DURHAM -- University of New Hampshire alumni concerned about classmates and friends who may have been aboard one of the hijacked planes or in New York City or Washington, D.C., during the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks can find information or post notices on the UNH Alumni Association Web site.

"A number of alumni have called or e-mailed the office to ask for information about classmates they know to have been in either city," says Ernie Gale, executive director of the UNH Alumni Association. "In response, we've developed a site to help them find news about their friends in the aftermath of Tuesday's tragedy."

The Alumni Association has created a page listing information about members of the UNH community. It is updated as new information becomes available. Alumni are encouraged to share news about themselves or UNH friends with the office, so that the information can be added to the site. In addition, alumni may join an e-mail discussion list to exchange information about missing classmates or to discuss the attacks.

The Alumni Association Web address is <http://www.alumni.unh.edu/attackinfo.html>. Alumni may go directly there or link to it from the UNH home page, which also lists university resources and activities related to the attacks.
