PREFACE

The purpose of this study was to analyze court transcripts and depositions to establish a basic vocabulary which would approximate the language heard in the courtroom and during deposition hearings. Actual court transcripts and depositions sent by court reporters from throughout the United States were analyzed. Three categories of cases, criminal, civil, and juvenile, were combined into master wordlists, including Vocabulary by Rank Wordlist and Alphabetic Wordlist. Category wordlists by rank were included. The wordlists prepared in this study should serve as a basis for instructional materials to be used in the educational preparation of court reporters.

Gratitude is sincerely expressed to Dr. Herbert Jelley who served as chairman of the doctoral committee and thesis advisor. His genuine interest and valuable assistance throughout the doctoral program are acknowledged with sincere appreciation. Gratitude is also expressed to the other members of the doctoral committee, Dr. Joan Pierson, Dr. Zane Quible, and Dr. Wayne James, for their interest in this study.

Thanks is expressed to the many court reporters who donated materials for analysis, and for the help of Ms. Mary Louise Gilman for her assistance in publicizing my need.

A special note of thanks is given to Ron Storzyszyn for his patience and dedication in the preparation of the computer programs used in the word analysis. Without his perseverance and hard work, the completion of this thesis would have been impossible.

Enduring gratitude is expressed to my husband, Royce, and son, Scott, for their unending support, encouragement, and many sacrifices during my studies. Without their love and understanding, I would have given up several times.

Finally, for not only the financial support which made the completion of this degree possible in two and a half years, but for always being there when I needed them, I deeply thank my mother and father, Wanda and Bill Newton. No two parents have ever given so much as mine.

CHAPTER I

THE RESEARCH PROBLEM

Introduction

"In Democracy's greatest battles, words were the most effective weapons" (38, p. 3). Word battles are heard and recorded daily by court and freelance reporters. Words are their livelihood. The written word has long been a medium for recording history. Zoubek and Rifkin (44) explained why the art of taking shorthand to preserve the spoken word has tripled in usefulness over the past few years when they stated:

It has never ceased to be the medium it always was for the preservation of great thoughts and vital historical words in the halls of government, in the pulpit, or in high debate. In addition, it has become today an integral part of the administration of justice, where its symbols are the official record of the proceedings of every court of record (p. v).

Words are the tools of a court reporter just as a hammer and nails are the tools of a carpenter. The specialized vocabulary heard in court proceedings and during depositions needs to be part of a court reporting student's training. Stenograph Corporation (37), a division of Stenographic Machines, Incorporated, publishers of machine shorthand and court reporting textbooks, used a panel of experts to compile its textbook, Skill Development for Court Reporting. They concurred that students learning a shorthand system for court reporting needed word recognition when they stated:

It will be well to remember that the two elements of any shorthand system are comprehension and response. Before you can write anything with speed, you must be able to comprehend the word or sound so that you can respond according to the theory and writing principles that you have learned (p. xvi).

Gasdor (11), who wrote the foreword for Computer Compatible Machine Shorthand Vol. II, clarified why words are so important not only for the court reporting student but for secretarial students as well:

For the aspiring stenographer, secretary, or reporter, an ever expanding vocabulary is essential. As each day passes, the English language acquires new words--technical and nontechnical--which at some point in each machine shorthand writer's career, he or she will be called upon to write in shorthand, on the typewriter, or in longhand (p. i).

He encouraged students to continually expand their knowledge of words even after they had completed their courses of study. He stated:

Any experienced reporter will agree, the greater one's knowledge of words, the greater one's comprehension and grasp of the subject matter being dictated increases, the faster the writer of shorthand will write (p. i).

Zoubek and Rifkin (44) concurred:

. . . the first need for the reporting student after he has acquired the skill of the amanuensis stenographer is for a reporting vocabulary. For reporting purposes he needs to know the words that are most common to reporting, in addition to the words most common to commerce (p. vi).

The mastery of a basic vocabulary within the court reporting field, therefore, will increase the ease and speed with which the court reporter is able to accurately record depositions or court hearings.

One definition of "vocabulary" according to the Funk & Wagnall dictionary (10, p. 1407) is "a sum or aggregate of the words used or understood by a particular person, class, etc., or employed in some specialized field of knowledge." Court reporting constitutes a specialized field of knowledge. In his study of the field of knowledge of business, Silverthorn (36) stated:

With the passing of time there seems to be an ever-increasing number of different areas of knowledge. The fund of knowledge within these various areas tends to expand with the passing of time. With an increasing number of areas of knowledge and expanding knowledge within the areas, the vocabularies of these areas become increasingly important. The vocabulary of an area of knowledge is of particular importance to those who plan some degree of specialization in that area (pp. 1-2).

Machine shorthand students may have learned a great many arbitraries and phrases for general business use, but those aspiring to become court reporters must be exposed to the vocabulary of depositions and courtroom testimony. A working knowledge of the vocabulary in the court reporting field is essential to the student who will be called upon in the future to prepare correct transcripts and depositions. West (42) affirmed that the training materials of shorthand students should be realistic:

The vocabulary used in the instructional materials for typing and stenographic skills should prepare the individual for the words he will encounter later, either occupationally or in personal use. A necessary corollary is the use of test materials that will most validly assess the trainee's readiness for employment or the adequacy of his personal skills. The pertinent underlying concept or principle is that of maximum positive transfer (from school training to later life performance), an outcome that requires as close as possible a match between the materials of the training and those of later life (p. 13).

In his comparison of the relative word-combination frequencies of business correspondence, Perry (34, p. 5) felt that "the language used in preparing a learner for a business career must conform to the language of business." Likewise, the language used in preparing court reporters must conform to the language of the courtroom.

It was the focus of this study to compile a reference source of high frequency words that are approximately analogous to the real world encountered by court reporters. The writer feels a word list would provide educators and others interested in the field of court reporting with a valuable training tool. This list could become the basis for further vocabulary studies dealing with the specialized field of court reporting.

Need for the Study

Although several wordlists for business communications, legal terminology, and other specialized fields have been developed, the researcher could find no list produced entirely from depositions and court transcripts. Cyrus (5, p. 9), who conducted a study comparing syllabic intensity found in New Jersey courtroom transcripts to syllabic intensity found in the New Jersey Certified Shorthand Reporters examinations, felt that ". . .students in court reporting schools may not be receiving stenographic skill development on materials which typify the courtroom setting." A wordlist developed directly from depositions and court transcripts would appear, then, to be the first step needed in the compilation of materials analogous to the courtroom setting. Ita (19) encouraged educators to become interested in words for specialized areas when she said:

Since words, as teaching tools, are particularly important in specialized fields, it behooves those responsible for the teaching and training of future office workers to recognize this fact, and to provide data that will satisfy the needs of the business world. Because of a dearth of scientific research in the field of legal terminology, textbooks have had a tendency to embrace broader and more extensive vocabularies than is perhaps necessary and have included archaic terms no longer used in modern legal correspondence (p. 4).

An examination of several major court reporting beginning theory textbooks revealed that Ita may have been right. No uniform listing of arbitraries or brief forms could be established because of the fluctuation of the number of words listed. A brief form or arbitrary is an abbreviated form for the most common words in a language or for those words that are difficult to write in full. These brief forms aid the court reporter in taking the dictation down quickly and easily. Stenotype System Theory and Skill Building (16) listed 185 brief forms, Stenograph's Skill Development for Court Reporting (37) listed 418 brief forms, while Philadelphia Clinic Reporting Course (27) listed over 750 brief forms. Do these lists in fact embrace broader vocabulary or include archaic terms as suggested by Ita (19)? During a telephone interview, Jensen (20), Vice President of the Hedman Corporation, acknowledged that the brief forms used in their publications were extrapolated from Ita's (19) and Perry's (34) legal and business correspondence studies and were not derived from actual court transcripts or depositions.

Charles Swem, one of the world's greatest Gregg reporters, warned court reporting students in the Zoubek and Rifkin (44) book about learning brief forms they won't use a great deal when he wrote:

A shortcut, or any outline for that matter, is valuable only to the degree to which it becomes an automatic response of the mind and hand. A half-learned outline is worse than useless; it is a reporting deterrent.

Experience and research have shown that the only outlines which can be made the subject of automatic responses are those which occur with sufficient frequency to become impressed upon the mind without conscious effort. Hence, the only shortcuts worth adopting and practicing are those that occur regularly as part of the vocabulary required of the particular writer. . . .

The student must remember that any attempt to learn a whole list of unrelated shortcuts is dangerous for both speed and accuracy; so too is the effort to learn a shortcut that does not occur frequently enough to make it a subject of automatic writing response (pp. x-xi).

Simply learning an arbitrary which later may not occur frequently in actual practice can create hesitation for the professional reporter. Speed, therefore, is hindered when there is hesitation between strokes.

Legal word handbooks, although quite comprehensive, do not emphasize high frequency words found in depositions and court transcripts. For instance, 10,000 Legal Words (24) lists 971 legal terms found in 3,948 letters dictated by 101 lawyers, legal terms found in only 7 complete court transcripts, highly technical legal terms found in glossaries and several technical dictionaries, approximately 500 foreign legal words and phrases, and medical terms. Although Gilmer's Revision Cochran's Law Lexicon (12) serves as a handbook of legal word and phrases, its aim is:

. . .to give, in condensed form, the meaning and application of all such words, phrases, maxims, abbreviations and references to reports, as a student of the law will be likely to encounter in his reading, and which the ordinary knowledge of the English language might not enable him to understand (p. v).

Despite the fact that these handbooks are good reference books for court reporting students, they do not aid the court reporting teacher or court reporting textbook authors in narrowing the list of high frequency words to be taught.

Many times teachers dictate materials and drill on difficult vocabulary without knowing the frequency of occurrence of such material. Von Berg (40) said:

It seems that one of the gravest mistakes we make is that of giving unrestricted vocabulary dictation. Are we not shooting far from the mark in giving dictation without regard to frequency? (p. 211).

A realistic vocabulary is important in the training of court reporters. Consequently, the teachers of court reporting and the authors of court reporting textbooks need authoritative sources of reference concerning the vocabularies of depositions and court transcripts. The vocabulary of depositions and court transcripts seems particularly important for the development of arbitrary and phrase lists for student training because a haphazard selection of words that do not occur frequently in the real world can cause hesitation at high speeds.

Purpose of the Study

The purpose of this study was a word frequency analysis of depositions and court transcripts from court reporters throughout the United States.

This study will contribute to research in the field of court reporting. Information gained from this study will be useful to teachers and authors of court reporting textbooks in providing scientific technical data which could serve as a reliable basis for materials for students to master the most frequently used words which typify the courtroom setting.

