ROB KINMONTH

Doug Mellinger, a 1986 graduate of the College of Arts and Sciences, started networking early in his career, a move that has paid off grandly. Mellinger started his own software development company five years ago and lists several Fortune 500 companies as his clients. "To me," says Mellinger, "networking is not only part of life, it's the most crucial part of my success."

REACH OUT

"The goal of the great networkers of the world is to make the fewest number of phone calls possible to get something done, whether it's finding a job, getting dinner reservations at the hottest restaurant, enlisting someone to help with a nonprofit organization, or locating the best caterer in town."

That's Doug Mellinger's philosophy, and it works for him. In 1989 he started a company, Platform Re-engineering Technologies Corporation of America (PRT), and earned $500,000 in revenue the first year. Five years later, his New York City firm is reaching for annual sales of nearly $10 million.

He owes it all to networking.

"To me, networking is not only part of life, it's the most crucial part of my success," Mellinger states unequivocally. "I don't let anybody out of my sight without saying hello to them. I think the greatest reason for failure is the failure to ask, whether it's failing to ask people their names or failing to ask for a contract."

Mellinger started learning to ask at SU's College of Arts and Sciences while designing his own major in entrepreneurial science (with a concentration in computing) through the University's selected studies option, which allows enterprising students to organize a meaningful selection of courses into a major.

He also co-founded the campus chapter of the Association of College Entrepreneurs (ACE) and, after graduating in 1986, became ACE's international director and lectured around the world.

With these credentials, he began building his own network by contacting America's 30 most powerful corporate chief information officers and asking them to be his mentors. A surprising number agreed and gave him invaluable insight into what high-tech services large companies need.

The result is PRT, a software development firm that began by re-engineering older mainframe computing systems to newer platforms. It later expanded into building brand new systems, strategic planning, and executive education for Fortune 500 companies.

Mellinger believes networking must start early. "You should plan your life and act on it from your freshman year on," he advises. "Select the industry you want and start making contacts. Then you can work toward your final goal. And don't be afraid to ask."

Networking has become the campus buzzword of the nineties. Many Syracuse graduates join alumni clubs precisely because they recognize them as an excellent way to begin making connections with other people.

But many students and alumni fall into the trap of thinking of networking only as a way to find a job. That's not only too narrow, it's unrealistic; no one is going to make you an offer just because you trade a few minutes of pleasant conversation and hand out your business card.

For Mellinger and others, networking actually affects every aspect of their lives. Besides finding them business, it provides them with social engagements, strengthens their community ties, and teaches them skills. It's a long-range enterprise, and you never know when—or even if—it will ever pay off. The nice thing is, it's a great way to live your life even if nothing ever comes of it. But everyone finds something almost always does.

"Twice in my life I've moved to a new city where I didn't know a soul," says Vicki Manzer Andrews G'83 (NEW) of Seattle. "I forced myself to go beyond my comfort zone and join organizations that either interested me personally or would help me professionally, jumping into many things I felt I could do well."

Andrews appreciates the larger implications of networking. "We need more than work. We need doctors and plumbers and people to play sports with. You can network on a bus, and I have—one of my best friends today adopted me on a bus while I was apartment hunting."

However, Andrews also networks on behalf of the Hemophilia Foundation of Washington, where she serves as executive director. "I met a woman who works at the county courthouse and she let me post an ad seeking an attorney for our board. Someone saw the ad and volunteered. Networking really means making good use of opportunities that present themselves."

Community involvement is the key for Seretta McKnight '80 (A&S) of Roosevelt, New York. "Professional associations and civic organizations all provide valuable contacts," she says. "The people you meet on boards of directors are bank presidents and corporate

When Vicki Manzer Andrews moved to Seattle, she networked by making good use of opportunities that presented themselves.

Bob Pearlman says, "Success isn't handed to you. The more people you meet, the better chance you have of making things happen for you."

Community involvement, says Seretta McKnight, provides valuable contacts.

officers. Getting involved at the leadership level gives you access to people who make decisions."

