. Catlin jr. '51; 2nd Vice President, F. Burton Whitman jr. '35; Secretary, Joseph A. Aldred jr. '53; Treasurer, Gustave O. Leclair '36; Council Member, Philmore Ross '43.

Named to the Executive Committee were John L. Baxter '16, Paul K. Niven '16, Robert L. Morrell '47, Paul Tiemer '28, Wallace C. Philoon '05, Clyde T. Congdon '22, Thomas P. Riley '39, Wolcott A. Hokanson jr. '50, and Mario A. Tonon '42.

Retiring President Baxter spoke briefly, then introduced President Gillman. Acting Dean Nathan Dane '37 commented, "This meeting is the most heartening experience I've had since I joined the faculty ten years ago."

Admiral Donald B. MacMillan '98, who happened to be in the area on one of his extensive lecture tours, spoke of his appreciation at being invited to the meeting.

Council Member Ross outlined the aims of the group as follows: 1. to bring Bowdoin men together two or three times a year as Bowdoin men; 2. to set up an active prospective students committee which will work closely with the Admissions Office to see that qualified boys in the area apply for admission to Bowdoin.

Ronald Bridges '30, Chief of Religious Information with the United States Information Agency and a former Tallman Professor at his alma mater, was the principal speaker of the evening. He stated that the world is getting better, as reflected in its humor, in what is funny. Illustrating his points with dozens of priceless stories, which kept his audience in helpless laughter, he described how brutality has largely disappeared from humor today. There is more consideration for people's feelings.

Any new group, Dr. Bridges said, has to run a gantlet of laughter in the United States before it is accepted. The value of humor is in the perspective it gives to something serious. Humor and laughter release us from pain and shock and suffering and enable us to laugh at ourselves.

Nearly 100 Bowdoin men left the meeting sure of two things — they had not laughed so hard for a long time, and it will be not be a long time before the next meeting of the Bowdoin Club of Brunswick is held.

BUFFALO

Professor Athern Daggett was the guest speaker from the College at a meeting of the Bowdoin Club of Buffalo on April 11, on the second leg of his speaking trip to Albany, Buffalo, and Pittsburgh. One member of his audience wrote afterwards, "Athern Daggett certainly charmed everyone with his informal and most interesting account of all that goes on at Bowdoin. He is most articulate."

CENTRAL NEW YORK

Thomas Chapman '50 was instrumental in arranging a meeting of alumni in the Syracuse area on May 4 at Martin's Restaurant in North Syracuse. Alumni present included Elmer Cooley '15, Arthur Chapman '17, James Kunkel '23, Charles Sawyer '28, Jack O'Donnell '37, John Andersen '45, Dick O'Shea '45, Bob Bryant '47, Gordon Hoyt '50, and Chapman.

Bob Bryant was elected President of the group and Tom Chapman was named Secretary. A discussion was held on possible recruitment of Central New York boys for Bowdoin. It was decided to hold a meeting in October, at which time alumni would plan to bring interested boys to talk with a representative from the Admissions Office.

The Secretary writes, "Central New York alumni also plan to sponsor a Glee Club concert in Syracuse next spring. We are very much interested in contacting all Bowdoin men in the area, so if anybody has been missed, would they please contact me at 47 Park Street, Pulaski, for further information."

CONNECTICUT

The Connecticut Bowdoin Club held its annual meeting on March 8 in the English Room of the Hotel Bond, with President Coles as the honored guest and speaker. The affair was stag and was attended by 75 alumni and guests.

Following the dinner President Ralph T. Ogden '21 opened the business meeting. Charles Barbour '33 reported on the state of the Connecticut Bowdoin Scholarship Fund, giving $3276 as the present amount. He also reported at some length on the February Alumni Council meeting at Brunswick.

The subject of future programs for raising money for the Scholarship Fund was discussed. David James '43, who has had considerable to do with such programs in the past, suggested that members consider seriously the matter of the size and frequency of such undertakings in order to maximize the profits realized and enjoyment obtained and to minimize the expenses.

Officers for 1957-58 were elected as follows: President, Benjamin B. Whitcomb '30; Vice President, Charles M. Barbour '33; Secretary-Treasurer, Richard A. Rhodes II '44; Council Member, W. Holbrook Lowell '33.

Following the business meeting, President Coles spoke on such matters as the size of the College, the need for more dormitory space, and athletics, with special attention to the successes of the hockey rink and the sailing team. He also spoke about the grave shortage of manpower that now exists in the world, not merely in the sciences but also and even more importantly, in the humanities.

FRANKLIN

The Franklin County Bowdoin Club met at the American Legion building in Farmington on May 8 for a dinner meeting and a showing of colored slides of the College. Guests from Bowdoin included Alumni Secretary Seward J. Marsh '12 and Administrative Assistant Robert M. Cross '45, both of whom spoke briefly about what was going on back in Brunswick.

President Luther Whittier '13 presided at the meeting and introduced Henry Hastings '41, John Bass '00, Dr. George Pratt '01, and Dan Gulezian '54. Others present were Dr. Paul Floyd '33, Joe Holman '47, George Bass '37, Dave Horn '29, Harry Smith '25, Pete Schwind '23, Emery Mallett '23, Bunny Bass '40, Arthur Smith '09, Sonny Austin '41, Earl Wing '10, Deane Peacock '17, Dr. Cecil Thompson '22, Dave Burnell '50, and Lawrence Clark '51.

New officers were elected as follows: President, Henry Hastings '41; Vice President, Sonny Austin '41; Secretary-Treasurer, Paul Floyd '33; and Council Member, John C. Marble '40.

JACKSONVILLE

A group of Florida alumni met with President Coles on April 2 at a luncheon in the Sky Room of the new Prudential Insurance Building in Jacksonville. The President wrote back to the College that afternoon, "I have met John Chandler '37, Edward Hawks '46, Lorenzo Baldwin '07 as well as Bill Mills '29, and I am staying with Winthrop Bancroft '16. Also Dr. George Raybin '40. Several of the charming wives were present.

"Yesterday I spoke at the Jacksonville Rotary as scheduled, and there seemed to be a good bit of interest in the small liberal arts college expressed there. Tonight we attend a meeting of the English Speaking Union, and tomorrow we are to have luncheon with the Commanding Officer of the Jacksonville Naval Air Station."

KENNEBEC VALLEY

The annual spring meeting of the Kennebec Valley Bowdoin Club was held at the Augusta Country Club on Wednesday, May 1. President Bernard Lucas '28 opened the meeting with 44 people present, including five secondary school seniors who have been admitted to the Class of 1961. The Secretary's report was dispensed with, and the Treasurer reported that the financial condition of the treasury was amazingly good. He reported that all bills would be paid, and through careful utilization of existing funds, there would be a small surplus left over.

President Lucas welcomed various visitors from other alumni clubs. Director of Admissions Hubert S. Shaw '36 introduced the five sub-freshmen and also gave a brief report on admission policies, as well as problems connected with his office.

President James S. Coles gave an account of the State of the College, referring to student achievements, faculty changes, the physical plant, and the struggle to keep Bowdoin a small college of about 750 students. He also praised the Bowdoin Plan, now universally adopted among colleges, and stated emphatically that Bowdoin is not interested in state or federal scholarship aid.

The meeting was adjourned at 9:45 p.m.

KNOX-LINCOLN-WALDO

The Knox-Lincoln-Waldo Bowdoin Club met on Monday, May 13, at the Knox Hotel in Thomaston to hear Hodding Carter '27, editor of the Delta Democrat Times in Greenville, Miss. It was Ladies' Night, and many alumni brought their wives to hear one of Bowdoin's best known graduates of the twentieth century speak about segregation.

MIAMI

A group of Bowdoin alumni in the Miami area gathered at the Garden Restaurant at noon on April 9 to meet with President and Mrs. Coles on the third and final stop of their swing through Florida. The President was also attending the sessions of the American Chemical Society in Miami.

Those present at the meeting included Carleton Greenwood '13, Storrs Brigham '08, Harry Piedra '17, Colonel and Mrs. Duff Wood '13, Bill Crowley '08 and his sister, Mrs. Jim Finn, Albert Dekker '27, Charles Mecker '21, John Slocum '52, Win Clark '38, Paul Niven '16, and a Tufts man, Mr. Higg.

NEW JERSEY

The New Jersey Bowdoin Club met with Professor Albert Abrahamson '26 on May 9 at the Suburban Hotel in East Orange. Like the Wilmington group which heard Professor Abrahamson on April 15, New Jersey alumni were delighted with their guest.

Some members of the group also attended the New York Bowdoin Club's smoker for Admiral Donald B. MacMillan '98 at the Princeton Club on May 8 and also heard the Meddiebempsters sing in Carnegie Hall on May 10. It was quite a Bowdoin week in the New York area!

NEW YORK

Alumni in the New York area turned out in large numbers on May 8 to honor Rear Admiral Donald B. MacMillan '98 at a smoker held at the Princeton Club.

NORTH SHORE

The North Shore Bowdoin Club held a very enjoyable and successful meeting at the Andover Inn on March 8. Guests from the College were Coach Nels Corey '39 and Acting Dean Nate Dane '37, who brought the group up to date on what has been going on in Brunswick, both athletically and academically. Officers elected for 1957-58 are as follows: President, Melvin L. Weiner '45; Vice President, William G. Kurth '54; Treasurer, Robert G. O'Brien '44; Secretary, Roy E. Davis '30; Program Chairman, Robert E. Maynard '31; Membership Chairmen, Charles G. Hatch '35 and Raymond W. Schlapp '29; Alumni Council Member, Robert S. Shepherd sr. '43; Admission Chairman, Robert N. Frazer '44.

PENOBSCOT

The Penobscot County Bowdoin Club held its annual meeting at the Tarratine Club in Bangor on May 2, with Professor Frederic Tillotson as the guest of honor. He played recordings of the various Bowdoin musical groups, including the Emanons, the Glee Club, the Meddiebempsters, and a Tillotson piano record.

Professor Tillotson also presented in interesting fashion a history of the Bowdoin Music Department, particularly since 1936, when he became a member of the faculty.

Officers for 1957-58 were elected as follows: President, Frederic S. Newman '38; Vice President, Dr. John Woodcock '44; Secretary-Treasurer, Malcolm E. Morrell jr. '49; Council Member, David G. Means '33. A committee on prospective students was named, composed of John E. Hess '44, Dr. Edward L. Curran '38, and Wallace S. Houston jr. '50.

Vale G. Marvin, retiring president of the group, conducted the dinner meeting, which was attended by about fifty members, wives, and guests.

PITTSBURGH

Professor Athern Daggett '25 concluded his three-day swing through New York and Pennsylvania with a meeting with Bowdoin alumni in the Pittsburgh area on April 12. Those in attendance were delighted with his description of present-day Bowdoin.

RHODE ISLAND

The Rhode Island Bowdoin Club met at the Agawam Hunt Club in East Providence on April 30, with President James S. Coles and Director of Admissions Hubert S. Shaw '36 as guests from the College.

ST. PETERSBURG

The March luncheon of the St. Petersburg Bowdoin Club was held on March 14 with fifteen present, including Smith '90, Lincoln '91, Fessenden '95, Carmichael '97, Marston '99, Clark '04, Haley '07, Pike '07, Dr. Charles Deering M'10, Burgh '11, Pope '11, Kennedy '13, Col. Eugene Fogg M'14, Tarbox '14, and Parkhill '46.

The final luncheon of the season was held on April 5, when President and Mrs. Coles were guests of the group. Doc Lincoln reports as follows: "Our guests arrived from Jacksonville by plane Thursday and dined with Fred Fessenden and me at our favorite restaurant. The lunch Friday was good and everyone enjoyed it. The men and wives present were Mr. and Mrs. George Carmichael '97, Mr. and Mrs. Elden Barbour '12, Mr. and Mrs. Ray Kennedy '13, and Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Chapman '17. Also on hand were Miss Rosamund Allen, granddaughter of President Joshua L. Chamberlain, and Smith '90, Fessenden '95, Pope '11, and I. Unfortunately five of our regulars had to leave before the 5th. We all hope that President and Mrs. Coles may come down again some day."

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Nine alumni had lunch in the Grill Room of the Los Angeles Biltmore Hotel on March 19. Included were Lee Paul '29, Paul Sullivan '35, Bill Spinney '13, Pat Koughan '43, Jim Hedges '44, Ken Senter '45, Terry Dunning '49, Albert Bartlett '20, and Dave Smith '46.

On Wednesday, April 17, 14 members of the Club met in Los Angeles to hear Dean Nathaniel Kendrick talk about the College. In the words of Secretary Taylor Cole, "We were much impressed with the progress that is being made and with the news of the completion of the new hockey rink and its fine contribution to the life of the College and the town of Brunswick. Those present at the dinner were Lee Paul '29, Paul Sullivan '35, Dr. Ralph Bucknam M'95, William Spinney '13, Francis Dane '31, Michael Lo-Cicero '31, Bob Coombs '40, Charles Stuart '37, Jim Hedges '44, Dr. Ken Senter '45, Dave Smith '46, Bob Speirs '50, Warfield Martin '52, and the Secretary.

"At this time we would like to announce our gala summer meeting at Albert R. Bartlett's home, 14549 Valerio Street, Van Nuys, on Sunday, June 23. This is an all-family affair, so come on out for a fine swim, dancing, cribbage, or whatever you like. Any details can be learned by calling either Dave Smith (CA 2-4937), Al Bartlett (ST 5-0127), or Taylor Cole (EM 2-6680). We are hoping to have a new all-color film of the College to show at the same time.

"I heard the radio program on KFAC about Bowdoin. The announcer had difficulty pronouncing the name. I called the station during the program and they corrected themselves immediately."

WASHINGTON

The Washington Bowdoin Club held its annual dinner meeting on April 12 in the Capitol Plaza Room of the Hotel Continental. More than 100 Bowdoin men and friends of the College turned out to greet President and Mrs. James S. Coles, the guests of honor.

Elected President for 1957-58 was Rufus E. Stetson jr. '42. Other new officers are Vice President, William F. Johnson '30; Secretary, Prescott H. Pardoe '51; Treasurer, David A. Dickson '48; Council Member, Robert L. McCarty '41; Ladies' Vice President, Mrs. Harold N. Marsh; Program Committee Chairman, David M. Marsh '51.

President Coles in his address made the suggestion that the Internal Revenue law be amended "to permit monies given for scholarships to our established colleges and universities to be deducted by the taxpayer from the computed tax due the government on his income, rather than deducting said amount from income before computation of tax."

This suggestion the President put forth as an alternative to the federal scholarship program legislation presently before Congress. The federal program would authorize 50,000 new scholarships each year, to be allocated among the states in proportion to the number of their secondary school graduates.

Dr. Coles also suggested, as an alternative to federal scholarships, the provision of Army and Air Force ROTC scholarships like those already offered by the Naval ROTC. These provide for regular Naval ROTC students a full tuition scholarship plus room and board, books, and supplies throughout four years of college.

The President praised the Bowdoin Plan, which since 1947 has brought to the College eighty-three men from twenty-five foreign countries, and concluded, "In the years past Bowdoin has found its strength as an independent college. Bowdoin, with the other independent colleges, has given strength to our country through their independence and freedom from any control or governmental support. We all hope that the Bowdoin of the future and the other independent colleges of the future can continue their positions of leadership through independent support, not supplementing government-supported institutions, but complementing them in an essential and unique manner."

At the meeting Merton G. Henry '50 was elected Secretary-Emeritus and presented a special scroll signed by all of the people present at the dinner. Alumni introduced by Toastmaster Robert Hale '10 included Frederick J. Libby '94, the senior alumnus present; Dr. Rufus E. Stetson '08 of Damariscotta, an Overseer of the College; and Professor Emeritus Orren C. Hormell H'51, who was visiting in Washington.

The toastmaster also introduced the Honorable Francis Sayre H'44, Representative Frank M. Coffin (Bates), and Justice Harold H. Burton '09, who all spoke briefly.

WILMINGTON

Bowdoin alumni in Wilmington held their annual spring meeting on April 16, with Professor Albert Abrahamson '26 as the guest of honor and speaker. As one alumnus commented afterward, "Jim Abrahamson couldn't have been surpassed as an emissary of the College. He takes the best aspects of Bowdoin with him wherever he talks."

The Wilmington group is not large, but a good percentage turned out to hear Professor Abrahamson, who spoke particularly about problems in the Middle East today.

WILLIAM E. LUNT, The History of England: Fourth Edition; Harper Brothers, 1956; pp. 980; $7.25.

It is a convincing tribute to a great teacher to have his textbook run to four editions. The late William E. Lunt's History of England was first published in 1928. It has long had wide acceptance as a solid core of reading for the basic course in British History. Having utilized a careful blend of political and constitutional history, economic and social trends, imperial and foreign considerations in previous publications, Professor Lunt in this new edition has continued this synoptic but penetrating treatment for two additional chapters on contemporary England. This fourth edition has thus preserved the value of Dr. Lunt's contribution to education for another decade at least. Few scholars and teachers have had the ability and the privilege to remain a vital part of their field for over a half century.

The two new chapters deal entirely with England's recovery after the second World War; and they probe the internal and foreign developments to 1955. It is seldom that modern British History courses get beyond the inter-war developments of the 1920's and 1930's. The lack of adequate textual material is one of the main reasons for this. With Professor Lunt's revision the progress and achievements of the Labor government, the post-war British economic ills, the more recent Commonwealth developments, and Britain's role in a new world order can readily be reviewed not only by the undergraduate but by any interested reader.

The book is particularly informing on the economic plight of the world's most recent empire. Professor Lunt views with unbiased eye the nationalization efforts, pointing out both favorable and unfavorable results, and tying in quite effectively for lay understanding the needs of nationalization and governmental controls at home in order to refurbish Britain's world economic position. He concludes that substantial progress was made both at home and abroad from 1945 to 1955.

Equally interesting is the author's feeling that in this decade Britain "made a notable contribution to the production and maintenance of freedom in the world." His evidence: England's gift of independence to three of its Asiatic colonies, its encouragement of progress toward self-government

WORCESTER

The Worcester Bowdoin Club held its annual meeting on April 12 at the Worcester Club, with about 50 alumni and wives in attendance to hear two guests from the College. They were Alumni Secretary Seward J. Marsh '12 and Professor Herbert R. Brown. Both told about happenings back in Brunswick and Professor Brown recounted as only he can the particular values of

in many of its possessions, and its support to and participation in treaties which committed England to aid in the defense of many countries in the world against aggression. "These extensive commitments," Professor Lunt concludes, "stand in sharp contrast to the similar obligations undertaken between the two wars by British statesmen, who were perplexed by quibbles concerning the definition of aggression and fearful of the consequences of too many alliances."

In the main body of the text Dr. Lunt has incorporated the fruits of recent research, particularly in connection with the Tudor-Stuart age. Beyond this he has pruned and added to the list of suggestions for further reading. All told, this first-rate text has been so revised as to keep it on the bookshelf of the student of English history for the immediate future.

FREDERICK S. ALLEN

WALTER P. BOWMAN, Lake Wentworth: the Lake Wentworth Association, Incorporated, Wolfeboro, New Hampshire; pp. 224.

Lake Wentworth, a two hundred and twenty-four page booklet, calls itself "a brief history" of a New Hampshire summer resort which possibly may be the oldest resort in America. The author, Walter P. Bowman, cautiously modifies that claim, calling it the first "inland resort" situated along a lake named for John Wentworth, "Last Royal Governor of New Hampshire." The booklet is published in limited subscription by The Lake Wentworth Association in commemoration of its twenty-fifth anniversary. The organization is a cottagers' association whose chief objective originally was to conserve the lake water. Like most associations of its kind it has, over the years, taken on other community projects benefiting two hundred and sixty cottage owners scattered along the shores of a lake whose water area is about five square miles. Lake Wentworth is one of the feeder ponds for Lake Winnepesaukee; its nearest town is Wolfeboro. The geographical location of camps along the shore and on the islands confuses me somewhat as I have little sense of direction, with or without a compass, but Mr. Bowman definitely knows what he is about. Water levels, dams, buoys and such make dull reading for a non-resident, but doubtless will be of great value to members of the Lake Wentworth Association.

Bowdoin College, leaving no doubt whatsoever in anyone's mind that he was correct in his choice of a college!

Officers elected for 1957-58 were as follows: President, Dr. Ivan M. Spear '44; Vice President, Duncan H. Dewar jr. '47; Secretary-Treasurer and Council Member, Cloyd E. Small '20. Named to the Executive Committee were retiring president Robert R. Neilson '42, Winthrop W. Carr '43, Sumner F. Crowell '48, and Robert C. Hitchcock '52.

Other aspects of the book have more general interest. Mr. Bowman has done a nice job condensing the early history of the region. The first permanent settlers arrived at Wolfeboro in 1768 following the close of the French and Indian Wars. Virgin forests were cleared and the inevitable building of sawmills began. The next year Governor Wentworth established "A Mount Vernon of the North" on the shores of Lake Wentworth. In 1770 he took his bride there for the summer. It was the Governor's dream to establish a summer capital in this "Paradise" and to hold sessions of the provincial courts. For nine years he held sway there; in 1778 his estate was confiscated and the Governor banished since he had remained loyal to his King throughout the Revolution. The buildings burned to the ground in 1820, the same year the former Governor died. The site of his home is now a state reservation.

The second aspect of general reading appeal concerns the early camping days. In the last quarter of the last century, year after year families made the annual pilgrimage to "The Lake" for the summer, to rough it and escape the growing formality of city life. Mr. Bowman traces the course of camp building from squatters' huts fashioned from old timber to the present "deep freeze" era. The author confesses to more than forty summers at Lake Wentworth, his knowledge of family history in the region dating back to 1884. He furnishes a vast amount of well chosen detail, bass fishing, berrying, and boating, to illustrate the kind of tenacious charm this type of summering holds. He evinces a warm feeling for our American heritage, with the family line moving sedately from graybeards to babies, older folks teaching the younger how important it is to "get away from it all."

Mr. Bowman has done an exacting chore extremely well. He avoids anecdote interesting only to residents and has not accented "quaint characters." Infinite patience has gone into his work. Writing "simple annals" is unrewarding except for those who love it. Mr. Bowman does. Should that long promised earthquake start up in New Hampshire, leveling hills and raising valleys, let it not be said that Lake Wentworth went, too, unremembered. Other summer resorts may be less fortunate.

ISABELLE POLLARD CONGDON

JAMES A. STORER, Maine Economic Development and the Community Survey: published by the Bureau of Municipal Research, Bowdoin College, March, 1956; pp. 54.