It is hoped that this study will stimulate further research in this important professional field.

Statement of the Problem

This study was undertaken to analyze the vocabulary used in depositions and court transcripts. It was a study of the overall vocabulary of depositions and court transcripts from both freelance and official court reporters, not a study of the vocabulary of any particular special court.

Specifically, the following two-pronged question was answered with the data which were collected and analyzed in this study: What are the words which appear commonly in depositions and court transcripts, and what was the relative frequency with which the words occurred?

Delimitations

1. The words studied were limited to depositions and court transcripts obtained from court reporters in the United States who responded to the researcher's letters, state association publication articles, or the letter to the editor in the national court reporter's magazine.

2. Only the words in the question and answer portion of each transcript were counted in this study. Excluded from the tabulation were title pages, voir dire, swearing of witnesses, opening statements, parenthetical remarks, read backs, discussions off the record, oaths, stipulations, certification of questions, reporter's certificates, and jury charges.

3. All forms of a root word were included, e.g., "handle", "handled", "handles", "handling".

4. Proper names, numbers (even though they were written out), ordinal numbers, money, fractions, months of the year, and days of the week were eliminated from the word count. However, hyphenated words that contained numbers were included, e.g., "two-pronged", and "one-sided"; and the words "hundred", "thousand", "million", and "billion" were included. Abbreviations were counted as words.

Abbreviations that stood for proper names were eliminated.

5. No attempt was made to correct grammatical errors, i.e., words were entered as they were written ("I just done it as a favor"); however, spelling errors were corrected, for example, the word "travelled" was corrected to "traveled" so the computer could correctly match it with any other occurrences of "traveled".

6. Typographical errors were corrected. For example, "none" was substituted for "non" when sentence meaning obviously indicated "none" was the proper word choice.

7. If a word was started on one page of a transcript and finished on the next page, the entire word was included even though the next page may not have been a part of the random sample of pages. For example, the transcript labeled "CIV52," page 53, which was randomly sampled, contained the word "specific-" and page 54, which was not randomly sampled, contained the ending "ally". The entire word, "specifically", was included in the word count.

8. Countries were included in the word count because the words "United States" and "America" are brief forms written as one word and the writer did not want to include one country and exclude other countries.

9. Hyphenated expressions were counted as one word.

10. Contractions were counted as contractions instead of being spelled in full. Words that were possessive were counted as possessive.

Limitations

Although it was explained in the letters to the court reporters that all transcripts and depositions sent would be used in the strictest confidence, it was anticipated that many court reporters, especially official reporters as opposed to freelance reporters, would be unable to share transcripts because of court and/or firm rules and procedures prohibiting their distribution. The effect of the sample size in this study is not known.

The number of civil and criminal cases randomly sampled did not coincide with the number of criminal and civil cases filed nationwide according to the National Center for State Courts (1, 8). However, separate category lists showing frequency of occurrence of all words in each category is presented in the appendix so that comparisons between civil, criminal, and juvenile cases can be made.

Definition of Terms

The following definitions will clarify the meaning of some of the terminology used in this report. The terms and their definitions are as follows:

Arbitraries--Brief or short forms for certain words that are used by court reporters to facilitate more rapid writing.

Court reporter--A court official or freelance reporter who is responsible for the verbatim recording of the proceedings in trials or depositions and for then transcribing the notes verbatim without editing or correcting what was said. Reporter and court reporter are used synonymously in this study.

Deposition (39, p. 15)--". . . is a sworn, written statement in question and answer form taken by oral examination from a witness prior to trial." It may also be ". . . in aid of execution (taken after the lawsuit is completed)".

Freelance reporter--A court reporter who does general reporting out of court. The freelance reporter may be self-employed or may work for a reporting firm which specializes in general reporting.

Frequency list (13, p. 239)--"An arrangement of words or expressions showing the number of times they occur in a given number of running words." The arrangement may be in ascending or descending order of frequency of occurrence or in alphabetical order.

Official court reporter or official reporter--A court reporter who usually gets his or her appointment from a judge and who is on a salary set by the state or municipality. The reporter is hired by a court and usually must remain in that particular court.

Running words (13, p. 473)--"The total number of words in a passage made up of the different words plus their repetitions."

Transcript--An official copy of what transpired during the proceedings of a trial.

Voir dire--The process of qualifying and selecting a jury to serve at a trial.

Word frequency--The number of times a word occurred in the question and answer materials analyzed.

Assumptions

The depositions and court transcripts supplied by court reporters, insofar as vocabulary was concerned, was representative of copy normally produced. It was assumed that the deposition or court transcript was representative of depositions or court transcripts written by that particular reporter and of depositions or court transcripts in general.

Summary

Although in the past many word studies in technical fields as well as general vocabulary areas have been conducted, there is still a great need to provide a source of reference to the words used most frequently in depositions and court transcripts. Because using words as teaching tools is particularly important in specialized fields, this study sought a frequency word count of depositions and court transcripts to aid teachers and authors of court reporting textbooks in the educational preparation of the court reporter.

The remainder of this study is organized as follows: Chapter II reviews literature relating to court reporting and stenotype machines and to word studies relevant to the problem under investigation. Chapter III presents a detailed description of the procedures used in conducting this study, and Chapter IV reports the findings obtained. Finally, the summary, conclusions, and recommendations of the study are presented in Chapter V.

CHAPTER II

RELATED LITERATURE

Introduction

A review of the literature revealed there were few studies in the court reporting area, however, there have been a wide variety of studies conducted in the field of vocabulary research. Vocabulary, it seems, is an area that interests many educators.

The lack of research in the court reporting area may be attributed to several factors. Many court reporting schools are privately owned and operated by practicing court reporters. Even though they are highly skilled in the court reporting area, few have the background or time to conduct needed research. Another factor may be that most educators who teach a shorthand system are not teaching machine shorthand which is directly related to court reporting; thus their interest in doing research lies in fields other than court reporting. Cyrus (5), who conducted a study in the court reporting area, had difficulty in finding literature to review. He stated:

The lack of research in the areas of machine shorthand and court reporting has necessitated the review of literature to take an alternate format in reviewing this literature. Comparative analysis of research studies was not possible because of the non-availability of educational research in this area (p. 30).

He also remarked: "There are no recorded studies in the area of the syllabic intensity of courtroom testimony. In addition, studies on the methodology of teaching machine shorthand are not available" (p. 25).

The review of literature was organized under these categories: (1) court reporting and stenotype machine studies and (2) word frequency vocabulary studies closely allied to the present study.

Court Reporting and Stenotype Machine Studies

One of the earliest studies that related both to the court reporting and vocabulary areas was that done by E. J. Kimble (23). After an exhaustive investigation, Kimble found that his compilation of vocabulary from 190 different types of businesses was:

. . .the first book of its character ever offered to shorthand students, teachers, business colleges, civil service schools, educational institutions, stenographers, and court reporters (p. 3).

He explained the method he used in compiling the series of wordlists which contained a total of 90,000 words as follows:

The sources of information mainly relied upon in compiling this work have been actual stenographic experience, observation of stenographers, trade journals, trade catalogs, special dictionaries, recognized authorities upon any given vocabulary, numerous dictation studies, and every-day business correspondence. From these various sources the writer has sought to gather in logical and convenient form, adequately indexed, vocabularies covering 190 different types of business. The work has occupied five years of arduous labor (p. 6).

Robey and Burr (35) conducted a comparative study in 1974 of the alternative methods and techniques used in stenographic training. They surveyed businesses in the Little Rock area and affirmed there was a demand for workers who could take shorthand. They also compared one stenotype machine shorthand class to one traditional Gregg shorthand class each having one hour of instruction daily. Though this was not a controlled scientific study, Robey and Burr concurred that the machine appeared to be the superior method because 44 percent of the students in the machine shorthand class reached job entry level at the end of one year as compared to only six percent in the Gregg shorthand class. They stated:

Students who had taken traditional shorthand before taking the machine system were asked which system they preferred. The majority favored the touch (machine) system. The reasons they gave were that machine shorthand is faster, they could read it back faster, notes never got cold, and homework was more interesting (p. 22).

They concluded that the touch shorthand system appeared to be a superior system of shorthand, and they encouraged more schools to consider adding touch shorthand to their business curriculum offerings. They explained the variety of uses for touch shorthand by saying that it is:

. . . not limited to court reporting but lends itself for use anywhere shorthand skills are needed. It can easily open the door to many prestigious jobs such as executive secretary, medical-technical secretary, court reporter, and conference reporter (p. 23).

An 88 percent failure rate on the New Jersey Certified Shorthand Reporters Examination prompted Cyrus (5) to conduct a study in 1977 comparing the syllabic intensity found in the examinations to the syllabic intensity found in New Jersey courtroom transcripts. Like this writer, Cyrus had great difficulty in obtaining the transcripts necessary for his study. He finally persuaded the custodian of the records of the Appellate Division of the New Jersey Superior Court to release the 140 transcripts needed. "The transcripts were selected at random and in no fixed order by the custodian" (p. 32) as Cyrus monitored the proceedings. One page from each transcript was randomly selected for analysis.

The actual words and actual syllables were then counted on each transcript page. "The average syllabic intensity for each transcript sample was found by dividing the number of syllables in the sample by the number of actual words in the sample" (p. 33).

The secretary of the New Jersey Board of Shorthand Reporting supplied the 1973-75 New Jersey Certified Shorthand Reporters Examinations for analysis. Duplicate analysis procedures were then used on each page of each examination as had been used on the court transcript pages. All data was keypunched for computer analysis.

Cyrus (5) found the syllabic intensity on the examinations and the syllabic intensity on the court transcripts were not significantly different. He concluded that the New Jersey examinations were valid instruments for measuring a participant's competency.

In 1979 Kennedy (22) attempted to learn the stenotype machine along with other adult learners at Vermont College so that she could experience the same triumphs and frustrations they felt while attending the courses entitled Computer Compatible Machine Shorthand and Court and Conference Reporter Training. She stated her ". . . immediate purpose was to provide information that would be helpful in recruiting, admitting, and counseling the learner during the studies" (p. 6).

Kennedy developed a set of checkpoints that were used at various times from course entry through the completion of the courses as an aid for admissions personnel and teachers in enrolling, counseling, and motivating the students. "The study of only adult learners was changed to include all class participants" (p. 17) after the study began.