McKnight heads Pulse International, a company that manages special events ranging from annual meetings to sports banquets. Every contact she makes can lead to a professional involvement, and—judging by her assignments—McKnight is exceedingly good at making contacts.

"I get a lot done working a room," she laughs. "You don't make a pitch, you have conversation. The basic premise of networking is: business doesn't do business, people do business. Get to the people."

Networking to obtain information is one of the best tools a recent graduate can use, according to Steve Toole '91 (NEW) of Fairfax, Virginia.

"I majored in advertising but my only contact in the business was the sister-in-law of my high school sweetheart," Toole says. "She referred me to one person who referred me to another, and then on to another, and by spring break of my senior year I'd set up interviews at 15 agencies."

Toole went in ostensibly asking for advice. "The atmosphere during this kind of appointment feels very informal and you're the one doing the interviewing. Of course the person you're meeting knows you're a possible candidate but it's still your court and you have the ball."

Toole ended up accepting an offer for an internship. It provided him with many contacts, something he capitalized on when he later moved to the Washington, D.C., area. He was soon working for the advertising agency, E. James White and Company. "Networking can be as powerful as you want it to be," he says.

When people think about networking, they most often concentrate on where they'll find their next job while neglecting a very important arena: their current businesses. That's a mistake Bob Pearlman '64 (MAN) never makes.

"I have what I call a lunch-a-week program," says the investment manager with Neuberger & Ber- man in New York City. "Every week I go out to lunch with a colleague in my department or someone down the hall with whom I interact regularly."

According to Pearlman, who lectured on networking to SU's New York alumni club, the idea is to become visible.

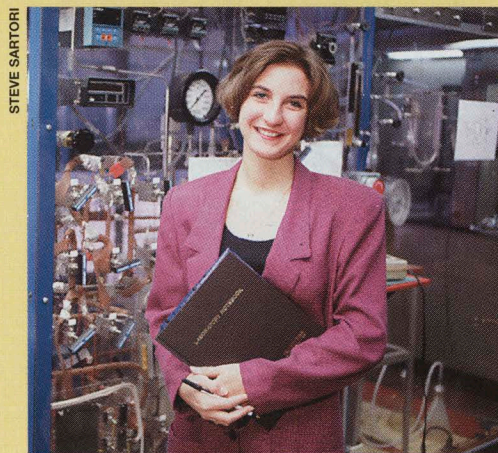

"Plant a seed and get your name out in the organization," he advises. "Involve yourself in trade associations. Read the trade publications. Attend industry meetings. Let's face it. As your career matures, there are bound to be a fair number of knowledgeable people at your level. After a while, it may come down to who knows you and how visible you are that gets your name on that list for advancement."

The bottom line?

"Networking works for everything from getting business to finding new friends to helping your favorite charity get a computer," says Mellinger. "Make it part of your everyday existence, whether you're on a plane or train or walking down the street. It's the way to make things happen."

STARTING EARLY

Megan Weiner started networking early by attending a Society of Women Engineers conference as a freshman. She hopes the contacts she made there will lead to a co-op job now and even better things after graduation.

When SU sophomore Megan Weiner walked into the national conference of the Society of Women Engineers last year, people stared. A freshman, she was unquestionably the youngest person at this meeting of working professionals.

"I want a co-op job for my junior year," she explains. "I figured it couldn't hurt to start early."

This year she's already been contacted by four companies whose representatives she met at that national conference. It looks like she won't have any trouble finding a co-op position next year.

Weiner is also treasurer of the SU student chapter of the Society of Women Engineers, another way she's establishing contacts in the industry. A chemical engineering student, she's making all the right moves to help her career. "This isn't only about getting a job," Weiner says. "You learn a lot by hearing about people's experiences."

Weiner's instincts are right on target. A co-op job or internship is one of the best ways to start building a network of contacts.

That's what Mara Schneider '88 (HD) found out during her retailing co-op at Saks Fifth Avenue in her senior year. Although she quickly discovered she didn't care for the retail end of the business, she worked hard at merchandising her department, which featured clothing designed by Victor Costa. The president of Costa's firm came in, saw what she was doing, and complimented her.

