Abstract

Fibromyalgia is a chronic pain syndrome, which mostly affects middle age women and whose etiological factors remain unclear. Psychosocial aspects may have a relevant role as predisposing, triggering, and/or perpetuating factors for this syndrome, raising the interest about life history of patients with fibromyalgia. In this study, we interviewed 10 women with a diagnosis of fibromyalgia, who had identified a critical or very stressful life event before the onset of the syndrome. The interview about the life history comprises the whole life, before and after the onset of the syndrome, and the narratives were analyzed with interpretative phenomenological analysis. Nine themes emerged: struggle, focus on adversities, positive overlaps the negative, scars of unhappy childhood, help others, perfectionism and desire to achieve, unsatisfactory present, perception of injustice, and keep feelings inside. A difficult life history is prevalent in these women and the themes identified are discussed in their relation with other qualitative studies and their possible role as predisposing and perpetuating factors for fibromyalgia. The ability to value the positive side of things, despite the adversities these women emphasized, is highlighted as an aspect to explore in psychological intervention, to enable a better management of this syndrome.

The syndrome of fibromyalgia is a chronic pain condition characterized by widespread muscle pain and also associated with fatigue, sleep and cognitive difficulties, anxiety and depressed mood (Smith et al., 2009). Fibromyalgia presents intense subjective complaints but no objective clinical findings, and although disruption of pain processing has been demonstrated at various levels in the nervous system, the lack of an objective test in the clinical

THE QUALITATIVE REPORT SIXTH ANNUAL CONFERENCE

Transforming Qualitative Research

Insights from qualitative research are having a transformative effect on how we understand and manage our world. Quantitative renderings of what happened are now regularly joined by qualitative descriptions, interpretations, and explanations of not only the what, but also the how, the why, the who, the when, and the where to produce better context-sensitive information on which important decisions can be made. This emerging practice of regularly including qualitative and quantitative perspectives in inquiries has led to changes in how we design, evaluate, access, understand, and change the world around us.

Qualitative research can also have a transformative influence on the persons conducting the inquiry. A

Twenty-five years ago we started The Qualitative Report (TQR) in a world much different than what we see today in education, business, and technology; and in our lives in general. The degree to which qualitative research was practiced, published, and appreciated was in distinct contrast to its wider distribution, acceptance, and popularity today. How this quarter-century of expansion and proliferation predicts the next twenty-five years for qualitative

Comments
Hillary Keeney and Bradford Keeney would like to express their gratitude and appreciation to our colleagues in Mexico for their support of this work. In particular Pedro Vargas Avalos and Clara Haydee Solis Ponce, who with their colleagues have sponsored our teaching at the Department of Clinical Psychology, National University of Mexico (UNAM), Zaragoza, and Juan Carlos García and Sylvia Arce, who have sponsored our teaching at Etfasis: Institute of Systemic Family Therapy. It was during our seminars there that many of the ideas in this book were developed.

Ronald Chenail would like to thank President George L. Hanbury II and Nova Southeastern University for supporting The Qualitative Report; Hillary and Brad Keeney for their continuing guidance and encouragement; Lydia Acosta, Michele Gibney, and Cheryl Ann Peltier-Davis for launching NSU Works and helping with our first book development and release; Melissa Rosen for her copyediting and graphics skills; Adam Rosenthal for his leadership in making TQR Books a reality; and Jan Chenail, my late wife, for making me a better writer, husband, father, and friend.

About the NSU Archives

The NSU Archives seeks and stores information and materials about members of the greater university community and their contributions to the university's growth and history.

The NSU Archives appraises, collects, organizes, describes, and preserves the official and ancillary university records of historical, cultural, legal, fiscal, and administrative value.

The NSU Archives urges the NSU community to have regard for, and not discard, their individual and personal documents, artifacts, memorabilia, correspondence, and photographs relevant to university activities.

If in doubt, don't throw it out. Allow the university's professional archivist to determine the long-term value and significance of your materials, while respecting your confidentiality.

Opportunities for Giving

Please contact the university archivist for information on special naming and giving opportunities for financial contributions. All discussions are appropriately confidential and adhere to university giving policies.

In the 1980s, Dr. Stephen Goldstein, Vice President of Community Relations, organized and began the Forum Series, a long-running tradition at Nova Southeastern University. The Forum Series consisted of a luncheon or dinner along with a distinguished speaker who came to discuss their life and work with members of the Nova Southeastern University community as well as Broward County residents.

Many of the Forum speakers were immortalized in paintings by various artists. These illustrations, occasionally signed by the speaker, are presented here for viewing.

The collection will continue to grow as staff of the NSU Archives unearth additional artwork, digitize and upload them to this series. Staff are also working to build out the accompanying information with each image. Visit site

In the 1960s, James M. Hartley, II, functioning as the university architect for Nova Southeastern University, did many architectural renderings and illustrations for the Board of Trustees.

These include a master plan, fully developing the university in its final stage, along with individual buildings and their composite interior and exterior designs. The three original buildings at Nova Southeastern University were the Mailman/Hollywood Building, Parker Building, and Rosenthal Building. While several of Hartley's designs were never built (notably the Oceanographic Center), they are included in this collection to display the range of work and the original vision of the university's founders.

While many of Hartley's original designs have not survived, the NSU Archives are pleased to be able to present this collection of his architectural illustrations created for the fledgling university. Sincere thanks goes to the family of James M. Hartley, II, for allowing the NSU Archives to make these renderings available online and share them with a wider audience.

Dear Gold Circle Member:

A new year will be beginning soon--not just a school year but also a year for growth in Gold Circle for Nova University.

We will pursue the Living Endowment Scholarship Fund that is so necessary to enable students to fund their education. We are sincerely in need of your support and help with the project.

Our first meeting for the year will be at Ina Reed's beautiful home on September 30th. Invitations will be in the mail soon.

We plan to continue the Nova University Distinguished Faculty Seminar series and you will be receiving more information on this.

I look forward to seeing you on September 30th.

Sincerely,

Margaret S. Sudbrink

In February of 2014, the Alvin Sherman Library, Research, and Information Technology Center at NSU launched an institutional repository to collect, archive and disseminate scholarship and historical materials produced by the faculty, students, staff, and alumni of NSU. In one year NSUWorks, (<http://nsuworks.nova.edu>), has added over 6,000 items and has recently reached a second important milestone – over 100,000 downloads from around the world on March 18, 2015.

The repository is an online, open access archive that currently includes faculty publications, theses/dissertations, collections from the NSU Archives, five journals, three conferences, and a myriad of other items related to the history and scope of NSU's past and present. NSUWorks continues to grow daily and welcomes submissions, questions and the opportunity to collaborate on projects at nsuworks@nova.edu.

The 100,000th download was an article in one of the journals housed in NSUWorks, The Qualitative Report, by a former EDD student and current employee of the Abraham S. Fischler School of Education, Daniel W. Turner III: "Qualitative Interview Design: A Practical Guide for Novice Investigators" at <http://nsuworks.nova.edu/tqr/vol15/iss3/19/>.

Conclusions

- Cheap student labor
- Identify “low hanging fruit”
- Identify opportunities
- Outreach / Form relationships
- Always say “Yes!” (or at least “Let me look into that!”)