Those who are concerned about the future of the State of Maine can find in Professor James A. Storer's analysis of the economic development of the state much to belie the pessimistic outlook of the prophets of doom. Although Dr. Storer does not present a compilation of statistics and facts that are in themselves cause for rejoicing, the tone of the entire report seems to indicate that this is a period of transition and that Maine is now approaching the bottom of a cycle and is about to enter into a phase of economic progress. The report, divided into three parts, contains statistics on employment, skills, wages, wage scales, manufactured products, banking practices, and so forth that are an excellent history of recent economic change and a definite indicator of future trends — all this being presented from a realistic and practical viewpoint.

Part One, entitled "Economic Background of the State of Maine," is the statistical portion of the report. Because of the brevity of the report and the breadth of material it attempts to cover, the information tends to be somewhat sketchy. However, as regards the purpose of the book as outlined at the end of Chapter One, the information contained herein is adequate. The author states his purpose as follows: "It is hoped that discussion of the basic economic factors in this chapter will provide an impetus for further analysis so that not only will the larger pattern of the State's economy be apparent, but also the significant variations and individual characteristics of local communities will be known and understood." Professor Storer provides an excellent background or base for further analysis. It would have been well, however, to provide a more thorough study of capital resources and bank investment practices in Maine.

In Part Two, entitled "Community Considerations," we find an extremely understanding approach to the re-industrialization problems of Maine communities. This chapter shows an insight that was perhaps acquired by the author through his active participation in efforts to help overcome Brunswick's recent economic setback. He wisely admonishes, ". . . short run emergencies should not totally eclipse long run considerations. The advantages gained today may be easily wiped out by more permanent disadvantages gained in the process." He offers no magic formula as a panacea for Maine's economic ills, but while stating clearly that each community's problems may be different, he does outline the various approaches available to them. It might be noted that he appears to pass over the discussion of town planning too lightly. The report stresses the importance of planning, but a more thorough explanation of the ramifications of planning would be of great value in a report of this type.

Professor Storer's outline of the Community Survey is an excellent one and seems to leave nothing to be desired. It is an outline which he himself used when he directed the economic survey of the Brunswick Area, a document which received high praise from many sources and was adopted by the Maine Department of Economic Development as a recommended format for Maine communities to follow. Each part of the survey is thoroughly explained, and its value and purposes are outlined clearly. It is with this first-rate presentation of a proven method of community analysis that Professor Storer brings to a close a valuable report.

PHILMORE ROSS

BERNARDO GICOVATE, Julio Herrera y Reissig and the Symbolists: University of California Press, 1957; pp. 92; $2.00.

This is a lucid and penetrating study of the creative work of a highly imaginative and somewhat eccentric Uruguayan poet.

Julio Herrera y Reissig (1875-1910) is a literary figure little known outside Spanish America. Overshadowed by the greater and possibly more original contributions to poetry of his masters, Rubén Darío and Leopoldo Lugones, undisputed leaders of the Spanish American "modernista" movement, Herrera y Reissig's art is nevertheless worthy of serious attention in view of the melancholy Uruguayan's peculiar type of preciosity, his marvelous juggling with metaphors and synaesthetic images, and his unorthodox aesthetic position. The near-contemporary poets of the twenties and thirties, seeing in Herrera a kind of precursor of their own cult of the metaphor, have continued to adhere to this artistic credo, which Professor Gicovate traces to the French Symbolists and which in the author's words, "exacted the expression of the personal against the communicative value of words."

The first two chapters, setting forth a brief history of "Modernismo" and drawing the parallels between the poetry of that school and the verse of the French Symbolists, should prove enlightening to the uninitiated in particular.

Mr. Gicovate's careful and discerning stylistic analysis of Herrera's symbolism and imagery (Chapters III-VI) should render this monograph interesting to any student of literature.

PETER HOFF

Wenzell Brown '32, who attended the College in 1929-30 and went on to receive his A.B. degree from Rollins College, has recently had his fourteenth book published. Two more are awaiting publication and he has several others under contract. In addition, he has had well over one hundred articles published in leading magazines such as Look, Liberty, Reader's Digest, The Saturday Review, and Redbook.

It was Wenzell Brown who organized the committee to save Caryl Chessman, who, he believes, was unjustly sentenced to death in California. For years he has been an outspoken foe of Trujillo, the dictator of the Dominican Republic.

He has been particularly aroused by the plight of youth in trouble. He has worked with groups of young addicts trying to help them. This is recorded in his book, Monkey on My Back, and in various magazine articles. He has also worked with juvenile gangs as recorded in such books of his as Run, Chico, Run, and The Big Rumble.

Mr. Brown has campaigned for better courtroom procedures and for the abolition of capital punishment. His book, Invitation to Murder (republished in soft cover as The Lonely Hearts Murders), has been widely used in college and law school classes either as required or as supplementary reading. The Violators, which he wrote with Israel Beckhardt, has been used in the same way. It is a study of the causes of criminal behavior with recommendations for changes in treatment of criminals, emphasizing rehabilitation and minimizing punishment. The Violators was purchased by Galahad Productions as a moving picture. It has been filmed and will be released this summer through Universal.

Mr. Brown has contributed studies of three little known presidents in a series published by the American Mercury. The three are Rutherford Hayes, Andrew Johnson, and Franklin Pierce of the Class of 1824.

On the entertainment side he has written two historical novels, Dark Drums, which has sold nearly a million copies in paperback, and They Called Her Charity (reissued as Devil's Spawn), of which Henry Cavendish of the New York Times wrote, "It is a sheer piece of art from beginning to end."

Mr. Brown's first book, Hong Kong Aftermath, was written after his release from prisoner-of-war camp in Hong Kong. He was teaching English in Canton when Pearl Harbor came along. An entire printing of the book was purchased by the Army for use in its officer training schools. Later he made more than two thousand lectures for the United States Treasury.

The latest Brown book is The Wicked Streets. They Died in the Chair, tentatively scheduled for publication in November, is a history of the eight women electrocuted in Sing Sing Prison. It is an indictment of capital punishment.

AUTHORS

WILLIAM E. LUNT '04, a member of the faculty of Haverford College for thirty-five years and of the Bowdoin Board of Overseers since 1939, died on November 10, 1956. In the death of Professor Lunt, the College lost one of its most distinguished scholars and a devoted alumnus.

WALTER P. BOWMAN '31, formerly Professor of English at Western Reserve University, is now living in Baghdad, where he is Director of the American Language Center.

JAMES A. STORER, Associate Professor of Economics at Bowdoin, was co-director of the Report of Brunswick, Maine (1955) and is editor of the Maine Business Indicators, a monthly publication of economic changes in the state, issued by the Maine College — Community Research Program.

BERNARD GICOVATE '45, former teaching fellow of Spanish at Bowdoin from Argentina, has been a member of the faculty at the University of Oregon and the University of California. Professor Gicovate holds doctor's degrees from the University of Buenos Aires and Harvard, as well as an A.B. with honors from Bowdoin.

REVIEWERS

FREDERICK S. ALLEN, Amherst '52, who is studying for a Ph.D. degree at Harvard, is Instructor in History at Bowdoin for the spring semester.

ISABELLE POLLARD CONGDON, a graduate of Mount Holyoke, is the wife of Clyde T. Congdon '22. She is the author of many articles of historical and antiquarian interest and co-author with the late Rev. Thompson E. Ashby H'30 of The Bicentennial History of Brunswick. Mrs. Congdon's column has long been one of the most interesting features of the Brunswick Record.

PHILMORE ROSS '43, owner and manager of Phil's Men's Store, 78 Maine Street, Brunswick, is a member of the Alumni Council. Phil has been prominent in town activities as a Director of the Chamber of Commerce and a member of the Democratic Town Committee.

PETER HOFF, a graduate of Middlebury College, has completed his residence requirements for the doctorate at the University of Michigan. Mr. Hoff, who has taught at the University of Kansas, Boston University, Mexico City College, and Michigan, is now Instructor in Spanish at Bowdoin.

NOTES

Tesoro de Lecturas, edited by Sturgis E. Leavitt '08 and Sterling A. Stoudenmire of the University of North Carolina, has been published this spring by Henry Holt. The textbook, intended for intermediate courses in Spanish, presents a complete novel, a novelette, a play, short stories, and essays from modern Spanish and Spanish-American authors.

American Biography: Its Theory and Practice by Dana Kinsman Merrill '15 has just been released for publication and will be reviewed in a later issue of the Alumnus.

The Manlius Old Boys Bulletin, Winter, 1957, contains an article entitled "A Study of Languages" by Lawrence B. Leighton '25, Head of the Language Department at the Manlius School.

Dun and Bradstreet, Inc., has recently printed another interesting and informative pamphlet by Vice-President Roy A. Foulke

'19: Twenty-five Years of the 14 Important Ratios from 1931 to 1955.

Clarence D. Rouillard '24 is the editor of an anthology entitled Souvenirs de Jeunesse scheduled for spring publication by Harcourt, Brace. To quote in part from the preface, "The editor feels that this book, tapping as it does a rich vein of new reading material, will be welcomed by students and teachers alike as a fresh and invigorating supplement to the normal diet of short stories, plays, and novels." A modest protest from the Books Editor — why exclude the delightful souvenirs of Ernest Renan and Anatole France?

Lawrence Spingarn '40 sold a dozen short stories in 1956, including two ("The Pond" and "Ingermann") which made the honor roll of Best American Short Stories in 1955 and 1956. An article, "Slavery in the Danish West Indies," appeared in the current spring issue of The American-Scandinavian Review. He is under contract to Morrow & Co. for a novel.

Francis Russell '33 is the author of four articles recently published or soon to be published. They are "Coolidge and the Boston Police Strike," Antioch Review, Winter 1956-57; "Finley Peter Dunne," Conservative Review, May 1957; "Lost Elegance," American Heritage, June, 1957; and "The Pastor of Biebernheim," Antioch Review, Summer, 1957.

Philip Booth, Instructor in English at Bowdoin in 1949-50, is the author of Letter from a Distant Land, a volume of poetry published on March 7 by the Viking Press.

Dr. James M. Moulton, Assistant Professor of Biology at Bowdoin, is the author of "The Sounds of Fishes," published in Oceanus, Volume 5: Numbers 1 and 2.

Necrology

1879 DR. HENRY AUGUSTUS HUSTON, at 99 Bowdoin's senior alumnus, died at his home in Kew Gardens, N. Y., on May 4, 1957.

Born in Damariscotta on April 20, 1858, Dr. Huston was a tradition both at Bowdoin and at Purdue University, where he was also the oldest alumnus and received the first honorary degree in that institution's history.

He was a descendant of Sir Richard de Huston of Cornwall, England, who accompanied the Earl of Essex into Ireland in Queen Elizabeth's reign and received for his services a grant of land in Ulster on which he settled. One of his descendants, James Huston, received in 1730 a grant of land in Bristol, Maine, which is still owned by his descendants. According to Dr. Huston, "the Huston tribe was in Cornwall before the Battle of Hastings in 1066."

Uncle Henry, as he was known to his thousands of Bowdoin friends, always returned to the College whenever he possibly could and seldom missed a June Commencement. Three years ago, on the occasion of the 75th anniversary of his graduation, Bowdoin conferred upon him an honorary Doctor of Science degree. The citation read by President James S. Coles at that time said, in part, ". . . teacher, chemist, physicist, administrator, and business man, pioneering many paths of science, agriculture, government, and commerce.

Henry A. Huston '79
1858—1957

Droll sage, erroneously holding his own longevity to demonstrate that "the good die young. . ."

Two years ago, in June of 1955, Dr. Huston observed his 76th anniversary by marching in the Commencement procession, proudly displaying a Class of 1879 band upon both arms.

For nineteen years he taught at Purdue. He also did extensive research in agricultural chemistry and was with the German Potash Syndicate from 1903 until 1925. Last October 15 he was elected an honorary member of the American Society of Agricultural Chemists. He was the last survivor of those who formed the ASAC in 1884.

Dr. Huston retired in 1925, except for consultation work. For many years he made two sea voyages every winter to South America, each lasting 30 or 40 days. He played the flute at the ship's concerts and a year ago was elected a Lifetime Member of the Associated Musicians of Greater New York, AFL Local 802.

"An epidemic of institutionalized pomposity" is the definition Dr. Huston applied to Washington, D. C., when he was 95. He based his definition on some seventy trips he had made to confer with government officials and to attend scientific meetings.

Following the death of his wife in 1940, Dr. Huston lived alone in a six-room apartment in Kew Gardens, where he did his own cooking, kept up with the literature of the various scientific societies of which he was a member, and cheered for the Brooklyn Dodgers.

As Indiana State Chemist in 1895, he made a suggestion that later led to the Federal Food and Drug Act of 1906. Dr. H. W. Wiley, Chief Chemist of the United States Department of Agriculture from 1883 to 1912, was known as the father of the Food and Drug Act, but Dr. Huston was called its "grandfather," since he started the movement to develop the methods of analysis that made it possible to enforce the Act.

A member of Zeta Psi fraternity, he is survived by his brother, George A. of Damariscotta; two nephews, Frank C. Evans '10 and Henry D. Evans '01; and a niece, Miss Abbie Evans of Philadelphia.

With the death of Dr. Huston, Bowdoin's oldest alumnus is now Professor Howard L. Lunt of Los Angeles, Calif., of the Class of 1885, for many years a member of the faculty of the University of Southern California's School of Education and, following his retirement there, an author and publisher. Born February 22, 1862, in Durham, Professor Lunt is 95.

1898 WENDELL PHILLIPS McKOWN, retired

New York lawyer, died at his home in Pleasantville, N. Y., on April 16, 1957, at the age of 79. Born May 4, 1877, on Barters Island, Boothbay Harbor, he prepared for Bowdoin at Boothbay Harbor High School, of which he served as principal for two years after his graduation cum laude from the College. In 1903 he received a bachelor of laws degree from Harvard Law School. He worked in the law office of Anderson & Anderson in New York City until 1905, when he established his own firm. He practiced law in New York continuously from that time until 1937, when he was forced to retire because of ill health. He was a director of various corporations and was Corporation Counsel of Pleasantville from 1927 until 1933.

In 1928 Wendell served as President of the Zeta Psi Fraternity of North America and helped establish the fraternity's alumni club at 31 East 39th Street in New York. He was also President of the New York Bowdoin Club in 1932-33 and was a member of the Alumni Council from 1931 until 1934. He was chairman of the fund raising committee for the present Zeta Psi house at Bowdoin, built in 1929.

Wendell was the author of a book of verse entitled "Me an' Pete." He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Alice Kenniston McKown, whom he married in Boothbay Harbor on April 5, 1904; a son, Wendell P. jr. '29; two daughters, Mrs. Andrew McGray of Pleasantville, N. Y., and Miss Ruth McKown of New York City; three sisters, Mrs. James H. Hudson and Miss Florence McKown of Guilford, and Mrs. Donald Shaw of Springfield, Mass.; and five grandchildren. He was a member of Zeta Psi and Phi Beta Kappa.

1898 RICHARD HENRY STUBBS, M.D., who practiced medicine in Augusta for more than fifty years, died in that city on April 11, 1957, after a long illness. Born in Strong on June 27, 1875, he was the son of Philip H. Stubbs '60. He prepared for Bowdoin at Edward Little High School in Auburn and following his graduation in 1898 entered Harvard Medical School. He received his M.D. degree in 1902 and interned at St. Elizabeth's Hospital in Boston. The following year he came to Augusta and remained there the rest of his life. From 1904 until 1916 he was a member of the Maine State Board of Health and for many years was on the staff of the Augusta General Hospital.

Richard also studied in Vienna, Austria, and frequently at the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minn. He was a member of the Bowdoin Alumni Council from 1930 to 1933 and also served as President of the Kennebec Bowdoin Club. He is survived by a sister, Mrs. Charles W. Bell of Farmington, and by seven nieces and nephews. His fraternity was Delta Kappa Epsilon.

1902 ROBERT SANFORD BENSON, an expert on the raising of bees, died on March 2 in Mechanic Falls. Born on March 2, 1880, in West Paris, he was the son of Charles B. Benson of the Class of 1872. He prepared at Paris Hill Academy and was graduated from Bowdoin magna cum laude. He then taught for a year at Washington Academy in East Machias and was an assistant in chemistry at Bowdoin in 1903-04 before returning to his home in Snow Falls, where his occupation is best described in his own words of more than forty years ago — "Grand combination job! I am running, or rather being run by, a general store, post office, farm, poultry ranch, and keeping bachelor's hall, and cooking, with a little chemistry thrown in for spice — all of which amusements individually and collectively must be raised to the nth power to become an occupation or a job, though occupying time enough." A member of Phi Beta Kappa, he is survived by several cousins.

1904 FRANK HAROLD BYRAM, retired Maine

educator, died in St. Cloud, Fla., on April 26, 1957. Born October 30, 1882, in Freeport, he prepared at the local high school and following his graduation from Bowdoin was successively principal of Brownfield High School, Cornish High School, North Berwick High School, Livermore Falls High School. From 1915 to 1917 he served as district superintendent of schools in Bethel. For the next eight years he held the same position in Yarmouth and from 1927 to 1943 in Lisbon Falls. He retired to North Bridgton in 1943.

Frank is survived by his wife, Mrs. Muriel Palmer Byram, whom he married in Lewiston on June 19, 1921.

1904 OSCAR FRANKLIN LARSON, M.D., past president of the Maine Medical Association and the Maine Medico-Legal Society, died at his home in Machias on April 10, 1957. Born on April 6, 1881, in Monson, he prepared at Monson Academy and attended Bowdoin for one year as a special student. In 1905 he was graduated from Albany Medical College and practiced in Monson for a year before going to Jonesport in 1908. Six years later he went to Machias, where at the time of his death he was the oldest practicing physician in Washington County. He was also Washington County Medical Examiner and in 1955 received the 50 year medal of the Maine Medical Association.

During World War I Oscar was a lieutenant in the Navy Medical Corps for eighteen months. He was also associated with the United States Public Health Service for more than twenty-five years. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Josie Woodward Larson; two sons, Lt. Col. Thurman Larson '34 and Dr. Karl V. Larson; a daughter, Mrs. Virginia M. Holmes; and seven grandchildren.

The Machias News Observer for April 17 said, in tribute, "Only the members of his own family knew that he had not been well for some time, and were deeply concerned about his health. But the established habits of long years of faithful practice prevented him from taking the necessary rest and precautions. He was practicing medicine even on what proved to be his death bed. He was inquiring about his patients even in the throes of death. He could not lay down his burden of responsibility as family physician. Only death itself could end his will to serve."

Word has also been received of the death of the following Alumni. Appropriate notice will appear in the August Alumnus.

1906 CHARLES JOSEPH HICKS died in Westbrook on November 22, 1947, according to word received recently in the Alumni Office. Born there on August 11, 1887, he prepared for Bowdoin at Westbrook High School and completed his work at the College in three years. He lived in Philadelphia for thirty-five years. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Marcella McGinnis Hicks, who spends her summers at Prouts Neck, Scarborough. His fraternity was Kappa Sigma.

1909 WALTER NATHANIEL THWING was declared "officially dead" by the surrogate's court in Bath, N. Y., in March of 1951. He had been missing since he walked out of his law office in Wayland, N. Y., on November 25, 1941.

Walter was born on October 25, 1883, in Woolwich and prepared for Bowdoin at the Maine Wesleyan Seminary at Kents Hill. After attending the College for one year he entered Syracuse University College of Law. He was graduated from Syracuse in 1910 with a bachelor of laws degree and became a member of the Syracuse law firm of Gannon, Spencer and Mitchell. In 1915 he was appointed to the Syracuse University College of Law faculty, serving for a year as Instructor in Contracts.

In 1915 Walter became local attorney and claim agent in Rochester for the Buffalo, Lockport, and Rochester Railway Company and moved to Brockport. Four years later he opened his own law office in Wayland. He served as president of the Wayland Rotary Club, the Steuben County Draft Board, and the Wayland School Board. He was also given credit for starting a youth athletic program in Wayland.

Surviving are Walter's wife, Mrs. Lena Burdick Thwing, whom he married on January 4, 1910, in Otego, N. Y.; and a son, Richard of Cedar Grove, N. J. He was a member of Beta Theta Pi.

News of the Classes

1826 In observance of the 130th anniversary of the first colored newspaper, Freedom Journal, the Caribbean League of America, Inc., honored its founder, John Russwurm, on March 10. The West Indies Historical Observances, as the occasion was termed, was part of the Caribbean-American Friendship Week celebration, which was observed from March 10 to 16.

1879 Henry Huston, Bowdoin's senior alumnus at 99 and a grand old man if ever there was one, died at his home in Kew Gardens, N. Y., on May 4.

1889 Dr. Verdeil White, now retired and living in North Jay, is 91 years old.

1890 Secretary, Wilmot B. Mitchell
6 College Street, Brunswick

Wilmot Mitchell's grandson, Brookings '53, graduated from the Navy's Officer Candidate School at Newport, R. I., on March 1 as an honor student. He was sixteenth in a class of 939. Brookings has been assigned to the School of Naval Justice at Newport.

1891 Secretary, Dr. Charles S. F. Lincoln
38 College Street, Brunswick

Charles Lincoln is featured in the April 10 issue of Scope, published weekly by Physicians News Service, Inc., for The Upjohn Company. The article describes Doc's activities as the 87-year-old team physician for the Kids and the Kubs in St. Petersburg.

The article says, in part, "Dr. Charles S. F. Lincoln of Brunswick, Me., a retired physician, played until he reached the age of 83. A small man with a snow-white Vandyke beard, Dr. Lincoln is now 87 years old. He was a Kids and Kubs outfielder eight years before 'retiring' in 1953. Today he is the first-aid man for the two teams, an assignment that actually involves being both team doctor and team trainer.

"He sits on the bench at every game, ready to patch up any minor hurts. He is the players' adviser on keeping in condition, and he may be seen now and then cautioning one of the overzealous octogenarians, 'Take it easy now, you're not as young as you used to be.'

"Dr. Lincoln presently is cooperating with the Mound Park Hospital Foundation (geriatrics) in a study of the health habits of the Kids and the Kubs. 'I've often wondered, like a lot of others, what gives these fellows all their energy,' he says. 'I guess you'd say it's principally due to common-sense living, plus the fact all of them had their childhood and youth in an era when motorcars, elevators, soft diets, and all this soft living we know today were unknown.'"