She hypothesized that:

(1) both adults and students would need special counseling; (2) adults, more than students, would have difficulty with the time-discipline required and less difficulty with motivation; (3) the learning of the skill would be easier if the learner had a background of typewriting (p. 20).

Kennedy concluded that "the hypothesis that typewriting is essential was generally correct" (p. 23). After surveying the students, they perceived the beginning of the semester to be easier for note reading and theory learning (vocabulary) than during the second semester. Kennedy felt that:

In machine shorthand more than rote learning is required, though there is a consideration of it; motor skills are extremely important and may be a deciding factor especially between the court and the conference reporting (p. 15).

There were 699 stenotype machine shorthand graduates and 750 manual shorthand graduates from 2 two-year colleges and 14 secondary schools who were surveyed by Drexler (7). The purpose of the study was to assess to what extent stenotype machine shorthand programs had grown in New York state schools, to evaluate current practices related to its instruction, and to determine whether results warranted encouragement of machine shorthand by the New York State Education Department.

Machine shorthand was compared to manual shorthand in several areas. They were:

(1) scope and sequence of curriculum; (2) cost to the school district; (3) educational background of the graduates; (4) types of businesses which hire machine stenographers; (5) employment opportunities (6) salaries and vocational uses of shorthand skills; (7) potential promotional opportunities and achieved promotional advancement (p. 42).

Drexler found that the manual shorthand writers were slightly more successful, especially in getting a job. She felt this could be because some employers who had been comfortable for years with pen writers were apprehensive of the "newfangled" stenotype machine. She also felt that there were no major differences in the curriculum offerings or of the survey respondents educational background. She suggested that schools should consider on an individual basis whether to offer machine or manual shorthand after they have assessed the employment needs in their area and given close consideration to the needs of the students.

Although court reporters have been aware of computers to aid their transcription of court transcripts and depositions for approximately ten years, the widespread use of computers began only a few years ago. A special stenotype machine is hooked up by means of a cable to a computer which can instantly translate the reporter's notes into English. The National Center for State Courts (28) conducted a fourteen-month study of the technology and use of computer systems that translate the shorthand notes of court reporters into English. The information received was gleaned from questionnaires sent to each state court administrative office. State courts utilizing the computer-aided translation (CAT) systems were analyzed and anticipated future developments were explained. Comparisons were made of courts that hired freelance reporters who used CAT to courts which purchased their own CAT systems.

Six case studies were described in detail to provide guidance for courts who did not have a CAT system. An explicit universal cost-benefit methodology for use by courts regardless of their particular operating environment was given. Management strategies for implementing a CAT system and an outline of the implementation process was presented along with a listing of CAT vendors and courts with CAT systems.

Woodall (43) studied the machine shorthand notes of beginning machine shorthand students to determine error rates for selected abbreviations, derivatives, and principles of stenograph machine shorthand. She was also interested in what the teachers of machine shorthand perceived to be the most difficult for their students to learn. She then compared the teachers' perceptions of difficulty with the error rates obtained from the students' notes.

One hundred shorthand teachers completed checklists containing abbreviations, derivatives, and principles. Two wordlists and new-matter letters were dictated to 152 beginning machine shorthand students by their teachers. A comparison of the data revealed patterns of errors for 17 selected abbreviations and derivatives and 28 selected principles.

Major conclusions and recommendations by Woodall included the omission of W for silent W in WR beginnings, K for COM, and -L for LY. "For the principle I for Y ending, short I should be written for 'Y' in all words ending in 'Y'" (p. 151). She found that over half the forms written for "enclosure" and "usually" were errors and that these correlated with what the teachers had perceived to be the most difficult for their students to write. In addition, the teachers had listed the word "usual." Of the principles, two-thirds of the forms written for -T omitted in past tense of -KT, -SHS for SHUS, INT for INTER, ENT for ENTER, and -FM for SM were errors. Teachers had perceived -FM for SM ending, -NGS for NKSHUN, long vowels, -BGS for KSHUN, and -H omitted in TH ending to be the most difficult. The correlations of error rates with perceived difficulty showed a substantial relationship for abbreviations and derivatives but a negative relationship for principles. Finally, the error types with the highest percentage of errors were too many letters or strokes for abbreviations and derivatives, prefix principles, and suffix principles; too few letters or strokes for general principles; and substitution for vowel principles.

Word Frequency Vocabulary Studies

This section will deal with word frequency studies that are closely allied to the present study. The idea of word frequency or vocabulary infers some procedure for identifying the words used more often than others (frequency of occurrence) and the establishment of their ranking by order of use. Many word studies have been based on Kaedig's (21) massive German word count which was originally published in 1898, although it was Timothy Bright who developed one of the earliest words lists in the 16th Century. Kaedig's list, which served to establish the frequency of occurrence of phonetic combinations, gave no consideration to word meanings or syntax, and was to be the background for a shorthand system. His method of using a large number of running words and a frequency count to establish rank served as a basis for later word studies. Ayres (2), Kimble (23), Horn (17), Harms (15), Perrigo (33), Horn-Peterson (18), Silverthorn (36), Perry (34), Mellinger (25, 26), Warner (41), Ober (31), and Brooks (4) all conducted business vocabulary studies using frequency word counts.

In his 1913 study of the spelling vocabularies contained in 2,000 personal and business letters, Ayres (2) purported to find whether or not a definitive body of words existed in these letters to form the core of spelling vocabulary taught in elementary grade schools. He tabulated words from letters to each of the following: query department of a newspaper, mail-order business, doctor, lawyer, publishing firm, school teachers from parents, philanthropic organization, YWCA secretaries, a family (personal), playground association, query department of a magazine, and a variety of love letters. There were 110,160 running words contained in these letters; however, Ayres tabulated only the first word in each line of every letter in addition to the salutations and endings which were tabulated separately resulting in 23,629 running words actually tabulated.

There were 2,001 individual words after the duplicates had been removed. One word occurred 1,080 times in the 23,629 running words. There were 751 words that occurred only once. The cumulative total of individual words grew slowly after the first 1,000 letters had been tabulated. Forty-three words represented 50 percent of the tabulation, and these are listed in order of frequency of occurrence in Figure 1.

Kimble's (23) vocabulary study was discussed in detail in the previous section of this study. He worked five arduous years to compile a vocabulary list because he felt:

The common or standard dictation books to be found in book stores and business colleges do not furnish the student or stenographer adequate technical vocabulary material in any single line of business (p. 3).

Kimble felt his book contained more knowledge than he could find in the combined contents of all the different dictation books in circulation in 1922. He suggested that any stenographer or court reporter who desired to become proficient in any of the 190 different types of business vocabularies listed should write and re-write these particular words until they become skilled in that area.

The first specialized office vocabulary list was developed by Horn (17) in 1926. He began in 1919 compiling words of all correspondence studies which had already been completed by other investigators up to that time. "As new investigations were completed and available they were added to this compilation" (p. 17). By 1922, 865,000 running words had been compiled. Horn called this the compilation of 1922.

Eight other studies which dealt with the vocabulary of business correspondence, the vocabulary of personal letters, the vocabulary of letters of people of more than average literary ability, the vocabularies of letters of application and recommendation, the vocabulary of letters of a single individual written over a period of eight years, and the vocabulary of adult writing other than correspondence were added in 1926 bringing the total number of running words to 5,136,815. In these new investigations each word in all the materials was recorded in exact form except for persons, places, and the names of months and days. Words of fewer than four letters were also omitted because Horn felt they had comparatively few spelling difficulties. He found from his compilation of 1922 that the following words shown in Figure 2 would be established as high frequency occurrences regardless of the quantity of material examined. These words were thus omitted from the 1926 tabulation because their frequency of occurrence was so high.

in his 1926 Study

The compilation of 1922 was combined with the 10,000 words appearing most frequently in 1926 and published in a monograph entitled A Basic Writing Vocabulary--10,000 Words Most Commonly Used in Writing (17). Horn did not make a separate word frequency analysis of business correspondence until later.

"The Businessman's Vocabulary" by Harms (15), published in The Journal of Business Education in 1940, expanded the wordlists collected by Horn and others who had developed most frequently used wordlists. Books, pamphlets, and trade magazines from various professions and industries served as the basis for a set of checklists of words which were sent to offices asking that the words listed which they used most frequently be checked. Additional words could be added to the checklist if they occurred frequently but were not on the list. After the results were tabulated new lists were compiled. Harms concluded that these final lists were most representative of the frequently used specialized words in the offices in which a majority of the commercial graduates of the schools in that area would be employed.

Perrigo (33, p. 15) was convinced that "high school graduates should have a better understanding of business terminology," and that the study of vocabulary as well as its development should be expanded. He disclosed that many of his graduates who held commercial positions admitted they had a deficiency in the area of business vocabulary.

This prompted Perrigo (33) to conduct a study of frequency of occurrence of business terms. He chose 55 issues of 12 different business journals which represented numerous industries and commercial fields. Of the 3,564 pages he tabulated, he found a total of 916 different business terms in 10,785 repetitions. These business terms were compared to terms used in high school textbooks by checking the glossaries and indices of the textbooks. Perrigo found that 70 percent of the high frequency words contained in his analysis did not appear in the textbooks he analyzed.

By 1942 Horn (18) had expanded his previous work on business communications with the assistance of Peterson and was able to publish the Basic Vocabulary of Business Letters. Business firms from the following 26 classes provided letters for data analysis.

1. Florists
2. Automobile manufacturers and sales companies
3. Wholesale and retail druggists
4. Manufacturers of clothing and textiles
5. Dealers in lumber and furniture
6. Manufacturers, wholesalers, and retailers of foodstuffs
7. Law firms
8. Insurance companies
9. Dealers in crockery and china
10. Building and construction companies
11. Community organizations
12. Coal and oil companies
13. Electrical supply houses
14. Medical supply companies
15. School supply companies
16. Banks, loan and investment companies
17. Public utilities
18. Dealers in hardware and machinery
19. Car and truck companies
20. Railroad and express companies
21. Steel and iron manufacturers
22. Schools, churches, and libraries
23. Department stores
24. Publishers
25. Farmers
26. Miscellaneous

There was an average of six different firms included in each class for a total of 156 firms. An alphabetic wordlist of each class showing the total frequency of each word was prepared. Two factors became clear after analyzing the data: that of total frequency and that of the total number of types of business correspondence in which any work occurred. There was no approved method of merging these two factors. Horn and Peterson decided then to multiply the total frequency of words by the approximate square root of the number of different classes of businesses represented in which the word occurred.

The investigators (18, p. 7) figured the square roots to the nearest interger as shown in Figure 3.

