Box Elder Bugs

Box elder bugs are commonly seen at various times throughout the year. During certain periods, such as late fall, their presence increases as they congregate on buildings and look for openings to overwinter. Typically, sunny, southern exposures will see a higher number of them. At times, they may be seen again attempting to exit buildings, with some becoming trapped inside.

While definitely a nuisance, box elders are harmless. They can only live a few days in a building before dying and do not reproduce indoors. Spraying insecticide in the building is not recommended and does not prevent more from returning.

If you are bothered by them in your area, please call the Facilities office at ext: 4515 and a custodian will come and vacuum them.