Gunnar Bergenstrahle is the principal sales manager for a huge Swedish organization, Husqvarna, which, Ed Ham '22 reports, "handles every variety of contraption — sewing-machines and other related household appliances, ovens and stoves, and so forth. The firm has three separate factories. Gunnar never manages to detour into Maine because his business duties require visits to such other far-away places as Montreal, New York City, Mexico City, South America, and even the African Congo. All of which means that he has but little time for staying at home. Incidentally, in the town of Huskvarna, the 13,000 population includes no fewer than 3500 people employed in Gunnar's company.

"The foregoing information was supplied by Gunnar's charming (and youngest) daughter, Ebba, a student at the University of Kentucky, who will return to Sweden in June to complete her education at the University of Lund. Her two older sisters, both married, were also educated in the United States as well as in Paris and Sweden."

Fred Morrow was the feature speaker on February 26 when the Teaneck, N.J., Civic Conference received the annual B'nai B'rith Brotherhood Award.

Early in April Carl Moses said, "Just leaving for a month's trip to Cuba, Puerto Rico, and Venezuela."

Dave Oakes wrote recently, "On April 4 Fred Morrow delivered an inspiring, simple, sincere address before the Bowdoin Club of Boston at its annual dinner meeting. The burden of his address was Ghana, newly created nation on Africa's Gold Coast. This area, the size of the state of Oregon, is the land of Fred's ancestors and he was visiting as a member of Vice President Nixon's recent team on its good-will tour. The new nation is the 81st member of the United Nations; principal product is cocoa, from which it derives 85% of its revenues; name Ghana is derived from a great African empire of the Third Century. The country, with a population of five million, is trying to decide whether to take sides with communism or with the free West, and Fred makes no bones of his opinion that money won't help the cause of freedom, but a continuous supply of friendship, diplomatic equality, and recognition of the problems inherent in the establishment of any new nation will go far.

"Don Randall and I were the only members of 1930 present, although Fred Bird's son, Dave '56, was on hand."

Walt Placzankis says, "Walter jr. will be discharged from the Marine Corps in August after a three-year enlistment. Will complete education at Ripon College, in Wisconsin."

Dr. Jim Blodgett has been named to the Auditing Committee of the Worcester District Medical Society in Massachusetts.

A recent writeup about Carl de Suze has this to say — "He counts as his friends people like the Maharajah of Jaipur and a dairy farmer on the western side of North Conway, N.H.; the present Earl of Warwick and his Bowdoin College landlady in Brunswick, Maine; headwaiters of the great restaurants of the world and car hops along Route 128; peasants in Yugoslavia and the Supreme Patriarch of the Greek Orthodox Church in Istanbul. As a national reporter, he brings people to people and establishes what he feels is the only kind of communication that really counts. He believes in the personal hand across the sea as much as he believes in the United Nations.

"His newest lecture on India is expected to be outstanding since he is one of the few reporters who, in the middle of the recent Kashmir crises, was able to break down both Nehru and the President of Pakistan and get them to talk about their family life when they wanted to talk politics. No wonder he charms cold Bostonians and thaws the ice from the New England Winter."

On March 15 Carl presented his new lecture, "Sunshine Safari," for the benefit of the scholarship fund of the Reading, Mass., Teachers Association. The illustrated talk is "a pursuit of the sun which ranges through some of the most exotic spots of the world and, newswise, some of the most exciting. Friends who have viewed his bull-fight pictures, his French and Caribbean hideaways, his quiet villages in England, Mallorca, Italy, Greece, France, and elsewhere have persuaded him to combine these places in one long journey to ports of the sun."

Alan Steeves is now with RIAS, Inc., the Research Institute for Advanced Study, a subsidiary of the Glenn L. Martin Company. Its function is pure basic research in the sciences with no product application. It is contemplated that RIAS will eventually be self-supporting through contracts for basic research with both government and industry.

Alan writes from Baltimore, Md., where RIAS is located, "It is patterned after Princeton's Institute for Advanced Study, and this is the first time a commercial company has sponsored such an organization. My duties are several: I am organizing a research library and a publications program, and also the arranger of symposia, security officer, and general factotum of administration. It all adds up to a very interesting and varied occupation."

1939 Secretary, John H. Rich jr.
2727 Palisade Avenue

At the recent Albany meeting of Bowdoin alumni in the New York Capital District, the Secretary and Lt Comdr. Fred Lovell found a good many things to talk about. Fred is commanding officer of the Albany office of the U. S. Navy Recruiting Service. He was married last December 27 to Erna Renate Von Hoesslin of Frankfurt am Main, Germany. Fred, who has spent a good deal of time in Europe since the war, met his wife in Spain. He reports that he spent a pleasant evening with classmates Tom Lineham (Lt. Col., USAF) and John Stewart in Washington last fall.

Bennett McGregor writes that in June of 1955 he ended fifteen years with the American Mutual Liability Insurance Company as branch manager of the Waterbury, Conn., office, and took his present position in Providence, R. I., as manager of the insurance brokerage office of Murray, Vanderpoel, and Baker, Inc., an affiliate of the Firemens Mutual Insurance Company. Ben lives at 7 Belton Circle, Barrington, R. I. His office address is 150 South Main Street, Providence.

Bill Mitchell hopes to spend the next year as an exchange teacher in France. He has become quite a huntsman, having brought down the "largest deer taken in Cheshire County last December." But he adds in this report, "Still can't get the fish to cooperate."

Ed Palmer's report deserves to be quoted at length: "Still single, so I'm allowed to read Lawrence Spingarn's short stories in Caper, Rugged, and other playboy-type magazines. Governor Dwinell appointed me a member of his Committee on Hungarian Refugees. A sidelight of my committee work is that the Chairman, Mrs. Abby Wilder, also works with Charlie Griffin '26 in the New Hampshire Division of Employment Security. At my first committee meeting, Mrs. Wilder relayed the message that Charlie instructed her to look over the Bowdoin grad and 'if he wasn't too old' to ask him if he knew Charlie Griffin. To this I tartly replied, 'Tell Mr. Griffin I am so much younger than he that when I was at school his classmate Albert Abrahamson was already an associate professor.'" Ed also reports that he is First Vice President of the Eastern Slope Lions Club.

Charlie Pope is superintendent of production at the Louviers, Colo., explosives plant of Du Pont. He reports that it is good to be out of sales work, so that he can enjoy his family "each and every day."

John Andersen reports, "Married in June of 1948, and Riekey made his debut in June of 1949. Then we had Mary in June of 1950, Tommy in December of 1951, and Beatrice in July of 1955. So between housing, feeding, and clothing our brood, we really have our hands full. Boy, would I like to take Therese, my wife, to Bowdoin for Ivy houseparties or to a Maine game! However, the distance and the problem of leaving the children with someone prevent us from doing so. I attended a Bowdoin Glee Club concert here in Syracuse a couple of years ago. Nate Towne's brother was in the group.

"Say hello to any of my old cronies you may see."

John is with Permaeel Tape Corporation, and the Andersens live at 227 Hubbell Avenue, Syracuse 4, N.Y.

In April Ben Burr wrote from Philadelphia, where he was due to lecture at the Wharton School, "I manage to keep fairly busy, as does Bette, and the kids continue to grow up altogether too fast. Susan is now almost 11, and Nancy will soon be 6. Next week Bette and I are going to Bermuda for two weeks of vacation, with the kids staying home in Connecticut, in the good care of their grandparents. Aside from this our routine is pretty well settled, with much concentration on building a new porch, doing a bit of landscaping, and trying to keep abreast of developments in business." Ben is Executive Director of the National Association of Investment Companies.

Clift Cornwall writes, "Nothing very exciting since being out of the Navy in 1945. Insurance and real estate do not offer a 'thrilling' existence. Was married in 1945 — one daughter, who is now 8. Hobby is sports fishing — have a 38-foot job down in Brielle, N. J. Anyone interested give me a call during the summer months and out we go! The area is not overstocked with Bowdoin men, but I have seen Bunt Wyman '42 quite a bit and a few others that stray through. Any time anyone is in the area give us a call. We'd love to see them." Clift's business address is Cornwall & Ward, General Insurance, Mortgages, 266 Main Street, Madison, N. J.

From the Portland Sunday Telegram for April 21 comes the following item — "The reputation that Maine natives have gained throughout the nation — industrious, conscientious, thrifty, etc. — has spread to Hawaii. Recently the Hawaiian circuit court has been the target of criticism. It has been labeled 'inefficient, uncoordinated, and wasteful of time.' The only bright spot in the Hawaiian court system, as noted in a special report compiled by an expert, is Hilo's circuit judge, Luman N. Nevels jr., said to be the youngest U. S. circuit judge.

"He has been commended for 'going beyond the reasonable call of duty' in scheduling a trial for every business day throughout 1957."

Lu himself writes, "The family, including the wife, three children, two collie dogs, and bird, are all fine. Mary Ann is instructing a real estate course for a night class at our local blackboard jungle and I am, as usual, involved in approximately 25 speeches a month, Boy Scouts, Boys' Club, and so forth. A combine made up of my wife and three others recently purchased a large acreage for resort development on the famous Kona Coast and after the expenditure of around $500,000 we expect that we will have a relatively nice development.

"I expect to become a licensed private pilot this month or in March or April, which will be a help as, together with one of the local bankers, I have purchased a small plane in order to better get around my jurisdiction, which is about 4/5ths the size of Connecticut."

The Gillman Piano Company continues to offer new Kimball pianos and rebuilt pianos of all makes. It is also the sales agency for Thomas electronic organs.

Bob Good writes, "Am thoroughly enjoying myself here in England. Have been here two years now and will be staying until discharge in 1958. After that I plan to remain in England working as a civilian for the USAF Auditor General Office as an accountant-auditor. I'm located about half an hour from London, so find it quite easy to take in all the plays, operas, concerts, and so forth. Am living off the base in a small flat on a 250 acre private estate. Have been to the Continent several times. Returned last week (March) from a three weeks ski trip in Germany, Austria, and northern Italy. Had a marvelous time at Cortina, the site of the 1956 winter Olympics. Have met quite a number of really wonderful English girls, but have no matrimonial plans as yet. Sorry I won't be back in the States in time for the reunion. I plan to start graduate study at the University of London in June."

Art Hamblen reports, "Now we are four, but no good prospects for a liberal Bowdoin education yet. Westbrook Junior should be cheered to know that Margaret Grace (Miggie) was born on April 3 — 8 lbs. 12½ oz. That's where Physics I helped. The only reunions we're attending this year are Cornell Nursing School and Deering High School, but wait until next year!"

Don Johnston says, "Wife Barbara and I moved into our new house two years ago. We adopted our daughter, Lynn, 1½ years ago. Now have our application in for a boy, who we hope will come to us this year sometime. I'm still a salesman for Link-Belt Company, selling materials, handling and power transmission equipment to original equipment manufacturers in Milwaukee County. We attend the Congregational Church where John Alexander is one of three ministers. I'm still trying to conquer the game of golf. Hope to join a country club this year." On April 23 Professor Darling and Placement Director Samuel Ladd '29 attended the first annual Bank-College Conference arranged in Boston by member banks of the Boston Clearing House Association.

Dr. Darling plans to spend the summer in Brunswick working on a research project and doing some writing.

Professor Jean Darbelnet addressed a departmental meeting of the York County Teachers Association in Kittery on May 6. His topic was "Preparing Students for College French." In June he will go to Rutgers University to serve again as reader for the Advanced Placement Test in French administered by the Educational Testing Service.

Captain Herbert Flather and Captain Thomas Stockton attended the Model Corps Map exercise at the Headquarters of the First Army on May 3. Outlined at the meeting was the new tactical doctrine to conform with the current reorganization of infantry and armored divisions to meet the conditions of an atomic battlefield.

Professor and Mrs. William Geoghegan and their family have moved to 40 Federal Street. They plan to spend the summer at Wolfeboro, N. H.

Early in March Professor Emeritus Alfred Gross wrote from Barbados in the British West Indies, "Mrs. Gross and I have been enjoying our visit to the West Indies, especially during the times you were having so much snow and sub-zero temperatures in New England. The visit to Venezuela, British Guiana, and the 140 mile trip up the jungle river in Surinam (Dutch Guiana) provided unique experiences. The mountain scenery and tropical forests of Tobago and Trinidad with its rich bird life, hundreds of parrots, jacanas, motmots, myriads of colorful hummingbirds, and others were thrilling. I was especially pleased to have the opportunity to obtain an immense amount of material for publication on the Bananaquit, a typical bird of the tropics.

"We had a delightful visit with Dr. William Beebe at his tropical research station at Simla in the mountain jungles of Trinidad.

"Barbados is comparatively flat with much of the island made up of immense sugar plantations. The bird life is correspondingly very different yet just as interesting. Captain Hutt, the leading ornithologist of the island, has been driving us to all the good birding places, which has given us a comprehensive picture of the bird life and ecological conditions.

"We are leaving for St. Thomas Island on March 16 and will be at the Bermuda Biological Station during April and part of May."

Professor Cecil Holmes has accepted an invitation from the Social Science Research Council to be one of a group of forty college mathematics teachers who will spend eight weeks at Stanford University this summer in an institute sponsored by the Council and the Mathematical Association. The object of the session is to increase the participation of mathematics teachers and their students in the application of mathematics in the social sciences. Dr. and Mrs. Holmes expect to remain at Stanford for at least a part of the ensuing year, since his sabbatical leave is scheduled to begin in the fall.

Julian Holmes '52, son of Professor and Mrs. Holmes, will be married on June 8 to Miss Mary Robb Sultzer of Mount Vernon, N. Y., a graduate of Barnard College with a master of science degree in bio-physics from the University of Rochester. Mary works at the National Institute of Health in Bethesda, Md. Julian is still a physicist with the Naval Research Laboratory in Washington, D. C.

Professor Charles Huntington plans to be at Bowdoin's Kent Island until about July 25, doing further research on Leach's petrel and the herring gull.

On April 3 Dr. Huntington lectured at a meeting of the Topsham PTA and on May 9 at a meeting of the Old Bristol Garden Club.

Mrs. Huntington will teach biology in Brunswick High School next year.

1st Lt. Harvey B. Johns jr. has been appointed Assistant Professor of Military Science and Tactics, effective next fall. He is a 1951 graduate of the University of Oklahoma.

Professors Samuel Kamerling, William Root, and Gordon Hiebert attended the meeting of the Maine Section of the American Chemical Society at Lewiston on May 4. The April 6th meeting was held in Cleaveland Hall on the Bowdoin campus.

Dr. Kamerling spoke at the meeting of the Aroostook Bowdoin Club in Presque Isle on March 28 and at the meeting of the Androscoggin Bowdoin Club in Lewiston on May 7.

Glenn McIntire was a speaker on March 14 at the Augusta Kiwanis Club's annual College Series of Thursday dinner speakers at the Augusta House. His subject was "Some Educators I Have Known."

Professors James Moulton and Charles Huntington attended the Eastern New England Biological Conference at Simmons College on April 27. Three Bowdoin seniors, David H. Dott, John L. Howland, and Bruce McDonald, all presented papers at the conference.

Dr. Moulton has received a grant of $1000 to work at the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution during the coming summer on "The Relations of Sound to Marine Biology." With his family he will be at Woods Hole from June 18 until September 1.

On April 28 Professor George Quinby '23 wrote from Tehran, "All my work here is coming to a head during the next few weeks. Of the 20 one-acts written by my students at Fine Arts, seven will be tried out by my 70 students at the University as class performances, judged by a professional theatre man for prizes, and the best three repeated at the Fine Arts Theatre, where the Shah's brother-in-law will present the prizes to two winning playwrights and the winning director.

"Next week the University Drama Club will play Behrman's The Second Man for five performances. We tried it out at Isphahan late in March for two performances, but haven't been able to show it here until after Holy Month. It was translated by two of the students in my classes, one of whom is playing the lead.

"I start rehearsals tomorrow night for Paul Osborn's Morning's at Seven with the English-American Little Theatre group for an arena-style outdoor presentation early in June, probably in the compound of the British summer Embassy. Paul was a classmate of mine at Yale, so I'm delighted to be working on his play.

"I've been in consultation with architects for two theatres in Tehran — one half built, the other on the drawing boards — during the past few days. And I'm soon to start training Iranians at the Iran American Society, where some 3000 are studying English, a good many under Polly, in reading American plays. If they're up to it, we might show one of these to the public during the summer.

"We enjoyed our second visit to Isphahan and went on for public lectures to the oil country of Abadan, Khoramshahr, and Arwaz near the Persian Gulf early this month. I'm slated to make quick trips to Tabriz and Mashed for lectures in May, but rehearsal schedules and final exams may prevent. Polly's found there's to be a Girl Scout summer camp on the Caspian, and we'll doubtless visit it, particularly as Phil O'Brien '25 is in charge of Point 4 work near by."

Professor David Russell, retiring president of the Maine Psychological Association, addressed the annual meeting of that group on May 4. The meeting was held in Banister Hall at Bowdoin.

Lt. Col. Gates Stern, Commanding Officer of the ROTC unit at the College, will leave in September for service in Europe.

Captain Thomas Stockton of the ROTC staff will leave shortly after Commencement on June 15 for service with the 3rd Infantry Division at Fort Benning, Ga.

Professor Burton Taylor and Mr. Leighton van Nort of the Department of Sociology attended the annual meetings of the Eastern Sociological Society held in New York City on April 13 and 14. Professor Taylor has been appointed Chairman of the Committee on Nominations for 1958.

Professor Frederic Tillotson served as moderator for a panel discussion on stereophonic and monophonic recording at the annual conference of the Intercollegiate Council of Glee Club Conductors, held at East Lansing, Mich., on April 24, 25, and 26. The Council is composed of conductors of male glee clubs, including representatives from Europe.

On May 5 Professor Tillotson played the Bach

"D Minor Piano Concerto," accompanied by the Colby Community Orchestra, under the direction of Professor Ermanno Comporetti.

Professor Clement Vose has been appointed a Fence Viewer in Brunswick, giving Bowdoin two representatives of the three men in that category. The other, who was reappointed, is Assistant to the President Philip Wilder '23.

Former Faculty

1st Lt. George Daly retired on March 12 after more than 34 years of Army service and plans to enter Davenport Business College in Grand Rapids, Mich. He will be remembered by younger Bowdoin alumni as a member of the ROTC staff at the College.

Patrick Quinn, formerly Instructor in English at Bowdoin and now Assistant Professor of English at Wellesley College, is the author of The French Face of Edgar Poe, published recently by the Southern Illinois University Press.

Dr. Manning Smith, Instructor in Chemistry at Bowdoin from 1941 to 1944, and now Professor of Chemistry at Bucknell University, has been named the first recipient of the Class of 1956 Award for "inspirational teaching."

Medical School

1891 Dr. Harry Parsons observed his 90th birthday on March 14. He still enjoys working about the garden and grounds at his home in Winchester, Mass., where he and Mrs. Parsons have lived since 1913.

1900 Classmates and friends will grieve to learn of the death of Dr. Eugene McCarty on May 3 in Rumford.

1901 Classmates and friends will grieve to learn of the death of Dr. Herbert Larrabee on April 28 in Tewksbury, Mass.

1918 Dr. William Freeman, for the last thirty years a physician in Yarmouth, was guest of honor on February 24 at an open house sponsored by the Yarmouth Grange. Nearly 600 people attended. Dr. Freeman received a red leather chair, and Mrs. Freeman was presented a silver necklace and earrings.

1919 Dr. Eugene Drake, Director of the Heart Station at the Maine Medical Center in Portland, was a speaker at the fourth annual spring clinical meeting of the Maine, New Hampshire, and Vermont Chapters of the American Academy of General Practice. He spoke on "Recognition and Management of Early Heart Failure."

Honorary

1938 Kenneth Roberts was awarded a special Pulitzer Prize early in May. He was cited for "historical novels which have long contributed to the creation of greater interest in our early American history."

1949 Commander Edward Peary Stafford, the son of Mrs. Marie Peary Stafford of Brunswick, won $64,000 this spring on the television show "$64,000 Question." He reached $80,000 before missing a question about a Henry James book and dropping back to the $64,000 level.

Too early?

Well, perhaps, if you want to be strictly literal.

And yet, when she reaches college age will she be too late? Too late to get the kind of higher education so vital to her future and to the future of her country?

It all depends.

There is in the United States today a growing threat to the ability of our colleges to produce thinking, well-informed graduates. That threat is composed of several elements: an inadequate salary scale that is steadily reducing the number of qualified people who choose college teaching as a career; classrooms and laboratories already overcrowded; and a pressure for enrollment that will double by 1967.

The effects of these shortcomings can become extremely serious. Never in our history has the need for educated leadership been so acute. The problems of business, government and science grow relentlessly more complex, the body of knowledge more mountainous. The capacity of our colleges—all colleges—to meet these challenges is essential not only to the cultural development of our children but to the intellectual stature of our nation.

In a very real sense, our personal and national progress depends on our colleges. They must have more support in keeping pace with their increasing importance to society.

Help the colleges or universities of your choice. Help them plan for stronger faculties and expansion. The returns will be greater than you think.

If you want to know what the college crisis means to you, write for a free booklet to: HIGHER EDUCATION, Box 36, Times Square Station, New York 36, New York.

Elections 1957

BOWDOIN MEN very largely continue to "let George do it" when it comes to choosing their representatives. Of 7609 ballots mailed, only 1741 were returned. The results of the voting were as follows.

Two vacancies existed on the Board of Overseers. Nominated by the alumni to fill one of them was Gilbert M. Elliott jr. '25 of Portland. He was duly elected an Overseer at the June meeting.

To serve as Members at Large of the Alumni Council for four year terms, the alumni elected Louis B. McCarthy '19 of Newmarket, N. H., William S. Piper jr. '31 of Worcester, Mass., and Charles W. Allen '34 of Portland. Because of his election to the Overseers by that Board, Mr. McCarthy resigned as a member of the Council. David Crowell '49 of Brunswick was elected by the Council to fill the vacancy.

After a canvass of the Alumni vote, President Coles appointed as Directors of the Alumni Fund for three years, Frederick W. Willey '17 of Pittsburgh, Penna., Richard S. Thayer '28 of Marblehead, Mass., and Wesley E. Bevins jr. '40 of Cambridge, Mass.

The Alumni Council has organized for 1957-58 with these officers: President, Louis Bernstein '22 of Portland; Vice-President, Leland W. Hovey '26 of Cynwyd, Penna.; Secretary, Seward J. Marsh '12 of Brunswick; Treasurer, Glenn R. McIntire '25 of Brunswick.

