PREFACE

America's involvement in the Republic of Vietnam had certain consequences common to all wars. In the first article of the Journal, T. Grant Callery examines the various legal aspects of the problems of children fathered by American servicemen. Mr. Callery analyzes previous French practices, current Vietnamese laws, and the American response to the situation.

In our second article, Arthur Jay Silverstein conducts an examination of the right of appeal in Talmudic law. The reader is first supplied with an overview of the Talmudic legal system. Mr. Silverstein then explains the procedural devices which triggered the appellate process and analyzes the functional significance of these appellate procedures.

The third feature of this issue is concerned with the outlook for Canadian-American trade liberalization. This feature is the result of a symposium sponsored by the American Society of International Law, held at the School of Law, Case Western Reserve University.

Our student note deals with workmen's compensation laws, and compares recent proposals for federal legislation with existing systems in other countries.