Number of Types of Business	Number Used for Weighting
1 - 2	1
3 - 6	2
7 - 12	3
13 - 20	4
21 - 26	5

Used by Horn-Peterson

Thus a weighted total was worked out for use in determining the relative importance of words. For example in determining the weighted frequency of the word "consider", the investigators performed the following calculations:

"Consider" was found in 23 types of businesses, with a total frequency of 414. The square root of 23 to the nearest integer is five.

The weighted total for "consider" is therefore five times 414, which is 2,070 (p. 9).

The researchers prepared two separate lists of words. One list arranged the 5,226 most frequently occurring words in rank order. The other list was arranged alphabetically giving both the actual number of occurrences and the weighted frequency. A unique labeling system of letters and number combinations was devised to indicate in which half of the particular thousand a word fell. For example, the letter "a" represented the first half or the first five hundred and the letter "b" represented the second half. Therefore, "1a" would be a word in the first five hundred, "1b" would be a word in the second five hundred, "2a" would be a word in the third five hundred, etc. This unique method was one of Horn's outstanding contributions to all word studies. It has been a source of reference to many researchers and the published lists have been used extensively as the basis for additional research. It was one of the definitive sources of reference until Silverthorn conducted his research.

In 1955 Silverthorn (36, p. 19) included business communications "from the different types of business in proportion to the probable representation in all written business communications," whereas the other studies had not. This study was of special significance to the writer because it constantly served as a reference for procedures.

Silverthorn obtained a copy of the United States Census Report, Occupations of Employed Persons in Each Industry, for the United States: March, 1940, which had been released for determining the different types of businesses in the United States. Because the number of businesses listed was too large for a workable problem, he organized them into 15 basic categories which included agriculture, forestry, and fishery; mining; construction; durable manufactures; nondurable manufactures; other manufactures; transportation, communication, and other utilities; wholesale and retail trade; finance, insurance, and real estate; business and repair services; personal services; amusement, recreation, etc.; professional and related services; government; and industry not elsewhere classified.

Unlike this writer, Silverthorn encountered no particular difficulty in obtaining a sufficient quantity of business communications from which words could be tabulated.

A letter requesting the cooperation of business firms was published in Office Executive, the internationally circulated publication of the National Office Management Association. Also individual letters were sent to 34 firms and personal visits were made to 60 firms requesting communications for use (p. 27).

Excluded in Silverthorn's word count were figures, symbols, trade names, the names of persons, places, organizations, months, and days. Abbreviations were counted as separate words, e.g., "doctor" and "Dr." were treated as two separate words. Words were keypunched onto appropriately-coded IBM cards numbered consecutively within each category which aided in the checking of spelling.

Words from 2,039 separate pieces of business communications including letters of inquiry, letters replying to inquiries, letters of recommendation, letters of acknowledgment, letters seeking adjustment, letters granting adjustment, letters of transmittal, order letters, sales letters, collection letters, and other letters that could not be classified into any one of the listed categories were taken "in proportion to the percentage of secretaries, stenographers, and typists employed" (p. 31). The District of Columbia plus 41 states were represented in the sample. There were 1,012 different writers of the 2,039 pieces of communication.

Words were tabulated in blocks of 10,000 words except for the first block which consisted of 40,000 words to provide a checkpoint in the tabulation process at which the frequency ranking of the high-frequency words could be established. An alphabetic list and ranked list were prepared for each of the 27 blocks and a record was kept of the words that were encountered in the block of 10,000 words that had not been encountered in the block of 40,000 words. A similar record was made with the addition of each subsequent block of 10,000 words (p. 34).

The last three blocks, 270,000 to 300,000 running words, added an average of only 150 new words to indicate relative stability had been reached. Only six of these new words were contained in the first 4,000 words of the final frequency list; therefore, "it appeared that the addition of more blocks would not appreciably improve the representativeness of the sample from the standpoint of inclusion of high-frequency words" (p. 37).

A second list of individual words contained in the alphabetic master list was kept comparing the first 100 words in each list. "That is, the frequency position of the first 100 words was compared with the frequency of that word in other distributions" (p. 37). Silverthorn (36, p. 38) found that "A comparison of the final distribution with each of the two immediately preceding frequency distributions revealed complete stability for the first 100 words."

The first 5,000 words accounted for approximately 95 percent of the occurrences of all words. The word "the" was the most frequently occurring word followed by "of, to, and, in, you, a, for, we, and your" (p. 63) as the top ten. A master wordlist of the 5,050 high frequency business vocabulary words and a master wordlist arranged alphabetically as well as 15 category rank lists were provided in Part II of the dissertation.

Perry (34) developed an updated list of business communication words in 1968 although his primary purpose of study was to compare the most frequently occurring word combinations in business correspondence with the most frequently occurring phrases in shorthand textbooks.

Only business letters were analyzed; reports, telegrams, memoranda, intercompany communications, and other forms of communications were excluded. Perry had requested 3 letters each from 1,567 firms nationwide. From 2,061 pieces of correspondence representing a return rate of 44 percent from 687 firms in 49 states, 317,306 running words were collected resulting in 12,109 individual words.

Perry (34) found that:

10 words represented 25.7 percent of the total running words; that 50 words represented 46.49 percent of the total running words; that 100 words represented 53.54 percent of the total running words; that 500 words represented 71.93 percent of the total running words; that 1,000 words represented 80.66 percent of the total running words; and that 5,000 words represented 96.35 percent of the total running words (p. 93).

He recommended that the first 1,000 words be cycled in a designated pattern in shorthand textbooks since they represented over 75 percent of the total words used.

Average typewriting stroke intensity of words was found by Perry to be 5.8; average syllabic intensity at 1.63 which was higher than the 1.4 in current use. He suggested that teachers "take the responsibility to see that students thoroughly master the 1,000 most frequently used words" (p. 109), and that a higher syllabic intensity be adopted by textbook authors.

In 1970 Mellinger (25) published Basic Vocabulary for

Written Business Office Communications after he had worked over four years to update business communications.

Mellinger (26) later wrote his reasons for the research when he stated:

During the sixteen years since Silverthorn drafted his list of the most frequently used words in American business correspondence, many far-reaching changes have taken place in American society and in American business. It would be strange indeed if, in this age of mass communications, these changes were not somehow reflected in the patterns of our written and spoken language (p. 37).

Nearly 2,000 letters, memoranda, and reports from a stratified sample of 5,000 firms, schools, and non-profit organizations in the major metropolitan areas of 43 states yielded a 295,271 word corpus. A maximum of two communications had been solicited from each potential participant in proportion to the relative numbers of secretaries, stenographers, and typists in each occupational category in the 1960 census.

His listing of 12,897 different words were essentially the same as those of Silverthorn (36) and Perry (34). There were minor variations in rank and the inclusion of a few words. Mellinger (25) found of the total running words tabulated that the first 10 most frequently used words accounted for 26.08 percent, the first 50 words for 48.07 percent, the first 100 words for 55.61 percent, the first 500 words for 73.28 percent, the first 1,000 words for 81.43 percent, and the first 5,000 words for 96.29 percent.

In 1975 Warner (41) compared the difficulty of materials used in the teaching and testing of shorthand with the difficulty of business letters used in business offices. She analyzed five college level and five secondary level Gregg Diamond Jubilee shorthand textbooks and five books of tests published by the Gregg Publishing Company. Approximately 300 words were sampled from each book by taking 100 words at the beginning, 100 words in the middle, and 100 words at the end.

She then requested five routine business letters from top-level executives and mid-management personnel in the areas of industry and five unsolicited direct-mail advertising letters from ten randomly sampled companies. From the 50 companies contacted, 29 responded.

Administrative Management Society (AMS) chapters were also randomly selected to participate in the study. Presidents of three randomly-selected chapters of AMS in each of 15 districts were asked to collect representative samples from their chapter members engaged in industry, government, finance, education, or transportation. From 45 AMS chapters contacted, 211 chapters responded. There were 500 business letters received which were divided into three groups: (1) 75 letters were taken from the top-level management area; (2) 75 letters from the mid-management area; and (3) 75 letters from the unsolicited direct-mail advertising area. Each group was subdivided into the five previously mentioned categories and a sampling of 15 letters was selected from each. The 15 letters in each category were stapled together in groups of 3 and 300 words were taken from each group--a 100 word-block from the beginning of the first letter, a 100 word-block from the middle of the second letter, and a 100 word-block from the end of the third letter.

The Perry (34) wordlist was used by Warner (41, p. 120) "as a basis for establishing vocabulary level of the words analyzed in the study." There were 28,647 words included in the computer analysis--4,500 from books, 22,500 from business letters, 1,500 most frequently occurring words from Perry's list, and 148 brief forms.

To compare the vocabulary content of instructional materials and business letters Warner used the one-way analysis of variance procedure. To compare the differences in letters from top-level management, mid-mangement, and unsolicited direct-mail advertising and the five categories of business, she used the two-way analysis of variance. The college and secondary textbooks, the books of tests, and the letters from businesses were the independent variables while the brief forms, syllabic intensity, and Perry's 1,500 most frequently occurring words served as the dependent variables.

The analysis revealed that ". . .the syllabic intensity of both the routine and the unsolicited business letters was greater than the syllabic intensity of all the instructional materials" (p. 84). It also showed that "The unsolicited business letters contained a significantly greater number of words from Perry's over 1,500 words than the routine business letters as well as the secondary and college textbooks" (p. 85), and the analysis indicated that "the books of tests were not significantly different from the college or secondary textbooks on any of the dependent variables" (p. 86).

The two-way analysis of variance revealed the following:

When compared with the letters from top-level management, the unsolicited letters contained a significantly greater number of Perry's over 1,500 words and fewer of Perry's 1-100 words and brief forms. When compared with the letters from mid-management, the unsolicited letters contained a significantly greater number of Perry's over 1,500 words but did not differ significantly on the other variables. The letters received from top-level management personnel did not differ significantly from the letters received from mid-level management personnel (pp. 126-127).

Warner concluded that the textbooks sufficiently prepared students to pass the exams contained in the Gregg test books and to write routine business letters but not sufficient to prepare students to write unsolicited direct-mail advertising letters. She felt though that college textbooks were difficult enough on all the variables, i.e., to pass the exams, and to write both routine letters and unsolicited direct-mail advertising letters. Any difference in the difficulty of letters, she deduced, was due to factors other than syllabic intensity.