New officers of the Alumni Fund are: Chairman, Jotham D. Pierce '39 of Portland; Vice-Chairman, Vincent B. Welch '38 of Washington, D. C.; Secretary, Seward J. Marsh '12.

You And Bowdoin And Money

Within a period of about two weeks, the last two weeks in June, Bowdoin received a lot of money, committed itself to spending a good deal of money, and announced plans to raise a whopping sum of money.

A once-popular song claims that "Money is the root of all evil." This truism hardly seems applicable at Bowdoin. Money will enable the immediate construction of a new dormitory for seventy-six students, to be built south of Hyde Hall near College Street. In announcing the authorization of the dormitory, the first to be erected since Moore Hall went up in 1941, President Coles said, "Funds for the construction of the dormitory have been appropriated from the unrestricted funds of the College. The money will be replaced by such contributions as may be obtainable in the future."

During the past year more than one hundred students who would have been living in a dormitory or a fraternity house, had space been available, were living off campus. One more year and this situation should be corrected.

Money also comes to Bowdoin. By June 30 the Alumni Fund, under the direction of Chairman Louis B. McCarthy '19 and with splendid performances from several reunion classes, had broken all previous records to smithereens, with a total gift of $155,246.23 from 3922 contributors, including 3773 alumni. The previous record was $113,839, set a year ago.

On July 1 Bowdoin received its final grant from The Ford Foundation under its Faculty Salary Endowment and Accomplishment Program. The check brought the total received to $707,500. The original grant, announced on December 12, 1955, was $509,500.

But Bowdoin cannot afford to sit back and rest on this $862,000, large sum though it may be. In his letter of July 19 to all alumni, President Coles announced plans to bring to the College within the next ten years "an added fifteen million dollars in capital resources." He also reported that when "material resources permit," Bowdoin will gradually enlarge its student body to nine hundred and twenty-five men.

Fifteen million dollars is a lot of money. Why does Bowdoin need that much? The answer is simple. Approximately three million in endowment is needed to increase faculty salaries, a most urgent need. One million in endowment is needed to increase scholarship aid, and another three million in endowment for general operations and maintenance. Additional buildings and enlargement of the present physical plant require upwards of three million dollars.

For an expansion to 925 students, it is estimated that Bowdoin needs five million dollars, in addition to the ten million required for the present level of enrollment, between 775 and 800.

What can the individual Bowdoin alumnus do to help Bowdoin in this time of great and urgent needs? First of all, and most important of all, he can demonstrate his support by contributing each year to the Alumni Fund, which continues to be the life blood of the College. The 1956-57 gift represents the income on nearly four million dollars of endowment which Bowdoin does not have.

The Alumni Fund is designed primarily to bring to Bowdoin money for current expenses. The fifteen million dollars the College is seeking during the next decade is for capital needs, not current expenses.

Beyond yearly support of the Alumni Fund, each alumnus can help in many ways. To use President Coles' words, he may assist "by being ever mindful of Bowdoin's needs, by interesting possible benefactors in Bowdoin, and by keeping the officers of the College informed of what they think might be developed as possible sources of funds."

Thus every Bowdoin man may participate in this capital funds program to raise fifteen million dollars. And thus every Bowdoin man has the chance both to help shape his College's future and to share in his College's future.

THE COVER

The cover picture shows Mrs. Roberta Cooper pinning second lieutenant's bars on her newly commissioned husband, All-Maine guard Ken Cooper of Medford, Mass. When photographer Harry Shulman took the picture on Friday, June 14, along with fifty other Commencement shots, he commented, "This is the one the Press Herald will use, I can tell already." He was right. Miss Cindy Lee Cooper, resting sleepily and happily in her Daddy's arms, was born on April 25.

Credit for the picture of the Meddiebempsters, used on the cover of the June ALUMNUS, should have gone at that time to Steve Merrill '35. It is another of his excellent portraits.

The 152nd Commencement

By Robert M. Cross '45

BOWDOIN'S 152nd Commencement was a memorable one for many reasons, but most of all it was memorable for the announcements President Coles made at the luncheon on Saturday, June 15.

The Governing Boards, the President reported, have approved a special program to increase the financial resources of the College by at least $15,000,000 during the next decade.

The Sesquicentennial Fund, which raised some four million dollars, was the first phase of a major capital funds campaign. It aided materially in providing additional classrooms, laboratories, the Pickard Theater in Memorial Hall, Harvey Dow Gibson Hall of Music, and the renovation of already existing facilities.

Needed now, however, and urgently needed, is three million dollars as additional endowment to increase faculty salaries. Another million in endowment is needed to increase scholarship aid, and still another three million in endowment for general operations and maintenance. Additional buildings and enlargement of the physical plant require upwards of three million.

For an ultimate expansion in enrollment, it is estimated that Bowdoin will need five million dollars, in addition to the ten million required for the present enrollment level.

This program will be organized through the office of Vice President Bela W. Norton '18, under the direction of the Committee on Development, which has made a three-year study of Bowdoin's financial position.

Increase in Size

President Coles also reported at the luncheon that Bowdoin is to make plans for an orderly increase in size to a student body of approximately 925. "In determining this program," he said, "the Governing Boards agreed that Bowdoin's primary policy over the next decade shall be to remain a 'small' college and utilize its resources in such a manner as to perform the functions of a 'small' college in superlative fashion.

"Bowdoin recognizes its obligation to provide the opportunities it offers to a somewhat larger number of students, and the College plans to accept a limited enlargement as its resources make such growth possible. However, further increase over the present enrollment will be permitted only with the added commensurate growth of resources beyond those required for the current enrollment level.

"Plans for an orderly increase to approximately 925 students are being made," President Coles stated, "as these additional needed funds are sought. The College must have positive assurances of the necessary resources for a larger Bowdoin before undertaking the proposed increase in enrollment."

Enrollment at Bowdoin in recent years has been between 775 and 820.

182 Receive Bachelor Degrees

Seven honorary degrees and one hundred and eighty-two bachelor of arts degrees were conferred in the First Parish Church in Brunswick on Saturday morning, June 15. Included in the graduating class were sixty-two men from Massachusetts, forty-one from Maine, nineteen from New York, thirteen from New Jersey, eleven from Connecticut, six from Pennsylvania, four from New Hampshire, three each from Ohio and Rhode Island, two each from Delaware, Michigan, Virginia, the District of Columbia, Canada, and Germany, and one each from Arkansas, Illinois, Texas, Vermont, Washington, Wisconsin, and Norway.

Honorary Degrees

The honorary degrees went to Governor Edmund S. Muskie of Maine, Under Secretary of the Treasury W. Randolph Burgess, Mrs. Harvey Dow Gibson of Locust Valley, N. Y., generous benefactor of the College; educators John W. Leydon '07 of Philadelphia, Pa., and Alfred W. Newcombe '14 of Galesburg, Ill., Portland surgeon Isaac M. Webber '17, and Winthrop Bancroft '16 of Jacksonville, Fla., President of the Rollins College Board of Trustees.

Baccalaureate

On Sunday, June 9, the traditional Baccalaureate service was held in the First Parish Church at 5:00 p.m. President Coles delivered the address; Art Perry '57 of Weston, Mass., was marshal for the graduating class; Professor Samuel E. Kamerling read the lesson; and the Reverend J. Arthur Samuelson gave the invocation and the prayer.

In his address President Coles told the seniors that "Ultimate solutions shall forever lie beyond human reach. Yet man must strive, strive always toward those solutions. His knowledge and his wisdom recognize the impossibility of solving all problems of life. His creative will will conquer many."

Speaking directly to the seniors, Dr. Coles said, "My charge to you this day is in contrast to futility, to anxiety, to fear, or to the seeking of empty pleasures. My charge to you is to make your life thrill to the undertaking of new tasks, to wager your future on your ability, to soar on your own wings.

"The stakes are large. You may leave life a success in your greater service to man and God, returning many-fold that which you have gained while on earth. Or you may leave this life a failure in the all-seeing eye of your own and the greater conscience."

Thursday's Activities

Thursday's feature was the Class of 1932's twenty-fifth reunion reception at the Pickard Field House, with many faculty members, seniors and their families, and other friends of the College present. All had an enjoyable time, with both the College and guests of 1932 in complete agreement about the generous and hospitable nature of that Bowdoin class.

Nine other classes held regular five-year reunions during the weekend, and still more classes scheduled off-year gatherings. Many started their reunions on Thursday.

Friday Meetings

Friday was even more packed with activities than usual. In the morning the directors of the Alumni Fund and the Alumni Council held meetings in Sills Hall. New officers for 1957-58 were elected, among other business. The new Chairman of the Fund Directors is Jotham D. Pierce '39, and the Vice Chairman is Vincent B. Welch '38, as the younger men take over.

The Alumni Council elected Louis Bernstein '22 as President and Leland W. Hovey '26 as Vice President.

ROTC Commissioning

General Willard G. Wyman '20 was the featured speaker on Friday, when sixty-four Bowdoin seniors received commissions as second lieutenants in the United States Army Reserve at a special outdoor ceremony on the terrace of the Walker Art Building.

General Wyman, one of only four four-star generals in the Army on active duty, stated that "the people of the United States as a nation are cast today in the role of the shining knight on the stage of the world.

"The people of the United States," he continued, "have been entrusted with material wealth and resources beyond any ever before known to man. We have been entrusted with the blood and genius of every race that inhabits the earth. We have been entrusted with a symbol of human liberty as old as mankind — the torch held aloft by the Goddess of Lib-

"Only by serving others can we best serve ourselves. It is not enough that we be prepared to protect our own liberty and the lives of our own women and children. We must help protect the lives and liberty of free peoples everywhere against the threat of wanton force now loose in the world."

Two of the seniors were commissioned in the Marine Corps Reserve. Of the sixty-two ROTC cadets, sixteen were assigned to the Artillery, fifteen to the Signal Corps, and twelve to Armor. Other branch assignments were as follows: Infantry 9, Quartermaster Corps 5, Adjutant General Corps 3, Medical Service Corps 2, and Transportation Corps and Military Police Corps, 1 each.

General Wyman is at present Commanding General of the Continental Army Command, with headquarters at Fort Monroe, Va.

Alumni Institute Lectures

An innovation at Bowdoin's 152nd was furnished by the two Alumni Institute lectures delivered by Professors Noel C. Little '17 and Athern P. Daggett '25. Professor Little spoke on "Some Aspects of Astro-Physics," illustrating his talk with mechanical demonstrations. Professor Daggett took as his subject "Democracy and the Uncommitted Nations: Something for the Credit Side."

Encouraged by alumni attendance at the lectures, the College hopes to offer similar talks next June.

Other Friday Events

Also on Friday the Alumni Association held its annual luncheon and meeting in the Sargent Gymnasium. At the same time the Society of Bowdoin Women, those loyal ladies, were meeting in the Moulton Union.

The Alpha Chapter of Maine of Phi Beta Kappa held its annual meeting and election of new members at 3:15 on Friday afternoon. From 4:00 to 5:30 President and Mrs. Coles held a reception in the Moulton Union for members of the senior class and their families, returning alumni, and guests.

Early Friday afternoon friends of the late Professor Perley S. Turner '19 gathered at a spot a bit northeast of the Smith Auditorium for a brief ceremony, at which the Turner Tree was formally dedicated. The tree, a sugar maple, was made possible by contributions from members of the Class of 1919 as well as many other friends of Professor Turner.

annual Commencement play, presented on Friday evening in the Pickard Theater in Memorial Hall. The performance was directed by A. Raymond Rutan '51, Acting Director of Dramatics in the absence of Professor George H. Quinby '23, who will return this fall from Teheran. Rutan has a Fulbright fellowship to Japan for the coming year.

The Church Exercises

In keeping with Bowdoin tradition the only speakers at the Commencement exercises in the First Parish Church on Saturday morning were four members of the graduating class. They were William J. Beckett of Damariscotta, whose subject was "The Confusion of Tongues"; Robley C. Wilson jr. of Sanford, who talked on "The New Slobbism"; John L. Howland of Quincy, Mass., who spoke on "The Need of Being Versed in Country Things"; and Ludwig Rang of Bad Godesberg, Germany, whose subject was "A Generation Without Heroes." The alternate speaker was Richard B. Lyman jr. of West Nyack, N. Y.

At the luncheon Wilson, the son of Robley C. Wilson '22, was announced as the winner of the Goodwin Prize for the best Commencement part.

The Dinner

There seemed to be more lobster salad than ever — and it was more delicious than ever — at the Commencement Dinner, held for the first time in the Arena. The mounds of orange lobster on green lettuce helped to make up for a hot, humid, sticky afternoon. Although the program ended about twenty minutes before the 3 o'clock deadline, a good many alumni departed early in the proceedings, wishing that the acoustics in the Arena were better and that the re-

AGAIN—NEW HIGHS

With 3922 contributors and a total gift of $155,246.23, the 1956-57 Alumni Fund has established new records in the number of contributors and in the total dollars contributed.

Another gratifying feature of our yearly gift to Bowdoin is the fact that 50.8% of alumni participated in the Fund.

The reunion classes of 1907, 1917, 1922 and 1932 made special efforts to celebrate reunions with substantial gifts. But the record highs were made possible by exceptional work on the part of Fund Directors and Agents.

Chairman Louis B. McCarthy '19 proved a dynamic leader who generously passes the credit on to "his team."

The Class of 1907, observing its Fiftieth Reunion, won the Alumni Fund Cup with a performance of 526% of its Fund objectives.

The complete report of the 1956-57 Alumni Fund will appear in the October issue of the ALUMNUS.

all kinds of important possibilities and implications for the future. Alumni made their way out of the Arena thoughtfully, and as they drove home, they discussed and wondered how they might help their College get the fifteen million dollars it needs in the next decade to remain the Bowdoin they want it to be.

Here And There At The 152nd

Howard L. Lunt of the Class of 1885, Bowdoin's oldest alumnus since the death of Henry A. Huston '79, wrote to President Coles just before Commencement from Los Angeles, Calif., where he has lived since retiring from the faculty of the School of Education at the University of Southern California. Mr. Lunt said, "Memories of Bowdoin are still a part of my life. . . . My chief occupation and anticipation are scanning the daily newspapers and tuning in for the radio and television programs. It is indeed an honor to be one of the many sons of Bowdoin."

contributors, or 48.7% of the alumni body.

W. Lawrence Usher, speaking for the Class of 1932, announced an initial gift of $12,000 to establish the Class of 1932 Scholarship Fund.

John H. Halford reported the establishment by the Class of 1907, back for its 50th reunion, of a fund for support of the Longfellow Professorship of Romance Languages with a record class gift of $30,000.

And So It Ended

And then Commencement was over and 182 men had received their bachelor of arts degrees. It was time to go home — wherever that might be. It was a good Commencement, Bowdoin's 152nd, with many things done that are full of Governor Muskie and President Coles.

At Commencement President Coles announced the promotion of seven members of the faculty. Walter M. Solnitz became Associate Professor of Philosophy, and Richard L. Chittim '41 Associate Professor of Mathematics. Five men were promoted to the rank of assistant professor, Stephen Minot in English, Leighton van Nort in sociology, Peter Hoff in Spanish, David B. Walker in government, and Merle J. Moskowitz in psychology. In addition, Master Sergeant Frank L. Doggett of the ROTC staff was named Adjunct Instructor in Military Science and Tactics.

This was the fiftieth Commencement Dinner at which George Higgins was responsible for setting up tables and making other arrangements. He sat with the fifty-year class, 1907, at the dinner, and his grandson, Walter Higgins jr., was the page for President Coles.

Harry L. Palmer '04 resigned as a member of the Board of Overseers and was elected Overseer Emeritus, effective June 30. He was elected to the Overseers in 1934 and was Chairman of the Sesquicentennial Fund from 1949 until 1953.

Chester G. Abbott '13 was elected President of the Board of Overseers, succeeding Philip G. Clifford '03. Mr. Abbott's classmate, Sumner T. Pike, was named Vice President of the Board.

John Halford tells the audience at the Commencement Dinner of 1907's gift.

Two new Overseers were elected in June. Louis B. McCarthy '19, the retiring Chairman of the Alumni Fund, was elected by the Board, as was Gilbert M. Elliott jr. '25 following the alumni ballot.

All seven honorary degree recipients were awarded doctor's degrees. Governor Muskie and Randolph Burgess received doctor of laws degrees. Mrs. Gibson, Winthrop Bancroft, Alfred Newcombe, and John Leydon all were granted doctor of humane letters degrees, and Isaac Webber was made a doctor of science.

One senior, John Ranlett of Bangor, was graduated summa cum laude, having received a grade of "A" in all of his courses throughout four years. David Kessler of West Hempstead, N. Y., graduated magna cum laude, and twenty-four other seniors received their degrees cum laude.

Ranlett also received Highest Honors in history, the only man to be granted that distinction in any department. Nine men were awarded High Honors, and nineteen more simple Honors.

Seven men were awarded graduate scholarships for 1957-58 by the College. They are Raymond G. Biggar '52, David H. Dott '57, J. Steward LaCasce '56, Herbert A. Miller '57, Paul J. Morin '54, Kyle M. Phillips jr. '56, and Robley C. Wilson jr. '52.

At Commencement a special exhibit of paintings by Jeana Dale Bearce of Brunswick and Laurence Sisson of Boothbay Harbor was shown at the Walker Art Building. Mrs. Bearce is the wife of Professor George D. Bearce of the History Department.

The painting "Coriolanus at the Gates of Rome" by Peter Rothermel was given to Bowdoin by Mr. and Mrs. John H. Halford on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of the Class of 1907, of which Mr. Halford is a member. Last January Mr. and Mrs. Halford gave to the College two other paintings, "The Assumption of the Virgin" by Domenichino and "The Lost Sheep Found" by Pedro Orrente. They have also made many other gifts to Bowdoin's art collections. Mr. Halford is Chairman of the Committee of the Governing Boards on Art Interests.

Elected to Phi Beta Kappa on June 14 were one senior and four juniors. The senior was John L. Howland, Quincy, Mass., and the juniors Norman D. Block, South Paris, Roger Howell jr., Baltimore, Md., Nicholas P. Kostis, Sanford, and Allan D. Wooley jr., East Peru.

General Wyman speaks at the ROTC Commissioning ceremony, held on the terrace of the Walker Art Building.

The Almon Goodwin Phi Beta Kappa Prize, awarded traditionally to the highest-ranking member of the junior class, was presented to Howell, who has received a grade of "A" in every course at Bowdoin. He has an average of 97.09.

John W. Leydon '07 of Philadelphia, Pa., received the Alumni Service Award, climaxing a weekend full of honors for him. He also was the recipient of an honorary degree and is Class Agent for 1907, which presented a record class gift of $30,000 to the College on Commencement Day.

Art Perry '57 of Weston, Mass., also had a good weekend. He served as Class Marshal, was commissioned a second lieutenant in the Army Reserve, and was the recipient of the Haldane Cup, awarded each year to a senior who has shown "outstanding qualities of leadership and character." Last year as a junior Perry was awarded the "Wooden Spoon," emblematic of selection as the most popular man in his class. He was a three-year letterman in both football and hockey and was co-captain of the 1957 hockey team.

Mrs. Sanford B. Cousins of New York City was elected President of the Society of Bowdoin Women for 1957-58. Other officers elected at Commencement were as follows: Honorary President, Mrs. James S. Coles of Brunswick; First Vice President, Mrs. Marie Peary Stafford of Brunswick; Vice President at Large, Mrs. Philip S. Wilder of Brunswick; Treasurer, Mrs. Gilbert M. Elliott jr. of Portland; Assistant Treasurer, Mrs. F. Webster Browne of Brunswick; Secretary, Mrs. Creighton E. Gatchell of Cape Elizabeth; Chairman of the Nominating Committee, Mrs. Roland E. Clark of Portland; Chairman of the Friday Luncheon, Mrs. Bernard Lucas of Gardiner; Chairman of the Saturday Luncheon, Mrs. Seward J. Marsh of Brunswick.

Beneath The Pines

By John T. Gould, Jr. '60

This column is the first of many which we hope will be written by John T. Gould Jr. '60 of Lisbon Falls, the son of John T. Gould '31. The column is designed to bring to alumni the undergraduate point of view on various matters. A graduate of Lisbon High School, Johnny Gould is spending his summer vacation doing radio and television work in Sherbrooke, Quebec.

As soon as Dr. Gus' Biology Exam was finished and my freshman year at Bowdoin had ended, I went home and strolled around town with my Bowdoin T-shirt on. I wanted to make sure everyone knew about my collegiate affiliation. A high school sophomore stopped me in front of the drug store and asked, "Well, what did you learn during your first year at Bowdoin?"

Jokingly, I told him that I now knew that the fruit fly was used for studying genetics and continued to visit with my friends. It was not until the next day that I thought seriously about the question. I had asked many Bowdoin alumni what I was expected to learn before entering Bowdoin, but I had not stopped to evaluate my studying while at Bowdoin.

After considerable thought, I realized that the most important subjects I had studied were courses not even listed in the catalogue. Granted, Biology, English, and the rest were valuable, but they were only stepping stones to my more important studies. The four subjects I wish to mention are reading, writing, thinking, and listening.

READING In the first two weeks at Bowdoin I did more reading than I did in half a year at high school. Not only did I read more, but I discovered that I had to remember all that I had read. Actually the reading itself was not as hard as the comprehension. A professor bases part of a student's week's work on his ability to recall what was said in a passage on page 473.

Gould

WRITING To say a Bowdoin freshman learns to write is ridiculous. The freshman is exposed to many professional authors, discusses writing with an English 1-2 prof, and then tries to develop a style suited to his abilities. College writing usually starts with an autobiography and then jumps to an evaluation of Job or an imitation of Gulliver's Travels. Writing of this sort is different from a book report on Eli Whitney — His Cotton Gin.

THINKING Robert Frost told the Bowdoin Community last year that when he was teaching, any student who had one creative idea during a semester received an A grade. Mr. Frost quickly added that very few A's were given out. Thinking is probably the most foreign subject to a Bowdoin freshman. One student told me last year that he did not mind English 1-2 themes as long as the topic was assigned. "I hate it when I have to think of my own topic," he added.

LISTENING For some strange reason, when a professor says that an hour exam will be held on Wednesday in Sills 17, he does not mean on Friday in Mern Hall. A student at Bowdoin soon realizes that a great deal of his studying comes from listening to professors. Taking notes in a lecture course is easy. The difficulty is listening to the lecture and deciding what notes to take.

