Why Ursinus 276 Seniors Graduate In Ceremonies Today

In choosing an appropriate name for the College its founders selected the Latinized name of a German scholar and churchman of the Reformation who had been baptized Zacharias Baer. He was born in Breslau, Germany, in 1534. In 1561 he was appointed head of the theological department of the University of Heidelberg and while there he became the principal author of the Heidelberg Catechism. The religious and moral principles of Ursinus College are in essential harmony with those of the man whose distinguished name the College bears.

Educational work on what is now the College campus dates back to a primitive schoolhouse built about two centuries ago. It was razed in 1832 when Todd's School was built. This in turn gave way to Freeland Seminary, a private secondary school for young men which was founded in 1848. Three years later Pennsylvania Female College was founded, one of the earliest collegiate institutions for women, which was in operation until the late 1870's. During the decade of their co-existence Ursinus and Pennsylvania Female College had interlocking faculties and directorates. Ursinus College was founded by a group of members of the German Reformed Church in 1869. The buildings of Freeland Seminary were bought, and instruction was begun on September 6, 1870. Women were admitted to the College for the first time in 1881.

Two hundred and seventy-six Ursinus College seniors receive their diplomas in Commencement ceremonies at 2:30 P.M. today in Wismer Hall. Of the college students, 123 will graduate with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, 124 with the degree of Bachelor of Science, 18 with the degree of Associate in Business Administration, and 11 with the degree of Bachelor of Business Administration.

Honorary Degrees

Two honorary degrees are being conferred in the proceedings. Commencement speaker Harrison E. Salisbury, Assistant Managing Editor of the New York Times, receives the honorary degree of Doctor of Letters. Dr. Samuel L. Gandy, Dean of Howard University's School of Religion (Washington, D.C.), delivers the Baccalaureate address at the ceremony in Bomberger Memorial Chapel at 10:45 A.M. During the Commencement Ceremony Dr. Gandy receives the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity.

First Time

For the first time in recent years, the Baccalaureate and Commencement ceremonies are being held on the same day. During past years, it has been the practice of Ursinus to hold the Baccalaureate ceremony on the day before the Commencement ceremony itself. However, it is felt that these two events may prove more meaningful if they are held with less time between them. In addition, the two-day spread has proved difficult for some parents who live at a distance, and it is thought that holding the two ceremonies on one day may make them more convenient for faculty, students and guests.

Class Increase

This year's class of 276 graduating seniors is a sizable increase over last year's 253 graduates. Ursinus has managed to maintain its commendable balance between recipients of Bachelor of Arts and Bachelor of Science degrees, narrowing last year's slim gap of three to a mere one.

Memorable Occasion

All concerned in this year's Baccalaureate and Commencement exercises have been working very hard toward making the events most memorable ones. The ceremonies promise to be among the best ever. We wish all the graduating seniors the best possible luck in all that they do in the future.

Four Years Later

In 1967, Ursinus men and women attended mandatory chapel services, class attendance was compulsory, men were adorned in semi-formal attire each evening for dinner, women were confined to their dormitory rooms after 10:30 P.M. during the week, all students submitted to rigidly-enforced freshman orientation maneuvers during their first few weeks at college, and only special occasions such as the annual Parents' Day warranted Open Dorms. This was the same year that several hundred bright and promising young people with varied interests and aspirations all decided to entrust the task of their undergraduate education and to devote the proverbial "best years of their lives" to Ursinus College. For the Class of 1971, the past four years have fostered the emotional and intellectual maturity which marks the entrance into responsible adulthood. Hopefully, Ursinus College has been a major step along life's road.

It has been four years since we first made our way across the greenswarded campus, stepping carefully to avoid walking upon the grass. We have learned the necessity of hard work and self-control, and have experienced the importance of getting along with others. Each of us has cemented life-long friendships throughout the years at Ursinus College. Moreover, hopefully, we have made the most of our successes and profited from our failures. Although, in many instances, both academic and athletic competition has been keen, perhaps this too has prepared us to meet more ably the challenges presented throughout life.

Steady and Praiseworthy Progress

The entry of the Class of 1971 into Ursinus College, a mere four years ago, was accompanied by blaring newspaper headlines reflecting a world twisted and torn by conflict of every description. Likewise, the exit of today's graduating class is marked not only by the traditional cap and gown procession down the long aisle, but with a continuation of headlines telling of conflicts, some old, some new. Unlike our world, however, the members of the Class of 1971 have made steady and praiseworthy progress. Their progress has been directed toward the goal of academic proficiency—preparation for excellence in a variety of individual pursuits.