In an article in The Delta Pi Epsilon Journal, January 1982, Ober (31) described a study he had conducted to develop a valid, up-to-date list of the most frequently occurring words in written business communications. He solicited a maximum of three letters, memoranda, and/or reports from a nationwide random sample of 5,000 members of the National Secretaries Association International. A response rate of 33 percent (1,411 respondents) yielded 2,504 usable documents. The contents of the various documents was entered directly into a computer, and alphabetical wordlists and rank order lists were printed out.

Salutations, complimentary closings, numbers (including figures and numbers spelled as words), proper names, abbreviations, and accent marks were excluded. Hyphenated words were counted as separate words. A total of 606,496 running words revealed 15,522 different words. The first 10 most frequently used words accounted for 25.4 percent; the first 50 words, 43.7 percent; the first 100 words, 50.0 percent; the first 500 words, 69.1 percent; and the first 5,000 words, 95.7 percent.

In 1982 Brooks (4) analyzed and compared word frequencies of business communications from firms in Oklahoma with word frequencies of the second-semester college textbook for Gregg Shorthand, Series 90 to determine if there was a difference in instructional materials and the "world of work." Businesses in the State of Oklahoma with 500 or more employees were sent letters requesting one copy of a letter and one copy of an interoffice memorandum.

Eighty-five firms responded resulting in an 81 percent return rate. They sent 83 usable letters and 80 usable business memoranda. The data from the textbook was chosen as follows:

The items in the reading and writing practice materials were numbered sequentially, and a table of random numbers was used to select the items from the textbook. A total of 83 items was selected from the textbook for analysis, corresponding with the number of usable business letters (p. 51).

All data was keypunched onto computer cards with just the body and postscript of each letter and memorandum included. Only dictionary words were counted with numbers spelled as words. Unless the dictionary listed a hyphenated word as one word, hyphenated words were counted separately. Geographic locations and days of the week were included unless they related to a particular company. Other proper names and months were excluded. If the meaning was known, abbreviations were spelled in full and counted as separate words.

The textbook materials were edited according to the same procedures as the business letters and business memoranda with these exceptions: names of individuals, companies, and months of the year were included (p. 53).

The business letter data base contained 2,144 different words from 10,292 running words, while the business memoranda data base contained 2,145 different words from 10,718 running words. The textbook data base contained 1,879 different words from 11,721 running words.

After analyzing the data, Brooks (4) concluded that a great many textbook words which have a high frequency of use do not have a high frequency of use in business letters and memoranda, at least, this applied to the words used by business and industry with 500 or more employees in the State of Oklahoma. She also found that business letters and memoranda vocabulary differed and that teachers should recognize this fact and supplement the textbook materials with outside resource words obtained from business and industry.

One final study that deserves to be mentioned is Ita's (19) study on legal terminology. Although it did not deal with business vocabulary and was prepared with the legal secretary in mind, it could benefit the court reporting student because it contained a collection of legal collocations and legal terms collected from correspondence dictated by lawyers. The stenotype machine enables the court reporter to write many phrases and even whole sentences in one stroke, and Ita's study listed the 580 most common legal collocations which could serve as excellent practice material for the court reporter or student of stenotypy.

Using a random sampling to choose letters from the files of 101 lawyers, Ita examined and used 3,948 letters containing a total of 397,086 running words. The letters were classified into admiralty, anti-trust, arbitration and award, bankruptcy, claims, contracts, copyright and patent, corporations, criminal, domestic relations, equity, immigration, insurance, mortgages, probate, real estate, taxes, and torts categories.

Legal terms, collocations, French and Latin terms, prefixes and suffixes were collected from the legal correspondence under investigation. These were tabulated, verified, and prepared for further analysis and classification (p. 43).

Ita typed the legal terms and collocations on adding machine tape, and eliminated any word that appeared in the first 3,000 words of the Horn-Peterson (18) list because she assumed that the word was common and did not belong in her technical legal list. She then cut the adding machine tape into strips to facilitate handling. After arranging these strips in alphabetical order, she recorded them in 18 notebooks labeled appropriately with the legal specialties mentioned earlier.

After each specialty had an accumulated list of the twenty-six letters of the alphabet, it was no longer necessary to cut the tape into strips but the words were immediately tallied from the tape to the notebooks (p. 48).

The same words appearing in more than one specialty were then combined into one list. This resulted in a ranked list of the most common technical legal terms.

Torts contained the highest number of running words with 51,032; real estate with 49,142; and probate with 47,157; however, the highest number of technical legal words were from probate with 5,498; insurance with 5,198; and corporations with 3,770. The average number of technical legal terms dictated per letter was 12.86.

Summary

The existence of only a few studies in the court reporting and stenotype machine areas emphasizes the acute need for additional research in these specialities. A variety of studies were reviewed. A vocabulary study done over 60 years ago for the aid of court reporters, and other professionals listed words found in 190 different types of business. Several stenotype machine studies that have been conducted reveal that students are challenged by the stenotype machine and can benefit from its use even when a level of skill necessary for court reporting has not been attained. Characteristics of both court transcripts and state court reporting examinations were investigated to provide clues for examination failure. Another study dealt with the CAT systems in use in courtrooms throughout the country, with recommendations for CAT implementation. Analysis of students' stenotype notes for determination of common errors was yet another study investigated in the court reporting and stenotype machine areas.

The review of literature for word frequency vocabulary studies definitely showed that there has been abundant interest by educators over the last five or six decades in this area. The word frequency studies of business communications indicated that relatively small numbers of words constitute relatively large percentages of total words used. Research findings also indicate that a large number of running words and a frequency count can be used to establish rank. A frequency word study of legal terminology establishing technical legal terms and legal collocations lists was reviewed. Much valuable research has been pursued and results reported, but at present, the problem of finding a high frequency wordlist composed of court transcripts and depositions is still unresolved.

The studies reviewed in this chapter can be used advantageously as guides for further investigation, especially in the areas of court reporting and stenotype machines where it is acutely needed.

CHAPTER III

PROCEDURES

Introduction

This chapter presents a detailed description of the procedures used in conducting this study. The chapter is organized under the following headings:

1. Sources of Data
2. Collection of Data
3. Preparation of Data
4. Analysis of Data
5. Summary

Sources of Data

After considering several sources from which to obtain data for developing a valid vocabulary for the educational preparation of the court reporter and after corresponding with Mr. Marshall Jorpeland, Communications Director of the National Shorthand Reporters Association, court transcripts from general jurisdiction trial courts at the state level, both civil and criminal, and depositions taken by freelance reporters was selected as the basis for this study. Names of court reporters from which to solicit transcripts were obtained from the 1983 NSRA Membership Directory and Registry of Professional Reporters (30) published by the National Shorthand Reporters Association. Transcripts were also solicited through the National Shorthand Reporters Association national publication and various state publications, as well as a handout available at the 1983 National Shorthand Reporters Association Convention.

Collection of Data

Since court transcripts and depositions are highly confidential, court reporters had to be assured that the confidentiality of these documents would be maintained if released to the researcher. The researcher sent a rough draft copy of the proposed letter to be sent to court reporters to Ms. Mary Louise Gilman, a retired court reporter and Editor of NSR, the national magazine for shorthand reporters. Ms. Gilman suggested changes that were incorporated into the final draft of the letter.

Twelve hundred letters were Xeroxed and sent to Mr. Kent Helmich, Executive Director of the National Shorthand Reports Association, who agreed to make these letters available at the registration table to court reporters checking in for the 1983 National Shorthand Reporters Association Convention August 11-14, 1983, in Washington, D.C. Because the researcher was unable to attend the convention, there was no control over the distribution of the letters. An example of the letter is in Appendix A.

The editor of the "Sooner Outline", a publication of the Oklahoma Shorthand Reporters Association, contacted the researcher after the national convention asking that a short article explaining the research be submitted for publication in the next state issue. He also suggested it be submitted to other state association editors, a listing of which appeared in the 1983 NSRA Membership Directory and Registry of Professional Reporters (30) (hereinafter referred to as the 1983 NSRA Directory).

The letter and article were submitted to 36 state association publications listed in the 1983 NSRA Directory. Because of an incorrect address in the directory, one letter was returned. The article, Appendix E, and letter were published in the following state publications:

1. In Verbis, December 1983, p. 13. Publication of the Iowa Shorthand Reporters Association.
2. Progress, Fall 1983, p. 29. Publication of the Missouri Shorthand Reporters Association.
3. Short Strokes, Fall 1983, pp. 8-9. Publication of the Georgia Shorthand Reporters Association.
4. Sooner Outline, November 1983, pp. 2-3. Publication of the Oklahoma Shorthand Reporters Association.
5. Squiggles, Winter 1983, p. 9. Publication of the Massachusetts Shorthand Reporters Association.

A self-addressed stamped envelope was included with the report and letter to enable the editors to send a copy of the publication to the researcher after publication. The researcher has no way of knowing whether the article and/or the letter appeared in any publications other than those listed.

A thank you letter was sent to each of the five editors who responded and this letter was published in the March 1984 issue of In Verbis on page 16.

The letter was also published in the November, 1983 issue of NSR (29) under "Letters to the Editor" section.

Ms. Gilman added an editors note as follows:

This seems like a worthwhile project, and a chance to get rid of some of those old "spec" or office copies in a good cause. My local post office tells me that such material can be sent third class if under a pound, or at the fourth-class (parcel-post) rate if over a pound.-Ed. (p. 10).

The 1983 NSRA Directory listed 4 types of membership as follows: (1) Professional Members which included any person who held a Certified Shorthand Reporter Certificate mandated by state or federal law and/or any person who had passed the skills and written knowledge portions of the Registered Professional Reporter examination; (2) Participating Members which included any person who was an official court or legislative reporter or any person who was engaged in the active practice of general reporting; (3) Associate and Retired Members which included any Professional or Participating Member in good standing, retired from the practice of shorthand reporting; a teacher of shorthand or shorthand reporting, or anyone connected in an official capacity with a school or college conducting a shorthand reporting course; any person who qualified to be a Participating Member and who resided outside the 50 states of the United States; any person interested in the preservation, support, and advancement of the field of shorthand reporting, but not in any way engaged in the verbatim reporting of proceedings, and who was not otherwise eligible for membership; and (4) Honorary Members.

It was decided to randomly sample only from the Professional Members and Participating Members registry. The court reporters listed under Australia, Bahamas, Bermuda, Canada, England, West Germany, Guam, Jamaica West Indies, New Zealand, Puerto Rico, Saudi Arabia, United Kingdom, Virgin Islands, American Samoa, and France were omitted from the count. The court reporters' names otherwise listed, including those under Washington, D.C., were numbered sequentially.