"I followed that one meeting up with a phone call, we talked, and that's how I got my first job," Schneider says. "Now I'm in the wholesale end of the business, which I love."

As sales manager for I.B. Diffusion in New York City, Schneider makes time to meet current SU retailing interns to help them sort through their experiences and opportunities.

"I organize an alumni panel of people who hold different positions throughout the industry," she explains. "The kids who are bright and aggressive stay afterward. They ask questions, they take our business cards, and they call us. I wish a dozen of them called, but it's usually only two or three. But I know those who phone are like I was: hungry for a job, persistent, and starting to build a network. It's a pleasure to help them."

ARE YOU A BELIEVER?

by Jane M. Lillestol
Vice President
Office of Alumni Relations

Walter Annenberg is a believer. He believes in this country and the improvement of its educational system. He recently pledged $500 million to improve our public elementary and secondary schools. This is in addition to the more than $2 billion he previously pledged to colleges, museums, and charitable causes.

What is it that creates such a strong sense of philanthropy? Annenberg says it's a sense of obligation. "I've been very fortunate economically. Therefore, I owe my country a great deal."

Do younger generations care less about their country and communities? Some researchers think so, pointing out that freedom and flexibility are often considered far more important than community interests. It's easy to feel this way when you are in your twenties, says Cheryl Russell, author of The Master Trend: How the Baby Boom Generation is Remaking America. Youthful values include independence, concern primarily for one's self, and the ability to act impulsively.

These values change as responsibilities grow, however. Many Boomers now have well-established families and careers. Divorce rates have leveled off and increased attention is being focused upon our schools. Parents have established college funds for their growing children. Volunteerism is on the rise.

The truth is, believers such as Mr. Annenberg are making a comeback. Boomers with advanced degrees generate almost five times as much income as their high school classmates without degrees, and they are willing to invest in their children to assure similar success.

We at Syracuse University thank all of you believers for demonstrating, through your loyalty, your volunteerism, and your gifts, that it is important to "give back" in order to build for the future.

CELEBRATE YOUR SU CONNECTION!

Alumni have been having wonderful times at Syracuse Reunions for years, and 1994 is no exception. Dig those knickers out of the attic and come on back!

Reunion '94 • June 3 - 5

Whether it's your 10th or 60th, Reunion '94 comes only once. Reminisce with old acquaintances, make new friends, and revisit the campus where you learned about the world. All SU alumni are welcome, and special honor is being paid to graduates of classes ending in 4 and 9. Here are a few highlights.

Open Houses. Visit all the places that meant so much to you, both in your studies and in your personal life.

2nd Annual Reunion Parade. March with your classmates along the routes you remember so well.

Forums/Discussions. Hear top Maxwell School faculty members discuss current topics. Physicians from reunion classes will discuss President Clinton's health care reform program.

College of Nursing. Special events highlight the school's 50th anniversary.

Exhibitions. See the women's intercollegiate sports exhibition, Newhouse student projects, and the School of Architecture's alumni and student work. Browse in campus galleries.

Costume Display. Helene Baine Cincebeaux '59 will show her Slavic costume collection.

Book Signing. Peggy Dilts Herz '59, who wrote about an American POW's seven-year captivity in Red China, will be on hand. Meet her and the man she wrote about.

Award Presentations. Share in the presentation of the prestigious George Arents Pioneer Medal and the Melvin A. Eggers Senior Alumni Awards.

Children's Program. Activities for children on Saturday include a full day of fun. Please write or call for details.

If you did not receive a special mailing about Reunion '94, request one by writing to: Reunion '94, Syracuse University, Alumni Relations Office, 820 Comstock Avenue, Syracuse, New York 13244-5040, telephone 315-443-3516, fax 315-443-3189.

ARENTS PIONEER MEDAL WINNERS

Martin Bandier

Dave Bing

JoAnn Heffernan Heisen

At Reunion '94, three alumni will receive the 1994 George Arents Pioneer Medal: Martin Bandier, Dave Bing, and JoAnn Heffernan Heisen. SU confers the Arents Pioneer Medal, its highest alumni award, on those who have distinguished themselves in their fields.