If a Bowdoin Freshman can close out his year by saying he has learned to read quickly and comprehensively, to write clearly and effectively, to think for himself — both positively and negatively — and to listen, realizing important from non-important, his first year of college has been a success. And, if any Bowdoin alumni are asked by prospective freshmen what they are expected to learn during their first year at Bowdoin, these four subjects may not satisfactorily answer their question, but it may give them an idea of the purpose of college.

On The Campus

Bowdoin has received a grant from the National Science Foundation to support an In-Service Institute on "Modern Physics for Secondary School Science Teachers," beginning in September. Under the program fifteen science teachers in Maine secondary schools will meet at the College once a week over a period of thirty weeks, with all expenses paid. Those completing the course will receive credit at the graduate level.

The Institute will begin on September 16 and end on June 6. The seminars and laboratory instruction will be shared by members of the Bowdoin Physics Department, including Professors Noel C. Little '17, Myron A. Jeppesen, Dan E. Christie '37, and Elroy O. LaCasce jr. '44.

The National Science Foundation has made grants totaling $138,000 to eighteen colleges and universities in the United States and its territories to support in-service institutes for the academic year 1957-58. Brown and Bowdoin are the only New England institutions to receive grants.

Faculty Doings

Kenneth G. Ainsworth, Instructor in Economics at Bowdoin for five years, has joined the faculty at Allegheny College in Meadville, Pa., as Assistant Professor of Economics. Lawrence L. Pelletier '36 is President of Allegheny.

Lt. Col. Louis P. McCuller has been named Professor of Military Science and Tactics, replacing Lt. Col. Gates B. Stern, who has left for overseas service. The ROTC unit at Bowdoin enters its eighth year this fall.

The 1957 Bugle was dedicated to Professor Charles H. Livingston, who retired from the faculty in June of 1956. The dedication was written by Professor Jeffrey J. Carre '40, who termed his former teacher of French "one of Bowdoin's great teachers."

"The small college," the dedication continues, "makes vast and conflicting demands upon its faculty. The ideal faculty member is expected to be a full-time and gifted teacher, a part-time but efficient administrator; he advises and befriends the undergraduate, he digs deep in the mines of research, he is known to every student in the school and to every specialist in his field. These demands Professor Livingston has demonstrated as attainable; these extremes he succeeded in holding together.

"The unifying force in his life and work will be found, we believe, in an extraordinary awareness of his responsibilities — to his students, to his college, and, above all, to his standards of performance."

Professor Cecil T. Holmes spent eight weeks this summer at Stanford University in California, where he attended the Summer Institute on Mathematics in Social Science, sponsored jointly by the Social Science Research Council and the Mathematical Association of America.

Dr. Holmes was one of a group of forty college mathematics teachers who worked at Stanford during the summer. The purpose of the Institute is to increase participation of mathematics teachers and their students in the application of mathematics in the social sciences.

Professor and Mrs. Holmes plan to remain at Stanford for part of the coming academic year, since he is on sabbatical leave during the fall semester.

Professor Reinhard Korgen will lecture on Operations Research at the Technical University of Denmark in Copenhagen during the second semester. The lectureship is supported by a Fulbright grant awarded to Dr. Korgen, who will be on sabbatical leave.

Professor Korgen is a consultant for the Operations Research Office in Washington, an organization which makes studies auxiliary to policy-making in the Department of Defense. He is also a consultant to the Arthur D. Little Co. of Cambridge, Mass., world-famous research organization, which is currently under contract to do research on the future industrial development of northern Norway, in a project with which he has been called upon to help.

Professor and Mrs. Korgen will be accompanied to Denmark by their two children, Kristi, who is ten, and Anders, who is six.

Professor and Mrs. Norman Munn left on June 12 to visit their families and friends in New Zealand and Australia, where he also delivered lectures to various groups.

Dr. Munn is the author of an article entitled "The Evolution of Mind," which appeared in the June issue of Scientific American. His textbook Psychology:

The 1956-57 Bowdoin Faculty.

The Fundamentals of Human Adjustment, has been translated into Turkish and French; Swedish, Finnish, and Hindi editions are in preparation. The book is in use at more than five hundred colleges and universities, including schools in Canada, South Africa, New Zealand, Australia, and Great Britain.

Juniors Win Honors

Bob Plourde '58 was named for the second consecutive year to the National Collegiate All-American swimming team. He was ranked third in the country among college swimmers in his specialty, the 200 yard backstroke.

Peter Potter '58 appeared on the Arthur Godfrey Talent Scouts program on June 24 and, according to Mr. Godfrey himself, "knocked the thing off the peg," in reference to the applause meter's hand, which swept beyond the perfect score marker.

Potter sang "The Donkey Serenade" in winning the competition easily. He appeared on Godfrey's morning program for the rest of the week.

Now a senior at Bowdoin, Potter is trying to decide between the concert stage and musical comedy. In 1952 he won the Walt Disney Prince Charming contest and was awarded a trip to England. He is a member of the Meddiebempsters and one of Zeta Psi's strengths in the annual Interfraternity Sing.

It's WBOR Now

Radio station WBOR at Bowdoin is now broadcasting at 91.1 megacycles. Formerly WBOA, WBOR became a non-commercial, educational FM station in the spring semester.

WBOR's broadcasts may be picked up within a radius of approximately ten miles of the campus. The station broadcasts from 2 o'clock in the afternoon until 12:30 a.m. from Sunday through Friday when college is in session. In addition, athletic contests are broadcast on Saturdays.

Also presented are programs of classical music, campus lectures and concerts, chapel talks, and news.

The conversion of WBOR to FM status was made possible through the generosity of the Class of 1924, which originally gave the money to establish the station at its twenty-fifth reunion in 1949. Two years later a three-room broadcasting studio was completed on the second floor of the Moulton Union. All three rooms are air-conditioned and sealed against disturbances of sound with acoustical tiling. The studio is equipped with a console board, FM transmitter, two record turntables, and two tape-recorders. There is also a collection of some 3500 records.

WBOR is now the second largest activity at Bowdoin, ranking next to the

NEW GLEE CLUB RECORD

Both those who heard the 1957 Glee Club perform and those who did not will be interested in the new LP record of last year's program which is now available.

The record may be purchased at the Moulton Union Bookstore or at the Bowdoin Record Shop, run by Herb Gillman '48 and Don Strong '48 and located near the First Parish Church. Price is $3.95, plus sales tax, insurance, and postage. Many alumni acquired the record at Commencement. Many others will want to do so this fall for their own use or for Christmas presents.

Glee Club. Approximately sixty-five men take part in the various phases of broadcasting.

Roosevelt Cup

Three undergraduates shared the Franklin Delano Roosevelt Cup, presented at the morning Chapel service on May 14. They are Norman D. Block '58 of South Paris, James M. Fawcett III '58 of Brooklyn, N. Y., and Richard A. Hillman '58 of Rosemont, Pa.

The Roosevelt Cup, given by Alpha Delta Phi fraternity, is inscribed each year with the name of "that member of the three lower classes whose vision, humanity, and courage most contribute to making Bowdoin a better college." The judges decided to make the award to three men since the decision was so difficult to reach.

Block has been chairman of the Student Curriculum Committee. He is also a straight "A" student. Fawcett was chairman of the 1957 Campus Chest Weekend last March, is vice president of the Class of 1958, and is a member of the Student Council. Hillman was editor of the 1957 Bugle, generally recognized as one of the best in Bowdoin's history.

Pugwash Conference

Fourteen college presidents, including Bowdoin's President Coles, and two deans from eleven states and Canada gathered at the ancestral home of industrialist

Cyrus Eaton on July 16 in Pugwash, Nova Scotia, to discuss the "aims of education."

The presidents followed a group of international scientists who met at Pugwash for six days of sessions earlier in July on the perils of the atomic age. After the presidents concluded their meetings on July 26, a group of sixteen deans from colleges throughout the United States moved into Pugwash for a ten-day program.

Mr. Eaton, who is chairman of the board of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway, inaugurated this program a year ago.

To renew their intellectual resources, the presidents spent the first day in a discussion of Plato's Symposium. Other books discussed included Gulliver's Travels, Revolt of the Masses, and The Courage to Be.

The presidents combined serious deliberations with recreational activities. Regular seminars were scheduled for each morning, and afternoons were given over to recreation. Evenings were reserved for informal discussions.

The Pugwash conferences were part of a group of four such meetings provided by the Association of American Colleges. Other gatherings were held on the campus of the University of the South in Sewanee, Tenn., and at the Wagon Wheel Ranch in Creede, Colo.

The Fund for the Advancement of Education granted funds to cover travel and expenses of participants and to provide for a comprehensive study and published report of the conference series with the aim of suggesting lines of future development.

Those attending the conference at Pugwash with President and Mrs. Coles were the presidents of Vassar, Baldwin-Wallace, Bard, Washington College in Chestertown, Md., Case Institute, Wayne State University, the University of New Hampshire, the University of Chattanooga, University of New Brunswick, Cedar Crest College, Allentown, Pa.; Hampton Institute, Connecticut College, and Middlebury. Most of the presidents were accompanied by their wives.

ANDROSCOGGIN

The Androscoggin Bowdoin Club held two meetings this spring. On May 7 members met with Professor Samuel Kamerling from the College. Most of those present said it was "the most interesting club meeting" they had ever attended.

A second meeting was held at Mrs. Lawton's in Lewiston on Tuesday, June 5. At the dinner Alumni Council representative Luther Abbott '39 discussed the membership functions and subjects of discussion of the Council.

CLEVELAND

In his final report as secretary of the Cleveland Bowdoin Club, before taking over a position as Administrative Assistant in the Alumni Office at the College, Pete Barnard submitted the following report: "The Cleveland alumni met on March 15 at the Oak Room for an informal luncheon. Our guest of honor was Vice President Bela Norton '18, who brought us news of the College and a report of the latest happenings on campus. Among those present were Bill Burton '37, Bob Burton '43, Ollie Emerson '49, Hal Foster '33, Charlie Freeman '50, Dick Lamport '32, Dick Woods '37, and Pete Barnard '50.

"The Cleveland group continues to work away at getting good boys interested in the College. Our program calls for maintaining contact and good relations with the various college counselors at the local high schools and prep schools, and we try to augment this by personal interviews, the showing of slides, and the like whenever the opportunity presents itself. Undoubtedly we will once again hold a luncheon for prospective candidates during the Christmas holidays. This has become almost a tradition with us.

"Cleveland was well represented on campus at Commencement. Dick Woods and Bill Burton were both back for their twentieth reunion, and Bill had the signal honor of being grand marshal for the Commencement procession. Pete Barnard was on hand to represent the Cleveland Club at the meeting of the Alumni Council.

"New officers of the group are as follows: President and Council Member, Oliver F. Emerson '49; Vice President, Robert S. Burton '43; and Secretary-Treasurer, Hallett P. Foster '33."

PORTLAND

The Portland Bowdoin Club held its annual spring meeting on Friday night, May 17, at the Falmouth Hotel. Marcus P.

Chandler '23 was re-elected President of the group. Other officers re-elected were Jotham D. Pierce '39, Vice President, Edward E. Fox '26, Second Vice President, and William B. Kirkpatrick '49, Secretary-Treasurer. Widgery Thomas jr. '47 was elected Assistant Secretary-Treasurer, and new directors are Creighton E. Gatchell '32 and Robert H. Weatherill '48.

President James S. Coles was the featured speaker of the evening. He discussed the State of the College.

RHODE ISLAND

New officers of the Rhode Island Bowdoin Club, elected at the annual meeting in May, are as follows: President, Herbert Hanson jr. '43; Vice President, Howard H. Dana '36; Treasurer, Edwin H. Lundwall '50; Secretary, Walter S. Donahue jr. '44; Council Member, Elbert S. Luther '40.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

The following account of the June 23 meeting of the Southern California Bowdoin Club was sent in by Dave Smith '46, who was instrumental in arranging the gathering. "The outing on the 23rd was a success, with about fifty members and family members present. Hosts Albert R. Bartlett '20 and Mrs. Bartlett graciously provided the setting, including a swimming pool and poolside social area for the afternoon and a clubroom for our barbeque, meeting, and showing of colored slides of the College.

"Those present included Albert Bartlett '20, Paul Sullivan '35, Lee Paul '29, Francis Dane jr. '31, and Dave Smith '46 and their families. Also Dr. Ralph Bucknam M'95, Dr. Gordon Howard '21, Patrick Koughan '43, Lawrence Spingarn '40, Dr. Plimpton Guptill '20, George Wheeler '01, and three undergraduates from the Delta Sigma fraternity who were out here on vacation.

"It was decided at the meeting to put off new elections until our next regular winter session."

VIRGIN ISLANDS

The first regular annual meeting of the Bowdoin Club of the Virgin Islands was held recently in the private bar of Stoners' of St. Thomas. An account of the meeting was sent in as follows: "All members were reported present and accredited. Business of the day included election of officers for the current year. James G. Woodbury '49 was elected President and Garth P. James '32 Vice President. Secretary elected was J. Gibson Woodbury '49 and Treasurer, G. Pierpont James '32. Honorary President is Seth Larrabee '39. The Club decided unanimously to ask President James S. Coles to address its planned 1958 Carnival dinner next year."

Looking

A class of only twenty-nine graduated, but it contained several men who were to become distinguished — Clarence B. Burleigh, Austin Cary, distinguished forester; Rev. Oliver D. Sewall, Elliot B. Torrey, and others.

John Avery, who had been Professor of Classics for ten years, resigned because of ill health and was succeeded by Frank E. Woodruff, who was to fill the chair of Greek for thirty-five years. Professor Avery died the next September.

A department of history and political science was set up under the professorship of Charles Henry Smith, who as "Cosine" Smith had been in charge of the mathematics department for thirteen years.

The custom of sabbaticals was yet to come, but Professor Lee was excused until the next March to serve as naturalist with a federal government expedition around Cape Horn. During his absence his courses were to be carried on by Austin Cary. Charles C. Hutchins '83, who had been tutor since 1885, became instructor of physics — to remain active with the College for 40 more years and Emeritus 13 years.

Class Day exercises in the morning were held as usual in Memorial Hall, and weather conditions made it necessary to hold the afternoon exercises and evening dance in the same place, although the platform under the Thorndike Oak had been gaily decorated and illuminated with six electric lights. Notwithstanding the incongruity, the pipe of peace was smoked on the platform in Memorial Hall instead of under the oak, but the class marched in the rain cheering the different buildings. The elaborately planned dance orders for the hop did not arrive, but simple substitutes were hastily prepared and furnished before the music commenced. As long customary, the Salem Cadet Band furnished the music.

Commencement was signalized by a much more impressive graduation of the medical class than usual. Edward Stanwood '61, editor of The Youth's Companion, made a distinguished address, and J. Warren Achorn of the graduating class delivered an address on "Where Shall Maine Medical Graduates Settle?" which the Orient printed in full.

At the Commencement exercises honorary degrees of LL.D. were conferred on Professor Avery and Dr. Barker of New York and of D.D. on the Reverend Charles Morton Sills of Portland, among others.

The Governing Boards appointed Judge Putnam and General Hubbard a committee to prepare a scheme for memorial inscriptions in Memorial Hall. Later General Hubbard presented to the College the bronze tablets which now are in the lobby of Memorial Hall from which the stairs ascend to the Pickard Theater.

Changing the curriculum, the Boards specified the requirement of mathematics,

Backward

Greek and Latin for two years and French and German for one year each, junior and senior year being elective.

A Dickens carnival for the benefit of the public library was the social feature of the spring term, with many students taking part.

A college rally at the beginning of the spring term was becoming a custom which continued for some years. At this year's meeting the many students and alumni present listened to music and speeches, but there was a financial deficit which had to be made up by voluntary contributions.

William J. Bryant, "the well-known candidate for the United States presidency," spoke to a large audience of students in Memorial Hall. He was introduced by Professor Robinson before returning to Portland for a reception. Notwithstanding the fact that few of them could or would vote for him, the students attended en masse and cheered him to the echo. The Orient says that the "speech was a masterpiece and made a deep impression upon his large audience."

Coach Morrill of the track team was assisted with the broad jumpers and sprinters by F. J. W. Ford, Harvard '06, now United States Judge in the District of Massachusetts.

The Bowdoin debating team won the unanimous verdict of the judges in a debate at Syracuse, New York, with the University of Syracuse in which Bowdoin sustained the advisability of annexing Cuba if Cuba should be willing. Redman, Roberts and Hupper made up the Bowdoin team. Subsequently Redman, Kimball and Hupper successfully maintained private ownership for street railroads in a debate with Cornell. This was Bowdoin's fifth consecutive debating victory.

The Orient entered a strong protest against playing tennis on Sunday.

Statistics of the income and expenditures of Bowdoin men collected by Professor Foster were published showing that Bowdoin students earned an average of $225 per man during the college course. It was the opinion of the Orient that the pamphlet cogently established that Bowdoin is a democratic college and that the students working their way through college stand in the lead in all college activities.

Bowdoin lost the state athletic meet by one point to the University of Maine. Robinson '07 captained the team after the resignation of Kimball. But the baseball team was almost unique in the history of Bowdoin athletics. It won the championship. None of the four colleges had ever won as Bowdoin did this year with an undefeated record, and it was twenty-two years since Bowdoin had previously won the pennant. The undefeated champions subsequently lost the Ivy Day exhibition game with Colby, but who cared — especially when they went on to beat Harvard 5 to 4, something rarely done by a team from the Pine Tree State. With the score tied and two men out in the ninth inning, Harris made a hit and brought in Files from third base. At the Ivy Day game Captain Files presented Johnnie Irwin, the popular baseball coach, with a gold watch and fob given by subscription from the student body. Johnnie Irwin was about the only baseball coach in Bowdoin history who could turn out a consistently winning baseball team.

The Orient expressed the affirmative opinion of the undergraduates in reply to an inquiry from a member of the faculty regarding establishing courses in mechanical drawing, descriptive geometry and surveying, and regarding the ideal size of the College. One hundred eighty-eight could room in dormitories and one hundred eleven in fraternities, but "the town of Brunswick, of course, can hold an almost unlimited number of students" and many of the double dormitory rooms were occupied by single roomers. A new dormitory to the south of Appleton Hall was suggested, and an increase of the College by one hundred to a total of about four hundred was advocated. The courses were duly installed, but the size remained static for some years to come.

At the Ivy Day exercises the oration was by Albert T. Gould, later to become a distinguished Boston lawyer. Harold W. Stanwood of the baseball team, later to be a distinguished physician in Rumford, was the popular man.

Commencement saw the graduation of a class which was to be almost unique in its program of annual summer reunions during the next half century and distinguished among Bowdoin's classes for its contributions to Bowdoin personnel and causes.

At the Class Day exercises, where good weather permitted the afternoon and evening outdoor ceremonies, Linnell was the president, Kimball the marshal, Bass, Haley and Robinson the committee. In the morning exercises the prayer was by Hull, the oration by Redman, and the poem by Snow. In the afternoon Roberts had the opening address, Cony the history, and Duddy the closing address and parting ode.

On Wednesday of Commencement Week centenary exercises on Longfellow's birth were held where "Morituri Salutamus" had been delivered thirty-two years before. The poet's three daughters were guests of the College and presented in his honor a fund to endow a graduate scholarship.

After everyone else had been seated in the church, the fourteen members of the Class of 1857 marched slowly down the aisle to reserved seats "amid the applause of the large audience." The Reverend John Carroll Perkins of Portland delivered the prayer, the Reverend Samuel V. Cole '74 delivered the poem, and Professor Henry Chapman a memorable oration which the Orient quotes.

On Commencement Day Hupper won the Commencement prize. Honorary degrees of LL.D. were given to Judge Hale, Dr. Mitchell, and Congressman Alexander; Litt.D. to Hon. Isaac B. Choate and D.D. to the Reverend W. S. Pearson of Somerville — all graduates of the College. Professor Chapman presided at the Commencement dinner in Memorial Hall with five hundred alumni and students present. Speakers were General Howard, Congressman Alexander, General Hubbard, Governor Cobb, Hon. Stanley Plummer, and Hon. Charles Gilman of Brunswick, a pre-Civil War Congressman. The Orient comments that "fewer speeches were made this year than usual." In that respect that particular dinner still stands out in the memory of those who had attended the long drawn out affairs that preceded and followed for many years. Governor Cobb brought tremendous applause when in speaking for the Class of 1877 he said,

"I would rather see the old halls falling into ruin, barren and tenantless; the beautiful buildings gone into decay; the walks of our campus grown into weeds and grass than that Bowdoin College should ever ask for or receive one dollar from the State of Maine."

The Boards were in session until long after the procession was due to start, because of the problem of the Latin department. Eventually, Professor Houghton was retired and Kenneth Sills was elected Professor of Latin Language and Literature in his place.

During the summer three undergraduates were drowned — Dugan '10 and Morrison and Lee, both 1908. Lee was the only son of Professor L. A. Lee of the faculty, and all three were conspicuous in college activities.

"Assistant Professor Brown of the English Department gave one of his too infrequent talks following which the undergraduates wooed enthusiastically" on the subject "Too Much Literacy." He suggested that "intellectual muckers, ready to parade words and call names without ideas," are more dangerous than illiterates.

A few days later the chapel audience was delighted with another of his "clever but all too brief talks" in which he urged the "Academic Hoboes" to cease tree sitting and get down to work.

The prevalent pacifism of the day was indicated by the sympathetic attention given at chapel to a speech by Mrs. Lucia Ames Mead, "a speaker whom some of our parents might have heard years ago," who deplored the horrors of war.

The new Chi Psi Lodge was rapidly nearing completion.

The Orient substituted for its regular edition of May 18th an imitation of the magazine Time under the name Grime. It may have seemed funny when published, but the flavor is now evaporated and the student of college history regrets that substituting this spoof for a news weekly deprives later readers of having detailed information about the state meet. Bowdoin won it easily, and at the New England Meet the College missed first place by only two points, for the second consecutive year beating 15 out of 17 teams contesting.

The less said about the baseball season the better. The only accomplishment of the nine was to win the Ivy Day game. It was the only victory in eleven games played.

Ivy Day was developing its social features at the expense of the literary exercises which in earlier years had featured the occasion. House parties were more interesting than public exercises. One indication of the change of interest is that the Orient announced in its pre-Ivy Day issue that the popular man was to be Albert Madeira. In earlier years the identity of the popular man was a secret carefully maintained until the presentation of the spoon.