A table of random numbers was used to select 5 percent or 590 reporters to participate in the study of the 11,807 members counted in the 1983 NSRA Directory. Forty-seven states plus Washington, D.C. were represented in the random selection. Only Rhode Island, South Carolina, and Wyoming were not randomly chosen. A letter, shown in Appendix B, was mailed in January 1984 requesting copies of court transcripts or depositions to these 590 court reporters.

One month after the initial letters were mailed, a followup letter, Appendix C, was sent to each court reporter that had not responded. Thirty-six letters were returned by the post office. The data in Table I illustrates the reasons given for their return.

Data for this study was collected over a period of time--from August 1983 after the national convention to March 1984. As the court transcripts and depositions were received, the court reporter's name and address were recorded on a master list, along with the number of transcripts sent and the number of usable pages contained in each transcript. A check of the 1983 NSRA Directory was also made to determine whether or not the reporter sending the data was a part of the random sample; however, it was virtually impossible to make this determination in some cases. Whether the reporter had received a personal letter, had read the letter in any of the publications, or had responded to the random sample was undetermined. The respondents were numbered sequentially as they were received, and thank you letters (Appendix D) sent.

Of those court reporters who responded to the writer's requests for documents, 128 sent usable transcripts, 1 sent the wrong type of material, 1 sent the Congressional Record, 1 sent floppy disks of transcripts which were to be used on a computer unobtainable to the researcher, 2 court reporters did not keep copies of their transcripts, 1 court reporter did not correct typographical errors on office copies and therefore did not wish to participate, 4 court reporters were no longer reporting or were retired, 4 firms would not release transcripts for any reason because of confidentiality, and 1 reporter would not pay the cost of mailing a transcript. The rate of response was figured by the following formula used by Dillman (6, p. 50):

$$\frac{\text{Number returned}}{\text{Number in sample} - (\text{noneligible} + \text{nonreachable})} \times 100$$

This translates into:

$$\frac{128}{590 - (3 + 48)} \times 100 = 23.75\%$$

A response rate of 23.75 percent for a national sample is not unusual according to Boone and Kartz (3). They felt that although requests by telephone might be more effective than a request by mail, calling long distance nationwide would be prohibitive for most researchers. They stated:

Mail interviews allow the researcher to conduct national studies at reasonable costs. Mail interviews allow the researcher to reach each potential respondent for the price of a first-class stamp (p. 398).

For a nationwide study such as the present study, Boone and Kartz (3, p. 398) stated it is not uncommon that "such a study may average only 15 to 25 percent."

The 128 respondents, who sent usable transcripts, represented court reporters from 35 states and the District of Columbia. Table II illustrates the number of court reporters counted in the 1983 NSRA Directory, by state; the number of court reporters selected for the random sample, by state; and the number of court reporters who sent data by state. Also shown is the percent of court reporters, by state, based on the total number of court reporters counted in the 1983 NSRA Directory; the percent of court reporters randomly sampled, by state, based on the total number of court reporters randomly sampled; and the percent of respondents, by state, based on the total number of court reporters who sent data.

Data in Table II was not meant for comparison of one state to another state, but was included as a means of comparing each state with itself in the three categories. For example, 1.3% of all court reporters listed in the 1983 NSRA Directory (excluding the countries previously named) were from Alabama; 1.19% of the 590 court reporters chosen for the random sample were from Alabama; and 2.29% of the 131 court reporters who responded were from Alabama.

Table III data depicts the response rate from each state by comparing the number of court reporters who sent data to the court reporters randomly sampled for that state. Some states are over 100% because court reporters who were not randomly selected responded to either the letters publicized in the national magazine or state publications, or to letters available at the national convention.

Preparation of Data

One hundred twenty-eight court reporters sent a total of 546 court transcripts or dispositions. This was an average of approximately 4 transcripts sent per court reporter. There were 29,074 total usable pages gleaned from the 546 transcripts or 53.25 pages per transcript.

Because there was such a range in the number of transcripts sent per reporter (as many as 109 and as few as 1), it was decided to randomly select 1 transcript per reporter. The least amount of pages contained in the 128 randomly-selected transcripts was 20 pages. Twenty pages were then randomly selected from each of the 128 transcripts yielding a total of 2,560 pages to be input into the computer for analysis. A table of random numbers was used in both procedural steps.

The great range in the number of pages in each transcript from each respondent is shown in Appendix F. The number of transcripts sent and the number of usable pages per transcript shows the variety sent by each reporter.

The file code name is used in the illustration rather than the respondent's name.

The following editing and verification procedures were applied to the 2,560 randomly sampled pages. Explanations are given when necessary for clarification:

1. Only the words on the question and answer portions of each transcript were counted. Excluded from the tabulation were title pages, voir dire, swearing of witnesses, opening statements, parenthetical remarks, read backs, discussions off the record, oaths, stipulations, certification of questions, reporters's certificates, and jury charges.

2. Proper names were excluded to maintain confidentiality. Numbers (even though written out), ordinal numbers, money, fractions, months of the year, and days of the week were eliminated. Names of months and days of the week were eliminated because they are high frequency words on which all court reporting students are repeatedly drilled. However, hyphenated words that contained numbers were included, e.g., "two-pronged", "one-sided". Also included were the words "hundred", "thousand", "million", and "billion" because court reporters usually write those words in one stroke rather than hitting the number bar on the stenotype machine.

3. Spelling errors were corrected; for example, "travelled" was changed to "traveled" so the computer could correctly match the words during rank analysis.

4. Typographical errors were corrected; for example, "none" was substituted for "non" when sentence meaning obviously indicated "none" was the proper word choice.

5. If a word was started on one page of a transcript and completed on the next page, the entire word was included even though the next page may not have been a part of the random sample of pages. For example, the last word in the transcript labeled "CIV52," page 53, which was randomly sampled, contained the word "specific-"; and page 54, which was not randomly sampled, contained the ending "ally". The entire word was input into the computer.

6. Countries were included because the words "United States" and "America" are brief forms written as one word on the stenotype machine, and the researcher wanted to determine whether these brief forms were high frequency; therefore, other countries were included.

7. Latin terms written as two words were input and counted as one word because as separate words they would not make sense, e.g., "pro se" was counted as one word; "se" as a separate word would not make sense.

8. Hyphenated expressions were counted as one word because the court reporting computer, especially in real-time (instant translation), forces court reporters to write on their stenotype machine what is to be printed by the computer, and the researcher wanted to determine if any hyphenated expressions could be classified as high frequency.

9. Court reporters were inconsistent in capitalization, hyphenation, and spelling of words. The following reference books were used for verification:

- a. Funk & Wagnall's New Comprehensive International Dictionary of the English Language (10)
- b. Look It Up (9)
- c. 10,000 Legal Words (24)
- d. The Legal Word Book (14)
- e. Webster's Medical Speller (32)
- f. Gilmer's Revision Cochran's Law Lexicon (12)
- g. Reporter's Desk Reference (39)

10. Words which are spelled the same way but may not be written the same, except by the court reporter, were included under one word, e.g., "resume" and "resumé" were included under "resume".

11. Capitalized words which are analogous to the courtroom, such as "Honor" and "Court" were entered in lowercase for rank consistency.

12. Phonetic sounds were entered as words because court reporters must be ready to take down all proceedings whether the testimony of a defendant is intelligible or not; e.g., sounds from one transcript included "words" such as "vo-a-sho" and "screestonta".

13. Abbreviations were entered as abbreviations and not spelled out.

14. Contractions were counted as contractions instead of being spelled in full. Words that were possessive were counted as possessive because frequently in the courtroom phrases such as "plaintiff's exhibit" or "defendant's exhibit" is used.

The court transcripts and despositions were divided into three categories according to information published by Flango and Elsner (8), researchers for the National Center for State Courts. This publication provided the researcher with one of the first reports of its kind to include information from throughout the United States regarding current state court caseloads. A cooperative effort between the National Center for State Courts and the Conference of State Court Administrators made this report possible.

Flango and Elsner (8) explained how filings in trial courts of general and limited jurisdiction were divided.

Total filings are divided into the four major casetypes: civil, criminal, juvenile, and traffic. The civil case category included not only the tort and contract cases usually found in this category but also the more numerous small claims, domestic relations, and probate cases. Criminal cases include felonies as well as the more numerous misdemeanors, preliminary hearings in courts of limited jurisdiction, ordinance (nontraffic) violations, and other miscellaneous criminal cases.

Total filings were computed for each state that both included and excluded traffic cases. . . . Consequently, large fluctuations in both filing volume and caseload changes can be caused by parking violations, which consume little court time (p. 17).

It was decided by the researcher to exclude the traffic category and to use only the civil, criminal, and juvenile categories; and in fact, no traffic cases were included in the 128 transcripts randomly selected. Updated information from the Summer 1983 issue of the State Court Journal (1) was added to the National Center for State Courts' (8) report to produce Table IV. The data illustrates the filings in courts of general and limited jurisdiction by state and by category.

In Table IV, civil filings represented 50.17% of the total filings; criminal filings, 44.66%; and juvenile filings 5.17%.

Each transcript was input into a microcomputer under a separate file; the file name being assigned after it was determined whether it was a transcript from a civil, criminal, or juvenile case. For instance, the file coded "CIV124" would be from the 124th court reporter who sent data, and it would be a civil case. A word counter in the researcher's word processing program provided a word count for each file and these were recorded on the master list of respondents.

After all the transcripts had been entered, the number of civil, criminal and juvenile cases prepared were compared to the findings from the State Court Journals (1, 8). Table V data compares by percent the actual number of cases randomly sampled by category to the filings in courts in general and limited jurisdiction.

(a) Oklahoma reported 26,076 felonies and 241,464 misdemeanors. The misdemeanor figure included traffic violations.

Because the civil and criminal categories were not in direct proportion to actual filings, the researcher decided to include in the present study a separate rank wordlist from each category rather than just one master wordlist combining all the categories as had originally been planned. This would enable other researchers or teachers to use the lists separately and to compare the categories.

Because the microcomputer was too small to handle all the data, each file was transmitted by means of a modum to a Hewlett-Packard 3000 computer at Rose State College, Midwest City, Oklahoma. One computer program was written to provide rank order and alphabetical lists of each category and another computer program was written to provide rank order (arranged alphabetically by rank) and alphabetic lists of the combination of words from the three categories. The computer program for these master lists was written to arrange the words in blocks of 10,000 words. A sequential count of the words was shown on the category lists and the master lists, both alphabetic and rank.

