PREFACE

Beginning in 1964 with three successive grants from the National Science Foundation, the Program of Eastern African Studies of Syracuse University has acquired an extraordinary collection of microfilms relative to eastern Africa. Most of the microfilms pertain to Kenya, where the project was begun, but records now are being received from Ethiopia, where the project is currently being administered. The records on Kenya, extending through the entire period of the British Colonial Administration, 1895-1963, and consisting of private as well as official sources, comprise the fullest and most valuable collection anywhere in the world on a developing country. Moreover, included in the Kenya collection are nearly all the records of the Eastern Asians. They alone are apparently the most extensive set of records on an overseas Indian community.

The local records on Kenya have been supplemented by microfilms of similar local records, though far less in quantity, from the adjacent African countries, and by microfilms of relevant Colonial Office material from the British Public Records Office. A few "bits and pieces" related to other areas of Africa have been added to make a total of approximately 4,000 reels.

During the last four years, the microfilming was performed on behalf of the African Studies Association and the Cooperative Africana Microfilm Project (CAMP) of the Center for Research Libraries in Chicago. Many of the microfilms are thus at CAMP in duplicate, and the reels in their entirety (the majority from CAMP, and the remainder from Syracuse University) are available to scholars throughout North America on inter-library loan. Copies of the films may be purchased, however, only from their respective original sources, the Kenya National Archives and the British Public Record Office.

INTRODUCTION

This guide is the product of necessity in several respects. The composite experience of first-and-second-year graduate students in African studies at Syracuse University made it almost imperative that some means be found for augmenting the information provided in such finding aides as the main card catalog at Bird Library, the microfilm shelf list, and the previously published bibliographies relating to various microfilm collections. As the Africana microfilm holdings at Bird Library have grown over the past several years into a unique and valuable collection, it became increasingly clear that a composite list of all collections was needed, with brief annotations alerting the researcher to their content, size, and location. A second need for the Guide arose from the diversity of the collection itself. The microfilms included a great variety of documents, some of which were published materials, others of which were archival holdings from both governmental and private sources. Some were acquired from the Syracuse microfilm project in East Africa, some from the Public Record Office in London, and others from specialized collections in research libraries in the United States. An annotated list was necessary to draw all this information together into one brief, useable handbook.

A third purpose is to publicize on a wider basis the availability of the microfilm collections listed therein. Many of the items are available through the Cooperative Africana Microfilm Project, 5721 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago, Illinois, 60637. Any such items are designated with the abbreviation "CAMP." Any series not so designated is available only at the Bird Library, Syracuse University, unless other university libraries have acquired the same materials through their own initiative. Many series listed in the Guide are highly esoteric.

For example, more than half of the German titles from the series Books and Pamphlets on East Africa, Film 1921, are not listed in the Library of Congress National Union Catalog.

In the choice of items for inclusion, the term "Africa" has been employed fairly specifically. Only materials that recall or relate events occurring within the African continent have been included. Documents or publications written by or about Africans of the diaspora, but not specifically about Africa, have been excluded. Other materials available at Syracuse which are excluded from this guide but are of great importance to the researcher include complete sets of The British Sessional Papers and The Times. In addition, there are collections of League of Nations and United Nations documents all of which are available in microfilm or hard copy. The collection includes a few items pertaining to the island groups in the Indian Ocean located near the African mainland, such as the Seychelles, Mauritius, and Madagascar. The collection overall is centered on Eastern Africa, with a particular wealth of documents for Kenya, Tanzania and Malawi. Conversely, the list reveals certain weaknesses in the collection. None of the series on the Government gazettes is complete, nor is the collection of dissertations on microfilm very adequate. It is hoped that these items will be augmented in the near future.

The location of the films in Bird Library is determined by the regulations governing their use. All films which are not restricted are to be found in the Basement microfilm viewing facility, room 110. This includes all published materials, as well as the archival sources from the Public Record Office, London, and the Provincial and District Books of the Tanzania National Archives. All materials from the Kenya

National Archives, Nairobi, are restricted and are housed in the Area Studies microfilm room, fifth floor. The Binns diaries, a restricted private collection, are also housed in Area Studies. All materials kept in Area Studies are marked throughout this Guide with an "R." The researcher is required to have written permission before gaining access to them. The request form for access to the Kenya National Archives microfilm collection which is required for this purpose can be found on p. xiii of A Guide to the Kenya National Archives, by Robert G. Gregory, et. al., (Syracuse, 1968), and at the back of PEAS Occasional Bibliographies Numbers 19 and 21. The form should be completed at the Area Studies Department, Bird Library, or sent to the Africana Bibliographer by mail.

For those outside Syracuse, the request form and the films themselves are to be acquired from the Cooperative Africana Microfilm Project, which since 1970 has served as the repository for the circulating copy of the Kenya National Archives collection. The researcher should note that the instructions regarding procedures for obtaining microfilm reels from the Kenya National Archives microfilm collection, on p. xi of the Guide to the Kenya National Archives, is out of date.

For request to use the Binns diaries, the researcher should contact the Africana Bibliographer, Area Studies Department, Bird Library, Syracuse University, Syracuse, N. Y. 13210. Permission of the donor is required before the researcher can gain access to them.

Thanks are due to those who have assisted in the compilation of this Guide. Robert G. Gregory, coordinator of the Syracuse University microfilm project, interim director of the Program of Eastern African Studies, and professor of History, has given valuable suggestions and encouragement. Special thanks are due to Kathryn Crawford, Serials

Cataloguer, Bird Library, for her patience and perseverance in the recataloguing and relabeling of many of the microfilms. The assistance of Marian Mullen and Elizabeth Henes of the Reference Department is also appreciated, as is the full cooperation of Gurnek Singh, Head of Area Studies, and Meseratch Tareke, technical assistant. Finally, the efforts of Eric Wolffbrandt who proofread the German title entries are appreciated.

Numerical list of files, with brief annotations which correspond to those appearing on the title pages of the relevant files in C.O. 533. Not a great help as a finding aid. Their main value is that they provide a good overview of the material available in all the volumes for a given year, and list the missing despatches destroyed under statute. With no pagination coordinating the indexes to the despatches, there is no expedient method of finding any desired item.

Enclosures in despatches frequently include government pamphlets, command papers, and excerpts from the the Kenya Gazette. Inter-office memos, with comments from Colonial Office clerical staff, and drafts of outgoing correspondence are also included. The correspondence ledgers at the beginning of each volume serve as a convenient table of contents up to 1926, after which, unfortunately, no such ledgers are kept.