No morning exercises were held, a baseball game taking their place. Besides the presentation of the spoon in the afternoon, the literary exercises consisted of a poem by Davis and an oration by D'Arcy. This was followed by an afternoon presentation of two plays by the Masque and Gown. Duke Ellington with an orchestra of fourteen colored players furnished the music for the Ivy dance, which began an hour earlier than usual, viz: at 10:00 p.m.

At Commencement the degree of LL.D. was granted in absentia to Sterling Fessenden of the Class of 1896, a distinguished American official in China. Among other degrees were Litt.D. to Professor Ridley, who had been exchange professor during the year, and Master of Arts to Dr. Charles S. F. Lincoln '91, the college physician. Elbridge Sibley was appointed to the department of sociology and Atherm Daggett to the department of history and government. Don MacMillan agreed to conduct a course on anthropology. Sophocles' "Oedipus Tyrannus" was the Commencement play presented on the Art Building steps. Phil Wilder became Assistant Professor of Education in addition to his alumni duties, and Ernst Helmreich came to the College as Assistant Professor of History and Government.

Alumni trays were presented to the Reverend Jehiel S. Richards of the Class of 1872, whose distinction was his lifetime service as a clergyman in small communities in the state, and to Lyman A. Cousens '02 for his devotion to the organizing of alumni and athletic affairs. Albert T. Gould '08, the Ivy Day orator of twenty-five years earlier, was elected to the Board of Overseers.

The Orient, by this time having given up the commendable practice of earlier years in postponing publication of the Commencement issue until after Commencement had occurred, came out on Commencement Day with a paste-up of what was expected to happen. We can only hope that it did, but from the Orient we would not know that there ever was an alumni dinner. As a matter of fact, there was, and a good one.

M. Phillips Mason

By Professor Fritz C. A. Koelln

IN THE NIGHT from Sunday, the 21st of July, to Monday, the 22nd, Mortimer Phillips Mason has passed away. The friends who have come together in this Chapel have done so to pause in the calm of this room in order to concentrate on this event and to allow the reality of this transition to burn itself deeply and permanently into their hearts.

During the last eleven years, which Phillips Mason spent in his retirement, he had completely stepped out of the limelight; and in so doing, he had followed a natural inclination. For even in his most active years he had always preferred to remain in the background. His unobtrusive manner concealed to many people how active his life really was.

Although the chief accomplishment of his life's prime was the organization and development of Bowdoin's Philosophy Department, which he directed for more than a quarter of a century, he was also a forceful figure in the public life of the community — especially through his long service on the school board of Brunswick. He was a true philosopher in every sense of that word, and his quiet wisdom reached many a person outside the academic fold who came to him for advice.

As a student, scholar, and teacher, Phillips Mason's career was distinguished also by outer standards. Born on the 19th of March, 1876, in Boston, and carefully prepared for Harvard, he graduated from Harvard magna cum laude in the class of 1899. In 1900 he took the degree of Master of Arts, and in 1904 he received the degree of Doctor of Philosophy at Harvard — after a most distinguished career of graduate studies, which took him to a number of the most outstanding universities of Europe. From 1899 to 1900 he was a member of Corpus Christi College at Oxford, and during the following years he studied at the German universities of Berlin, Heidelberg, and Marburg, and at the Sorbonne and the Collège de France in Paris. In the course of these studies, he worked under a number of the most prominent philosophers of his time — in Paris under Henri Bergson, and in Marburg under the founders of the Marburg Kant School, Hermann Cohen and Paul Natorp, whose daughter he later married.

Returned to this country, his career as a teacher was equally distinguished. It began in Princeton where Woodrow Wilson was President at that time. After a few years of teaching experience at a smaller college — Bryn Mawr — he became a Lecturer in Philosophy at Harvard from 1913 to 1919, a period which had just brought to its culmination and conclusion the most famous gathering of philosophers any American university ever saw: William James, Josiah Royce, George Santayana, and Hugo Münsterberg. For a younger colleague it was always fascinating to hear Phillips Mason speak of that time as well as of the other important phases of the more recent chapters of the history of philosophy which he had witnessed himself at such a great variety of important intellectual centers.

Two things gave great weight to his words. The listener could know that a highly educated and learned man was speaking; and if he really listened to his voice, he could become aware of the fact that this erudition and scholarship itself was a medium for a far more significant force. Phillips Mason spoke very calmly; his voice had a soft but firm musical quality as indeed he had a great knowledge of and love for music. As he lectured he spoke very evenly, never raising his voice. His presence in his class had the tendency to produce a hushed silence and his quiet voice easily carried into the last row of a fairly large lecture room. Its hidden strength bore witness to an inner substance which penetrated to his attentive audience. To know him was to be aware that the secret of his life rested on a remarkable power of concentration, with which he daily and hourly overcame the great handicaps of his later life. Since his eyesight was very much dimmed down, his appearance could become deceptive. As he had to walk more and more cautiously, one could easily mistake for weakness what was really the result of great care. He had a power to withdraw in meditative concentration, with the strength of which he could surprise those who thought they knew him quite well. I often had to think of Phillips Mason when I read the words of Goethe's Faust in the moment of his beginning blindness.

Jedoch im Innern leuchtet helles Licht.
The night seems deeper now to press around me
But in my inmost spirit all is light.

I see this light and I hear the carrying quality of a quiet voice as I think of Phillips Mason, whose strength will be with those who will remain faithful to his spirit.

Books

ISABEL WHITTIER. Susie, the Naughty Little Bat: Pageant Press, New York, 1956: pp. 17: $2.00.

Into the crowded animal world of children's literature comes Susie, the Bat, heroine of this uncomplicated moral tale. Susie, accompanied by her reluctant little brother, ventures into the forbidden brick house of People, "very big creatures, and dangerous, too." As forewarned, they are chased, batted and generally abused. Their hairbreadth escape and return home make up the substance of the story.

Considering its widespread unpopularity, Miss Whittier has treated the bat with sympathy and understanding. Though the story is brief and simply told, the moral is clear to even the very young listener. Miss Whittier's illustrations are charming.

MADELEINE BOOTH SWEET

DANA KINSMAN MERRILL. American Biography: Its Theory and Practice: The Bowker Press, Portland, 1957.

This book nicely fits into the end of one's shelf of biographies, where it can be consulted both as to the books that are already on the shelf and as to the new ones that seek a place there. But it should also be handy to the desk of anyone who is toying with the idea of writing a biographical sketch, memoir, or tome. The book will discourage the writer who thinks the job is easy, but if he is earnest and conscientiously seeks to do a good job, the book will help him.

The first third of the book is devoted to the theory, the rest of it to the practice of biographical writing. There is a careful index and three appendices respectively listing published biographies and commenting on campaign biographies and the lives of rogues and criminals.

In discussing theory Dr. Merrill is not theoretical. In his own work he obviously practices what he preaches. This first section of the book is written deductively instead of inductively. Each paragraph sets forth its thesis in the first sentence. The reader may miss the interesting adventure of following winding paths to an unknown goal, but from the first sentence he does know whether he should read the paragraph to confirm the author's conclusion or can concede it and skip to the next one.

In this section of the work, Dr. Merrill discusses the why and how of biography, analyzes the various types, distinguishes the factual from the interpretive, the romantic from the pedantic. The core of this section of the book is Dr. Merrill's exposition of this premise: "The three cardinal virtues of a superior biography are its truth, vitality and style."

The rest of the book outlines the history of biographical writings in the United States from the pattern that was set by Plutarch and improved by Dryden, Johnson and Boswell. Omitting autobiography from consideration, Dr. Merrill in separate chapters covers the several periods of biographical writing in this country—colonial, early, mid and late nineteenth century and twentieth century—with separate chapters on Jared Sparks, Washington Irving, Lincoln biographies, and Gamaliel Bradford.

The reader finds placed in proper perspective the biographies he has read from his grammar school days of Washington Irving's Life of Washington to today's reading of Catherine Drinker Bowen's biographies.

The last two chapters are eye-opening to the casual reader of biographical writings. "The Biography of the 1920's" and "Biography for the Sake of Biography" catalyze floating impressions.

The reviewer hunted in vain to find the omission or mis-statement which reviewers are expected to pinpoint. Every biography dear to him was mentioned—well, almost every one. Harold Nicholson's distinguished Life of Dwight Morrow is not mentioned, but then Harold Nicholson is an Englishman and that may well be the reason.

The college library usually gets the reviewer's copy of a book review. It won't get this one: it's needed right on the reviewer's shelf.

CLEMENT F. ROBINSON

LARRY GARA. Westernized Yankee: The Story of Cyrus Woodman: The State Historical Society of Wisconsin, 1956: pp. 254: $4.50.

From his graduation from Bowdoin with the Class of 1836 until his death in 1889, Cyrus Woodman combined varied business activities with interest in and concern for the College. Although his occupation kept him more than a thousand miles from Brunswick during his most active years, he maintained contact with classmates, and in his later years was an overseer of the College. Bowdoin figured prominently among his many benefactions, and he founded a scholarship to aid entering students from his home town of Buxton.

Mr. Gara's interest in the career of Cyrus Woodman is that of a business historian. His aim is twofold: to correct the historian's "favorite stereotype" of the Western land speculator as a grasping and hateful figure, and to make a case study in the development of a region—the Midwest—by nineteenth century entrepreneurs. Cyrus Woodman went west in the winter of 1839-40 as agent in Illinois for the Boston and Western Land Company. The assignment was no easy one during the deep depression following the panic of 1837, which had been brought on largely by unwise overspeculation in western lands, and it is not surprising that Woodman encountered the first of many difficulties and frustrations which troubled him throughout a busy life. Yet he managed his company's affairs to the satisfaction of all concerned and earned a reputation for honesty and integrity which he never lost. Later jobs which Woodman held after the dissolution of the Boston and Western Land Company involved him in the development of Wisconsin's lead mines, the timber industry of the Great Lakes states, banking, railroad building in Nebraska, and numerous minor business ventures. From 1844 until 1855 he was a land agent and law partner with Cadwallader C. Washburn. Soon after the Civil War Woodman and his family made their home in Cambridge, Massachusetts, although Woodman's resolve to live in retirement was anything but firm and he returned several times to the West in his later years.

The biography sheds interesting light on early Bowdoin College. Already young alumni were leaving New England for careers far from Brunswick, and one classmate, urging Woodman to make the break, could note that "the whole west is full of Yankees—I have seen more graduates of Bowdoin . . . in Louisville than I have seen in a year before." Woodman remained a lifelong friend of classmate John A. Andrew, Civil War governor of Massachusetts. He returned to Brunswick whenever possible for class reunions, and there is no doubt that his Bowdoin experience led directly to his interest in education and culture on the frontier. Woodman was active in the founding of the State Historical Society of Wisconsin, he was a member of the first board of regents of the University of Wisconsin, and he aided that young institution by contributing money for the establishment of an observatory and library.

The book's title is misleading. Woodman was not a "westernized Yankee." He was, rather, a Yankee who could neither become fully westernized nor find peace and satisfaction by returning to his native New England. His life was one of restlessness apparent in each job change and each new business scheme. His career could fruitfully be interpreted as one of a tormenting ambivalence which must have deprived not only foreign immigrants but many nineteenth century native Americans of any sense of serenity. Fascinated by the prospects of mid-western development, he nevertheless repeatedly expressed a desire to settle down among a "civilized people" and to leave "this great Western Mudhole." Always involved in some money-making scheme—by no means did all of them turn out favorably—Woodman repeatedly denounced the accumulation of wealth. ("Business be damned! Why was I made to attend to business?") He spoke repeatedly of the attractions of politics, but curiously refused to accept his election in 1861 to the Wisconsin legislature. He disliked banks but helped found one. He wanted—and purchased—a farm but did not care to engage in farming. Woodman's life was perhaps one of seeking through migration and business ventures a social status which he never really found. Mr. Gara points out Woodman's sense of the importance of a high reputation, but he does not explore his character and personality fully.

The biography is based upon careful research and it is competently written. Although the style is hardly inspired, it may be that plain, sober clarity is best suited to such a subject as Woodman: Gara's judgment of Woodman as "keen but unimaginative" might be applied to this book. Yet it succeeds in giving the reader a new sense of an aspect of Western development to which too little attention has been given. Like the increasingly popular local histories and institutional histories, biographies of minor figures like Woodman do much to illumine for us the conditions of normal day-to-day life in the American past.

Necrology

1903 PHILIP OWEN COFFIN, retired Vice President of the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Companies of Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, and the District of Columbia, died on May 16, 1957, at his summer home, Blueberry Hills, in Hamilton, Mass. Born on November 14, 1881, in Brunswick, he prepared at the local high school and at Bowdoin was college tennis champion in doubles one year, a member of the varsity football team, and for three years a standout on the baseball team, usually at third base. He was also named Popular Man of his class and always cherished the Wooden Spoon he was awarded.

After graduation Mr. Coffin worked for a few months with the Pressed Steel Car Company in Pittsburgh, Pa., and then in the fall of 1903 taught school in Rumford for some months. He joined the New York Telephone Company in the spring of 1904, became traffic inspector for the Chesapeake and Potomac in 1905, was promoted to traffic manager seven months later, and from 1905 to 1908 was located at Baltimore, Md. During this period he studied law for two years at the University of Maryland, with the object of making himself more valuable in the telephone business.

In 1908 he was transferred to the Bell Telephone Company of Philadelphia. In 1911 he became auditor of receipts at New York for telephone companies covering the Washington-Baltimore-Philadelphia region, soon becoming vice president in charge of finances and accounts. In 1919 he became general auditor for all four companies. He was soon transferred to Washington with the Chesapeake and Potomac, and in 1923 became vice president, in 1928 a director, in 1931 secretary, and in 1941 treasurer, a position he held until his retirement in 1944.

In 1943 Mr. Coffin became a member of the executive committee of the District of Columbia Chapter of the American Red Cross and in 1951 was named a member of the Board of Loyalty Review of the United States Civil Service Commission. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Alice Meyer Rodgers Coffin, whom he married on June 28, 1929, in Hamilton, Mass.; two stepdaughters, Mrs. Roger Sweeney of Washington and Mrs. Paul Stoney of Santa Barbara, Calif.; and a stepson, Christopher R. P. Rodgers of Washington. His fraternity was Zeta Psi.

1912 BERNARD DEWEY BOSWORTH died on May 1, 1957. Born June 15, 1887, in Leominster, Mass., he prepared at the local high school and at Legate Classical School in Boston. He attended Bowdoin for two years as a special student and returned to Leominster, where he was for some years engaged in the grain and feed business, first as junior partner of Bosworth & Son, then as manager of the branch store of J. Cushing & Company. He was for thirty years manager of the General Mills branch in Leominster and later became associated with the Wachusett Shirt Company. He was a trustee and treasurer of the Pilgrim Congregational Church in Leominster. A veteran of Army service in World War I, he is survived by his wife, Mrs. Barbara Vail Bosworth, whom he married in Oakland, Calif., on March 23, 1913. He was a member of Zeta Psi fraternity.

1915 FREDERICK JAMES LYNCH, M.D., Boston obstetrician and gynecologist, died in that city on July 8, 1957, at the age of 65. Born on November 13, 1891, in Cambridge, Mass., he prepared for college at Rindge Technical Institute and attended both Bates and Harvard before transferring to Bowdoin. In 1919 he was graduated from Harvard Medical School. During World War I he served in the United States Navy Medical Corps.

Dr. Lynch had been Surgeon-in-Chief for Obstetrics and Gynecology at Boston City Hospital, Cambridge City Hospital, Mount Auburn Hospital in Cambridge, and Symmes Hospital in Arlington. He was a former professor of obstetrics and clinical gynecology at Tufts Medical School. He was a past president of the New England Obstetrical and Gynecological Society and the Boston Obstetrical Society and at one time was vice president of the American Association of Gynecologists, Obstetricians, and Abdominal Surgeons. He was also a Diplomat of the American Board of Obstetricians and Gynecologists.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Hope Mahaney Lynch; two brothers, Rear Admiral Joseph B. Lynch, Arlington, Va., and Henry Carty Lynch; and four sisters, Miss Grace E. Lynch, Miss Maida Lynch, Mrs. Raymond A. FitzGerald, and Mrs. Matthew J. McDonald. He was a member of Alpha Delta Phi and Alpha Kappa Kappa.

1916 JAMES ALFRED DUNN, since 1920 owner and manager of the Alden Press in Boston, died in a Boston hospital on June 11, 1957. Born in New York City on March 22, 1887, he prepared for Bowdoin at the Berkeley School in Boston and was graduated from the College cum laude. His first business connection was with Willett-Sears Company, textiles, in Boston and after a year he went with Gorton-Pew Fisheries Company of Gloucester. A past president of the Bowdoin Club of Boston, he had served as a Director of the Alumni Fund and also as a member of the Alumni Council. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Alice Bourque Dunn, whom he married in 1919; a son, James jr., who was associated with him in business; and several grandchildren. He was a member of Zeta Psi and Phi Beta Kappa.

1918 ELLIOT FREEMAN, 1918 Class Secretary and Class Agent for many years, died at his home in Kennebunk on June 3, 1957, after a long illness. Born on February 26, 1896, in Portland, he was the son of Eben W. Freeman '85 and Nellie Elliot Freeman and prepared for Bowdoin at Deering High School. After his graduation in 1918 he attended the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration for a year and then became an accountant in Kennebunk, where he lived for the rest of his life. Since 1938 he had been accountant and Assistant Treasurer with the Rogers Fibre Co., Inc. in Kennebunk. He was also a director of the Kennebunk Loan and Building Association and was a past president and treasurer of the Southern Maine Chapter of the National Association of Cost Accountants. He had served as treasurer of the Congregational Church in Kennebunk for twenty years and had also been active in the Red Cross, the Kennebunk Fire Society, and the Boy Scouts.

Mr. Freeman was town auditor for Kennebunk for some years and was a member of the Kennebunk Rotary Club and the Masons. He was named 1918's Class Agent in 1934 and served in that capacity until his death. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Margaret Boothby Freeman, whom he married on September 28, 1929, in Gorham; two daughters, Virginia, who is attending the University of Maine, and Brenda, a student at Kennebunk High School; two sisters, Miss Sylvia Freeman of Portland and Mrs. Joel D. Harvey of Boston; his stepmother, Mrs. Eben Freeman of Las Gatos, Calif., and several nieces and nephews. He was a member of Psi Upsilon fraternity.

1920 ARCHIE OLIVER DOSTIE, who taught and coached at Skowhegan High School and developed some of Bowdoin's finest track men of all time, among them Ray McLaughlin '33 and Dick Getchell '53, died at his home in Skowhegan on June 24, 1957, at the age of 59. Born on August 16, 1897, in Waterville, he prepared at Farmington High School and was a standout athlete at Bowdoin. He played left halfback on the football team and was named to an All-Maine berth his senior year. As the 1920 captain of Jack Magee's track team, he was a sprinter, low hurdler, and high jumper. After graduating from Bowdoin, he coached and taught at Bridgton Academy for a year, then joined the faculty at Skowhegan, where he taught until his death and coached until 1954. He had done graduate work at M.I.T., Bates, and the University of Maine and was for several years sports editor of the Skowhegan Independent Reporter.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Crystal Hughes Dostie, whom he married at Chebeague Island on October 14, 1929. His fraternity was Chi Psi.

1922 NORMAN LESLIE WEBB died in July of 1951, according to word recently received in the Alumni Office. Born February 26, 1900, in Stonington, he prepared at Hebron Academy. Following his graduation from Bowdoin, he became an engineer and served in that capacity until 1940, when he had a severe stroke. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Lucile Rudd Webb, whom he married in Washington, D. C., in 1936. His fraternity was Beta Theta Pi.

1924 HENRY WALTER BECK, M.D., for thirty years a physician in Gray, died in that town on June 4, 1957, at the age of 63. Born on April 24, 1894, in Lawrence, Mass., he prepared at Mount Hermon School and studied at Harvard for a year before transferring to Bowdoin. After a year at the College he left and was graduated from the University of Vermont Medical School in 1927. He interned at the Central Maine General Hospital in Lewiston and went to Gray in 1928. He served for six years as a member of the School Board in that town, was a trustee and deacon of the Congregational Church, a Mason, and a member of the American Legion. A veteran of Army service during World War I, he was a member of the Gray Kiwanis Club and was active in Boy Scout work.

In honor of his birthday in 1956 Dr. Beck's friends gave him an engraved silver tray at a special surprise party in Gray. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Annie Scruton Beck, whom he married in Lawrence, Mass., in 1927; a son, Henry W. jr., Wethersfield, Conn.; a daughter, Dorothy, New York City; and a brother, Oswald T., Cleveland, Tenn.

1926 HUGH BAIN SNOW, a civil engineer at the Fore River Shipyard of the Bethlehem Steel Company for more than twenty years, died at his home in Braintree, Mass., on June 18, 1957, following a long illness. His son, John '57, captain of the 1956 Bowdoin football team, had graduated from the College only three days earlier. Mr. Snow was born on January 30, 1905, in Rockland and prepared at the local high school. After his graduation from Bowdoin he studied at Massachusetts Institute of Technology for three years and received a bachelor of science in civil engineering degree in 1929. Since 1941 he had lived in Braintree, where he was active in Boy and Cub Scout work and in the Community Fund and Red Cross drives. He was also a former member of the Braintree Finance Committee and the Braintree Town Meeting. He is survived by his wife, Mrs.

M. PHILLIPS MASON, Professor of Philosophy at Bowdoin from 1920 until his retirement in 1946, died at his home in Brunswick on July 22, 1957, at the age of eighty-one.

A native of Boston, Dr. Mason was born on March 19, 1876. He was graduated magna cum laude from Harvard College in 1899. The following year he received his master of arts degree at Harvard and in 1904 his doctor of philosophy degree, also at Harvard.

During the period from 1899 until 1902 he studied abroad, at Corpus Christi College of Oxford University, at the Universities of Berlin, Heidelberg, and Marburg in Germany, and at the Sorbonne in Paris.

From 1905 until 1907 Dr. Mason was Instructor in Psychology and Philosophy at Princeton University, then joined the faculty at Bryn Mawr College, where he was an Associate in Philosophy. Later he was for six years Lecturer in Philosophy at Harvard before joining the Bowdoin faculty in 1920 as Professor of Philosophy.

Professor Mason was a member of the Superintending School Committee in Brunswick from 1934 until 1943. He was the author of numerous articles and reviews as well as of Volume I of The "X" of Psychology, published by the Harvard University Press in 1940. He was also a member of the American Philosophical Association.