Martin Bandier '62 (A&S) of New York City is chairman and chief executive officer of EMI Music Publishing, the world's largest music publisher. His company administers the copyrights of nearly one million songs. Bandier has won industry awards from the Songwriters' Hall of Fame; the American Society of Composers, Authors, and Publishers; and Broadcast Music Inc. His company was named Publisher of the Year by Billboard magazine for four consecutive years.

His civic affiliations include a foundation for leukemia, cancer, and AIDS research; the City of Hope; Lifebeat; and the United Jewish Appeal. He's a member of the Songwriters' Hall of Fame and the Rock 'n' Roll Hall of Fame.

Dave Bing '66 (A&S) founded Bing Steel in 1980. The steel fabricating firm in Detroit has grown into a $50-million enterprise. He also wins accolades for his community activities, which include working for the Detroit Children's Hospital, the Detroit Black United Fund, the Boys and Girls Club, and the Urban League. In 1985 he received the Detroit Humanitarian of the Year Award. He says he encourages underprivileged youths to "make opportunities, not excuses."

While at SU, Bing was an All-America basketball player who set an SU career scoring record of 1,883. He played professionally for the Detroit Pistons, Washington Bullets, and Boston Celtics. He retired in 1978 and was subsequently inducted into the Naismith Memorial Basketball Hall of Fame.

JoAnn Heffernan Heisen '72 (A&S) of Princeton, New Jersey, is treasurer of pharmaceutical giant Johnson & Johnson. The company's highest-ranking woman, her responsibilities include finance and banking, international treasurer services, and investor relations.

Her professional affiliations include the Economic Club of New York, the National Investor Relations Institute, the NOW Legal Defense and Education Fund, and the Women's Economic Roundtable.

She is also an active civic leader and has served in a variety of leadership positions at Abbott House, a foster care agency. She is also on the national board of directors of Recording for the Blind.

James Kleebert '56 (MAN) of Lincolnwood, Ill., retired after 37 years with Sears Roebuck.

David S. John '57 (A&S) of Norristown, Pa., retired as publisher of the Times Herald after 34 years.

Ann Radley-Dodge Shimer '57 (MAN) is in the Peace Corps in Jamaica.

Linda Norford Cross '58 (VPA) of New York City exhibited her drawings at several galleries in New York State.

Hall Groat '59 (VPA) of Syracuse completed commissioned oil paintings for the British Medical Society and Niagara Mohawk Power Corp.

60s

Dr. J. Donald Herring G'60 (A&S) received the Alumni Association Lifetime Award of Merit from the State University of New York College at Oswego, where he teaches human resource management.

William F. Doescher G'61 (NEW) is co-chair of the National Elementary School Center. He is senior vice president of global communications for Dun & Bradstreet in New York City.

Thomas J. Maroney '61 (UC) G'634 (LAW) was nominated for U.S. Attorney in New York State's northern district. He teaches constitutional law at Syracuse University.

Michael S. Miles '61 (A&S) of West Hartford, Conn., is the state's Commissioner of Worker's Compensation.

Linda Cunningham G'62 (VPA), who teaches sculpture at Franklin & Marshall College, is spending the year in Berlin on a Fulbright research fellowship creating works on paper, scale models, and a large-scale installation.

Jack Gilhooley '62 (SDA), a playwright from Sarasota, Fla., received a Fulbright grant to teach American drama in Spain.

Perry A. Irvine '62 (A&S) an attorney in Palo Alto, Calif., heads the board of TheatreWorks, a professional repertory theater.

Richard C. Lauricella '62 (A&S/EDU) is on the Honor Roll of Teachers of the Association of Science-Technology Centers and received awards from several other state teaching groups. He teaches fourth grade in Solvay, N.Y.

Robert J. Resnick '62 (A&S) is president of the American Psychological Association. He chairs the clinical psychology department at Virginia Commonwealth University in Richmond.

Michael J. Bragman '63 (A&S) of Syracuse is majority leader of the New York State Assembly.

John Costley G'64 (MAN), who teaches accounting at Iowa Wesleyan College, is spending three years assisting economic development in Pikangikum, Ont., for the Mennonite Central Committee.

