Note from the Editors

Societies Without Borders: Human Rights & the Social Sciences is affiliated with Sociologists Without Borders, which promotes a socially relevant and publicly engaged social science. Societies Without Borders is particularly interested in exploring ways of advancing universal human rights. What the world's peoples have in common – notwithstanding the borders that divide them – is the aspiration to achieve human rights – the rights to food, housing, health care, education, decent work, free speech, to speak one's conscience, as well as the right to a fair trial, to a safe environment, and the right to peace. What the world's people are beginning to discover is that this aspiration is not only a common one, but it can only be pursued collectively in disregard of the borders that divide people. People may live in societies, derive their identities from their societies, but the pursuit of human rights is pursued and coordinated across borders.

Societies Without Borders aims for high caliber scholarly analysis and also encourages submissions that address pioneering thought in human rights, globalism, and collective goods. The journal also welcomes submissions in the following areas: human rights and social justice, public sociology, global studies, critical social theory, environmental and health studies, public anthropology, migration and border studies, radical economics, labor studies, culture and political economy, urban & regional planning, critical media, and film studies. Societies Without Borders: Human Rights & the Social Sciences is a sociological journal that welcomes contributions from all disciplines which seek to blend the quest for truth and expert knowledge with a commitment to social justice, peace, and societal transformation. Societies Without Borders is a double-blind, peer reviewed journal. The editors will consider manuscripts in the following categories:

- 1. Research (5000–8,000 words): Original, theoretically-informed, and methodologically rigorous articles that are accessible to a broad audience.
- 2. Research note, review essay, commentary, and critique (2,000–3,000 words)

3. Book review (1000–2000 words)

4. Dialogue (500 words)

We also invite guest editors to edit future volumes around the following themes:

Capitalism and Human Rights

Decolonizing Human Rights

Food and Human Rights

Torture, Democracy, and Human Rights

Social Theory and Human Rights

Science and Human Rights

The editors will also consider other themes consistent with the objectives of the journal. Authors are invited to submit articles, as electronic attachments, to the journal editors Judith Blau (judith\_blau@unc.edu) and Farshad Araghi (araghi@fau.edu). Send book review queries to Keri Iyall Smith (kiyallsm@suffolk.edu).