Having blocks of 10,000 words would enable the researcher to determine at which point in the tabulation process the frequency ranking of the high-frequency words had been established. Each block of 10,000 words consisted of a sample drawn from the category files. The percentage of words taken from the files of the three different categories were input into the computer as close as possible to correspond with the percentage of cases randomly sampled in each category. Since it was known how many words were in each file, the files were grouped in batches that contained approximately 10,000 words. To input them as proportionately as possible to the random sample, a criminal file was withheld every fourth block of 10,000 words and a juvenile file was input every eighth block. For example, files were input as follows in block of 10,000 words: 2 civil files, 1 criminal file, 1 juvenile file; 2 civil, 1 criminal; 2 civil, 1 criminal; 2 civil; 3 civil, 1 criminal; 2 civil, 1 criminal; 2 civil, 1 criminal; 3 civil; 2 civil, 1 criminal, 1 juvenile, etc. As soon as one block was tabulated, sorted, and printed, the computer would automatically begin tabulating and sorting the next block, and this block would be added to the growing master list. An initial group of 40,000 words was considered to be the starting point for word comparisons.

A record was kept of the number of words that were listed in the block of 10,000 words that had not been encountered in the block of 40,000 words. A similar record was made with the addition of each 10,000 word block. That is, the number assigned to the last word in the previous block was subtracted from the number assigned to the last word of the present block resulting in the number of new words in the present block. This process of tabulating, sorting, and printing each 10,000 word block was followed until 41 lists of ranked words and one alphabetic list showing rank was completed, making a total of more than 400,000 running words (the last block contained only 8,680 running words rather than 10,000).

During the tabulation process, blocks of 10,000 ranked words (plus for the last block of 8,680 ranked words) were printed out with the duplicates removed. Each new frequency distribution list was compared with the last list printed in order to determine the effect upon the frequency positions of the individual words by the addition of more blocks. After the tabulation of the 408,680 running words had been completed, the ranked list was compared with each of the ranked lists previously prepared in order to check the stability of rank order. This process is explained further and presented in Table VII, Chapter IV.

Of the original group of 40,000 words, there were 3,265 individual words found (see Table VI, Chapter IV). This was an average of 816 individual words for each of the first four blocks of 10,000 running words. The last four blocks (380,000 to 408,680 running words) added an average of only 140 new words. Although the number of new words added per block was still decreasing, it appeared that it was a slight decrease and relative stability seemed to have been reached.

The number of running words that came from the juvenile category was small compared to the other categories. Because each file was tabulated all at once as a whole file, and a certain number of individual words could not be "pulled" from each proportionately as it was being analyzed by the computer, the researcher feels this is probably one reason for the fluctuations in the number of new individual words in certain blocks.

The findings of this study are presented in detail in Chapter IV and the individual wordlists are printed in the appendix section of this study.

Summary

In summary, court transcripts and depositions obtained from throughout the United States were used for this word analysis study. These transcripts, divided into three categories including civil, criminal, and juvenile, were analyzed by means of a computer. Words were placed in rank frequency and an alphabetic and rank list were obtained for each category. These three categories were then merged into master alphabetic and rank lists. The objective of the writer was to analyze court transcripts and depositions to establish a basic vocabulary which would mirror as closely as possible the language heard in the courtroom and during deposition hearings. Actual courtroom transcripts and depositions were the authoritative source for data analysis.

CHAPTER IV

FINDINGS

Introduction

The findings of this study to conduct a word frequency analysis of depositions and court transcripts are reported in three sections:

1. Vocabulary by Rank Wordlist originating from court transcripts and depositions
2. Alphabetic Wordlist originating from court transcripts and depositions
3. Category by Rank Wordlists
4. Summary

The purpose of this study was to analyze court transcripts and depositions to establish a basic vocabulary which would approximate the language heard in the courtroom and during deposition hearings. A Vocabulary by Rank Wordlist and an Alphabetic Wordlist appear in the appendix. Categorical wordlists also appear in the appendix. They are provided for other researchers who may conduct similar studies or studies dealing with specific categories of legal cases. Teachers may also find the category lists helpful for comparative purposes and vocabulary drill. The problem studied, however, was the vocabulary of court transcripts and depositions in general, not the vocabulary found in specific categories.

Vocabulary by Rank

Data in Table VI will acquaint the reader with the number of new words encountered with the addition of each 10,000-word block to the starting base of 40,000 words. The big fluctuation of new words encountered in block 39 (during the processing of the 390,000th to 400,000th word) is probably due to the analysis of a juvenile file that contained almost 4,000 words processed in that particular block.

From the 40,000 original words, there were 3,265 unique words; and from the 408,680 running words analyzed, there were 10,708 unique words. Relative stability appeared to have actually been reached at about the 250,000th word. From the 250,000th to the 408,680th word, an average of only 129 new words were being added each 10,000 word block. Adding more blocks would not appreciably affect the outcome.

The final rank list for 408,680 running words was compared to each of the 10,000 word distributions previously prepared so that stability within the distribution could be determined. Individual word comparisons were made for the first 100 words. In other words, the frequency position of each of the first 100 words in the final 408,680 word rank list was compared with the frequency position of that word in other selected distributions. Table VII data shows the comparisons throughout selected distributions of the first 100 words. The word "the" retained the number one rank position from the 40,000th word through the 408,680th word; "a" the number eight rank throughout, and "is" the number twelve rank. A comparison of the 380,000th and 390,000th blocks to the 408,680th word block revealed almost complete stability for the first 100 words.

Several words that are analogous to the courtroom are included in the first 100 words: "yes" occurred 3,260 times and is ranked 16th; "okay" 932 times, ranked 68th; "sir" 819 times, ranked 77th; "correct" 775 times, ranked 85th; "question" 634 times, ranked 94th; "court" 631 times, ranked 95th; "all right" 624 times, ranked 96th; and "honor" 606 times, ranked 99th. A complete list of the vocabulary by rank order is found in Appendix G.

An analysis of total occurrences of individual words reveals "the", which occurs 22,061 times, accounts for approximately 5 percent of the 408,680 running words. The total number of times "the" occurred is greater than the total occurrences of all words that ranks below the first 2,700 words. The words "you", "that", "to", and "I" each occurred over 10,000 times or accounted for 11.75 percent of all running words.

If only root words had been considered, the rankings would be changed considerably. For example, if the words "question" and "questions" had been combined, the rank for "question" would be raised from 94th to 66th. If all the words derived from the root word "question" were combined, the rank would be raised to 64th.

Expressions such as "yeah" (rank 230), "oh" (rank 282), "uh-huh" (rank 302), and "huh-uh" (rank 1398) not normally used in formal writing, occur frequently in the courtroom. Other words, such as "be-bopped" (rank 1307) are probably analogous to the transcript from which they were taken.

The words "first", "second", and "one" occurred numerous times in the transcripts and depositions and would probably be considered high frequency, but these were omitted in the word count and do not appear in any wordlists because numbers were omitted from the count.

An analysis of the Ranked Vocabulary Wordlist by groups of words rather than individual words is shown in Table VIII. The data contained in this table illustrates the word occurrence frequency in selected groups of words. The first 3,001 words each occur at least 8 times. Approximately 50 percent of all the words occur in the first 50 positions; approximately 60 percent of all the words occur in the first 100 positions; approximately 79 percent of all the words occur in the first 500 positions; approximately 89 percent of all the words occur in the first 1,000 positions; approximately 94 percent of all the words occur in the first 2,000 positions; and approximately 97 percent of all the words occur in the first 3,000 positions.

WORD OCCURRENCE FREQUENCY IN GROUPS OF WORDS

Word group: By frequency of occurrence	Occurrences in 408,608 running words
	Number	Percent
First 50	203,665	49.83%
First 100	245,746	60.14
First 500	320,984	78.54

First 2000	385,909	94.43
First 3000	396,990	97.14

The significant findings in the wordlist containing rank order can be arranged according to total occurrences of groups of words and total occurrences of individual words. The first 3,001 words could perhaps be considered high frequency enough for repetitive practice by court reporting students because they represent over 97 percent of all the words listed.

Alphabetic Vocabulary Wordlist

The Alphabetic Vocabulary Wordlist can be helpful when trying to locate an individual word. It is located in Appendix H. Look up the word in the Alphabetic Vocabulary Wordlist and note its frequency. Use the Vocabulary by Rank Wordlist to then find the relative frequency position of the word by locating the "frequency" column in which the word appears. Words in the Vocabulary by Rank Wordlist are arranged in alphabetic order by rank. The Alphabetic Vocabulary Wordlist can be used as an index for the Vocabulary by Rank Wordlist.

The Alphabetic Vocabulary Wordlist is also helpful for finding the many uses of a root word. For example, when finding the word "agree", one also finds "agreeable", "agreed", "agreement", and "agreements". The form of the root word "agree" is used a total of 312 times, although the root word itself is used only 72 times. If each word were not counted individually, the 312 times would rank the root word among the top 200 words instead of the top 550 words.

Repetitive drill by court reporting students on the many prefixes and suffixes attached to root words could prove invaluable, and the Alphabetic Vocabulary Wordlist provides a quick reference to the root word with its prefixes and suffixes.

Category Wordlists

The Civil Category Wordlist appears in Appendix I; the Criminal Category Wordlist in Appendix J; and the Juvenile Category Wordlist in Appendix K. These wordlists cannot be considered the vocabularies of the various categories of legal cases because the purpose of this study was vocabulary in general, not of specific categories. The category wordlists, which are arranged by frequency of occurrence, should not be viewed as the complete vocabulary of that category nor should the frequency positions be viewed as "established" positions.

A comparison of category lists reveals that certain words of high frequency on one category list are analogous to that category, but do not appear as high frequency on the other lists. For example, the word "child", ranked number 48 on the Juvenile Category Wordlist, appears as the 637th word on the Civil Category Wordlist and as the 1,404th word on the Criminal Category Wordlist.

Teachers might want to use the category lists for word drill purposes and researchers who are conducting similar studies might find the category wordlists helpful for comparative purposes. The words listed in the civil category account for 71.85 percent of all the words in the master list, the criminal category accounts for 22.91 percent, and the juvenile category accounts for 5.51 percent.

Summary

The findings of this study are based on the analysis of 2,560 pages from 128 court transcripts and depositions randomly sampled from 546 court transcripts and depositions sent by court reporters in 38 states and the District of Columbia. The analysis produced 408,680 running words of which 10,708 were unique. A small number of words represent a fairly large percentage of the total running words; that is, the 50 most frequently-used words accounted for approximately 50 percent of 408,680 running words, the 100 most frequently-used words for approximately 60 percent, the 1,000 most frequently-used words for approximately 89 percent, and the 3,000 most frequently-used words for approximately 97 percent.