Dr. Maria Sarkozy Decsy '64 (A&S) is associate director of the Diocesan Office of Ministry Formation and the Permanent Diaconate in Norwich, Conn.

Dr. Ernest D. Giglio G'64 (MAX) is teaching at the University of Nottingham in England as part of the Fulbright Teacher Exchange Program. He is a political science faculty member at Lycoming College in Williamsport, Pa.

Dr. Judith Kaeding Larsen G'65 (GRAD), vice president of worldwide research operations for Dataquest in San Jose, Calif., is vice chair of the Lutheran Brotherhood Board of Directors.

Barri Gotham Armitage G'66 (EDU) of Silver Spring, Md., wrote a book of poetry, Double Helix, based on personal grief and healing.

William G. Sites G'68 (MAN), who directs internal audits for Temple University in Philadelphia, is a fellow of the American College of Healthcare Executives.

Ellen M. Kochansky '69 (VPA) completed Sky Window, a quilted collage for a building in Cincinnati, Ohio.

EGGERS SENIOR ALUMNI AWARDS

The University will honor three winners of the Melvin A. Eggers Senior Alumni Awards during Reunion '94. They are Reverend Dr. Charles Emerson Boddie, Walter Kiebach, and Mary Gilmore Smith. The awards recognize individuals who have displayed loyalty and service to Syracuse University.

Reverend Dr. Charles Emerson Boddie '33 (A&S) of Nashville, Tennessee, is president emeritus of the American Baptist College of the Bible and the American Baptist Theological Seminary. He joined the school when it was a theological seminary and during his 18-year presidency helped transform it into an accredited college. He takes an active part in SU's Coming Back Together reunion programs.

Walter Kiebach '36 (A&S) of Palm Beach, Florida, and Cape Cod, Massachusetts, is president of Manpower of Reading, GKR Corporation, and Security Guards. All three companies provide temporary personnel services. He and his wife are members of the Chancellor's Council and in 1990 established the Walter and Olivia Kiebach Center for International Business Studies in the School of Management.

Mary Gilmore Smith '29 (A&S) of Syracuse was student dean at the University from 1936 to 1938 and on the staff of the dean of women from 1938 to 1940. Since leaving that position, she has involved herself extensively in community activities. She has assisted the Office of Alumni Relations with its programs for many years.

NATIONAL ORANGE DAY

INGE ASHLEY

Darrell Rippeteau Jr. is helping to organize the first National Orange Day. On March 24, SU alumni across the country will show their school spirit by carrying an orange or wearing something orange.

On March 24, hundreds of people across the country will each carry an orange—into the courtroom while arguing a case, onto a jet plane, to a Rotary luncheon, and into the classroom while teaching.

Others will run food drives for local food pantries, read to young children at schools, labor at spring clean-ups for elderly home owners, or volunteer in hospitals and rest homes.

All these people have one thing in common: They're Syracuse alumni who will be celebrating National Orange Day—a day when alumni highlight their affiliation with SU by joining in a community service event while carrying a fresh orange or wearing something orange.

"It's a day to do something that reflects Syracuse," says Darrell Rippeteau Jr. '73 of Washington, D.C., a member of the committee organizing the event. "We want to raise people's awareness of SU, develop a sense of belonging, and give our alumni a chance to network. After all, what better way to let people know that we're SU alumni than by carrying an orange around with us all day?"

March 24 was chosen because it's the date the University was founded in 1870, says committee chair Mike Somich '73 of Chicago. The celebration will become annual.

"Local clubs will decide on specific community service events," Somich says. "It's a unique opportunity for us to conduct highly visible activities that also contribute to the welfare of the community."

Other committee members working on the event are Linda Gordon Kristensen '76 of Syracuse, Jack Lake '60 of San Francisco, and Nancy Harvey Steorts '59 of Dallas.