Surviving are Mrs. Mason, the former Gertrud Helene Natorp, whom Professor Mason married in Marburg, Germany, on July 2, 1913; a daughter, Mrs. Helena Mason Lyon, Holyoke, Mass.; two sons, Richard P. Mason '42, Gander, Newfoundland, and Adelbert Mason '44 of George School, Pa.; a brother, Charles E. Mason, Brookline, Mass.; a sister, Mrs. Franklin Trumbull, Aspen, Colo.; and four grandchildren.

President James S. Coles said in tribute to Dr. Mason, "Interesting and invigorating in his conversation, he was one of the perceptive minds of the Bowdoin faculty for more than a quarter of a century. He contributed in many ways to the intellectual life of the Brunswick community as well as to that at Bowdoin. The sympathy of the College goes out to Mrs. Mason and the family as we share their loss." (See page 14.)

Honorary

1938 KENNETH LEWIS ROBERTS, whose historical novels about early American history have been read and enjoyed by millions, died on July 21, 1957, at his home in Kennebunkport at the age of 71. Just before his last illness he had completed revising the proofs of Water Unlimited, a book on water dowsing, to be published on October 24. Born on December 8, 1885, in Kennebunk, Mr. Roberts was graduated from Cornell in 1908. For eight years he was a reporter, special writer, and columnist for the Boston Post. He then served briefly on the editorial staffs of Puck and the old Life in New York. During World War I he was a captain in the intelligence section of the Siberian Expeditionary Force. After the war he was a correspondent in Europe, Asia, and Washington for the Saturday Evening Post.

He began his famous series of historical novels in 1930 with Arundel, which was followed by The Lively Lady in 1931, Rabble in Arms in 1933, Captain Caution in 1934, Northwest Passage in 1937, Oliver Wiswell in 1940, Lydia Bailey in 1947, and Boon Island in 1956. In recent years he turned his interest and talents to water dowsing, with Henry Gross and His Dowsing Rod and The Seventh Sense.

In editorial tribute the Portland Press Herald for July 23 said, "Historical novelist Kenneth Roberts owed his brilliantly successful career to a talent best described as literary integrity, a term reaching far beyond simple honesty to connote intelligence, hard work, self-confidence, and a deep sense of mission.

"While other authors settled for a guess or a comfortably ambiguous sentence covering up faulty research, Kennebunkport's Roberts dug and scratched until his tireless fingers grasped all, and nothing but, the truth. Thus tuned to ring with authority, his fiction became more factual than many straight histories, prodding less patient scholars to rethink their conclusions and stimulating Americans to a more thoughtful interest in the military and political achievements of their forebears.

"He could write with the best. He competed successfully for top positions on the best-seller lists. His unique quality, bred of a unique wholeness in his approach to writing a book, was his capacity to attract those who wanted to learn as well as be entertained, and who appreciated a believable teacher as much as a skilled writer.

"Although Kenneth Roberts is no longer with us, he has bequeathed us a priceless heritage. Even as he learned at the feet of the late Booth Tarkington, his life will be a lesson to future generations in how literary integrity, encompassing breadth of dedication no less than depth of research, makes the difference between mediocrity and greatness."

Mr. Roberts is survived by his wife, Mrs. Anna Mosser Roberts, whom he married on February 14, 1911; and by a niece, Miss Marjorie Mosser, to whom he dictated several of his last historical novels. Bowdoin honored him with a doctor of letters degree in 1938. He was a member of Chi Psi at Cornell and of Phi Beta Kappa at Dartmouth.

1950 ARTHUR T. VANDERBILT, Chief Justice of the New Jersey Supreme Court and a leader in court reform, legal education, and good government, died on June 16, 1957, in Summit, N. J., at the age of 68. Born on July 7, 1888, he was graduated from Wesleyan University in 1910 and received his law degree from Columbia in 1913.

As lawyer, teacher, and judge, Justice Vanderbilt "was an outstanding defender of civil liberties," the New York Times said on June 16. "He was in the front rank of the country-wide movement in the last half-century to improve court structure, administration and procedure in state and nation. Unification of court systems, modernization of court administration and simplification of court rules were his main goals in public service.

"Cooperation between bar and public, he held, was essential to enable the law to adapt itself to changing conditions. He insisted that the courts were big business and should be run in a business-like manner. Every case should be handled on its merits, he asserted, rather than on the basis of procedural technicalities.

"Justice Vanderbilt played a leading part in a long, hard fight that led to the adoption of a new state Constitution in New Jersey in 1947 and to reorganization of its court system the next year. He was then appointed Chief Justice of the New Jersey Supreme Court. In this capacity he served as head of the state's judicial system, and was able to put into effect ideas of court reform that he had advocated for many years.

"His program was credited with putting New Jersey among the most advanced states in raising the efficiency of the courts and reducing congestion and delay in bringing cases to trial."

Justice Vanderbilt was a summer resident of North Harpswell for many years and had many Bowdoin friends. He received an honorary doctor of laws degree in 1950. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Florence Althen Vanderbilt; two sons, William R. of Summit, N. J., and Robert A. of Short Hills, N. J.; three daughters, Mrs. George C. Brainard jr. of Shaker Heights, Ohio, Mrs. Lemuel Bannister jr. of Pelham, N. Y., and Mrs. Christian L. Swartz; a brother, Leslie L. Vanderbilt of Caldwell, N. J., and fourteen grandchildren. He was a member of Delta Kappa Epsilon and Phi Beta Kappa.

1904 FRANK LEROY MAGUNE, M.D., for many years Chief of the Worcester City Hospital Staff in Massachusetts, died at his home in that city on May 11, 1957. Born November 15, 1880, in Rockport, he prepared at Rockport High School and was a special student at Bowdoin for a year before entering the Maine Medical School. He interned at the Worcester City Hospital, then spent a year as assistant medical examiner for the Pennsylvania Railroad in Renovo, Pa., before returning to Worcester. He was outpatient surgeon at the Worcester City Hospital from 1907 to 1918, was a member of the junior surgical staff in 1918, and served as Chief of the Surgical Staff from 1921 until 1937, when he resigned. He was also physician at the Worcester County Jail for twenty years and surgeon at the Heald Machine Co. for 32 years beginning in 1917.

A past president of the Worcester Bowdoin Club, Dr. Magune was a member of the American College of Surgeons, the Masons, and the Bohemians. He retired from active practice in 1946. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Mildred Richards Magune, whom he married on April 28, 1909, in Lynn, Mass.; two sons, Robert R. and Francis A. of Worcester; two daughters, Mrs. Marjorie F. Clark of Worcester, and Mrs. M. Avilla Clarkson of Auburn, Mass.; eight grandchildren, and a niece.

News of the Classes

1825 The official Chinese Communist literary magazine commemorated the 150th anniversary of the birth of Henry W. Longfellow by publishing ten of his poems last winter. The February issue of I Wen (World Literature) carried translations of the poems.

1886 Classmates and friends extend their sympathy to Walter Wentworth, whose wife, Etta, died on July 11 after a short illness.

Walter was the subject of a fine feature article which appeared in the Penobscot Times on August 1. The article told of Walter's connections with the College — his three Bowdoin degrees and his being a former chemistry instructor — but his important connection as Overseer (since 1929) was somehow overlooked! The article continued by giving the highlights of Walter's career with the Penobscot Chemical Fibre Company, and it told that he culminated 54 years of being an active, progressive mill manager when he retired as Vice President of PCF in 1952.

1888 Horatio Card and Albert Tolman were both on hand for Commencement once again.

6 College Street, Brunswick

Wilmot Mitchell and Oliver Turner represented 1890 at Commencement.

Dr. Edgar Conant, whose 90th birthday was June 26, writes to his Class Secretary as follows: "Since November of 1955 I have been playing chess by mail — very slow progress on a game, but I am just now playing with 15 opponents, sometimes two games, other times one. That takes a world of writing, even if nearly all of it is on post cards."

Effective July 1 George Sears retired from his position as Judge of the First Essex District Court in Salem, Mass. He had served in that post for more than 51 years.

The Boston Sunday Herald for June 16 said of our distinguished classmate, "In more than half a century on the bench, Sears won a reputation as a sometimes stern judge, whose respect for the letter of the law created a legend. On Saturday, June 8, he thought over his years on the bench, and declared: 'The legislature passes the laws. I don't always agree with them, but they're the law. In a courtroom, a judge is an umpire of the laws, and that's what I've tried to do. I've always called the cases as I saw them.' "

The Herald article continued, "The elderly jurist has a sleepy eye, but this is deceiving. He is quick-witted as ever he was, and he has a ready smile under the trim white mustache."

1891 Secretary, Dr. Charles S. F. Lincoln
38 College Street, Brunswick

Tom Burr and Charles Lincoln represented the Class at Commencement in June.

The annual Brunswick High School alumni dinner and program on June 8 was dedicated to Dr. Charles Lincoln, who was celebrating his 70th class reunion.

In June Roger Boyd '51 wrote, "I was surprised while watching BBC television the other night to see Doc Lincoln '91 and his Kids and Kubs and other scenes in which he participated on a program of the American older generation. Small world."

1894 Secretary, Francis W. Dana
8 Bramhall Street, Portland

Back for Commencement were Rupert Baxter, Arthur Chapman, Francis Dana, and Frederick Libby.

1895 Secretary, Thomas V. Doherty
Box 390, Houlton

Hoyt Moore was the only 1895 representative at Commencement.

1896 The Class was represented at Commencement by Francis Dane and Carleton Merrill.

The Class of 1896 Memorial Scholarship Fund is assuming proportions largely because of Mrs. Charles W. Marston's generosity. She has recently made another substantial contribution to the Alumni Fund in memory of her late husband.

Pop Williams was honored on May 19 in Topsham on the occasion of his 83rd birthday. Nearly 200 people paid tribute to his many years of faithful service to that town. Gifts included a large television set complete with table and antenna, a small table radio, purse of money, lawn chair, sweater, tobacco and pipe, and chocolates.

1897 Secretary, George E. Carmichael
Wolfeboro, N. H.

Carmichael, Cook, Gilman, and Sewall returned for Commencement in June.

Hugh MacCallum, pastor emeritus, was honored on June 7 by members of the First Congregational Church in Everett, Mass., at a reunion banquet.

1898 Secretary, William W. Lawrence
14 Bowdoin Street
Portland 4

Dana, Lawrence, and Wheeler represented 1898 at Commencement.

On May 16 the new $330,000 Ocean Avenue school in Portland was dedicated to former Governor Percival Baxter as a "living, creative monument" to his many philanthropies.

1899 Secretary, Edward R. Godfrey
172 Kenduskeag Ave., Bangor

Henry Marston was the only member of 1899 who attended Commencement.

Gov Cleaves and his wife are spending the summer at their cottage on The Narrows Pond, near Winthrop. Their grandson, William V. Schomp, is doing extraordinary travel this year in which he is getting more daylight than most people get. He spent two months at the South Pole early in the year, when daylight was continuous there, and is now going to the North Pole at a time when daylight is continuous there. Incidental to his visiting both poles, the journeying has taken him around the world.

Ned Nelson is at Boothbay Harbor this summer, at 98 Townsend Avenue, and would welcome a call from any of his Bowdoin friends.

202 Reedsdale Road
Milton 86, Mass.

Present at Commencement, our 57th, were John and Mrs. Bass, Robert Chapman, Cheney Rowell, Charles and Mrs. Willard, Dr. Williams, and Robert Edwards. Cheney Rowell drove from Canton, Ohio.

Class Secretary Bob Edwards writes, "I feel that all of our classmates will wish me to convey their deep sympathy to Harry Cobb in the loss of his wife, who passed away suddenly the latter part of May. I have written to Harry and received a nice letter from him which was full of courage. I know that Harry would greatly appreciate hearing from any classmate. His home address is 720 Plymouth Avenue, Claremont, Calif.

"Our Dr. Louis M. Spear is in excellent health and carrying on his duties at the Robert Bent Brigham Hospital in Boston, as well as his private practice. He, along with three other physicians practicing in Massachusetts, was recently honored for the completion of 50 years of service in the Massachusetts Medical Association.

"Our good and faithful classmate, C. C. Robinson, wrote me a most interesting letter last June. It contained a souvenir illustrated pamphlet showing several pictures of the ground breaking ceremonies for the new buildings of the First Congregational Church of Santa Cruz, Calif. Robbie, as the Vice Chairman of the Board of Deacons and Deaconesses, has been an untiring worker in behalf of his church. Congratulations, Robbie, for accomplishing an outstanding job in your church work. Robbie and his wife wish to send their greetings to all.

"One final note for the record as well as for posterity. I believe that John and Mrs. Bass take the top prize for the largest number of grandchildren, with eight."

1901 Secretary, Roland E. Clark
c/o National Bank of Commerce
Box 1200, Portland

Returning for Commencement in June were Berry, Clark, and Gardner.

Dr. George Pratt has been elected Secretary of the Maine Medico-Legal Society.

1902 Secretary, Hudson Sinkinson
North Waterboro

On hand for Commencement were Barker, Hamilton, Mabry, and Sinkinson.

On June 15 Bowdoin presented an honorary doctor of humane letters degree to Mrs. Harvey Dow Gibson. The citation read by President Coles said, "Born of Massachusetts stock, she has in her life exemplified courageous and resourceful American womanhood. Her interest in Bowdoin deriving from the devotion of her late husband, Harvey Dow Gibson, she supports his many interests on this campus, in the North Conway region, and in metropolitan New York, making them her interests as well. A humanitarian in her own right, her extensive work with the American Red Cross in the last World War was recognized by many awards, including the National Red Cross Overseas Certificate of Merit, the Croix de Guerre with Gold Star, the European Theater Ribbon, the United States Army Certificate of Merit, and the Bronze Star Medal. We honor her today for her astute business sense, her keen intellect, and an unselfish magnanimity, which in her modesty might otherwise pass unsung."

1903 Secretary, Clement F. Robinson
P. O. Box 438
Brunswick

Thirteen members of 1903 were on hand for Commencement. They were Clifford, Dana, Evans, Greene, Merrill, Moody, Munro, Ridlon, Robinson, Simpson, Walker, White, and Wilson.

Emery Beane's son, Emery jr. '46, will be married this fall to Miss Elizabeth Jane Lester of Raymond, a graduate of Westbrook Junior College. Classmates and friends will grieve to learn of the death of Phil Coffin at his summer home in Hamilton, Mass., on June 17.

Luther Dana is Chairman of the Business and Industrial Division of the Nasson College development program.

Clem Robinson attended the annual convention of the American Bar Association in New York in July. Then he and Mrs. Robinson sailed on the Queen Mary for England, where Clem attended sessions with British bar associations in London. They are spending the rest of the summer abroad, planning to return to Brunswick around Labor Day.

1904 Secretary, Wallace M. Powers
37-28 80th St.
Jackson Heights, New York, N. Y.

Those back for Commencement were Beane, Brigham, Burpee, Coan, Frost, Leatherbarrow, Packard, Powers, Putnam, and Shorey — a fine turnout.

The William E. Lunt Memorial Fund has been established at Haverford College. The fund is to be used for the publication of Bill's final scholarly work: "Accounts Rendered by the Papal Collectors in England, 1317-1378" and his recently completed "Financial Relations of the Papacy with England, 1327-1534."

1905 Secretary, Stanley Williams
2220 Waverley Street
Palo Alto, Calif.

Members of the class who returned for Commencement were Cushing, Donnell, Hill, Philoon, Pierce, Warren, White, and Jim Williams.

Everett Hamilton writes, "After 16½ years I have accepted retirement from Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Beane."

Arch Shorey writes, "Doing a column for Albany Knickerbocker News on hiking trails."

9 Oak Avenue, Norway

Back for Commencement were Copeland, Holman, Johnson, Putnam, and Winchell.

John Bradford '52 is now associated with William Stone in the practice of law at 260 Main Street, Biddeford.

Thaddeus Roberts reports the birth on March 16 of a new granddaughter, Melanie Ann Schlick, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward C. Schlick of Auburn. Mr. Schlick is legislative reporter for the Lewiston Sun.

1907 Secretary, John W. Leydon
3120 West Penn Street
Philadelphia, Penna.

The Class of 1907 really had itself a 50th reunion, one that perhaps has never been surpassed in the history of the College. Twenty-seven men were on hand, or 75% of the total living members. Many wives were also present.

The Class Gift of $30,000, a record amount for any single Bowdoin class, was presented at the Commencement Dinner. It will be used to endow the Longfellow Professorship of Modern Languages. 1907 has always felt particular interest in Longfellow. It was graduated on the 100th anniversary year of his birth. Roscoe Hupper and Wilbert Snow were the chairman and the speaker at the 150th anniversary of his birth.

Speakers at the reunion were Professor Wilmo^t B. Mitchell '90, Wilbert Snow, and Professor Herbert Ross Brown.

The long weekend got under way on Thursday afternoon, June 13, with a tea in the Moulton Union, with class members and friends in attendance. This was a fine idea and was much enjoyed.

On Thursday evening members of the class and their ladies dined at the Homewood Inn in Yarmouth, to which the ladies returned on Friday evening, while the men had their banquet at the Eagle Hotel in Brunswick.

Class Agent and Secretary John Leydon received both an honorary doctor of humane letters degree Saturday morning and the Alumni Service Award on Saturday afternoon. Both well deserved honors.

Three members of the class have made such an impression upon their cities that schools have been named for them — Haley in West Haven, Conn.; Small in Fall River, Mass.; and Snow in Middletown, Conn.

All in all, a wonderful, once-in-a-lifetime occasion, Commencement 1957.

Those returning were Adams, Allen, Bennett, Briggs, Brown, Carney, Craigie, Doherty, Drummond, Duddy, Fernald, Haley, Halford, Hupper, Lawrence, Leydon, Linnell, Mincher, Pike, Redman, Roberts, Snow, Voorhees, both Webbers, Whipple, and Winchell.

Roscoe Hupper has retired as President of the Hebron Academy Board of Trustees but is continuing as a member of the Board.

John Leyton's citation for his doctor of humane letters degree in June said, in part, ". . . a teacher in East Boothbay while a freshman at Bowdoin, throughout his life in education he has guided his students with the intelligent understanding and warm sympathy that comes only from the love of boys for themselves. To marked linguistic talent he added a dedication to the high ideals of scholarship perceived under President Hyde, which he found unexcelled in his later university studies at home and abroad. Devoted in service to his alma mater, he is doubly recognized as the able representative of a great profession, and of a great class today celebrating its fiftieth anniversary."

And John's Alumni Service Award citation had this to say, ". . . brilliant Bowdoin undergraduate who pursued graduate work in this country and abroad; beloved teacher of generations of secondary school boys; father of a Bowdoin son; former Member of the Alumni Council; for many years Secretary and prime mover of the Bowdoin Club of Philadelphia; longtime Secretary and Alumni Fund Agent of his class; devoted and loyal alumnus; ceaseless worker for his College; in grateful recognition of sterling and unflagging service, his fellow alumni this day accord him their Alumni Service Award."

Francis Upton's son, Francis jr., is a sergeant in the Marine Corps.

1908 Secretary, Edward T. Sanborn
503 North Lionel St.
Goldsboro, N. C.

Returning in June were Crowley, Lowell, Pullen, and Stetson.

David Parker writes, "Retired from position as Chief, Intelligence Division, U. S. Revenue Service, Connecticut District, on February 1. Now living permanently at Barley Neck Road, East Orleans, Mass."

Tal Sanborn is the new Class Secretary for 1908.

Dr. Harold Stanwood is in the V. A. Hospital in Togus with a broken hip.

1909 Secretary, Irving L. Rich
11 Mellen Street
Portland 4

Registered for Commencement were Brewster, Oramel Stanley, and Rich.

Owen Brewster was the main speaker at Ricker College's Commencement exercises on June 11.

Guy Estes reports, "With friends I have established a foundation, The Foundation for Biblical Research and Preservation of Primitive Christianity. I have devoted my life work to Christian Science Practice and church work. You might recall that President Hyde and I had an argument, mildly, about it in his class once when we were in college.

"The Foundation is in Charlestown, N. H., and I would be glad to have any of the members of the Class drop in there anytime and see me and look things over, as some of them may be interested in our work and purpose. I'm not there all the time, as I still keep my office in New York City at 342 Madison Avenue, Room 715."

Guy was First Reader in the largest Christian Science Church in New York City and was instrumental in building an unusual church there seating over 2000 people and costing more than a million dollars.

Oramel Stanley has been elected to the Board of Directors of the recently formed Regional Memorial Hospital in Brunswick.

Bud Rich writes, "Many thanks to the loyal contributors to the Alumni Fund and also for your wonderful letters. Your kindness is much appreciated.

"Not too early to be thinking of our 50th reunion — in 1959."

1910 Secretary, E. Curtis Matthews
Piscataqua Savings Bank
Portsmouth, N. H.

Twelve members of 1910 enjoyed an excellent meal at the Wiscasset Inn at Commencement time. Included were Atwood, Warren, and Wing, who were stags, and the following, all with their wives: Bailey, Cary, Crosby, Evans, Hale, Peters, Matthews, Ross, and Sewall Webster. Rodney and Gladys Ross entertained the group for cocktails on Thursday afternoon.

Hoot Davie sold his farm in South Brooksville and now lives in Harwichport, Mass., the year round.

Bob Hale has announced that he will once again be a candidate in 1958 for a seat in Congress.

Al Stone has been re-elected President of the Somerville, Mass., Council of Churches.

1911 Secretary, Ernest G. Fifield
30 East 42nd Street
New York, N. Y.

Back for Commencement were Berry, Black, Hansen, Hussey, McKusick, Oxnard, Roberts, Weeks, and Harold White.

Stan Pierce's son, Walter '41, won a Better Living Award from the American Institute of Architects in May for what Time Magazine described as "a split-level, $20,000 development house designed by the architectural firm of Danforth Compton and Walter Pierce and built by Edward Green and Harmon White in Lexington, Mass., nine miles northwest of downtown Boston. The exterior is finished in cedar to match the rustic surroundings. The interior is separated into functional areas on a triple level scheme: three bedrooms and bath on the top level; living room, dining room, kitchen and main entrance on the middle level; playroom, utility room and garage (convertible into two more bedrooms) on the lower level."

A color picture of the house also appeared in Time.

Harry Wiggin has been elected Thrice Potent Master of Boston Lafayette Lodge of Perfection. He has been a Scottish Rite member since 1917.