The word "the" was the most frequently-used word representing approximately 5 percent of the 408,680 running words. Words analogous to the courtroom were among the 100 most frequently-used words; e.g., "yes", "okay", "sir", "all right", "honor", "question", "correct", and "court".

The wordlists are arranged in the appendix as follows: Vocabulary Wordlist by Rank; Alphabetic Vocabulary Wordlist, which can be used as an index for the Vocabulary Wordlist by Rank; Civil Category by Rank; Criminal Category by Rank; and Juvenile Category by Rank. In this way, teachers who use the study will be able to gauge practice time for the groups of high frequency words as compared to the large groups of low frequency words, and will be able to present each category separately. Researchers will be able to use the separate lists for comparative purposes.

CHAPTER V

SUMMARY, CONCLUSIONS, AND RECOMMENDATIONS

Summary

Many vocabulary studies in the past have dealt with technical fields and general vocabulary areas. Using words as teaching tools in specialized fields is important for the educational benefit of students. This study sought to analyze court transcripts and depositions to aid teachers and authors of court reporting textbooks in the educational preparation of the court reporter.

A review of the literature revealed that few studies have been prepared in the court reporting area, but a variety of studies have been conducted in the field of vocabulary research, especially in establishing frequency listings.

Kimble (23) compiled a list of vocabulary for use by court reporters and others, but it concentrated mainly on business terms. Robey and Burr (35) conducted a study to determine if stenotype machines were in widespread use in Arkansas, and they also compared a machine shorthand class to a pen shorthand class. Cyrus (5) compared the syllabic intensity of New Jersey court transcripts to that of New Jersey Certified Shorthand Reporters examinations.

Attempting to learn the stenotype machine herself, Kennedy (22) devised checkpoints to be used in court reporting students' training. Drexler (7) studied the extent that the stenotype machine was being used in New York state. The National Center for State Courts (28) detailed the use of computer systems to translate court reporters' notes. Abbreviations, derivatives, and principles of machine shorthand was studied by Woodall (43). Although these studies add to the knowledge of machine shorthand and court reporting, none attempted a widespread word analysis of court transcripts or depositions.

Word frequency and vocabulary indexes based on wordlists have been developed by many researchers. Ayres (2) used personal and business letters to study spelling vocabularies. Horn (17), Silverthorn (36), Horn and Peterson (18), Mellinger (25, 26), Ober (31), and Brooks (4) all used business letters to establish word frequency counts; although Brooks' study was a regional study. They determined that a large group of running words and a frequency count could be used to establish rank positions. Harms (15) and Perrigo (33) used business journals and trade magazine to develop their vocabulary lists. Both Perry (34) and Warner (41) used textbooks compared to business letters for their studies. Ita (19) developed a legal vocabulary list and a list of collocations, but they were devised from letters from lawyers.

Procedures used for the collecting of data included letters requesting court transcripts or depositions used as handouts, which were available at the National Shorthand Reporters 1983 convention, a letter to the editor published in the national magazine for court reporters, articles published in six state court reporting publications, and personal letters to 590 court reporters.

There were 2,560 pages from 128 court transcripts and depositions randomly sampled from 546 court transcripts and depositions sent by 128 court reporters in 38 states and the District of Columbia. The analysis produced 408,680 running words. The 50 most frequently-used words accounted for approximately 50 percent of the 408,680 words; the 100 most frequently-used for 60 percent; the 1,000 most frequently-used for 89 percent; and the 3,000 most frequently-used for 97 percent. Words analogous to the courtroom were among the 100 most frequently-used words, including "yes", "okay", "sir", "all right", "honor", "question", "correct", and "court". An average of only 129 new words were being added each 10,000 word block around the 250,000th word.

Conclusions

The following conclusions were drawn from the analysis of the data obtained in this study.

1. Although all words in the Vocabulary Wordlist by Rank are arranged in order of frequency of occurrence, the absolute frequency location of words could not be definitely established. However, a stability of frequency of occurrence was achieved. The validity of this study depends basically upon rational analysis and professional judgment of the reader.

2. The objective of the writer was to establish a vocabulary list derived from court transcripts and depositions that conformed as closely as possible to the vocabulary found on the job by court reporters. Actual court transcripts and depositions were the authoritative source for this study. The field of court reporting demands the taking of verbatim dictation with absolute accuracy of transcripts; therefore, it would seem that a knowledge of terms used in the courtroom would smooth the path for the court reporting student and give the student an assurance needed to meet the unexpected demands of courtroom tasks. The lists prepared in this study should serve as a basis for instructional materials to be used for the educational preparation of court reporters.

3. Court reporting textbook authors should find the list of words helpful in updating brief forms or arbitrary lists. A brief analysis of textbooks by the writer revealed that some arbitraries taught are archaic and not high frequency; e.g., a brief form for "wagon" is taught in at least one popular textbook, but out of 408,680 words, it occurred only twice. Other words which are high frequency are not taught as brief forms by some textbooks; e.g., "honor" is the 99th most frequently-used word, but several textbooks treat it as an ordinary word rather than teaching a brief form for it. The word "honor" requires two strokes on the stenotype machine if not written as a brief form.

4. A glance through the wordlists should emphasize to teachers and students that although the trend is toward simplification of legal terminology, there are legal phrases which lawyers still use in the courtroom; e.g., "pro se", "in toto", "pro forma". Medical terms are used frequently and an examination of the alphabetic wordlist reveals the variety of forms of a root word; e.g., "pleura", "pleural", "pleurisy". Students would benefit from a solid foundation of theory, legal, and medical terminology.

Recommendations

Several recommendations for the use of the findings based on this study and suggestions for further research are proposed as follows:

1. A study similar to the present one but using a greater number of transcripts should be done to determine if the results are consistent. More transcripts from the criminal area are especially needed.

2. Studies analyzing arbitraries and brief forms found in court reporting textbooks should be conducted for comparative purposes against this list.

3. Court transcripts and depositions should be studied in depth to determine syllabic intensity, average word length, and the presence of high frequency words.

4. To improve the validity and reliability of current testing practices for court reporting examinations, testing materials should be analyzed in depth.

5. A study similar to the present one but using numbers, at least written out, should be done to determine if words such as "one", "first", and "second" constitute a place of high rank.

6. Using the lists reported in this study, terminology tests should be conducted for achievement, prognostic, and diagnostic purposes.

7. A study should be conducted of the phrases used in court transcripts and deposition. It is possible to write many phrases and even whole sentences in one stroke on the stenotype machine, and a high frequency phrase list would complement the present study and be quite helpful in the educational preparation of court reporters.

URGENT!

Dear Reporter:

May I have your help in a research study I'm conducting as a doctoral student at Oklahoma State University that will improve the preparation and training of court-reporting students?

The purpose of this research is a study of the vocabulary used by court and deposition reporters. It's a study of the overall vocabulary, not of specific categories of reporting. The information gained from the research will aid instructors in determining how to modify instructional material used in teaching court reporting.

In order to obtain the necessary data for the research, I'm requesting that as many reporters as possible throughout the United States send me at least one transcript of a court case or deposition. Proper names and addresses will be deleted and only the body of the document will be studied. Only individual vocabulary words will be analyzed. All transcripts will be kept in the strictest confidence.

Please participate in this study by sending me copies of court or deposition transcripts. I would very much appreciate your help in providing realistic materials for comparison.

Your prompt response will assist me in starting my analysis of the documents. Please send material as quickly as possible.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Billye Peterson

Some of those old "spec" or office copies you may have would be fine. You can send the material third class if under a pound or at fourth-class (parcel post) rate if over a pound.

You are very important to me. You were randomly chosen from over 12,500 court reporters to participate in a research project I am conducting as a doctoral student at Oklahoma State University.

Several weeks ago I wrote requesting one of your transcripts be sent so that I might analyze the individual vocabulary words it contains. I believe this study will aid in improving the preparation and training of court-reporting students. The purpose of the research is to create a list of words used frequently in the courtroom and/or in depositions. In fact, many of your colleagues who have already sent transcripts have expressed an interest in the outcome of this research.

I cannot complete the research, however, without your help. Please send any "spec" or office copies you might have as soon as possible. You can send the material third class if under a pound or at fourth-class (parcel post) rate if over a pound. All transcripts will be kept in the strictest confidence.

Your prompt response will assist me in starting the analysis of the materials. Thank you for helping.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Billye Peterson

Thank you for the transcripts you sent for my doctoral study at Oklahoma State University. Although there have been many word analysis studies, there have been none that I can find of court transcripts and depositions. I think the research will greatly assist other court reporting teachers when it is completed.

I appreciate the expense you went to in sending your copies. They will provide valuable data for my research study.

Thank you again for caring enough to take the time to share with me.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Billye Peterson

A NEED FOR RESEARCH

"In Democracy's greatest battles, words were the most effective weapons."<sup>1</sup> Word "battles" are heard and recorded daily by court reporters. Words are their livelihood. Every profession should have an understanding of the vocabulary it uses because the range of one's vocabulary is a major factor in one's ability to communicate. In his doctoral dissertation, Silverthorn stated:

With an increasing number of areas of knowledge and expanding knowledge within the areas, the vocabularies of these areas become increasingly important. The vocabulary of an area of knowledge is of particular importance to those who plan some degree of specialization in that area.<sup>2</sup>

The specialized vocabulary heard in court proceedings and during depositions needs to be part of a court reporting student's training. Words are the tools of a court reporter just as a hammer and nails are the tools of a carpenter. Are we, as educators, teaching and emphasizing the words and phrases that appear most frequently in the courtroom and during depositions? Are we teaching brief forms that we learned that may not be relevant today?

A research project currently under way will hopefully answer some of these questions. The information gained will be useful to teachers and authors of court reporting textbooks in providing scientific technical data which could serve as a reliable basis for materials for court reporting students to master the most frequently-used words which typify the courtroom setting. A word frequency analysis of depositions and court transcripts from court reporters throughout the United States will provide the basis for this research.

West stated why studies of this type are needed when he said:

The vocabulary used in the instructional materials for typing and stenographic skills should prepare the individual for the words he will encounter later. . . . The pertinent underlying concept or principle is that of maximum positive transfer (from school training to later life performance), an outcome that requires as close as possible a match between the materials of the training and those of later life.<sup>3</sup>

In trying to prepare court-reporting students, then, it is recognized that their learning materials should parallel the language heard in the courtroom. The purpose of this study is an overall analysis of transcripts from both freelance and official reporters. Transcripts from throughout the