"It's a way to strengthen our ties with the University," says Rippeteau. "The SU educational experience shouldn't be like getting on a bus, traveling for four years, and then getting off while the bus drives away. It should be a lifelong journey." —CNS

Get your nominations in! The Office of Alumni Relations is accepting nominations for its annual alumni awards. Several awards are given each year, including the prestigious George Arents Pioneer Medal, the Melvin A. Eggers Senior Alumni Awards, and three other categories of alumni awards.

The George Arents Pioneer Medal recognizes excellence in people's chosen fields. Melvin A. Eggers Senior Alumni Awards are presented to alumni who graduated at least 50 years ago and have demonstrated loyalty and service to Syracuse University. Nominations for these 1995 awards will be accepted until July 1.

The Outstanding Alumni Awards recognize service to the University, and the Outstanding Young Alumni Awards honor those who graduated within the past 15 years and have distinguished themselves either professionally or through service to the University. The Outstanding Teacher Award acknowledges distinction and dedication in teaching. Deadline for these 1995 awards is November 1.

For information on nominating candidates, contact Sherry Hayes, Office of Alumni Relations, 820 Comstock Avenue, Syracuse, New York 13244-5040, telephone 315-443-2521.

SU Chair in Lincoln Center. Did you know there is an endowed Syracuse University chair—no, not an academic title but an actual seat—in Lincoln Center's Philharmonic Hall? ALUMNI CLUBS:
NETWORKING'S FIRST STEP

"The economy in our area has been tough," says David Bates '86, president of the Boston alumni club. "That's why we held a networking meeting for the 8,000 alumni who live and work in our area."

Last May's Boston meeting featured a panel offering different perspectives on careers. It included Robert Kleven G'63, president of his own placement agency; Elliot Winer '67, chief of economic research for the Massachusetts Department of Employment and Training; and Mike Cahill G'87 of SU's Placement Center.

"The evening wasn't meant just for people looking for jobs," Bates says. "We're impressed by the abundance and diversity of alumni in the greater Boston area and wanted to give them an opportunity to tap into each other." The club plans another networking event this May, so new SU graduates can take advantage of the evening and begin making contacts in the area.

"The people at our networking meeting came early and stayed late," says John Lader '73, president of the Chicago alumni club. The club invited alumni experts to offer advice on all the intricacies of networking. There was a panel that included Joan Barr Tullis '61, assistant director of the Illinois Department of Revenue; Adrienne Nescott Hirsch '71, director of corporate education at Roosevelt University; and Roland Finkelman '51, vice president of human resources at GATX Corporation.

The panel discussed what networking can be expected to accomplish and offered specific suggestions, according to Lader. "Often networking is actually getting information and finding further contacts. Many job openings are never advertised but are filled through this process."

For Nancy Petrino '73, president of the New York City alumni club, every meeting features networking.

"Whether we specifically call it that or not, meetings are always an opportunity for people to meet and make contacts," she says.

The club sponsored an evening devoted just to networking in October, putting together a panel that included Bob Pearlman '64 (for his advice, see page 47), a representative from the New York City Economic Affairs Office, an independent consultant on outplacement, and Mike Cahill G'87 of SU's Placement Center (who certainly gets around).

"People are always interested in career events," says Petrino. "They might have jobs right now but may be considering a change, or just be curious about how they might go about things in the future. Whatever the reason, we want to give them the information they need to make wise decisions."

ALUMNI RECOGNIZED

Several alumni clubs and individual alumni were recognized at Homecoming by the Office of Alumni Relations and the Office of Admissions for their outstanding efforts on behalf of Syracuse University.

"We chose this year's winners for the variety in programming and their success in involving a multigenerational mix on their boards," says Phyllis Chase, senior director of Alumni Relations.

The Central New Jersey club, headed by Lou Yannaco '67 of East Brunswick, was declared Outstanding Alumni Club. Club programs included panel discussions, career networking events, a new student send-off, and attending SU sports contests. Its membership spans eight decades.

Meg Goldberg '88 of Boston was named the Outstanding Alumni Club Officer. She spearheaded the club's revitalization, standardizing monthly board meetings and involving board members by empowering them to take charge of different events.