1912 Secretary, William A. MacCormick
114 Atlantic Avenue
Boothbay Harbor

Twenty-eight men attended the 45th reunion of the Class of 1912 in June. Those arriving from distant points made their headquarters at the Look-out Point House in Harpswell, where they were joined by classmates, wives, and friends for the Class dinner on Friday. Forty-five persons enjoyed a good Maine shore dinner, which was preceded by an informal cocktail party for which Jesse McKenney was chairman.

At the dinner a brief memorial service was held in tribute to the 47 members who have died since 1912 entered Bowdoin. Carl Skillin was the chaplain. In a short business session, the Treasurer reported that the Class was solvent. Herb Bryant, Class Agent, reported on the Alumni Fund and urged participation. General dismay over the appearance of the Polar Bear, 1912's gift to the College in 1937, was registered, and President Jack Hurley was instructed to write President Coles and inquire about the possibility of having a less obnoxious covering for the Bear, which has suffered from time to time from paint smearing at the hands of visiting students from nearby colleges.

Throughout the Commencement period several men and their wives were in residence at Look-out Point and others who were unaccompanied stayed at Hyde Hall.

Members of the reunion committee were Jack Hurley, Bill MacCormick, Seward Marsh, and Allan Woodcock. Others who registered in the Library were Andrews, Auten, Barbour, Bradford, Bragdon, Briggs, Brooks, Bryant, Chapman, Foss, Greenleaf, Hale, Hathaway, Locke, McKenney, Means, Mifflin, O'Neil, Pratt, Purington, Reynolds, Skillin, Vannah, and Wilson.

Cornell University has conferred on Gene Bradford, who retired on July 1, the title of Registrar Emeritus. He was Cornell's first Director of Admissions, serving from 1928 until 1946, and was registrar from 1931 until July 1.

Arnett Mitchell was awarded a Doctor of Humane Letters degree by Central State College in Wilberforce, Ohio, on June 9.

Classmates and friends will grieve to learn of the deaths of three members of 1912. They are Bernard Bosworth, Jim Crane, and John Hamilton.

1913 Secretary, Luther G. Whittier R. F. D. 2, Farmington

Members of the Class returning in June were Chet Abbott, Buck, Conant, Gardner, Kennedy, Lunt, McNeally, Philoon, Pike, Whittier, and Wood. It will be our 45th next year.

Chet Abbott was a featured speaker at the meeting of the Maine Good Roads Association in Portland on May 23. He discussed highway construction equipment financing.

Edwin Burleigh has been elected Secretary-Treasurer of the Maine Magicians Society.

Jim Philoon has been elected Secretary of the Universalist Churches of Maine, Inc.

Sumner Pike was the speaker at the annual banquet of the Ricker College alumni association, held on June 10.

Dr. Goose Winslow of Portland was awarded the Distinguished Certificate at the annual dinner of the Maine Osteopathic Association in Rockland on June 28. One of the founders of the Osteopathic Hospital in Portland, he is chairman of the Department of Practology there.

1914 Secretary, Alfred E. Gray Francetown, N. H.

On hand for Commencement were Farrar, Loeffler, Merrill, Mitchell, Newcombe, and Earle Thompson.

Warren Eddy has been elected to a five-year term as a trustee of the Portland Water District.

Al Gray has retired after 43 years of teaching, 38 of which were spent at Milton Academy. His address is now Francetown, N. H.

The following citation was read at the graduation exercises at Milton Academy on June 8: "To Alfred Everett Gray, Master at Milton Academy for thirty-eight years, conscientious and scholarly in his teaching, friendly and unassuming with his colleagues, wise and philosophic in his considerations, true to the concepts of Phi Beta Kappa, of which he is a member."

Spike MacCormick '15, "horny-handed humanitarian."

Announcement was made at the Commencement exercises that Elroy LaCase's son John '56 had been awarded one of the four O'Brien Graduate Scholarships and that he had received the Goodwin Commencement Prize for 1956. During the past year he studied at Columbia and will do graduate work during 1957-58 at Princeton, where he will study English literature.

Alfred Newcombe received an honorary doctor of humane letters degree at Bowdoin on June 15. The citation read at that time by President Coles said, in part, "Historian and professor, member of the Faculty of Knox College for thirty-seven years, the high regard in which he is held by his students and his colleagues has been demonstrated many times. A spokesman for the Knox Faculty on all matters of college policy, he was the first and to date the only member of that Faculty to hold the rank of Distinguished Service Professor, in recognition of loyal, dedicated, and outstanding duty as a teacher, and demonstrated ability to awaken in the individual student a burning desire to learn. For those years of devotion to the ideals for which Bowdoin stands, we honor him."

Ray Verrill has retired from teaching English at The Nichols School in Buffalo and with Mrs. Verrill is now living in Richmond. This is his wife's home town and they have spent many summer vacations there. Now they hope to develop a 165 acre tree farm.

In June The Nichols School honored Ray for his 34 years of service with an afternoon reception. He was also honored at Nichols' class night exercises. The school yearbook was dedicated to him, in addition. His son, Richard M., is following in his father's footsteps as an English professor at Boston University.

1915 Secretary, Harold E. Verrill 436 Exchange Street, Portland

Back for Commencement were Eastman, Fish, Knowlton, Jim Lewis, Loring, Smith, Stowell, Talbot, and Verrill.

Classmates and friends will grieve to learn of the death of Fred Lynch on July 8.

An article in the May issue of the California Monthly describes Spike MacCormick's work in criminology. Taking "Mr. Troubleshooter" through his entire career, it concludes as follows: "In his many writings, in his work with the Osborne Association, in his lectures at the University and in his many personal talks with his students, Austin MacCormick continues to work for humane, efficient prisons. A riot in a Michigan prison, a wave of self-mutilations among prisoners in Texas may at any time call the short, mild-mannered professor away from his quiet Berkeley garden. This troubleshooter travels light but he carries with him years of experience and returns with additional insights to share with his students. Years ago a New York paper sought to describe the man who brought order to Welfare Island through a combination of discipline and charity. The paper called him a 'horny-handed humanitarian.' In the years since, he has continued to deserve the name."

1916 Secretary, Dwight Sayward 415 Congress Street, Portland

Returning for Commencement in June were Bancroft, Baxter, Cronin, Fitzgerald, Garland, Ginty, Grierson, Hargraves, Hart, Head, Hodgkins, Ireland, Moulton, Niven, and Sayward, for a fine turnout.

At Commencement Win Bancroft received an honorary doctor of humane letters degree. The citation read by President Coles upon that occasion said, in part, "A New Englander transplanted to warm southern climes, successful and enlightened business leader and financier in a region of rapidly expanding commerce and widely developing culture, his sound effort and wise judgment have aided both. An inherent modesty and quiet personality have let but few realize the breadth of his concern for humanity and the humanities in the southeastern United States. As Chairman of the Board of Trustees of a sister college, he piloted that institution through the shoals of academic and financial crises to make it a bulwark of independent southern collegiate education, eminent in its area. Bowdoin is proud to honor this alumnus who has honored her by his firm support of her own educational goals."

John Baxter has been named to the Board of Directors of the recently formed Regional Memorial Hospital in Brunswick.

Members of 1916 will be pleased to learn that Bob Drummond is making progress toward recovery from a long illness.

The Forty-Year Class

Classmates and friends will grieve to learn of the death of Jim Dunn on June 11.

The lead editorial in the May 24 Portland Evening Express began with the paragraph, "We welcome the news that attorney John C. Fitzgerald has gathered about him a representative group for studying private non-profit operation of low-cost rental housing as a possible solution to the living space crisis anticipated as urban renewal forges ahead in Portland."

Bill Ireland has been named by Boston Mayor John Hynes to a five-man commission to handle the planning, construction, and management of a projected civic auditorium. He represents the Greater Boston Chamber of Commerce on the committee. Boston is committed to building the auditorium in the projected $100,000,000 Prudential Center as a means of attracting convention business to the city.

In May Paul Niven observed the 25th anniversary of his association with the Brunswick Record. He became editor and manager of the Record with the issue of May 26, 1932.

Paul has been named to the Board of Directors of the recently formed Regional Memorial Hospital in Brunswick.

Wallace Olson wrote in May, "Just returned from a seven months visit to Miami, Fla. Served as Chairman of Membership Committee and member of Speakers Bureau of newly formed Big Brothers Association of Dade County, Fla."

Classmates and friends extend their sympathy to Dwight Sayward, whose wife, Mary, died on May 23.

1917 Secretary, Noel C. Little
8 College Street, Brunswick

Class Secretary Noel Little wrote about 1917's 40th as follows: "Reunioning was conservative as befitted the 40 year class. Wives attended all activities in spite of the fact that the 10 and 20 year reunioning bachelors were continually trying to date them. Many of his classmates attended the Commencement exercises to see Isaac Webber appointed as an honorary doctor of science, although Sutcliffe claimed he was locked in the church and couldn't get back to South Appleton, where the unmated 17'ers were housed and howling. Congratulatory messages were received from Dave Lane — Frankfort, Germany — and Don Philbrick — Old Bailey, London."

A total of 35 members of the Class registered for Commencement, and 25 brought their wives. There were three other guests at the banquet, held at Sebasco Lodge, where an excellent meal was served. The guests were, according to Noel Little's report, "daughters of the 80 year class!"

Those back included Babcock, Boyd Bartlett, Blanchard, Bond, Chapman, Cobb, Cook, Crane, Crosby, Dalrymple, Dow, Fenning, Fillmore, Fobes, Fuller, Gregory, Hone, Humphrey, Jacob, Keene, King, Kuebler, Little, Lovejoy, Maguire, Owen, Phillips, Pierce, Ross, Scott, Stone, Sutcliffe, Webber, Wight, and Willey.

Ted Fobes was an official delegate from Maine at the merger of the Congregational Christian and Evangelical and Reformed Churches in Cleveland in June.

Clarence Gregory reports, "My son, Clarence jr., received his degree of doctor of science in chemical engineering (Sc.D.) from Massachusetts Institute of Technology on June 7. He has been with the General Electric Company, Knolls Atomic Power Laboratory, Schenectady, N.Y., since February."

Donald Philbrick's son John '58 is engaged to Miss Margaret D. Eberlein of Newtown, Conn., a June graduate of Simmons College's School of Publication.

Ish Webber received an honorary degree at Commencement in June. The citation said, in part, ". . . his surgical skill has remade the lives of thousands; equally, his administrative and organizational talents brought to the Maine General Hospital a four-year teaching program for residents. Patient and modest, his endless hours in clinical and community work have made for him an enviable name not only as a physician, but as a conscientious citizen of his native State."

Fred Willey has been appointed by President Coles to a three-year term as a Director of the Alumni Fund.

1918 Secretary, Lloyd O. Coulter
Nottingham Square Road
Epping, N.H.

Returning for Commencement were Albion, Babbitt, Boyd, Coulter, Daggett, Dean, French, Gray, Hanson, Norton, Sloggett, and Stetson.

On June 18 Bob Albion spoke at the 53rd annual dinner and meeting of the Harvard Club of Worcester, Mass. His subject was "Our New World Responsibility — Foreign Policy and Sea Power."

Members of the Class who were back for Commencement in June elected Lloyd Coulter Secretary-Treasurer, succeeding the late Elliot Freeman.

Classmates and friends will grieve to learn of the death of Elliot Freeman on June 3.

The Henry Haskells' son, Henry '56, is engaged to Miss Germaine Patricia Peacock of Atlanta, Ga. Young Henry is an Army lieutenant in France.

Bob Stetson writes, "Am not wealthy but reasonably contented. Retired from public school music supervisor and now in charge of choir and organ — chapel service — Good Will Homes and Schools in Hinkley. Also organist Waterville Universalist Unitarian Church. Make home with widowed sister, Mrs. Everett P. Merrifield, R.F.D. 1, Waterville."

1919 Secretary, Donald S. Higgins
78 Royal Road, Bangor

Back for Commencement were Atwood, Finn, Flynn, Foulke, Lombard, McCarthy, McDonald, Mahoney, Paul, and Sawyer.

Orson Berry is now working with Cummings Diesel Company of New England, Cambridge Street, Brighton, Mass.

Roy Foulke has been elected a Trustee of Hebron Academy.

Lou McCarthy was elected to Bowdoin's Board of Overseers in June.

Chester Nelson reports, "Daughter, Anita, is manager of Itinerary Department at Cook's Travel Service in San Francisco, Calif. Daughter Carol, a geologist for the Department of the Interior in Washington, D. C., is married and has one daughter."

Dr. Jim Vance has recently been appointed Medical Officer of the Quartermaster Research and Engineering Center in Framingham, Mass.

1920 Secretary, Sanford B. Cousins
200 East 66th Street
New York 21, N.Y.

Registered at Commencement were Atwood, Cousins, Curtis, Allan Hall, McPartland, Rounds, Small, Waltz, Wyman, and Zeitler.

Classmates and friends will grieve to learn of the death of Archie Dostie on June 24.

Emerson Zeitler represented the National American Red Cross at the Memorial Day ceremonies at the Cathedral in the Pines in Rindge, N.H. The Cathedral in the Pines was early in May made a National Shrine to all war dead by an act of Congress. It is the first such shrine in the country.

1921 Secretary, Norman W. Haines
Savings Bank Building
Reading, Mass.

Back for Commencement were Benton, Cole, Holmes, Hone, Laughlin, Lovell, and Pennell.

Dr. Phil McCrum has been promoted to the rank of colonel. He is Commanding Officer of the Professional Detachment of the 333rd General Hospital, USAR, at Fort Williams in Portland. Phil has been a member of the Reserve since 1941 and served three years as an Army doctor in England during World War II. He has practiced medicine in Portland since 1927 and is chief of obstetrical services at the Maine Medical Center.

Arch Morrell has been elected Treasurer of the Maine Medico-Legal Society.

In May Dr. John Young wrote, "Gave talk on behavior problems in children at Tri-State Medical Meeting in Portland on May 9. Son David '53 at Grace-New Haven Hospital in internal medicine. Son Robert '51 at Children's Medical Center (Dallas) in pediatrics. I will address the Nebraska-Iowa Medical meetings on June 20."

1922 Secretary, Albert R. Thayer
40 Longfellow Avenue
Brunswick

The Class enjoyed what all present felt was "far and away the best reunion 1922 ever had." The Friday outing and banquet were staged at Brentwood, Widgery Thomas' beautiful home in Yarmouth. On Thursday evening Al Morrell entertained at his new home in Brunswick.

Nearly forty were present, but only 32 registered in the Library. They were Alexander, Anderson, Barker, Bernstein, Cobb, Congdon, Ferris, Fish, Flinn, Fogg, Bill Hall, Hunt, Jordan, McCurdy, McGorrill, Martin, Morrell, Page, Partridge, Pickard, Ricker, Ridlon, Sleeper, Thayer, Thomas, Towle, Vose, Wagg, Bruce White, Wilson, Woodbury, and Maynard Young.

Phil Abelon is now with W. T. Grant Company, Redstone, Stoneham, Mass., as of May 27. His address is 2 Brimblecom Street, Lynn, Mass.

John Bachulus wrote from Palermo, Italy, on May 25, "Greetings, salutations, and congratulations to all who are attending our 35th. Sorry I can't present the corpus delicti in vivo, but the spirit is there no matter where you choose to rest during these hectic reunion days. No, I'm not fiddling à la Nero, but the juice of the grape is better than tranquilizers and antispasmodics, so come over and view the competition, the Bikini girl, and the mountains. Always for 1922 and Bowdoin."

Dr. Wilfred Brewer is with the Department of Public Health, Education, and Welfare in Washington, D. C.

The Herrick Kimballs' son, Philip '59, was married on June 25 to Miss Mary Ann Philbrick of Fort Fairfield.

Dr. Leo King received an honorary doctor of humane letters degree from Merrimack College on June 6. He has been Chief of Staff at St. Joseph's Hospital in Lowell, Mass., since 1945.

Classmates and friends extend their sympathy to Al Morrell, whose mother, Mrs. Edith E. Morrell, died on June 15.

Jack Pickard has been elected Vice President of the Board of Trustees of Hebron Academy.

Norman Webb died in July of 1951 after a long illness.

1923 Secretary, Richard Small
59 Orland Street, Portland

Back for Commencement were Bramson, Chandler, Healy, Hill, Elliot Perkins, Philbrick, Dick Small, Jake Smith, and Wilder.

Howard Crawford writes, "Son Robert in 2nd Armored Cavalry Regiment at Fort George G. Meade, Md. Saw Dick Willis in New York the other day. He says he still goes to baseball games. His bulging brief case appeared to have other than legal papers in it!"

1928 Secretary, William D. Alexander
Middlesex School
Concord, Mass.

Class Secretary Bill Alexander reports, "The Friday night Commencement dinner at Homewood

Inn, Yarmouth, for the Classes of 1928 and 1929 was a very pleasant party. The following attended: Bill and Virginia Alexander, their son, Charles, and his house guest, George Dangerfield of Rockport, Mass.; Dick and Dodie Chapman, Ed Durant, Howard and Teed Mostrom, Fletcher Means and his sister-in-law Lib, with brother David Means '33, Don and Donna Parks, who, I might add, had done all the spadework for our party; Dick and Marie Phelps with their daughters Susan and Marie and their guest, Anne Raymond; Don and Priscilla Leadbetter, Paul and Ellen Tiemer and son Paul, on leave from the Air Force; Dick and Elynore Thayer and their guest, Miss Frances Welch of the Waves, and Steve and Eloise Trafton. From 1929 we had Tom and Marianna Braman, Sam and Dolly Ladd, and Walter and Evelyn Perkins. Also John and Nancy Ames '30.

"Very tentative plans were made for our 30th Reunion in 1958. Whit Case will be our chairman and Don and Donna Parks will be the local factotums. We expect to have a quiet (but not too quiet) Friday party and dinner at a seashore location yet to be designated. The outing will be a family affair, and we hope that it will approach the success of our 25th. Cards will be sent out as soon as the details are fixed.

"Each year our annual dinner seems to be a bit bigger. It is a grand scheme. Its success is due in large part to the hard work done by Don and Donna Parks."

Charles Alexander, son of Bill Alexander, was graduated from Williams College in June with honors in American history and literature. He has a teaching fellowship in Latin at Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass., for the coming school year.

Classmates and friends will grieve to learn of the death of John Andrews on June 6.

Asa Knowles '30 honored at Northeastern

Bob Tripp and his wife, Ina, run Red Rock Ranch on the Big Wind River in Dubois, Wyo., where they have been since November of 1952. Bob writes, "We got into the hunting and fishing business and started acquiring horses. Of course, the natives had a field day selling me $50 horses for $150 each. I learned the difference after the first couple or so, but they still keep trying. At the present time we wind up with about 45 head."

"We also have the best-rated hunting camp in this area, specializing in elk, deer, bear, moose, and mountain sheep and with perhaps the finest fishing in the United States all around us. The Big Wind River runs through the center of the ranch and you can step out of your motel and start catching 12 to 20 inch rainbows and browns."

The Tripps run Dubois' newest and finest modern motel, with everything for the sportsman and vacationist, and all members of 1928 and their families are welcome to try the facilities.

Munn Ware wrote from Daytona Beach, Fla., in April, "In June I'll be making my first trip west of St. Louis. As the Secretary of the Musicians' Union here, I am one of three delegates to the American Federation of Musicians Convention in Denver. I'm looking forward to seeing the beautiful scenery and breathing the mountain air."

"I am enclosing a write-up of a jazz concert we put on at the local Little Theatre. I also enclose some publicity for an earlier jazz concert as well as a picture taken at the rehearsal for the second concert. These affairs must be cultural. My reason? They don't make any money. Actually, as you'll note from the write-up, the people who attended were really happy. There just weren't enough of them. We intend to continue, however, and one of these times we'll more than break even. The musicians are happy too. They get a chance to blow pretty much as they choose, without any concessions to commercialism. Most paying jobs, even the best, are restrictive to a point. Thus the local jazz performers are willing to play for an hour or so with no assurance of being paid in order to promote an interest in a somewhat less inhibited brand of music than is usually heard. In the big cities there are a few places where a jazz performer can let loose and make some kind of a living at it. Here, and in other cities of this size, the audience for free-wheeling jazz is too small to support a steady diet of it."

The Daytona Beach News-Journal said of the concert, "Munn Ware, the trombonist who directed the program, gave it the best touches of Dixie. In Tin Roof Blues and Jazz Band Ball, he gave it all he had."

Leon Ziesel is now manager of the Quality Control Section of the General Reporting and Service Department of Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., in New York City.

"I married a girl from Illinois whom I met in Michigan. Patti is what she likes to be called but her real name is Dorothea. We have one son, Bill. Bill is a real strapper, 14 years old, 6 feet 1, 185 pounds. In a way it's too bad I probably can't swing Bowdoin for him as it looks like he could make a stalwart tackle for Adam Walsh's line."

"The eight years preceding last summer we lived reasonably compatibly in Massachusetts. But somewhere along the line we decided New England winters were finally not for us, so we pulled up stakes and came to Miami. We've been fortunate. I'm now a salesman for the Southern Florida distributor for A. B. Dick Co. and Pat teaches nursery and kindergarten in a nearby private school. We've loved our first winter in Florida and now await the summer with some trepidation, albeit with a firm determination that it won't be so bad."

"Fresh strawberries and corn on the cob in January and February are a shock to my New England background, but one not too hard to survive."

Bill Burton served as Commencement Marshal in June.

Bob Cotton is Research Supervisor of the Virginia Cellulose Research Division, Research Center, Hercules Powder Company, Wilmington, Del.

Where Do Great Ideas Come From?

From its beginnings this nation has been guided by great ideas.

The men who hammered out the Constitution and the Bill of Rights were thinkers—men of vision—the best educated men of their day. And every major advance in our civilization since that time has come from minds equipped by education to create great ideas and put them into action.

So, at the very core of our progress is the college classroom. It is there that the imagination of young men and women gains the intellectual discipline that turns it to useful thinking. It is there that the great ideas of the future will be born.

That is why the present tasks of our colleges and universities are of vital concern to every American. These institutions are doing their utmost to raise their teaching standards, to meet the steadily rising pressure for enrollment, and provide the healthy educational climate in which great ideas may flourish.

They need the help of all who love freedom, all who hope for continued progress in science, in statesmanship, in the better things of life. And they need it now!

If you want to know what the college crisis means to you, write for a free booklet to: HIGHER EDUCATION, Box 36, Times Square Station, New York 36, N.Y.