Enduring Standards

It seems that change is the order of the day, even as it has been since the beginning of time. Yet, in the midst of a changing world, we all have a desire for stability and a need for accepting enduring standards that have served as buffers against the turbulence created by the rapidity of change. The problem of providing a sense of stability in a changing world has been fundamental to education since its inception. Too great an emphasis upon change produces chaos; too great an emphasis upon stability produces stagnation. Ursinus College has sincerely endeavored to provide for each of its graduates enduring standards of scholarship, morality, and behavior in the midst of a rapidly changing world. The story is told of a young man of eighteen who thought his father incredibly naive about worldly affairs. The same young man at twenty-one was amazed that his father had learned so much in three short years. I trust that, three years from now, you will realize that the professors and administrators of Ursinus College were not incredibly naive.

Congratulations, Et Cetera

Now, as the years at Ursinus draw to a close, there will be mixed emotions. Some will be relieved; others will already be planning a nostalgic visit back to the campus. Whatever your feelings are, however, you will all bear the distinction of being Ursinus College graduates for the rest of your lives. May all of your endeavors and accomplishments reflect favorably upon the college which fostered your academic development.

The editorial and publishing staff of The Ursinus Weekly joins me in extending our sincerest congratulations to you upon the occasion of your graduation from Ursinus College. We hope that all of you attain a lifetime full of success and happiness, and that your most valued dreams come true. Our best wishes will be with all of you as you proceed to do the world's work.

Looking Ahead and Looking Back

By DR. WILLIAM S. PETTIT

The academic year 1970-1971 was for me a memorable landmark year as it was for many Ursinus students. Probably the analogy most closely parallels the lot of the freshmen. Both of us moved into a new realm of responsibility with its period of adjustment. Near us in our early stages were some who took it upon themselves to give a little gratuitous advice and to make a little disturbing racket in the hope that it would bring us into line, and now as the year draws to an end, we have changed a trifle, but not nearly enough to satisfy all.

If we extend the analogy, hopefulness becomes apparent, for there is another year for each of us, and who knows how many more? Being committed to the concept of the improbability of man we can press vigorously on, safe in the knowledge that next year holds a solution for every problem and that we are sure to find it—or what's a sophomore for?

So many have helped me this year and I am sure that they have helped many of you. I think of Alan Gold, Alan Novak, John Gray and scores of other seniors who will not be back on the scene another year, but seeing good classes come and go causes one to accept the facts of college existence with equanimity.

Every year in college is a miraculous year and each in its own way is better than the previous one. The best of all for the student is the senior year if the senior has managed his life with perspicacity and perspicuity. But the spectre of uncertainty ever haunts each of us as he wonders whether he has prepared himself adequately for that which awaits him, and he really never knows how well he is equipped until that day ahead arrives. But he can make the most of each learning opportunity and then look forward to the challenge with hope and often with keen anticipation.

A negative path is illustrated by a tale concerning the mother who was shopping for a birthday present for Junior. She picked up a puzzle on the counter and asked the clerk, "Isn't this perhaps too complicated for a boy of ten?" The clerk answered, "No, it's an educational puzzle. It is designed to help the child make an adjustment to the world. No matter how he tries to put it together, it's wrong."

By grim experience I have learned that the wrong ways to perform any task far outnumber the right ways, although often there is more than one right way. Doing things wrong ways can become a habit just as can doing things right ways. The probable outcome of just doing may lead us into wrong ways, but knowing how to be right luckily can be learned, although it takes effort, thought, and considerable reference to the past successes and errors of a lot of people.

One of the nationally circulated magazines ran an editorial last year asking, "Who is vetoing our past?" And it was, as I read it, directed to college students, not to Ursinus students in any great numbers because they know that to ignore the lessons of history, and philosophy, and politics is perilous. I am sure that they know that their learning has not stopped with today, for each commencement can always remind us of the new beginnings, of the new challenges, and of the new demands that lie there waiting for us, and of our array of experiences both recent and early that have girded us for those days. Our confidence and self-assurance have much to sustain them.

A Letter from the President

THE WHITE HOUSE

To the 1971 Graduating Class
Ursinus College

The continued success of the American Experiment depends primarily on the qualities of heart, mind and spirit of our young people. As college graduates you have not only the training and idealism, but the opportunity and responsibility to build through further study or through your chosen careers the kind of society which will make further generations proud to identify with your accomplishments.

I know that you will not fail to become part of a positive response to the needs of America: a response worthy of her resources and capacities; worthy of the historic courage and the wisdom and will of her people. Your studies have given you the tools to dedicate yourselves in a very special way to helping overcome some of the most difficult problems we face; and as you become further involved in these efforts, you will continue to discover more examples of the ways in which the complexities of modern life make it imperative for us to work together.

The destiny of our nation is not divided into yours and ours. We share it. There can be no generation gap in America. We must all keep an open mind and forthright spirit, balance the courage of our convictions with the courage of our uncertainties, triumph over bigotry and prejudice and recapture the unity of purpose that has always been our strength.

Your fresh ideas and candid approach can be a strong deterrent to division and a valuable asset in building the alliance of the generations we so urgently need if we are to advance the cause we share. As I congratulate you on this graduation day, I do so in full confidence that you will answer this need both in your careers and in your daily lives.