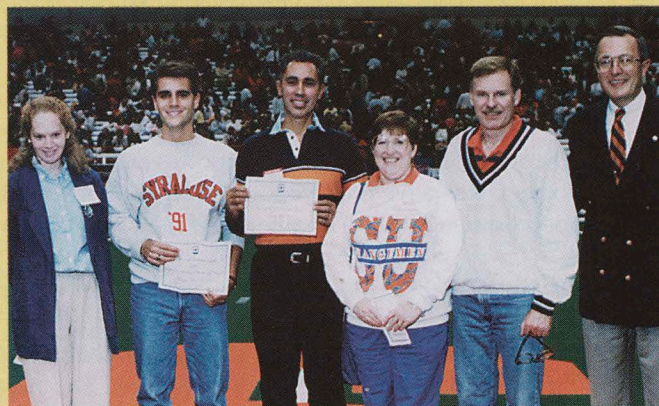

The Orange Finger Lakes Fallfest, organized by the Western New York club and led by Jerry Kelly G'65 of Buffalo, was recognized as the Outstanding Alumni Club Program. This regional event involves clubs from Western New York, Rochester, Central New York, and Binghamton, and includes educational, social, athletic, and fund-raising components.

The Houston club, headed by Andy Spector '66, received a special award for Outstanding Student Recruitment. Members participated in dozens of high school recruitment events, generating 500 inquiries.

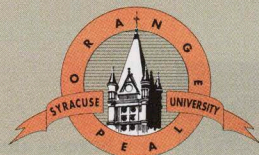

Recognition for Outstanding Communications went to the Western New York club for a video of its trip to the SU-Miami football game. The 12-minute tape, A Place You Can Always Come Home To, was produced by Jay Lurie '74 and played on commercial television in Buffalo. It showed alumni returning to SU for a football game and emphasized what coming back to the University means.

The Office of Admissions also recognized alumni for their efforts in the alumni representative program, giving awards to Tom Boccuzzi '91 of Stamford, Conn., and husband-and-wife team Barbara Lee Johnson '71 and Craig R. Johnson '71 of Tonawanda, N.Y.

"I am really amazed and gratified by the effort our alumni expend on behalf of the University," Chase says.

THE WAY IT WAS

▲ Today Martha Bellinger is a judge with the Children's Court in Los Angeles County.

◀ This 1970 photograph shows Syracuse students rallying to protest the shootings at Kent State. The resulting student strike effectively shut down the University.

WHEN REASONABLE MINDS WERE ALLOWED TO DIFFER

by the Honorable Martha E. Bellinger '72, Los Angeles

I'm not quite sure why I kept a diary each day of my life at SU, from September 1968 through June 1972. I hadn't kept one before, nor have I kept a daily journal since. But as I read the diary some 25 years later, I can see how much our University grew spiritually during those tumultuous years, just as my life was changed forever by the soul-piercing events of that time.

I share three entries from the pages of my diary.

"May 4, 1970. Tragedy struck our American campuses today. Four students at Kent State University in Ohio were shot and killed by National Guardsmen. No one seems to know what provoked the killings but it is impacting our campus as well. Hendricks Chapel Dean John McCombe has asked me to speak for the undergraduates at a memorial service tomorrow."

"May 5, 1970. We were about 3,500 in number, jamming Hendricks and overflowing onto the Quad. As I read a prayer for the dead students at Kent State, many sobbed, no doubt feeling all the anger, disbelief, and fear that I'm experiencing. My political science professor, Michael Sawyer, remarked in class last year that one could know democracy was alive and well 'when reasonable minds were allowed to differ.' My greatest fear is that we've all stopped listening to one another, and we are on a dangerous course where reasonable minds are not allowed to differ."

"May 6, 1970. Five thousand of us marched downtown to protest the killings at Kent State and the continuing war. My heart beat a little faster as I proceeded downtown, knowing others had been killed this week in similar activities. But thanks to the restraint of the police and Chancellor John Corbally, no violence occurred on either side. Reasonable minds did differ today, Professor Sawyer, and no one died. Maybe democracy will endure after all."

Some called those days at SU lawless and disrespectful. I recall them as a time when the principle of free expression was tested mightily at all universities, and SU passed with flying colors.
